Ame me one els, yf thou canst fynde any: yee loke aboute the, vpon any of the holy men. As for the foolish man displeasure kylleth him, and anger slayeth yf ignorant. I haue sene myself, when the foolish was depergred, that his bewty was sodely destroyed: that his children were without prosperite or health: that they were slayne in the doore, and no mā to deliuer them: that his harnest was eaten vp off the hungrie: that the weakened man had spoyled it, and that the thurstie had droncke vp his riches. It is not the earth that bryngeth forth tra- uayle, nether commeth sorow out of yf grou- de: but it is man, that is borne vnto mysery, li- ke as the byrde for to fle.

But now will I speake off the LORDE, and talke of God: which doth thinges, that are vnsearcheable, and marueles without nō bre: Which geueth rayne vpo the earth, and poureth water vpon all thinges: which set- teth vp them of lowe degre, and sendeth prof- perite, to those that are in heynesse: Which destroyeth the deuycs of the soryll, so that they are not able to perforce the thynges that they take in hōde: which compaseth yf wyse in their owne craftynesse, and ouertro- weth the counsell of the wicked: In so moch that they runne in to darcknesse by fayre da- ye, and grope aboute them at the noone da- ye, like as in the night.

And so he deliuereth the poore from the swearde, from their mouth, and from the hō- de of the cruell: that the poore maye haue ho- pe, & that the mouth of the oppressoure ma- ye be stopped.

C Beholde, happie is the man, whom God punyssheth: therefore, despise not thou yf chas- tenyng of the Allmyghty. For though he make a wounde, he geueth a medecyne agay- ne: though he smyte, his bonde maketh who- le agayne.

He deliuereth the out of fire troubles, so that in the seuenth there can no harme touch the. In the myddest of hunger he saureth yf from death: and when it is warre, from the power of the swearde.

He shall kepe the from the perillous tonge, so that when trouble commeth, thou shalt not nedeto feare. In destruction and death thou shalt be mery, and shalt not be afraied for the beastes of the earth: But the castles in the londe shal be confederate with the, & the beastes of the felde shal geue the pea- ce.

Yee thou shalt se, that thy dwellynge pla- ce shalbe in rest: thou shalt beholde thy sub- stance, and be nemoze punysshed for synne. Thou shalt se also, that thy sede shall increa- ce, and that thy posterite shalbe as the gras- se vpon the earth. Thou shalt come to thy graue in a fayre age, like as yf come sheues are brought in to the barne in due season. Lo, this is the matter, as we oure selues ha- ue proued by experience. Therfore now that thou hearest it, take better hede to thyself.

The VI. Chapter.

Job answered, and sayde: O that my misery weere reueyed, and my punyssh- ment layed in the balauces: for then shulde it be henyer, then the sonde of the sea. This is the cause, that my wordes are so so- rowfull.

For the allmyghty hath shott at me with his arrowes, whose indignacion hath dron- ke vp my sprete, and yf terribil feares of God fight agaynst me. Doth the wilde asse reare when he hath grasse? Or crieth the ore, whe- he hath fodder ynough? Maye a thynge be eaten vnseasoned, or without salt? What taist hath yf x hyte within the yoke an egg? The thinges that sometyme I might not a- waye withall, are now my meate for very so- row. O that I might haue my desyre: O yf God wolde graunte me the thyng, that I longe for: That he wolde begynne and smy- tene: that he wolde let his hende go, & heu- me downe. The shulde I haue seme cōfōrt: yee I wolde desyre him in my payne, that he shulde not spare, for I will not be agaynst yf wordes of the holy ene.

What power haue I to endure? Or what is myne ende, that my soule might be paci- ed? Is my strength the strength of stones? Or is my flesh made of brasse? Am I able to hel- pe myself? Is not my strength gone fro me, like as yf one withdrew a good rede from his frende, and forsoke the feare of God? My- ne owne brethren passe euer by me as the wa- ter broke, that hastily runneth thorow yf val- leys. But they that feare the horemost, the snow shal fall vpon them.

When their tyme cometh, they shalbe des- troyed and perishe: and when they be set on fire, they shalbe remoued out of their place. For the pathes yf they go in, are croked: they haist after vayne thinges, and shal perishe. Confide the pathes off them, & the way- es off Saba, wherein they haue put their trust. Confounded are they, that put eny cō- fidence in them: For whe they came to optey- nethe thynges that they lofed for, they we- re brought to confusion.

Eas so are ye also come vnto me: but now that yese my mysery, ye are afraied. Dyd I desyre you, to come hyther? Or, to geue me eny off youre substance? To deliuer me from the enemies honde, or to saue me from the power off the mightie? Teach me and I will holde my tounge: and yf I do er- re, shew me wherin.

Wherfore blame ye then the wordes, that are well and truly spoken: which of you can reprove them? Saunge only that ye are so- ryll to ched mens sayenges, and can speake many wordes in the wynde. Ye fall vpon the fatherlesse, ad go aboute to ouerthrowe you- re owne frende. Wherfore loke not only v- pon me, but vpon youre selues: whether I ly, or no. Turne into youre owne selues (I praye you) be indifferent iudges, and confi- de myne vngyltynesse: whether there be eny vnrighteousnesse in my tounge, or vayne wor- des in my mouth.

The VII. Chapter.

Is not the life off m a vpon earth a very batayll? Are not his dayes, like the dayes of an hyred seruaunte? For like as a bonde seruaunt desyeth the shado- we, and as an hyrelinge wolde fayne haue an ende of his worke: Euen so haue I labou- red whole monethes longe (but in vayne) and many a carefull night haue I tolde. When I layed me downe to slepe, I sayde: O when shal I ryse? Agayne, I longed sore for the night. Thus am I full off sorowe, till it be darcke. My flesh is clothed with wormes, fylthynesse and dust: my slayne is wythered, and crompted together: my dayes passe ouer more spedely, the a weener can weene out his webbe, and are gone, or I am awarre. O re- membre, that my life is but a wynde, ad that myne eye shal nomore se the pleasures therof: yee and that none other mans eye shal se me any more. For yf thou fasten thine eyes vpon me, I come to naught, like as a cloude is cō- sumed and vanyshed awaye, euen so he that goeth downe to hell, commeth nomore vp, ner turneth agayne in to his house, nether shall his place knowe him any more.

Therfore I will not spare my mouth, but will speake in the trouble of my sprete, in yf byrternesse of my mynde will I talke. Am I a see or a whalsylly, that thou kepest me so in prison? When I thynke: my bedd shal com- forte me, I shall haue some refresching by talkyng with myself vpon my couche: The troublest thou me with dreames, ad makest me so afraied thowow visions, that my soule wyll her rather to be hanged, and my bo- nes to be deed.

I can se no remedy, I shall lyue nomore: O spare methen, for my dayes are but vayne. What is man, that thou hast him in soch re- putacion, and setteest somoch by him? Thou takest diligent care for him, and sodely deest thou trye him.

Why goest thou not fro me, ner lettest me alone, so longe till I swallow downe my spet- le? I haue offended, what shal I do vnto yf, O thou preseruer off men? Why hast thou made me to stonde in thy waye, and am so he- uya burden vnto myself? Why doest thou not forgue me my synne? Wherfore takest thou not awaye my wickednesse? Beholde, now must I slepe in the dust: and yff thou se- test me tomorrow in the mounyng, I shalbe gone.

The VIII. Chapter.

Zen answered Baldad the Subti- and sayde: How longe wilt thou tal- ke of soch thinges? How longe shal yf mouth speake so proude wordes? Doth God peruerre the thynge that is lausfull? Or, doth the Allmyghtie destroye the thynge that is right? Whe thy sonnes synned agaynst him, dyd not he punyssh the for their wickednesse? Off thou woldest now resorte vnto God by tymes, and make thine humble prayer to yf Allmyghtie: yf thou woldest lyue a pure and a godly life: shulde he not wake vp vnto the immediately, & geue the the bewtie of righ- tynousnesse agayne? In so moch, that whe- re i so euer thou haddest litle a fore, thou shuldest now haue greate abundaunce. Enquere of them that haue bene before the, search dili- gently amonge thy forefathers: Namely, yf we are but of yesterdage, and confide not, that oure dayes vpon earth are buth a very shadow. They shall shewe the, they shall tell the, yee they will gladly confesse the sa- me.

B Maye a reffhe be grene without moyfneffe: maye the grasse growe without water? No: but (or euer it be shot forth, and or euer it be gathered) it wythereth, before eny other herbe. Euen so goeth it with all them, that forget God: and euen thus also shal the ypocrytes hope cometo naught. His confidence shalbe destroyed, for he trusteth in a spydres webbe.

He leeneth him vpon his house, but he shal not stonde: he holdeth him fast by it, yet shal he not endure. Oft tymes a thinge doth flourish, and men thynke that it maye abyde the Sonnes hyne: it shuterth forth the braunches in his garden, it takerth many rotes, in so moch that it is like an house off stones.

But yf it be taken out off his place, euery man denyeth it, sayenge: I knowe the not.
Lo, thus is it wth him, that reioysseth in his owne deinges: and as for other, they growe out of the earth.

Beholde, God will not cast awaye a ver-tuous man, nether wil he helpe the vngodly.
Thy mouth shal be fyll with laughynge, ad thy lippes with gladnesse. They that hate the, shalbe confounded, & y<sup>e</sup> dwellinges of y<sup>e</sup> vngodly shal cometo naught.

The IX. Chapter.

J Ob answered, and sayde: As for y<sup>e</sup>
I knowe it is so of a treuth, y<sup>e</sup> a man compared vnto God, can not be iusti-fied. Yf he wil argue with him, he shall not be able to answer him vnto one amonge a thousande. He is wyse of hert, and mightie in strength. Who euer prospered, that toke parte agaynst him? He translaterth the mountaynes, or euer they be awarre, & ouerthroweth them in his wrath. He remoueth the earth out of hir place, that hir pilers shake with-
all. He commaundeth the Sone, & it ryseth not: he closeth vp the starres, as it were vnder a signet. He himself alone spredeth cut y<sup>e</sup> heauens, and goeth vpon the waves of the
see. He maketh the waynes of heauen, the Orions, the vj. starres and the secrete places of the south. He doth greates chinges, soch as are vnsearcheable, yee and wonders without nombre.

Yf he came by me, I might not loke vpon him: yf he wente his waye, I shulde not perceane it. Yf he be haisty to take eny thinge awaye, who wil make him restore it agayne?
Who wil saye vnto him: what doest thou?
He is God, whose wrath no man maye with-stode: but the proudest of all must stoupe vnder him. How shulde I then answer him? or, what wordes shulde I fynde out agaynst him? Yet though I be righteous, yet will I not geue him one worde agayne, but mekely submytte my self to my iudge. All be it that I call vpon him, and he heare me, yet am I not sure, y<sup>e</sup> he hath herde my voyce: he troubleth me so with the tempest, and woundeth me out of measure without a cause. He will not let my spiete be in rest, but fylleth me wth bytternesse.

Yf men will speake of strength, he is the strongest of all: yf me will speake of righteoufnes, who darre be my recorder? yf I will iustifie my self, myne owne mouth shal condemne me: yf I will put forth my self for a perfect man, he shal proue me a wicked doer: for that I shulde be an innocent, my conscience knoweth it not, yee I my self am weary off my life.

This onethinge wil I saye: He destroyeth both the righteous & vngodly. And though he slaye sodenly wth the scourge, yet laugheth he at the punishment of the innocent. As for the woulde, he geueth it ouer in to the power of the wicked, soch as the rulers be, wher of all londes are full. Is it not so? where is there eny, but he is soch one?

My dayes haue bene more swifte, then a runner: they are gone sodenly, and haue sene no good thinge. They are passed awaye, as the shippes that be good vnder sale, and as the Aegle that hasteth to the pray. When I am purposed to forget my complainynges to chaunge my countenance, and to coforte my self: then am I afayed of all my wor-kes, for I knowe, thou fauourest not an euil doer. Yf I be then a wicked one, why haue I laboured in vayne? Though I washed my self with snowe water, and made myne hon-des nether so cleane, yet shuldest thou dyppe me in y<sup>e</sup> myre, & myne owne clothes shulde defyle me. For he y<sup>e</sup> I must geue answer vnto, and with whom I go to lawe, is not a man as I am. Nether is there eny dayes man to reproue both the partes, or to laye his hode betwixte vs. Let him take his rod awaye from me, yee let him make me nomore afayed of him, and then shal I answer him without eny feare. For as longe as I am in soch fearefulnesse, I can make no answer: And why? it greueth my soule to lyue.

The X. Chapter.

Wherthelesse, now will I put forth my wordes: I wil speake out of the very heynesse off my soule, and wil saye vnto God: O do not condemne me, but shewe me the cause, wherfore thou iudgest me on this maner. Thinkest thou it well done, to oppresse me, to cast me off beinge a worke of thy hondes? and to manteyne the counsell of the vngodly? Hast thou fleshy eyes then, or doest thou loke as man lokech? Are thy dayes as the dayes of man, and thy yea-res as mans yeares? that thou makest soch inquisition for my wickednesse, and searchest out my synne? where as (notwithstandinge) thou knowest that I am no wicked person, & that there is no man able to deliuer me out of thine honde. Thy hondes haue made me, & fashioned me altogether rounde aboute, wilt thou then destroye me sodely? O remember (I beseeke the) how that thou madest me of the mould of the earth, and shalt bryn-ge me to earth agayne.

Hast thou not milked me, as it were mylke:
and turned me to cruddes like chese? Thou hast couered me with synne and flesh, and ioyned me together with bones & synowes.
Thou hast graunted me life, and done me good: and the diligent he doeth that thou tokest vpon me, hath preserued my spiete.

Though thou hydest these thinges in thi nebert, yet am I sure, that thou remembrest the all. Wherfore didest thou kepe me, when I synned, and hast not clenfed me from myne offence? Yf I do wickedly, wo is me therfore: Yf I be righteous, yet darre I not lift vp my heade: so full am I of confucion, and of myne owne misery.

Thou huntest me out (beynge in heynesse) as it were a Lyon, and troublest me out of measure. Thou bungest fresh witnessses a-gaynst me, thy wrath increaseth thou vpon me, very many are the plagies that I am in.
Wherfore hast thou brought me out of my mothers wombe? O that I had perished, & that no eye had sene me. Yf they had caried me to my graue, as soone as I was borne, then shulde I be now, as though I had neuer bene.

Shall not my short life come soone to an ender? O holde the from me, let me alone, that I maye ease my self a litle: afore I go thy-ther, from whence I shal not turne agayne: Namely, to that londe of darcknesse & shadowe of death: yee in to that darck cloudy londe & deadly shadowe, where as is no or-die, but terrible feare as in the darcknesse.

The XI. Chapter.

Z en answered Sophar the Naama-thite, and sayde: Shulde not he that maketh many wordes, be answered?

Shulde he that bableth moch, be commended therein? Shulde men geue eare vnto the only? Thou wilt laugh other men to scorne, & shal no body mocke the agayne: Wilt thou saye vnto God: The thinge that I take in honde, is perfecte, & I am cleane in thy sight?
O that God wolde speake, and open his lippes agaynst the, that he might shewe the (out of his secrete wysdome) how many folde his lawe is: then shuldest thou knowe, that God had forgotten the, because of thy synnes.

Wilt thou fynde out God with thy sekynge? wilt thou attayne to the perfectnesse of the Allmightie? He is hyer the heauē, what wilt thou do? Deper the hell, how wilt thou then knowe him? His length exceedeth the length of the earth, and his bredth y<sup>e</sup> bredth of the see. Though he turne all thinges vp syde downe, close them in, or thrust the together, who darre check him therfore?

For it is he, that knoweth the vanite of men: he seyth their wickednesse also, shulde he not then conside it? A vayne body exalteth him self, and the sonne of man is like a wyld asses foale. Yf thou haddest new a right herte, & liftest vp thine hondes towarde him: yf thou woldest put awaye the wickednesse, which thou hast in honde, so that no vngodlynesse dwelt in thy house: Then mightest thou lift vp thy face without shame, the shuldest thou be sure, and haue no nede to feare.

Then shuldest thou forget thy misery, and thynke nomore vpon it, then vpon the waters that runne by. Then shuldesthy life be as cleare as the noone daye, and sprynge forth as the mounyng. Then mightest thou haue comfort, in the hope that thou hast: & slepe quietly, when thou art buried. Then shuldest thou take thy rest, and nomore to make the afayed, yee many one shulde set moch by the. As for the eyes of the vngodly, they shal be consumed, and not escape their hope shalbe misery and sorow of mynde.

The XII. Chapter.

S O Job answered, and sayde: Then (no doute) ye are the men alone, and wysdome shal perish with you. But I haue vnderstoddinge as well as ye, and am no lesse then ye. Yee who knoweth not these thinges: Thus he that calleth vpon God, and whom God heareth, is mocked of his negh-boure: the godly & innocent man is laughed to scorne. Godlynesse is a light despysed in y<sup>e</sup> hertes of the rich, & is set forthem to fomble vpon.

The boke of Job.

The xiii. Chap.

The houses of robbers are in wealth and prosperite, & they that maliciously medle agaynst God, dwel without care: yee God geueth all thinges richely with his honde.

B Are the catell, & they shal enfourme the: the foules of the ayre, and they shal tell y: Speake to the earth, and it shal shewethe: Or to the fyshes of the see, and they shal certifie the. What is he, but he knoweth, that yf hōde of the LORDE made all these? In whose honde is the soule of every lyuynge thinge, and the breth of all men. Haue not the eares pleasure in hearinge, and the mouth in tastinge the thinge that it eateth? Amonge olde personnes there is wysdome, and amonge the aged is vnderstōdinge. Yee with God is wysdome and strength, it is he that hath counsell & foreknowlege. Yf he breake downe a thinge, who can set it vp agayne? Yf he shutt a thinge, who wil open it? Beholde, yf he witholde the waters, they drye vp: Yf he let the go, they destroye the earth. With him is strength and wysdome: he knoweth both the disceauer, and him that is disceaued.

C He carieth awaye the wyse men, as it were a spoyle, and bryngeth the iudges out of their wyttes. He lowseth the gyrdle of kynge, and gyrdeth their loynes with a bonde. he ledeth awaye the prestes into captiuyte, and turneth the mightie vp syde downe. He taketh the verite from out of the mouth, & disapoynteth yf aged of their wysdome. He poureth out confucion vpon prynces, and cōforteth them that haue bene oppressed. Loke what lyeth hyd in darcknesse, he declareth it opely: and the very shadowe of death bryngeth he to light. He both increaseth the people, and destroyeth them: he maketh them to multiplie, and dryneth them awaye. He chaungeth the herte of the prynces and kynge of the earth, and disapoynteth them: so that they go wādinge out of the waye, and grope in the darcke without light, stacferinge to and fro like dioncken men.

The XIII. Chapter.

All this haue I sene with myne eye, herde with myne eare, & vnderstōde it. Loke what ye knowe, that same do I knowe also, nether am I inferior vnto you. Neuerthelesse I am purposed to talke with the Allmightie, and my desyre is to comon with God. As for you, ye are workmasters of lyes: and vnprofitable phisicians alltogether. Wolde God ye kepte youre tonge, that ye might be taken for wyse men. Therfore heare my wordes, and pondre the sentence of my lippes. Will ye make answe-re for God with lyes, and māteyne him with disceate? Wil ye accepte yf personne of God, and intreate for him? Shal that helpe you, when he calleth you to rekenynge? Thynke ye to begyle him, as a man is begyled? Punysh you shall he and reprove you, yf ye do secretly accepte eny personne. Shal he not make you a frayed, when he sheweth himself? Shal not his terrible feare fall vpon you? you re remembraunce shal be like the dust, & you re pryde shal be turned to claye.

Holde youre tonges now, and let me speake, for there is some thinge come in to my mynde. Wherfore do I beare my flesh in my teth, and my soule in myne hondes? Lo, there is nether cōforte ner hope for me, yf he wil slaye me. But yf I shewe and reprove myne orone wayes in his sight, he is euen the same, that maketh me whole: and why there maye no Apocrite come before him, heare my wordes, and pondre my sayenges with youre eares. Beholde, though sentence were geuen vpon me, I am sure to be knowne for vngilty. What is he, that will go to lawe with me? For yf I holde my tounge, I shal dye. Neuer thelesse graunte me yf thinges, and then will I not hyde my self from the.

Withdrowe thine honde from me, & let not the fearfull drede of the make me a frayed. And then sende for me to the lawe, yf I maye answeere for my self: or els, let me speake, and geue thou the answeere. How greate are my mysdedes & synnes? Let me knowe my transgressions & offences. Wherfore hydest thou thy face, and holdest me for thine enemye? Wilt thou be so cruell & extreme vnto a flyen geleaf, and folowe vpon drye stubble? that thou layest so sharply to my charge, and wilt utterly vndoome me, for yf synnes of my yonghe? Thou hast put my fete in the stockes: thou lokest narrowly vnto all my pathes, & marrest the steppes of my fete: where as I (not withstandinge) must consume like as a foule carion, and as a cloth that is moth eaten.

The XIII. Chapter.

What is borne of a woman, hath I but a short tyme to lyue, and is full of dyuerse miseries. He cometh vp, and falleth awaye like a floure. He styeth as it were a shadowe, and nether continueth in one state. Thynkest thou it now well done, to open thine eyes vpon such one, and to brynge me before the iudgment? Who can make it cleane, that commeth of an vnclane thinge? To body. The dayes of man are short, yf nombre of his monethes are knowne only vnto the. Thou hast apoynted him his borne des, he can not go beyonde them. So from him, that he maye rest a litle: vntill his daye come, which he loketh for, like as an hyreling doth.

If a tre be cutt downe, there is some hope yet, that it will sproute and shute forth the brāunches agayne: for though a rote be warncolde and deed in the ground, yet whē the stocke getteth the sent of water, it will budde, and brynge forth bowes, like as when it was first planted. But as for man, when he is deed, perished and consumed awaye, what becommeth of him? The floudes when they be dried vp, & the ryuers when they be emptye, are fylled agayne thorow the flowinge waters of the see: but when man slepeth, he ryseth not agayne, vntill the heauen perish: he shal not wake vpon ner ryse out of his slepe. O that thou woldest kepe me, and hyde me in the hell, vntill thy wrath were stilled: & to apoynte me a tyme, wherin thou mightest remembre me. Maye a deed man lyue agayne? All the dayes of this my pilgrimage am I loyng, when my chaunginge shal come. Yf thou woldest but call me, I shulde obeie the: only despyse not the worke of thine owne hondes.

See thou hast nombred all my goynges, yet be not thou to extreme vpon my synnes. Thou hast sealed vp myne offences, as it were in a bagg: but be mercifull vnto my wickednesse. The mountaynes fall awaye at the last, the rockes are remoued out of their place, the waters pearse thorow the very stones by litle and litle, the floudes washe awaye the grauell & earth: Euen so destroyest thou the hope of man in like maner. Thou preuaylest agaynst him, so that he passeth awaye: thou chaungest his estate, and puttest him from the. Whether his children come to worshipe or no, he can not tell: And yf they be men of lowe degre, he knoweth not. Why le he lyeth, his flesh must haue traunyle: and why le the soule is in him, he must be in sorrowe.

The XV. Chapter.

When answered Eliphaz the Themanite, and sayde: Shulde a wyse man geue such an answeere (as it were one that spake in the wynde) and fyll his stomacke with anger? Thou reprovest w wordes, that are no thinge worth: and speakest the thinges, which can do no good. As for shame, thou hast set it asyde, els woldest thou not make so many wordes before God: but thy wickednesse teacheth thy mouth, and so thou hast chosen the a craftsie tonge. Thine owne mouth condemneth the, and not J: yee thine owne lippes shappe the an answeere. Art thou the first man, that euer was borne? Or, wast thou made before the hylles? hast thou herde the secrete counsell of God, that all wysdome is to litle for y? What knowest thou, yf we knowe not? What vnderstōdest thou, but we can the same? With vs are olde and aged men, yee such as haue lyued longer then thy forefathers.

Dost thou nomore regarde the comforte of God? but thy wicked wordes wil not suffice the. Why doth thine herte make the so proude? Why stōdest thou so greatly in thine owne conceate? Where vnto loke thine eyes, yf thy mynde is so puffed vp agaynst God & lettest such wordes go out of thy mouth? What is man, that he shulde be vnclane? what hath he (which is borne of a woman) wherby he might be knowne to be righteous? Beholde, he hath founde vnfaithfulnesse amonge his owne sanctes: yee the very heuens are vnclene in his sight. How moch more then an abhominable and vyle mā, which dryndeth wickednesse like water? I will tell the, heare me: I wil shewethe a thinge, that I knowe: which wyse men haue tolde, & hath not bene hyd from their fathers: vnto whom only the londe was geuen, chat no straunger shulde come amonge them.

The vngodly despayreth all the dayes of his life, & then omitteth of a tryauntes yeares is vnknowne. A fearfull sōunde is euer in his eares, & when it is peace, yet feareth he destruction: he beleueth neuer to be deliuered out of darcknesse, the swearde is allwaye before his eyes. When he goeth forth to get his lyuynge, he thynketh planely, that the daye of darcknesse is at honde. Sorow and carefulness make him a frayed, & cōpasse him rounde aboute, like as it were a kinge with his hoost rebdy to the battayll. For he hath stretched out his honde agaynst God, & armed himself agaynst yf Allmightie. He runneth proudly vpon him, & with a stiff necke fighteth he agaynst him: where as he couereth his face with fatnesse, and maketh his body well lykynge. Therfore shal his dwellinge be in desolate citres, & in houses which nomā inhabiteth, but are become heapes of stones.

He shal not be rich, nether shal his substance continue, ner increase vpon earth. He shal neuer come out of darcknesse, the flame shal drye vp his brāunches, with yf blast of the mouth of God shal he be take awaye. He wil nether applye himself to faithfulness, ner treuth, so sore is he disceaued w vanite.

The boke of Job.

He shall perish, afore his tyme be wome out, and his honde shal not be grene. He shal be plucked of as an vntymely grape from y vine, and shal let his floure fall, as the olyue doth. For the congregacion of Apocrites is vnfructfull, & the fyre shal consume the houses of soch, as are greedy to receaue giftes. He conceaureth tranayle, he beareth myschefe, & his body bryngeth forth disceate.

The XVI. Chapter.

Answered, and sayde: I haue oft tymes herde soch thinges. Miserable geuers of comforte are ye, all the sorte of you. Shall not thy payne wordes come yet to an ende? Or, hast thou yet eny more to saye? I conde speake, as ye do also. But wolde God, that youre soule were in my soules steade: then shulde I heape vp wordes agaynst you, and shake my heade at you. I shulde comforte you with my mouth, and release youre payne with y talkinge of my lyp pes. But what shall I do? For all my wordes, my sorow wil not ceasse: and though I holde my tounge, yet wil it not departe fro me. And now that I am full of payne, and all that I haue destroyed (whereof my wyndes beare wytnesse) there stodeh vp a dyssembler to make me answer with lyes to my face. He is angrie at me, he hateth me, and gnasheth vpon me with his teth. Myne enemy shrouleth vpon me with his eyes.

B They haue opened their mouthes wyde vpon me, and smytten me vpon the cheke despitely, they haue eased the selues thorow myne aduersite. God hath geuen me ouer to the vngodly, and deliuered me into the hon des of y wicked. I was somtyme in wealch, but sodenly hath he brought me to naught. He hath taken me by the neck, he hath rente me, and set me, as it were a marck for him to shute at. He hath compassed me rounde aboute with his darteres, he hath wounded my loy nes, & not spared. My bowels hath he pou red vpon the grounde. He hath geue me one wounde vpon another, and is falle vpon me like a giaunte. I haue sowed a sack cloth vpon my sleynne, and lye with my strength in the dust.

C My face is swollē with wepinge, & myne eyes are waxen dymme. Howbeit there is no wickednesse in my hondes, and my prayer is clege. O earth, coner not my blonde, and let my crienge fynde no rowme. For lo, my witnesse is in heauen, and he that knoweth me, is aboue in the heyth. My frendes laugh me to scorne, but myne eye poureth out teares vnto God. Though a body might please w

God, as oneman doth with another, yet the nombre of my yeares are come, & I must go the waye, from whence I shal not turne agayne.

The XVII. Chapter.

My breth sayleth, my dayes are shew tened, I am harde at deathes doore. I haue disceaued no man, yet must myne eye continue in heynesse. O deliuer me, and set me by the, who shall then be able to thrust my hondes together. Thou hast much holde their hertes from vnderstōdinge, therfore shall they not be set vp an hye. Repro nisseth his frendes parte of his good, but his owne childre spende it. He hath mademe as it were a byworde of the comon people, I am his gestinge stocke amōge the. My contenauce is heuy for very anger, & the mem bres of my body are become like a shadowe. Vertuous metherfore shall wel cōsider this, and the innocent shal take parte agaynst the Apocrite.

The rightuous wil kepe his waye, and he y hath cleane handes, wil euer be stronger & stronger. As for you, turne you, & get you hence, for I can not se one wyse mā amonge you. My dayes are past, my thoughtes are vanis hed awaye, which haue vered myne herte, chaunginge the night in to daye, & y light in to darcknes. Though I tary neuer so much, yet the grane is my house, and I must make my bed in the darcke. I call corrupcion my father, and the womes call I my mother and my sister. What helpeth then my longe tarienge? O, who wil fulfill the thinge, that I loke for: All that I haue, shall go downe in to the pytt, & lye with me in the dust.

The XVIII. Chapter.

Zen answered Baldad the Subite, and sayde: when wil ye make an ende of youre wordes? Marcke well, and confidre, we wil speake also. Wherefore are we counted as beestes, & reputed so wyle in your sight? Why destroyest thou thy self with anger? Shal y earth be forsaken, or the ston es remoued out of their place because of y? Shal not the light of the vngodly be put out: yee the flame of his fyre shal not burne. The light shalbe darcke in his dwellinge, & his candle shalbe put out with him. His pre sumptuous goinges shal be kepte in, and his owne counsell shal cast him downe. For his fete shalbe taken in the nett, and he shal wal ke in the snare. His fete shalbe holden in the gilder, and the thurstie shal catch him. The snare is layed for him in the grounde, and a pytt fall in the waye.

The boke of Job.

B Fearfulnesse shal make him a frayed on e uery syde, that he shall not knowe, where to get out. Hunger shalbe his substaunce, and mysfortune shal hange vpon him. He shall rate his owne sleynne, yee his owne armes shal be deuoure, beyng a firstborne of de ath. All his comforte and hope shal be roted out of his dwellinge, very fearfulnesse shal brynge him to the kynge. Other men shall dwell in his house (which now is none of his) and bymstone shalbe scatered vpon his hab itacion. His rotes shalbe dryed vp beneth, & aboue shal his harvest be cut downe. His remembraunce shal perish from the earth, & his name shal not be playd in the stretes: he shalbe drynen from the light into darck nesse, and be cast cleue out of the worlde. He shal necher haue children ner kyns folkes a monge his people, no ner eny posterite in his countre: yonge & olde shalbe astonysed at his death. Soch are now the dwellinges of the wicked, and this is y place of him that knoweth not God. The XIX. Chap.

Answered, & sayde: How longe wil ye vere my mynde, & trouble me with wordes? Lo, tentymes haue ye repro ued me: are ye not ashamed, for to laugh me fro to scorne? yf I go wronge, I go wronge to my self. But yf ye wil enhaunce yf selues agaynst me, & accuse me to be a wicked person ne because of the shame that is come vpon me: knowethis then, yf it is God, which hath handled me so violently, & hath compassed me aboute with his scourges. Beholde, though I rie, yet violence is done vnto me, I can not be herde: Though I complaine, there is no ne to geue sentence with me. He hath hedged vp my path, I ca not get awaye, he hath set darcknesse in my gate.

B He hath spoyled me of myne honoure, & taken the crowne awaye from my heade. He hath destroyed me on euery syde, and I am vndone: My hope hath he taken awaye fro me, as it were a tre plucked vp by the rote. His wrath is kyndled agaynst me, he taketh me, as though I were his enemy.

His mon of warre came together, which made their waye ouer me, and beseged my dwellinge rounde aboute. He hath put my brethien farre awaye from me, and soch as were of myne acquaintaunce, are become strañ gers vnto me. Myne owne kyns folkes haue forsaken me, and my frendes haue put me out of remembraunce. The seruantes and may dens of myne owne house take me for a strañ ger, and I am become as an aleaunt in their sight.

The xx. Chap. Job. vi.

When I call vpon my seruaut, he getteth me no answer: no though I praie him with my mouth. Myne owne wyse maye not abyde my breth, I am fayne to speake saye vnto the children of myne owne body. Yet the ve ry deserte foolles despyse me, and when I am gone from them, they speake euell vpon me. All soch as were my most familiers, abhorre me: and they whom I loued best, are turne agaynst me. My bone hangeth to my sleyn ne, and the flesh is awaye, only there is left me the sleynne aboute my teth. Haue pite vpon me, haue pite vpon me (o ye my frendes) for the hande of the LORDE hath touched me. Seynge God persecuteth me, wil ye vere me also? Haue ye not yet ynough of the trou ble of my flesh?

O that my wordes were witten, O that they were put in a boke: wolde God they were graue w an yron pene in leade or in stone. For I am sure, that my redeemer lyueth, and that I shall ryse out of the earth in the lat ter daye: that I shal be clothed againe with this sleynne, and se God in my flesh. Yee I my self shal beholde him, not with other but with these same eyes. My reynes are con sumed within me, when yee saye: Why do not we persecute him? we haue founde an occa sion agaynst him. But beware of the swea de, for the swearde wil be avenged of wicked nesse, and be sure, that there is a iudgment.

The XXI. Chapter.

Zen answered Sophar the Naama thite, and sayde: For the same cause do my thoughtes compell me to an swere. And why my mynde is tossed here and there. I haue sufficiently herde the cheeryn ge & reprove, therfore am I purposed to ma ke answer after my vnderstōdinge. And wost thou not this, namely: that from the begyn ninge (euer sence the creacion of man vpon earth) the prayse of the vngodly hath bene shorte, and that the ioye of Apocrytes con tinued but y twindlinge of an eye: Though he be magnified vp to the heane, so that his heade reacheth vnto the cloudes: yet he pe risheth at the last like donge: In somoch y they which haue sene him, saye: Where is he? He vanysseth as a dreame, so that he can no more be founde, & passeth awaye as a vision in y night. So that the eye which sawe him before, getteth new no sight of him, & his pla ce knoweth him nomore. His childre go a beg ginge, their handes bringe the to sorow and heynesse.

wickednesse is swete in his mouth, he hydeeth it vnder his tonge. That he fauoureth, that wyll he not forsake, but kepeth it close in his throte. The meate that he eateth, shalbe turned to the poyson of serpentes within his body. The riches yf he deuoureth, shall he perbreake agayne, for God shal drawe them out of his bely. The serpentes heade shall sucke him, and the adders tonge shall slaye him: so that he shal nomore se the ryuers and brookes of hony and butter: But labourer shal he, yf yet haue nothinge to eate. Greate trauayle shal he make for riches, but he shal not enioye them. And why? he hath oppressed the poore, and not helped them: houses hath he spoyled, and not buylded them. His bely coude neuer be fylled, therfore shal he perishe in his couetousnesse. He deuoured so greedely, yf he leste nothinge behynde, therfore his gooddes shal not prospeere. Though he had plentyousnesse of euerythinge, yet was he poore, yf therfore he is but a wretch on euery syde.

For though yf wicked haue neuer so much to fyll his bely, yet God shal sende his wrath vpon him, and cause his battayll to rayne ouer him: so that yf he fle the yron weapens, he shall be short with the stele bowe. The arrowe shal be taken forth, yf he go out at his backe, and a glisteringe swordethorow yf all of him, feare shal come vpon him. There shal no darcknes be able to hyde him. An vnkyndled fyre shal consume him, and ioke what remaineth in his house, it shall be destroyed. The heaven shal declare his wickednesse, yf the earth shal take parte agaynst him. The substaunce that he hath in his house, shalbe taken awaye and perishe, in the daye of the LORDES wrath. This is the porcion that yf wicked shal haue of God, and the heretage that he maye loke for of the LORDE.

Answered, and sayde: O heare my wordes, and amende yo<sup>r</sup> selues. Suffer me a litle, that I maye speake also, and the laugh my wordes to scorne, yf ye will. Is it with a man, that I make this disputaciō? Which yf it were so, shulde not my spiete be the in sore trouble? Marke me well, be abashted, and laye youre hāde vpon your mouth. For whē I pōndre yf conside this, I am afrayed, and my flesh is smytten with feare. Wherfore do wicked mē lyue in health and prosperite, come to their olde age, yf increase in riches? bullocke gend'reth, and that not out of tyme, their cow calueth, and is not vnfructfull.

They sende forth their children by flockes, and their sonnes lede the daunce. They beare with them tabrettes and harpes, and haue instrumentes of musick at their pleasure. They spende their dayes in welchynesse: but suddenly they go downe to hell. They saye vnto God: go from vs, we desyre not the knowlege of thy wayes. What maner of felow is the Allmightie, that we shulde serue him? What profit shulde we haue, to submitte oure selues vnto him? Lo, there is utterly no goodnesse in them, therfore will not I haue to do with the counsell of the vngodly. How oft shal the candle of yf wicked be put out: how oft commeth their destruccion vpon them? O what sorowe shal God geue them for their parte in his wrath? Yee they shal be euen as chaffe before the wynde, and as dust that the storme carieth awaye.

And though God saue their childre from soch sorowe, yet wil he so reward the felowes, that they shal knowe it. Their owne destruccion and misery shal they se with their eyes, and drynke of the fearfull wrath of the Allmightie. For what carneth he, what become of his household after his death? whesomethes passe awaye swifter then an arrowe. In as much the as God hath yf hyest power of all, who can teach him eny knowlege? One dyeth now when he is mightie yf at his best, rich and in prosperite: euen when his bowels are at the fattest, and his bones full of marrow. Another dyeth in sorowe and heynesse, and neuer had good daies. Now slepe they both a like in the earth, yf the wormes couer them. But I knowe what ye thinke, yee and what ye ymagin agaynst me vnrighteously. For ye saye: where is the pynces palace? where is the dwellinge of the vngodly? Are eny man that goeth by the waye, and (yf ye will) not regarde their tokens yf dedes? he shal tell you, that the wicked is kepte vnto the daye of destruccion, and that the vngodly shalbe brought forth in the daye of wrath. Who darre reprove him for his wayes to his face? who rewardeth him for the vngodlynesse that he doth? Yet shal he be brought to his graue, and watch amonge the heape of the deed. The shal he be fayne to be buried amonge the stones by the broke syde. All men must folowe him, yf there are innumerable gone before him. O how wayne is the comforte yf ye geue me? Are not youre answeres cleane contrary to right and treuth?

The XXII. Chapter.

The boke of Job.

S Eliphaz the Themanite gaue answere, yf sayde: Maye a man be compared vnto God in wysdome, though he seme to himself, for to be like him? What pleasure hath God in yf thou art righteous? Or what doth it profite him, yf thy wayes are perfecte? Is he afrayed to reprove the, yf to steppeth forth wth the into iudgment? Cometh not this for yf greate wickednesse, yf for thine vngodly dedes which are innumerable? Thou hast take the pledge from thy brethre for naught, yf robbed the naked of their clothinge: To soch as were weery, hast thou geuen no water to drynke, thou hast withdrawe bread fro the hungry: Shulde soch one the as yfeth violence, wthge yf oppression (doinge all thinges of parcialyte, yf harynge respecte of persones) dwell in the lode? Thou hast sent wyddowes awaye emptye and oppressed the poore fatherlesse.

Therfore art thou compassed aboute with snares on euery syde, yf sodely vexed wth feare. Shuldest thou the se no darcknesse? Shulde not the water floude runne ouer the? Now because yf God is hyer the the heavens, yf be cause thou seist yf the starres are so hye, wilt thou therfore saye: Tush, how shulde God knowe? Doth his dominion reach beyonde the cloudes? Tush, the cloudes couer him, yf he maye not se, for he dwelleth in heaven. Well, thou wilt kepe the olde waye, yf all wicked mē haue gone: both olde yf yonge, whose foundation is a runnyng water, which saye vnto God: go from vs, and after this maner: Tush, what wil the Allmightie do vnto vs? where as he (not with stōdinge) fylleth their houses wth all good. Which meanynge of the vngodly be farre frome. For wth ioy shal the godly, and with gladnesse shal the innocent se, that their increase shal be heuen downe, yf their posterite consumed with the fyre.

Therfore recōcile the vnto God, yf be content, so shal all thinges prospeere wth the right well. Receaue the lawe at his mouth, yf laye vpon his wordes in thine herte. For yf thou wilt turne to the Allmightie, thou shalt stonde fast, yf all vnrighteousnesse shal be farre from thy dwellinge: he shal geue thee an harvest, which in plenty yf abundaunce shal exceede the dust of the earth, and the golde of Ophir like ryuer stones. Deete the Allmightie his owne self shal be thine harvest, yf the heape of thy money. Then shalt thou haue thy deliuer in the Allmightie, yf lift vpon thy face vnto God. The shalt thou make thy prayer vnto him, yf he shal heare the, yf thou shalt kepe thy promyses. The, loke what thou takest in

O that I might se him yf fynde him: O that I might come before his seate, to pleate my cause before him, and to fyll my mouth with argumentes: That I might knowe, what answere he wolde geue me: yf that I might vnderstonde, what he wolde saye vnto me. Will he pleate agaynst me with his greate power yf strength, or wyll he leane him self vnto me? Oh no, let him not do so with me. But let hym geue me like power to go to lawe, then am I sure to wyne my matter. For though I go before, I fynde him not: yf I come behynde, I can get no knowlege of him: Yf I go on the left syde to pōndre his wordes, I can not atteyne vnto them: Agayne, yf I go on the right syde, he hydeeth himself, yf I can not se him. But as for my waye, he knoweth it: yf trieth me as yf golde in yf fyre.

Neuertheles my fete kepe his path, his hyestrete haue I holden, and not gone out of it. I haue not forsaken the comaundement of his lippes, but loke what he charged me with his mouth, that haue I shutt vp in my herte. It is he himself alone, who will turne him back: he doth as him listeth, and bryngeth to passe what he wil. Herewardeth me into my bosome, yf many other thinges mo doth he, as he maye by his power. This is yf cause, that I shrenke at his presence, so that when I conside him, I am afrayed of him. For in so much as he is God, he maketh my herte soft: and seynge that he is Allmightie, he putteth me in feare. Thus can not I get out of darcknesse, the cloude hath so couered my face.

together. Beholde, the wilde asses in y<sup>e</sup> be-ferte go by tymes (as their maner is) to spoyle:
yeete the very wilbernesse ministrerth foode for their children. They reape the come felde that is not their owne: and gather the gra-

The eye of the vngodly is like the aduouod. They plucke downe the mightie wth their power, z when they them selues are gotten vp, they are neuer without feare, as longe as they liue. And though they might be safe, yet they wil not receaue it, for their eyes loke vpon their owne wayes. They are exalted for a litle, but shortly are they gone, brought to extreme ponerte, z take out of the waye: yee z vterly plucke of as the eares of come. Is it not so? Who wil thē reprove me as a y<sup>e</sup>ar, man, which is but a worme?

The XXVI. Chapter.

Job answered, and sayde: O how bel-pest thou the weaker? what comfort gennest thou vnto him that hath no strength? Where is y<sup>e</sup> cōsell y<sup>e</sup> thou shuldest geue him, which hath no wysdome? Wilt thou so shewethine excellent rightuousnes?
Before whom hast thou spoken those wor-des? Who made the breth to come out of y<sup>e</sup> mouth? The giants z worthies y<sup>e</sup> are slay-ne, z lye vnder y<sup>e</sup> wolde wth their cōpanions:
yee z all they which dwell beneth in the hell are not hyd frō him, z the very destruccion it self cā not be kepte out of his sight. He stretcheth out y<sup>e</sup> north ouer the emptie, z hāgeth
in his cloudes, that they fall not downe together. He holdeth back his stole, that it cā not be sene, and spredeth his cloudes before it.

He hath cōpased the waters wth certayne boundes, vntill the daye z night come to an ende. The very pilers of heauē treble z quake at his reprose. He stilleth the see with his power, z thorow his wysdome hath he set forth y<sup>e</sup> wolde. With his spiete hath he garnished the heauē, z with his hande hath he wounded the rebellious serpēt. This is now a shorte summe of his doynges. But who is able sufficiently to rehearse his workes?
Who can perceaue and vnderstonde y<sup>e</sup> thō dre of his power? The XXVII. Chap.

Job also proceeded and wote forth in his communicacion, sayenge: As truly as God lyueth (which hath taken awaye my power from me) z the Allmightie, that hath vered my mynde: My lippes shal talke of no vanite, and my tounge shal speake no disceate, whyle my breth is in me, and as longe as the wynde (that God hath geuen me) is in my nostrils.

God seabydde, that I shulde graunte you re cause to be right. As forme, vntill myne ende come wil I neuer go from myne innocency. My rightuous dealynge wil I kepe fast, z not forsake it: For my conscience reproveth me not in all my conuersacion. Therefore my-ne enemy shal be founde as the vngodly, z he y<sup>e</sup> taketh parte agaynst me, as the vnrightuous. What hope hath y<sup>e</sup> Xpocrite, though he haue greate good, and though God geue him riches after his hertes desyre? Doth God heare him the sooner, whē he crieth vnto him in his necessite? Hath he soch pleasure z delyte in the Allmightie, that he darre allwaye call vpon God? I wil teach you in the name of God, z the thinge that I haue of y<sup>e</sup> Allmightie, wil I not kepe from you. Beholde, ye stonde in y<sup>e</sup> owne conceate, as though ye knew all thinges. Wherefore then do ye go aboute wth soch vayne wordes, sayenge: This is the porcion that the wicked shal haue of God, z the heretage that Tyrautes shal receave of y<sup>e</sup> Allmightie. If he get many children, they shal perish wth the swearde, z his posterite shal haue scarcenesse of bried. Loke whē he leaueth behinde him, they shal dye z be buried, z no man shal haue pite of his wyddowes. Though he haue as moch money as the dust of the earth, z raymēt as ready as the claye, he maye well prepare it: but the godly shal put it vpon him, and the innocēt shal deale out the money. His house shal endure as the moth, z as a bothe that the watchman maketh. When the rich man dyeth, he carieth nothinge with him: he is gone in y<sup>e</sup> twyncklynge of an eye. Destruccion taketh holde vpo<sup>s</sup> him as a water floude, z y<sup>e</sup> tēpest stealeth him awaye in the night season. A vehement wynde carieth him hence, z departeth: a storme plucketh him out of his place. It russheth in vpon him, and spareth him not, he maye not escape from the power therof. Than clappemē their hōdes at him, yee and ieast of him, whē they loke vpon his place.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

There are places where syluer is molten, z where golde is tryed: where yon is dygged out of the grounde, z stones resolved to metall. The darcknes shal once come to an ende, he can seke out the grounde of all thinges: the stones, the darcke, z the horrible shadowe. wth the ryuer of water parteth he a sūder the straunge people, y<sup>e</sup> knoweth no good neyghbourhede: soch as are rude, vnmanerly z boyseous. He bryngeth foode out of the earth, z y<sup>e</sup> which is vnder, consumeth he with fyre. There is founde a place, whose stones are clene Saphires, and where y<sup>e</sup> clottes of the earth are golde. There is a waye also that the byrdes knowe not,

that no vulturs eye hath sene: wherin y<sup>e</sup> prou-de z hye mynded walke nat, z where no lyon commeth. There putteth he his honde vpon the stony rockes, z ouerthroweth the moun-taynes. Ryuers flowe out of the rockes, z loke what is pleasaunt, his eye seyth it. Out of droppes bryngeth he greate floudes together, z the thinge that is hyd bryngeth he to light. How commeth a man then by wysdō me? Where is the place that men synde vnderstandinge? Verely no man can tell how worthy a thinge she is, nether is she founde in the lōde of the lyuynge. The depe sayeth: she is not in me. The see sayeth: she is not with me. She can not be gotten for the most syne golde, nether maye the pryce of her be bought with eny moneye. No wedges of golde of Ophir, no precious Onix stones, no Saphires maye be compared vnto her. No, nether golde ner Christall, nether swete odours ner golden plate. There is nothinge so worthy, or so excellēt, as onceto be named vnto her: for perfecte wysdome goeth farre beyonde thē all. The Topas that cometh out of Inde, maye in no wyse be likened vnto her: yee no maner of apparell how pleasaunt and saye so euer it be.

From whēce then commeth wysdome? z where is the place of vnderstandinge? She is hyd from the eyes of all men, yee z frō the soules of the ayre. Destruccion z deatch saiet we haue herdetell of her wth oure eares. But God seyth hir waie, z knoweth hir place. For he beholdeth the endes of the woude, and lo-keth vpon all that is vnder the heauē. Whē he weyed the wyndes, z measured y<sup>e</sup> waters:
whē he set the rayne in ordie, and gauethe mightie floudes a lawe: Thē dyd he se her, thē declared he her, prepared her and knewe
her. And vnto man he sayde: Beholde, to feare the LORDE, is wysdome: z to forsake euell, is vnderstandinge. The XXIX. Chap.

Job proceeded and wote forth in his communicacion, sayenge: O y<sup>e</sup> I were as I was in the monethes by-past, z in the dayes whē God preserved me:
whē his light shyned vpon my heade: whē
I wente after the same light z shyne enē tho-row the darcknesse. As it stode wth me, whē I was welthy z had ynough: whē God prospered my house: whē the allmightie was with me: whē my housholde folkes stode about me: whē my wayes rāme ouer wth butter, z whē the stony rockes gaue me ryuers of oyle: when I wentethorow the cite vnto the gate, & whē they set me a chayre in y<sup>e</sup> streete: whē the yonge mē (as soone as they sawe me) hyd the selues, & when the aged arose, & stode vp vnto me: whē the princes left of the ir talkinge, & laied their hādetothair mouth: whē the mightie kepte still their voyce, and whē their tonges cleued to the rofe of their meuthes. When all they y<sup>e</sup> herde me, called me happie: & when all they y<sup>e</sup> sawe me, wysshed me good. For I deliured y<sup>e</sup> poore: whē he cried, & the fatherlesse y<sup>e</sup> wanted helpe. & I y<sup>e</sup> shulde haue bene lost, gaue me a good worde, & y<sup>e</sup> widdowes hert praied me. And why? I put vpon me righteuousnes, which couered me as a garnēt, & equite was my crowne. I was an eye vnto the blynde, & a fōter to the lame. I was a father vnto the poore, & whē I knew not their cause, I sought it out diligētly. I brake the chafes of y<sup>e</sup> vnrightheus, & plucte the spoyle out of their teth.

Gen. 14. c

C Therefore, I thought verely, y<sup>e</sup> I shulde haue dyed in my nest: & y<sup>e</sup> my dayes shulde haue bene as many as the sondes of the see. For my rote was spied out by the waters syde, & the reuolay vpo my come. My hono<sup>r</sup> encreased more & more, and my bowe was euer the stronger in my hande. Vnto me men gaue care, me they regarded, & w<sup>o</sup> silence they taried for my counsell. If I had spoken, they wolde haue it none other wayes, my wordes were so well taken amongethē. They wayted for me, as the earth doth for the rayne: & gaped vpon me, as the troude doth to receaue the latter shower. When I laughed, they knew well it was not earnest: & this testimony of my countenance pleased thē nothinge at all. When I agreed vnto their waye, I was the chiefe, & sat as a kynge amongethē his seruantes: Or as one that comforteth soch as be in heuynesse. The XXX. Chapter.

A Vt now they that are my inferiours & yonger then I, haue me in derision: yee enē they, whose fathers I wolde haue thought some to haue set w<sup>o</sup> the dogges of my catell. The power & strenght of the ir hādes might do me no good, & as for their age, it is spēt & past awaye without eny profite. For very misery & hunger, they wente aboute in the wilderness like wretches & beggers, pluckynge vp herbes from amongethē bushes, & the Jumpers rote was their meate. And when they were dryuen forth, men cried after them, as it had bene after a thefe. Their dwellinge was beside foule brokes, yee in the caues & vennies of the earth. Vpo the daye heeth wēt they aboute crienge, & in the

brume hilles they gathered them together. They were the child: en of fooles & vylanes, which are deed awaye frō the worlde. Now am I their songe, & am become their iestinge stocke. they abhorre me, they fle farre frome & stayne my face w<sup>o</sup> spetle. For y<sup>e</sup> LORD hath opened his quyuer, he hath byrte me, & put a bydle in my mouth. Vpon my righte hande they rose together agaynst me, they haue hurte my fete, made awaye to destroye me, & my path haue they clene marred. It was so easy for them to do me harme, that they needed no man to helpethē. They fell vpon me, as it had bene y<sup>e</sup> breakynge in of waters, & ca me in by heapes to destroye me. Fearfulnesse is turned agaynst me. Myne honoure vanissheth awaye more swifely then wynde, & my prosperite departeth hēce like as it were a cloude. Therefore is my mynde poured full of heuynesse, & y<sup>e</sup> dayes of trouble haue takē holde vpon me. My bones are pearced therew in y<sup>e</sup> night season, & my synneres take no rest. With all their power haue they charged my garnēt, & gyrded me therewith, as it were w<sup>o</sup> a coate. I am euē as it were claye, & am become like as shes & dust. Whē I crye vnto the, thou doest not heare me: & though I stonde before the, yet thou regardest me not. Thou art become myne enemye, & w<sup>o</sup> y<sup>e</sup> wilt hādethou takest parte agaynst me. In y<sup>e</sup> mes past thou didest set me vp an hye, as it were aboute y<sup>e</sup> winde, but now hast thou gaue me a very sore fall. Sure I am, y<sup>e</sup> thou wilt deliuer me vnto death: where as a lodgyng is prepared for all mē lyninge. Newe sence mē to do violence vnto thē, y<sup>e</sup> are destroyed all ready: but where hurte is done, there isethel to helpe. W<sup>o</sup> not I wepe in y<sup>e</sup> tyme of trouble: Had not my soule cōpassion vpo y<sup>e</sup> poore? Yet neuer thelesse where as I lofed for good, euell happened vnto me: and where as I waited for light, there came darcknesse. My bewels seeth w<sup>o</sup> in me & take no rest, for y<sup>e</sup> dayes of my trouble are come vpo me. Mēkely & lowly came I in, yee & without eny displeasure: I stode vp in y<sup>e</sup> cōgregacion, & cōmmoned with thē. But now, I am a cōpanyon of dragons, & a felowe of Esiriches. My layne vpo me is turned to black, & my benes are brēt w<sup>o</sup> heate: my harpe is turned to sorow, & my pipe to wepinge. The XXXI. Chap.

I Made a couenaut w<sup>o</sup> myne eyes, y<sup>e</sup> I wolde not loke vpo a dāsell. For how great a porciō shal I haue of God frō aboute: & what enheritaunce frō y<sup>e</sup> Almighty on hie? As for the vngodly & he y<sup>e</sup> ioyneth himselfe to y<sup>e</sup> cōpany of wicked doers shal not faire be it from God, that he shulde medle w<sup>o</sup> wickednesse: and farre be it from the Almighty, y<sup>e</sup> he shulde medle with vnrightheous dealinge: but he rewardeth the wortes of man, and causeth euery man to fynde accordinge to his wayes. For sure it is, that God cōdemneth no man wrongeously, and the iudgmēt of the Almighty is not vnrightheous. Who rulerth the earth in his steade? Or, whom hath he set to gouerne the whole worlde? To whom hath he geuen his herte, for to diawe his spere and bieth vnto him? All flesh shal come together vnto naught, & all mē shal turne agayne vnto earth. If thou now haue vnderstōdinge, heare what I saye and hearken to the voyce of my wordes.

Maye he be made whole, that loueth no right? If thou were a very innocent man, shuldest thou then be punyshed? For he is euē the same, y<sup>e</sup> knoweth the rebellious kynge, & sayeth to princes: Vngodly men are ye, he hath no respecte vnto the personnes of y<sup>e</sup> lordly, & regardeth not the rich more thē the poore. For they be all the worke of his hondes.

In the twinklinge off an eye shal they be slayne: and at mydnight, when the people & the tyrantes rage, then shal they perish, ad be taken awaye without hondes. And whye his eyes loke vpon the wayes of man, and he seyth all his goinges. There is no darcknesse therichē shadowe, y<sup>e</sup> can hyde the wicked doers from him. For no mā shal be suffred to go into iudgment with God.

Many one, yee innumerable doth he punyssh and setteth ocher in their steades. For he knoweth their euell & darcke workes, therefore shal they be destroyed. They that were in y<sup>e</sup> steade of Seers, dealt like vngodly mē. Therefore turned they backe traitorously and vnfaithfully frō hie, & wolde not receaue his wayes. In so moch that they haue caused y<sup>e</sup> voyce of the poore to come vnto him, & now he heareth the cōplaynte of soch as are in necessity. If he deliuer & graunte pardō, who will iudge or cōdemne? But yf he hyde awaye his countenance, who wil turne it aboute agayne, whether it be to the people or to eny man? For the wickednesse & synne of y<sup>e</sup> people, he maketh an ypocrite to reigne ouer thē. For so moch then as I haue begonne to talke of God, I wil not hyndre the. If I haue gone amysse, enfourme me: yf I haue done wronge, I wil leaue of. Wilt thou not geue a reasonable answer? Art thou afrayed of eny thinge, I ynge thou beganest first to speake, & not I? For els the men of vnderstōdinge & wisdome that haue herde me, might saye: What cast thou speake? As for Job he hath nether spoken to the purpose ner wysely. O father, let Job be well tryed, because he he hath turned himselfe to y<sup>e</sup> wicked: yee aboute his synnes he hath blasphemed, which offence he hath done euen before vs, in y<sup>e</sup> he stryuech agaynst God with his wordes.

The XXXV Chapter.

I In spake morouer, and sayde: Thinkest thou it right that thou sayest: I am righteous before God? Seinge thou sayest so, how doest thou knowe it? What thinge hast thou more excellēt, thē I y<sup>e</sup> am a synner? Therefore will I geue answer vnto the & thy frendes: loke vnto the heauē, & beholde it: cōsidre y<sup>e</sup> cloudes, how they are hyer then thou. If thou synnest, what dost thou vnto him? If thine offences be many, how gettest thou his fauoure? If thou be righteous, what geuest thou him? Or, what receaueth he of thy handes? Of soch an vngodly personne as thou, & of y<sup>e</sup> sonne of man that is righteous as thou pretendest to be: there is a greete crie & cōplaynte made by thē that are oppressed with violence, yee euery man complayneth vpon the cruell arme of tyrantes. For soch one neuer sayeth: Where is God that made me? ad y<sup>e</sup> shyneth vpon vs, that we might prayse him in the night: Which geueth vs more vnderstōdinge then he doth the beastes of the earth, and teacheth vs more then the foules off heauē.

Plal. 49. 1

If eny soch complayne, no mā geueth answer, and y<sup>e</sup> because of the wickednesse off proude tyrantes. But yf a man call vpon God, doth not he heare him? Doth not the Almighty accepte his crie? Whā thou speakest then, shulde not he pardon the, yff thou open thy selfe before him, and put thy trust in him? Then vseth he no violence in his wrath nether hath he pleasure in curions and depe inquisitiones. Therefore hath Job opened his mouth but in vayne, ad folishly hath he made so many wordes.

The XXXVI. Chapter.

I In proceeded forth in his talkinge, & sayde: holde the still a litle, and I shal shewe the, what I haue yet to speake on Gods behalfe. I wil open vnto y<sup>e</sup> yet more of myne vnderstōdinge, and proue my maker righteous. True are my wordes, & no lye: and the knowlege wherewithall I argue agaynst the, is perfecte. Beholde, God casteth not awaye y<sup>e</sup> mightie, for he himselfe is mightie in power and wisdome.

Par. 31. c

As for the vngodly, he preserueth the not but helpeth the poore to their right. He turneth not his eyes away from the righteous he setteth vp kynges in their Trone, and confirmeth them, so that they allwaye syt therein. But yf they belayed in prison and cheynes, or bounde with the bondes of pouerte: then sheweth he them their workes ad dedes and the synnes wherw<sup>t</sup> they haue vsed cruell violence.

B he with punysshinge and nurturinge off them, cometh them in the eares, warneth them to leaue of from their wickednesse, and to amende. If they now will take hede and be obedient, they shall weere out their dayes in prosperite, and their yeares in pleasure ad ioye. But yff they will not obeye, they shall go thorow the swearde, z perish or euer they be awarre. As for soch as be sayned, dyssemblers and ypocrytes, they heape vp wrath for them selues: for they call not vpon him, though they be his prisoners. Thus their soule perisheth in foolishnesse, and their lyfe w<sup>t</sup> y<sup>e</sup> condemed. The poore deliuereth he out of his straytnesse, and comforteth soch as be in necessite and trouble. Euen so shall he kepe the yf thou wilt be content) from the botcomlesse pytte that is beneth: z yf thou wilt holde the quyet, he shal fyll thy table with plenteousnesse.

E uerthelesse, thou hast condemned the iudgment of the vngodly, yee euen soch a iudgment and sentence shalt thou suffie. For then shal not thy cause be stilled with cruelte, ner pacified with many giftes. Hath God ordered then, that the glorious life off the z all soch mightie men shulde not be put downe: Prolonge not thou the tyme, till there come a night for the, to set other people in thy steade. But beware that thou turne not asyde to wickednesse and synne, which hyther to thou hast chosen more then mekenesse. Beholde, God is of a mightie hye power: Where is there soch a gyde and lawe gener as he? Who wil reprove him of his waye? who wil saye vnto him: thou hast done wronge?

D o considere how greate and excellent his workes be, whom all men loue and prayse: yee wondre at him, and yet they se him but a farre of. Beholde, so greate is God, that he passeth oure knowlege, nether are we able to come to y<sup>e</sup> experie<sup>n</sup>ce of his yeares. Let turneth y<sup>e</sup> water to smal droppes, he dryueth his cloudes together for to rayne, so that they poure downe and droppe vpon men. He can spiede out the cloudes (a couerynge off his tabernacle) and cause his light to shyne vpo them, and to couer the botome of the see. By these thinges gouerneth he his people, and geueth the abundaunce of meate. In y<sup>e</sup> turnyng of a hande he hydeth the light, z at his commaundement it cometh agayne. The rysinge vpon the of sheweth heto his frendes and to the catell.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

I n this my hert is astomied, and mued out of his place. Heare then the sounde of his voyce, and the noyse y<sup>e</sup> goeth out of his mouth. He gouerneth euery thinge vnder the heauen, and his light reacheth vnto the ende of the worlde. A roaringe voyce foloweth him: for his glorious magesty geueth soch a thondre clappe, that (though a man heare it) yet maye he not perceaue it afterwarde. It geueth an horrible sownde, when God sendeth out his voyce: greate thinges doth he, which we can not comprehend. When he commaundeth the snowe, it falleth vpon the earth: As soone as he geueth the rayne a charge, Immediately the showers haue their strength and fall downe. He sendeth feare vpon euery man, that they might knowe their owne workes. The bestes crepe in to their dennes, z take their rest. Out of the south cometh the tempest, and colde out of the north.

At the bierth of God, the frost cometh, z the waters are shed abroad. The cloudes do their labour in geuynge moyssnesse, the cloudes poure downe their rayne. He distributeth also on euery syde, acordinge as it pleaseth him to deale out his workes, that they maye do, what so euer he commaundeth the thorow the whole worlde: whether it be to punyssh eny londe, or to do good vnto them, that seke him.

Herken vnto this (o Job) stonde still, and considere the wonderous workes of God. Art thou of counsel with God, when he doth these thinges? When he causeth the light to come forth of his cloudes? Art thou of his counsel, when he spredeth out the cloudes? Hast thou the perfecte knowlege of his wonderes, and how thy clothes are warme, wher the helpe is still thorow the south wynde? Hast thou helped him to spied out the heauen, which is to lorde vpo, as it were cast of cleare metall? Teach vs what we shal saye vnto hi, for we are vnmete because of darcknes. Shal it be told him, what I saye? Shulde a man speake, or shulde he kepe it backe? For euery man seith not the light, y<sup>e</sup> he kepeth cleare in the cloudes, which he clenseth whan he maketh the wynde to blowe. Golde is brought out of the Seinge then that euery body feareth him, why shulde not all wyse men also stode in feare of hi? Chap. XXXVIII.

I nspake the LORDE vnto Job out of the storme, and sayde: what is he, that hydeth his mynde with foolysh wordes? Gyde vpon thy loynes like a man, for I will question the se thou gene me a dyrecte answer. Where wast thou, when I layed y<sup>e</sup> foundations of the earth? Tell planely yff thou hast vnderfoundinge. Who hath measured it, knowest thou? Or, who hath spied y<sup>e</sup> lyne vpon it? Where vpon stode the pilers of it? Or, who layed y<sup>e</sup> corner stone? Where wast thou when the moynge starres gaue me prayse, ad when all the angels of God reioyced? Who shutt the see with doores, when it brake forth as a childe out off his mothers wombe? When I made the cloudes to be a coueringe for it, and swedled it with y<sup>e</sup> darcknes: when I gaue it my commaundement, matyng doores z barres for it. Sayenge: Zither shalt thou come, but no further, and here shalt thou laye downe thy proude and hye wayes. Hast thou geue the moynge his charge (as soone as thou wast borne) and she woth the daye spunge his place, y<sup>e</sup> it might take holde of the corners of the earth, z y<sup>e</sup> the vngodly might be shake out? Camest thou euer into the groude of the see, Or, hast thou walked in y<sup>e</sup> lowe corners of y<sup>e</sup> depe? Hast thou the gates of death bene opened vnto the, or hast thou sene the doore of euerlastige treasure? Hast thou also perceaued, how brode y<sup>e</sup> earth is? Now yf thou hast knowlege of all, the shewe me where light dwelleth, and where darcknes is: y<sup>e</sup> thou mayest bringe vs vnto their quarters, yf thou cast tell the waye to their houses. Knowest thou (when thou wast borne) how olde thou shuldest be?

Wentest thou euer in to the treasures off the snowe, or hast thou sene y<sup>e</sup> secrete places of the hale: which I haue prepared agaynst the tyme of trouble, agaynst the tyme of battell z warre? By what waye is the light parted, z the heate dealt out vpon earth? Who denyeth the abundaunce of waters in to ryuers, or who maketh a waye for the stormy wecher, y<sup>e</sup> it watereth z moystureth y<sup>e</sup> drye z barren ground: to make the grasse growe in places where no body dwelleth, z in the wil-dernes where no man remayneth: Who is the father of rayne? Or, who hath begotten the droppes of dew? Out of whose wobe came the yse? who hath gendred the coldnes of y<sup>e</sup> ayre? y<sup>e</sup> the waters are as harde as stones, z lye congeeled aboue the depe. Hast thou brought y<sup>e</sup> vii. starres together? Or, art thou able to breake the Circle of heaue? Cast thou bringe forth the moynge starre or the eueninge starre at conuenient tyme, z coueyeth the home agayne? Knowest thou the counse off heaue, y<sup>e</sup> thou mayest set vp the ordinaunce therof vpo earth? Moreover, cast thou lift vpon thy voyce to y<sup>e</sup> cloudes, y<sup>e</sup> they maye poure downe a greate rayne vpo the? Canst thou thodre also y<sup>e</sup> the y<sup>e</sup> maye go their waye, z be obedient vnto the, saye ge: lo, here are we? Who geueth sure wisdome, or stedfast vnderfoundinge? who nombreth the cloudes in wisdome? who stilleth y<sup>e</sup> vehement waters of the heaue? who turneth the clottes to dust, z the to be clottes agayne? Hunttest thou the praye fro the Lyon, or sedest thou his whelpes lye gein their dennes z lurkinge in their couches? who prouydeh meate for the rauen, wher his yonge ones crie vnto God, ad fle aboute for want of meate? Chap. XXXIX.

N owest thou the tyme when the wilde gores buge forth their yoge and ge the stony rockes? Or layest thou waye when the hinds vnto farne? Rekenest thou the moneths after they ingendie, y<sup>e</sup> thou knowest the tyme of their bearinge? Or when they lye downe, when they cast the ir yonge ones, z when they are deliuered off their trauayle z payne? How their yoge ones growe vp z waye greate thorow good feedinge: who letteth the wilde asse go fre, or who lowseth the hedes of the Mole? Vnto whos I haue geuen the wyldernes to be their house, z the vntilled londe to be their dwellinge place. That they maye geue no force for the multitude off people in the cities, nether to regarde the crienge of the dryuer: but to seke their pasture aboute the mountaynes, z to folowe vpon the grene grasse. Wyl the vnto come be so tame as to do y<sup>e</sup> seruyce, or to abyde still by thy cribe? Cast thou bynde y<sup>e</sup> yocke aboute him in thy forores, to make him plowe after the in y<sup>e</sup> vallis: Mayest thou trust hi (because he is ströge) or comitte thy laboure vnto hi? Mayest thou beleue hi, y<sup>e</sup> he wil bringe home y<sup>e</sup> come, or to cary eny thinge vnto y<sup>e</sup> barne? The Estrich (whose fethers are fayer the y<sup>e</sup> wynges of the sparrow haute) wher he hath layed his egges vpon the greunde, he bredeth them in the dust, and forgetteth them: so that they might be troden with fete, or broken with scinnie wilde beaust.

The boke of Job.

So harde is he vnto his yong ones, as though they were not his, and labourerth in wayne without eny feare. And that because God hath taken wisdom from him, & hath not geuen him vnderstandinge. When his tyme is, he flyeth vp an hie, and careth neither for horse ner man.

C Hast thou geuen the horse is strength, or larned him to bowe downe his neck with fear: that he letteth him self be dryuen forth like a greshopper, where as the stoute neyenge that he maketh, is fearfull: he breaketh & groundeth with the hofes of his fete chearfully in his strength, and runneth to mete the harness men. He layeth asyde all feare, his stomack is not abated, nether starteth he a back for eny swerde. Though the quyners rattle vpon him, though the speare and shilde glister: yet ruff heth he in fearfully, and beareth vpon the ground. He feareth not the noyse of the trompettes, but as soone as he heareth the shawmes blowe, tush (sayeth he) for he smelleth the batell as farre off, & noyse, the captaynes and the shoutinge.

D Commeth it thorow thy wysdome, that the goshaute flyeth toward the south? Doth the Aegle mounte vp & make his nest on hie at thy commaundement? He abydeh in the stony rockes, ad vpon the hie toppes of harde mountaynes, where no man can come. From thence maye he beholde his praye, and loke farre aboute with his eyes. His yong ones are fed with bloude, and where eny deede body lyeth, there is he immediatly.

Morouer, God spake vnto Job and sayde: Can he that stryuet with the Allmightie, be at rest? Shulde not he which disputeth with God, geue him an answer? Job answered the LORDE, sayenge: Beholde, I am to vyle a personne, to answer the, therefore will I laye my hande vpon my mouth. Once or twyse haue I spoken, but I will saye no more.

The XL. Chapter.

Jhen spake the LORDE vnto Job out of the storme, and sayde: gyde vp & loynes like a man, and tell me the thing that I will aye the. Wilt thou disanulle my iudgment? Or, wilt thou condemne me, & thou thy self mayest be made righteous? Is thine arme then like the arme of God? Maketh thy voyce such a soude as his doth? Then arme thy self with thine owne power, vp, decke the in thy ioly aray, poure out the indignacion of thy wrath: se that thou cast downe all & proude, loke well, that thou makest all such as be stubburne, to obey: treade all the vngodly vnder thy fete, cast the downe

Beholde, the cruell beaste (whom I made wth the) which eateth haye as an ore: lo, how stronge he is in his loynes, and what power he hath in the nauell of his body. He spreadeth out his tale like a Cedre tre, all his waynes are stiff. His shyms are like pipes of brass, his rygge bones are like stanes of yron. First when God made him, he ordered the wyldernes for him, & the mountaynes sholde geue him graspe, where all the beastes off the felde take their pastyme. He lyeth amonge the redes in the Mosses, the femmes hyde him with their shadowe, and the wylowes of the broke couer him rounde aboute. Lo, without eny labour might he drynke out the whole floude, and suppe off Jordane without eny trauayle. Who darre laye honde vpon him openly, and vnder take to catch him? Or, who darre put an hoke thorow his nose, ad laye a snare for him?

Darest thou drawe out Leniathan with an angle, or bynde his tonge with a snare? Canst thou put a ryng in the nose of him, or bore his chafes thorow with a naule? Will he make many sayre wordes with the (thynkest thou) or flatter the? Will he make a covenant with the? Or, art thou able for to compell him to do the contynual seruyce? Wilt thou takethy pastyme wth him as with a byrde, or geue him vnto thy maydens, that thy cecompanyons maye hew him in peces, to be parted amonge the marchaunt men? It is better for the to confide what harme might happen the there thorow and not to touch him. For when thou thynkest to haue holde vpon him, he shall begyle the: Every man also that seyth him, shall go backe. And why: there darre none beset him, as to rayse him vp.

The XLI. Chapter.

Who is able to stonde before me? Or, who hath geuen me eny thyng afore hande, that I am bounde to rewarde him agayne? All thynges vnder heauen are myne. I feare him not, whether he threaten or speake sayre. Who listeth him vp and stripeth him out of his clothes, or who taketh him by the bytt of his bydle? Who openeth the dore of his face: for he hath horrible teth rounde aboute. His body is covered with scales as it were with shyldes, locked in, kepte, and well compacte together. One is so ioyned to another, that no ayre can come in: yee one hangeth so vpon another, and sticketh so together, that they can not be sundered. His nesinge is like a glisteringe fyre, and his eyes like the momynge shyne. Out of his mouth go torches and fyre brandes, out off his nostrils there goeth a smoke, like as out off an hote settinge pott. His bieth maketh the coales burne, the flame goeth out of his mouth. In his necke remayneth strength, and before his face sorowe is turned to gladnesse. The membres of his body are ioyned so straitly one to another, and cleue so fast together, that he can not be moued.

His hart is as harde as a stone, ad as fast as the stythye that the hammer man smyteth vpon. When he goeth: the mightiest off all are afrayed, and the waves heuy. If he drawe out the swerde, there maye nether speare ner brest plate abyde him. He setteth as moch by a strawe as by yron, and as moch by a rotten stocke as by metall. He starteth not awaye for him that bendeth the bowe, & is for syng stones, he careth as moch for stubble as for them. He counteth the hammer no better then a strawe, he laugheth him to scorn that shaketh the speare. He treadeth the golde in the myre like & sharpe potsherdes. He maketh the depe to seeth and boye like a pott, and stereth the see together like an oymment. The waye is light after him, the depe is his walkynge place. Vpon earth is there no power like vnto his, for he is so made, that he feareth not. If a man will consider all hie thynges, this same is a kyng over all the children off pryde.

The XLII. Chapter.

Jhen Job answered the LORDE, and sayde: I knowe that thou hast power of all thynges, and that there is no thought hid vnto the. For who can kepe his owne counsell so secrete, but it shall be knowne? Therefore haue I spoken vnwisely, seynge these thynges are so hye, and passe my vnderstandinge. O herken thou vnto me also, and let me speake: answer me vnto the thinge that I will aye the. I haue geuen dili gent eare vnto the, and now I se & with my ne eyes. Wherefore I geue myne owne self & blame, and take repentance in the dust and ashes.

Therefore take viij. oxen & seven rammes, and go to my seruante Job & offer vp also for youre selues a brennt offeringe, and lat my seruante Job praye for you: & him will I accepte, and not deale with you after youre foolishnesse: in that ye haue spoken & thynge which is right, like as my seruante Job hath done.

So Eliphaz the Themanite, Baldad, Suhite and Sophar the Naamathites, the te their waye, and did a cordinge as the LORDE commaunded them. The LORDE also accepted the personne off Job, and the LORDE turned him vnto Job, when he prayed for his frendes: yee the LORDE gaue Job twyse the moch as he had afore.

For the LORDE had brought vpon him. For the LORDE had brought vpon him.

And the LORDE made Job richer then he was before: for he had xiiij. M. shepe, vi. M. of camels, a M. yock oxen, and a M. asses. He had children also: viij. sonnes and iij. daughters. The first he called Daye, the seconde pouerte: the thirde, All plenteousnes. In the londe were none founde so sayre, as the daughters of Job, & their father gaue them an heritaunce amonge their biethen.

The Psalter

The first psalme.

Blessed is & man, & goeth in the counsell of & vngodly: & abydeh not in the waye of symners, & sitteth not in the shadowe of the scomefull. But he lyteth in the lawe of & LORDE, & exercyseth himself in his lawe both daye and night. Soch a man is like a tre planted by the water, & bringeth forth his frute in due season.

The Psalter.

His leues shal not fall off, ad loke what er he doth, it shal prosper. As for the vnly, it is not so with them: but they are like dust, which y wynde scattereth awaom of the grounde. Therfore the vngod all not be able to stonde in the iudgmet, er the synners in the congregacion off ightuous. For the LORDE aloweth y of the rightuous, but the waye of the dly shal perishe.

The II. A psalme of David.

Why do the heithen grudge: why do the people ymagyn vayne thinges?
The kynges of the earth stode vp,
he rulers are come together, agaynst LORDE ad agaynst his anoynted. Let breate their bondes a sunder, and cast aye their yocke from vs. Neuerthelesse, that dwelleth in heauen, shall laugh the
of scorner: yee even the LORDE himself shall haue them in derision. Then shal he spea-vnto them in his wrath, and vexe them in fore displeasure. Yet haue I set my kynvpon my holy hill of Sion. As for me ill preach the lawe, wherof the LORDE h sayde vnto me: Thou art my sonne, is daye haue I begotten the. Desyre off re, and I shall geue the the heithen for thienheritaunce. See the vttemost partes of woilde for thy possession. Thou shalt tru-hem with a rodde of yron, and breate the peces like an erthen vessell. Be wyse now erfore (o ye kynges) be warned, ye that are dges of the earth. Serue the LORDE ich feare, and reioyse before him with reue-nce. Byssethe sonne, lest the LORDE be an-ie, and so ye perish from the right waye.
or his wrath shal be kindled shortly: blessed ll they that put their trust in him.

The III. A psalme of David.

Why are they so many (o LORDE) y

The IIII. A psalme of David.

Hear me whē I call, o God of my rightuosnes, thou that comfortest me in my trouble: haue mercy vpon me, and herken vnto my prayer. O ye sonnes off men: how longe will ye blaspheme myne honour: why haue ye soch pleasure in vanyte?
seke after lyes. Sela. Knowe this, that the LORDE dealeth maruelously with his saynte: and when I call vpon the LORDE, he heareth me. Be angrie, but synne narcoms w your owne hertes vpo your beddes, z remembre your selues. Sela. Offre y sacrifice of rightuousnes, z put your trust in y LOR-DE. There be many y saye: who wil do vs eny good: whereas thou (o LORDE) hast showed vs the light of y countenance. Thou reioycest myne herte, though their encreace be greate both in corne z wyne. Therefore wil I laye me downe in peace, z take my rest for thou LORDE only setteest me in a sure dwellynge. The V. A psalme of David.

Hear my wordes (o LORDE) conside my callinge. O make the voyce of my petition, my kyng z my God: for vnto the wil I make my prayer. Heare my voyce by tymes (o LORDE) for early in the morninge wil I gett me vnto the, yee z y w<sup>d</sup>ill gece. For thou art not the God y hath pleasure in wickednesse, there maye no vngodly personne dwel with the. Soch as be cruel maye not stonde in thy sight, thou art an ene-mie vnto all wicked doers.

Thou destroyest the lyers: the LORDE ab-horreth the bloude thurstie and disceatfull.
But as for me, I wil come into thy house, o uen vpon the multitude of thy mercy: ad in thy feare wyll I worship towarde thy holy reple. Lede me (o LORDE) in thy rightuous-nesse, because of myne enemyes, ad make thy waye playne before me. For there is no faichfulnesse in their mouthes: they dyssem-ble in their hertes: their throte is an open sepulchre: with their tonges they disceane.
Punish them (o God) that they maye perish in their owne ymaginacions: cast them out because of the multitude of their vngodlinesse, for they rebell agaynst the. Agayne, let all them that put their trust in the, reioyse:
ye let them ever be geuyng of thankes, because thou defendest them: that they which loue thy name, maye be ioysfull in the. For thou LORDE geuest thy blessinge vnto the rightuous: and with thy sauorable kynde thou defendest him, as with a shylde.

LORDE) for I am weake: o LORDE heale me, for all my bones are vexed. My soule also is in greate trouble, but LORDE how longe: Turne the (o LORDE) z deliuer my soule: Oh saue me, for thy mercies sake. For in death no man remembreth the: Oh who wil geue the thanques in the hell? I am weery of gromynge: Every night was she I my bedde, z water my couche with my teares. My countenance is chaunged for very inwarde grese, I cosu-me awaye, I haue so many enemyes. Awaye frome all ye wicked doers, for the LOR-DE hath herde the voyce off my wepinge.
The LORDE hath herde myne humble petition: the LORDE hath receaued my prayer. All myne enemyes shalbe cofounded z sore vexed:
ye they shalbe turned backe and put to shame, and that right soone.

The VII. A psalme of David.

LORDE my God, in y do I trust: saue me fro all the y persecute me, z de-liuer me. Lest he hanche vp my soule like a lyon, z reare it in peeces: whyle there is none to helpe. O LORDE my God, yff I haue done eny soch thinge: yf there be eny vn-

Sela. Stode vp (o LORDE) in y<sup>e</sup> wrath, list vp thyself ouer the furions indignacio of my ne enemyes: arise vp (for me) in the vengeance at that thou hast promysed. That the con-gregacion of the people maye come aboute gayne. The LORDE is iudge ouer the people: Auengeme then (o LORDE) acordinge to my rightuousnes z innocency. Oh let the vic-tednes of the vngodly come to an ende: but manteyne the iust, thou rightuous God, y<sup>e</sup> triest the very hertes z the reynes. My helpe cometh of God, which preserueth them y not turne, he hath whet his swerde: he hath bent his bowe z made it ready. He hath prepayed him the weapens of death, z ordained his arrowes to destroye. Beholde, he trauayleth with myschefe, he hath coceaued thanques vnto the LORDE for his rightuous-nes sake, and wil prayse the name of the LOR-DE the most hyesi.

The VIII. A psalme of David.

LORDE oure governoure: how wontroye the enemye and the auenger. For I considre thy heauens, euen the worke off thy fyngers: the Moone and the starres which thou hast made. Oh what is man, y thou art so myndfull of him: ether the sonne of ma-that thou visitest him: After thou haddest for a season made him lower the the angels, thou crownedest him with hono<sup>r</sup> z glory.

Thou hast set him aboue the workes off thy were discouered, z perished at thy presence.

For thou hast manteyned my right and my true iudge. Thou rebukest the heithen, and destroyest the vngodly, thou puttest out their name for ever and ever. The enemyes swer-des are come to an ende, thou hast ouerthro-with the. But y LORDE endureth for ever, he hath prepared his scate vnto iudgmet.

He governeth y<sup>e</sup> worlde with rightuousnes z ministreth true iudgmet vnto the people.
The LORDE is a defence for the poore, a defen-

As for the heithen, they are suncke dor as in the pytte that they made: in the snare nette, which they spred out priuely, is their owne fore take. Thus y LORDE is knowne to execute true iudgment, whe the vngodly is trapped in the workes of his owne handes. Sela. The wicked must be turned vnto hell, and all the heithen y forget God. But the poore shal not allwaye be out of remembraunce, the paciēt abydinge of soch as be in trouble shal not perish for euer. Psalm 111. Wilt thou hyde thyself in tyme of trouble? Whyle y vngodly hath the ouer hande, the poore must suffre persecucion: O that they were taken in the ymaginations which they go aboute. For the vngodly maketh boast of his owne hertes desyre, the curvetours blesseth him self, and blasphemeth the LORDE. The vngodly is so proude and full of indignaciō, that he careth not: nether is God before his eyes. His wayes are allwaye filthy, thy iudgements are farre out of his sight, he despyeth all his enemies. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, I shal neuer be cast downe, there shal no harme happē vnto me. His mouth is full of cursynge, fraude and disceate: vnder his tōge is trauaile z sorrow. He setteth lurkyng in the gardens, that he maye priuely murther the innocent, his eyes are set vpon the poore. He lyeth wayting secretly, as it were a lyon in his denne. He lurketh that he maye rauish the poore, yee to rauish the poore, when he hath gotten him in to his nett. Then smyteth he, then oppresseth he z casteth downe the poore with his auctorite. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, God hath forgotten, he hath turned a waye his face, so y he will neuer see it. Arise o LORDE God, lift vpe thine honde, and forget not the poore. Wherfore shulde the wicked blaspheme God, and saye in his herte: Tush, he careth not for it? Breathe thou y arme off the vngodly and malicious, search out the wickednesse which he hath done, that he maye perish. The LORDE is kynge for euer, yee heithen shal perish out off his honde. LORDE, thou hearest the desyrous longynge off the poore: their herte is sure, that thine eare herkeneth therto. Helpe the fatherlesse and poore vnto their right, that the vngodly be nomore exalted vpon earth.

The X. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 112. In the LORDE put I my trust: how will yethen saye to my soule: that she shulde fle as a byrde vpon youre hill: For so, the vngodly haue bet their bowe, and made redy their arrowes in the quyer: that they maye priuely shute at them, which are true of herte. The very foundation haue they cast downe, what ca the righteous the do withall? But the LORDE is in his holy temple, the LORDES seate is in heauen: he considereth it with his eyes, his eye lyddes be holde the children of men. The LORDE seeth both the righteous and vngodly, but who so delitereth in wickednes, him his soule abhorreth. Vpon the vngodly he shal rayne snares, fyre, brynstone, storme and tempest: this rewarde shal they haue to drynke. For the LORDE is righteous, ad he loueth righteousnes, his countenaunce he holdeth the thinge y is iust.

The XI. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 113. Helpe LORDE, for there is not one sayng more: very fewe faithfull are there amonge the children off men. Every man telleth lyes to his neghbo, they do but flater with their lippes and dissemble in their herte. O that the LORDE wolde rote out all disceatfull lippes, ad the tonge that speaketh prouder thinges. Which saye: Oure tōge shulde priuayle: we are they that ought to speake, who is lorde ouer vs? Now for the troubles sake off the oppressed, z because of the complaynte of the poore, I wil vpsaye the LORDE: I wil helpe the, and set the at rest. The wordes of the LORDE are pure wordes: enē as y syluer, which from earth is tried and purified vii. tymes in the fyre. Repe the therfore (o LORDE) and preserve vs fro this generacion for euer. And why? when vanite and ydylnes getteth the ouer hande amonge the children of men, all are full off vngodly.

The XII. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 114. How longe wilt thou forget me, o LORDE: for euer: how longe wilt thou hyde thy face frome? Oh how longe shall I see counsell in my soule: how longe shall I be so vered in my herte: how longe shal myne enemye triumphe ouer me? Considre, ad heare me, o LORDE my God: lighten myne eyes, that I slepe not in death. Lest myne enemye saye: I haue preuayled agaynst hi for yf I be cast downe, they that trouble me will reioyse at it.

But my trust is in thy mercy, and my herte is ioyfull in thy sauynge health. I wil synge of the LORDE, that dealeth so louyngly with me. (See I wil prayse the name of the LORDE the most hyest)

The XIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 115. The foolish bodyes saye in their hertes: Tush, there is no God. They are corrupte, ad become abhominable in their doynges, there is not one y doth good. The LORDE looked downe fro heauē vpon the children of men, to see yf there were any, that wolde vnderstande z seeke after God. But they are all gone out of the waye, they are altogether become vnprofitable: there is no nether doth good, no nor one. * Their throate is an open sepulchre, with their tonges they haue disceaued, the poyson of Aspes is vnder their lippes. * Their mouth is full of cursynge and bytternes, their sete are swift to shed bloude. * Destruction z wretchednes are in their wayes, ad the waye of peace haue they not knowne: there is no feare off God before their eyes. How can they haue vnderstandinge, y worke myschefe, eatinge vp my people, as it were bled, z call not vpon y LORDE? Therfore shal they be brought in greate feare, for God stondeth by the generacion of the righteous. As for you, ye haue made a mocke at the counsell of the poore, because he putteth his trust in the LORDE. Oh y the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out off Sion. Oh that the LORDE wolde deliuer his people out of captiuyte. The shulde Jacob reioyse, and Israel shulde be right glad.

The XIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 116. LORDE, who shal dwell in thy tabernacle: who shal rest vpon y holy hill? Euen he y ledeth an vncorrupte life: that doth the thinge which is right, ad that speaketh the treuth from his herte. but maketh moche of the that feare the LORDE: he y sweareth vnto his neghbo, z offpoynteth him not. He that geneth not his money vpon vsury, and taketh no rewarde agaynst the innocent. Whoso doth these thinges, shal neuer be removed.

The XV. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 117. Reserve me (o God) for in the do I trust. I haue sayde vnto y LORDE: thou art my God, my goodes are nothinge vnto the. All my delyte is vpon the sanctes that are in the earth, and vpon soch like. But they y runne after another, shal haue greate trouble. Their drynke offerynge of bloude wil not I offre, nether make mencion of their name in my mouth. The LORDE himself is my good and my thynt, thou manteynest my enheritaunce. I am fallen vnto me in a fayre grome: I am glad is ne a goodly heretage. I wil thanke the LORDE for geuyng me warnynge: my reioysing so haue chastened me in the night. Sela. Afore honde sawe I God allwayes, he me, for he is on my right honde, that I shulde not be meued.

Therfore dyd my herte reioyce, z my tūge was glad, my flesh also shal rest in hope. For why? thou shal not leaue my soule in hell, nether shal thou suffre thy saynte to se corrupcion. Thou hast shewed me the wayes off life: thou shal make me full of ioye w thy countenaunce. At thy right hande there is pleasure and ioye for euer more.

The XVI. A psalme of Dauid.

Psalm 118. Rare y right (o LORDE) considere my complaynte: herken vnto my prayer, that goeth not out of a fayed mouth. Let my sentence come forth fro thy presence, and loke vpon the thinge that is equall. Thou hast proued z visited myne herte in the night season: thou hast tried me in the fyre, z hast founde no wickednes in me: for I vterly purposed, that my mouth shulde not offende. Because of the wordes of thy lippes, I haue kepte me fro the workes of men, in y way off the murtherer. Oh ordre thou my goynge in thy pathes, that my fote steppes slippe not. For vnto the Icrie, heare me o God, encline thine eare to me, and herke vnto my wordes. Shewe y marvelous louynge kinnesse, thou that sauest them which put their trust in the, from soch as resist thy right honde. Repe me as the apple of an eye, defende me vnder the shadowe of thy wynges. From the vngodly that trouble me, fro myne enemies which compasse my soule rounde aboute.

The Psalter.

Which manteyne their owne welthynges with oppreſſion, & their mouth ſpeaketh proude thinges. They lye waytinge in & waye on euery ſyde, turnynge their eyes downe to the grounde. Like as a lyon that is greedy of his praye, & as it were a lyons whelpelurkinge in his denne. Vp LORDE, diſpoynte him & caſt him downe: deliuer my ſoule with thy ſwerde from the vngodly. Fro the men of thy honde (O LORDE) from the men off the woulde, which haue their porcion in this liſe: whoſe belies thou ſylleſt with thy treaſure.

They haue children at their deſyre, and leaue the reſte of their ſubſtance for their babes. But as for me, I will beholde thy preſence in righteouſnes: and when thy glory appeareth ſhal be ſatiſfied.

XVII. A pſalme of David when he is deliuered from the honde off Saul.

Willoweth (O LORDE) my ſtrength.

The LORDE is my ſuccour, my refuge, my ſauour: my god, my helper i whoſe iuſt: my buckler, & horne of my health, & my proteccion. I wil prayſe y LORDE & call vpon him, ſo ſhal I be ſafe from myne enemies.

The ſorowes of death copassed me: & the bioſes of vngodlynes made me aſtrayed. The paynes of hell came aboute me, the ſnares of death toke holde vpon me. Yet in my trouble I called vpon the LORDE, & coplayned vnto my God. So he herde my voyce out off his holy temple, & my coplaynte came before hi, yee eue into his eares. The earth trembled & quaked, the very foundacions of the hilles ſhoke & were remoued, becauſe he was wrothe.

There wete a ſmoke out of his noſtreils, & a coſumynge fyre out of his mouth, ſo y coales were kyndled at it. He bowed the heaues & came downe, & it was darcke vnder his ſete. He rode vpon the Cherubins & dyd fle: he came flyenge with the wynges of the wynde. He made darckneſſe his paulyon rounde aboute hi, with darcke water & thicke cloudes to coner him. At the brightnes off his preſence the cloudes remoued, with hale ſtones & coales of fyre. The LORDE alſo thondred out off y heaue, & the heyth gaue his thondre w hale ſtones & coales of fyre. He ſent out his arrowes & ſcattered the, he caſt ſore lighteminges, & deſtroyed the. The ſpunges of waters were ſene, & the foundacions of the rounde woulde were diſcouered at y chiding (O LORDE) at the blaſtinge & breth of thy diſpleaſure. He ſent downe fro the heyth to fetch me, & toke me out of greate waters. He deliuered me from my ſtronger enemies, and from my foes which were to mightie for me. They preuented me in the tyme of my trouble, but y LORDE was my defence. He brought me forth alſo into lyberte: & deliuered me, becauſe he had a fauor vnto me. The LORDE ſhall reward me after my righteous dealinge, & accordinge to the cleuſſe of my hodes ſhal he recopense me. For I haue kepte the wayes of the LORDE, & haue not behaved myſelf wickedly agaynſt my God. I haue an eye vnto all his lawes, & caſt not out his commaundementes fro me. Vncorrupte will I be before hi, & wil eſchue myne owne wickednes. Therefore ſhal y LORDE reward me after my righteous dealinge, & accordinge vnto y cleuſſe of my hodes in his eye ſight. With the holy thou ſhalt be holy, & w y innocet thou ſhalt be innocet. With the clenethon ſhalt be cleneth with the ſtrowarde thou ſhalt be ſtrowarde. For thou ſhalt ſaue the poore oppreſſed, & bringe downe the hyllokes of the proude. Thou lighteſt my candle, O LORDE my God: thou makeſt my darckneſſe to be light. For in the I can diſcoſit an hoost of me: yee in my God I can leape ouer the wall.

The waye of God is a perfecte waye: the wordes of the LORDE are tried in the ſyncke is a ſhyld of defence, for all them that truſt in him. For who is God, but the LORDE? Or, who hath eny ſtrength, but oure God? It is God that hath gyded me with ſtrength & made my waye vncorrupte. He hath made my ſete like hartes ſete, & ſet me vpon an hye. He teacheth myne hondes to fight, and maketh myne armes to breake euen a bowe off ſtele. Thou haſt geue me the defence of thy health, thy right hande vpholdeth me, and thy louynge correccion maketh me greate. Thou haſt made rowme vpon me vnder me for to go, that my ſote ſteppes ſhulde not ſlyde. I will folowe vpon myne enemies, and take them: I will not turne till they be diſcomfited. I will ſmyte them, they ſhall not be able to ſtonde, but fall vnder my ſete. Thou haſt gyded me with ſtrength vnto y batell, thou haſt throwe them all downe vnder me, that roſe vp agaynſt me. Thou haſt made myne enemies to turne their backes vpon me, thou haſt deſtroyed the y hated me. They cried, but there was none to helpe them: yee euen vnto the LORDE, but he herde the not. I will beate them as ſmall as the duſt before the wynde, I will caſt them out as y claye in the ſtretes. Thou ſhalt deliuer me from the ſtrynges of the people, thou ſhalt make me the heade of the & eith. A people whom I haue not knowne, ſhall ſerue me.

The Psalter.

As ſoone as they heare of me, they ſhall obey me, but the ſtraunge childre dyſſemble with me. The ſtraunge childre are wayed, and go haltinge out of their pathes. The LORDE ſyneth: & ad bleſſed be my helper, prayſed be the God of my health. Eue y God which ſeyth that I be auenged, and ſubdueth the people vnto me. It is he that deliuereth me from my cruell enemies: thou ſhalt liſt me vp from them that ryſe agaynſt me, thou ſhalt ryd me from the wicked man.

For this cauſe I wil geue thanks vnto y (O LORDE) amonge the Gentiles, & ſynge prayſes vnto thy name. Greate proſperite geueth he vnto his kyng, and ſhereth louinge kyndneſſe vnto David his anoynted, yee & vnto his ſede for evermore.

The XVIII. A pſalme of David.

He very heaues declare the glory off God, & the very firmamēt ſhereth his hadye worke. One daye telleth another, and one night certiſieth another. There is nether ſpeech ner language, but thei voyces are herde amonge the. Their ſounde is gone out in to all londes, and their wordes in to the endes of the woulde.

In the hath he ſett a tabernacle for y So ne, which cometh forth as a brydegrome out off his chambere, & reioyſeth as a giaunte to ruine his courſe. It goeth forth fro the one ende of the heauen, and runneth aboute vnto the ſame ende agayne, & there maye nomā byde himſelf fro the heate therof. The lawe of the LORDE is a perfecte lawe, it quickeneth the ſoule. The teſtimony of y LORDE is true, & geueth wiſdome euen vnto babes.

The ſtatutes of the LORDE are right, & reioyſe the herte: y comaundemēt of y LORDE is pure, and geueth light vnto the eyes.

The feare of the LORDE is cleane, & entueth for ener: the iudgmentes of the LORDE are true and rigtuous alltogether. More pleaſant are they then golde, yee then moche ſyne golde: ſwater then hony & the hony combe. Theſe thy ſeruaunt kepeth, & for kepynge of them there is greate reward. Who can tell, how oft he offendeth? Oh cleſe thou me from my ſecrete fautes. Kepeth thy ſeruaunt alſo from pieſumptuous ſynnes, leſt they get the dominion ouer me: ſo ſhal I be vndeſyled & innocet fro the greate offence. See the wordes of my mouth & the meditacion of my herte ſhal be acceptable vnto the, O LORDE, my helper and my redemer.

Now knowe I, that the LORDE helpeth his anoynted, and will heare him fro his holy heauen: mightie is the helpe of his right hode. Some put their truſt in charettes, & ſome in horſes: but we wil remembre y name of the LORDE oure God. They are brought downe and fallen, but we are ryſen and ſtonde vpon right. Saue (LORDE) & helpe vs (O kyng) when we call vpon the.

The XX. A pſalme of David.

LORDE, he reioyſfull is the kyng in y ſtrength: O how excedynge glad is he of thy ſauynge health. Thou haſt geuen him his hertes deſyre, & haſt not put him fro the request of his lippes. Sela. For thou haſt pierced him w liberall bleſſinges, & ſett a crowne of golde vpon his heade. He aſked liſe of the, & thou gaueſt him a longe liſe, eue for ever & ener. His honoure is greate in thy ſauynge health, glory and greate worſhope ſhalt thou laye vpon him.

For thou ſhalt geue him everlaſtinge felicitye, & make him glad w the ioye of y couſenaunce. And why: becauſe the kyng putteth his truſt in the LORDE, & in the mercy of the moſt hieſt he ſhal not myſeary. Let all thine enemies ſele thy honde, let thy right honde ſynde out all the y hate the. Thou ſhalt make the liſe a fyre ouen in tyme of thy wrath: the LORDE ſhal deſtroye the in his diſpleaſure, & the fyre ſhall conſume them. Their ſtrength ſhall thou rote out of the earth, & their ſede fro amonge the childre of men. For they intended myſcheſe agaynſt the, & ymaged ſoch deuycies, as they were not able to perſourme. Therefore ſhalt thou put the to flight, & with thy ſtringes thou ſhalt make readye thine arrowes agaynſt the faces off them. Be thou exalted (LORDE) in thine owne ſtrength, ſo wil we ſynge and prayſe thy power.

The XXI. A pſalme of David.

O God, my God: why haſt thou forſaken me: y wordes of my coplaynte are ſarre fro my health. O my God, I crie in the daye tyme, but thou heareſt not: and in the night ſeaſon alſo I take no reſt. Yet dwelleſt thou in the Sanctuary, O thou worſhope of Iſrael. Oure fathers hoped in the, they truſted in the, & thou dydeſt deliuer them. They called vpon the,

and were helped: they put their trust in the, and were not confounded. But as for me, I am a woman and no man: a very scorn of me and the outcast of the people. All they that see me, laugh me to scorn: they shut out their lips, and shake their heads. He trusted in God, let him deliver him: let him help him, if he will have him. But thou art he that take me out of my mother's womb: thou wast my hope, when I hanged yet upon my mother's breasts. I have bene left unto the ever since I was borne, thou art my God, even from my mother's womb. O go not from me, for trouble is hard at hand, and here is none to help me. Great bulles are come about me, fatt oxen close me in on every side. They gape upon me with their mouths, as it were a ramping and roaring lion.

I am poured out like water, all my bones are out of joint: my heart in the midst of my body is even like melting wax. My strength is dried up like a grasshopper, my tongue cleaveth to my gums, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. For dogs are come about me, the crew of the wicked hath layed siege against me. They perceived my bones and my feet, I might have told all my bones: as for them, they stood staring and looking upon me. They have parted my garments among themselves, and cast lots upon my vesture.

But be not thou farre from me, O LORD: thou art my succour, haist thou to help me. Deliver my soul from the sword, my darling from the power of the dogge. Save me from the lions mouth, and heare me from among the horns off the unicorns. So will I declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the congregation will I praise thee. O praise the LORD ye that feare him: magnific him all ye seed of Jacob, and let all ye seed of Israel feare him. For he hath not despised nor abhorred the miserable estate of the poor: he hath not hid his face from me, but when I called unto him, he heard me. I will praise thee in the great congregation, and perform my vows in the sight of all that feare thee. The poor shall eat and be satisfied: they shall see after thee, O LORD shall praise him: your heart shall live for ever.

All the endes of the world shall remember themselves, and be turned unto the LORD: and all the generations of the world shall worship before him. For the kingdom is the LORDS, and he shall be the governour of the world. All such as be set upon earth, shall eat also and worship: all they that live in the dust, and lyne so hardly, shall fall down before him. The seed shall serve him, and preach of the LORD for ever. They shall come, and declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be borne, whose the LORD hath made.

The XXII. A psalme of David.

The LORD is my shepherd, I can want nothing. He feedeth me in a green pasture, and leadeth me to a fresh water. He quickeneth my soul, and bringeth me forth in the way of righteousness for his names sake. Though I should walke in the valley of the shadow of death, yet I feare no evil, for thou art with me: thy staff and thy shepherd's crook comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me against mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oyle, and my cup is full. Oh let thy loving kindness and mercy follow me all the dayes of my life, that I may dwell in the house of the LORD for ever.

The XXIII. A psalme of David.

The earth is the LORDS, and all that therein is: the compass of the world, and all that dwell therein. For he hath founded it upon the seas, and builded it upon the floods. Who shall go up into the hill of the LORD? or who shall remain in his holy place? He that is blameless, and hath done no violence: which lifteth not up his voice against the LORD, nor sweareth not to disceave. He shall receive the blessing from the LORD, and mercy from God his saviour. This is the generation of them that seek him, of them that seek his face, O Jacob. Selah. Open your gates (O ye princes) let the everlasting doors be opened, and the king of glory may come in. Who is this king of glory? It is the LORD of strength and mightie, even the LORD mightie in battle.

Open your gates (O ye princes) let the everlasting doors be opened, and the king of glory may come in. Who is this king of glory? It is the LORD of strength and mightie, even the LORD mightie in battle.

The XXIV. A psalme of David.

Unto thee (O LORD) I lift up my soul. My God, I trust in thee: O let me not be confounded, lest myne enemies triumph over me. For all they that hope in thee shall not be ashamed: but such as be scornful despisers without a cause, they shall be put to confusion. Shew me thy wayes (O LORD) and teach me thy pathes. Lead me in thy truth and lerne me, for thou art the God of my health, and in thee is my hope all the day long.

The psalter

Call to remembrance, O LORD, thy tender mercies and thy loving kindness, which have bene ever of olde. Oh remember not thy synnes and offences of my youth, but according unto thy mercy have mercy upon me (O LORD) for thy goodness. Oh how freely and righteously is the LORD, therefore will he teach sinners in the way. He leadeth the simple a right, and such as be meke shall learneth his wayes. All the wayes of the LORD are very mercy and faithfulness, unto such as kepe his testament and covenant. For thy names sake, O LORD, be merciful unto my synne, for it is great. What so ever he be that feareth the LORD, he shall shewe him the way that he hath chosen.

His soul shall dwell at ease, and his seat shall possess the land. The secret of the LORD is among them that feare him, and he sheweth them his covenant. Myne eyes are ever looking unto the LORD, for he shall plucke my feet out of the net. Turne thou unto me and have mercy upon me, for I am desolate and in misery. The sorowes of my heart are great, O bring me out of my troubles.

Look upon my adversite and misery, and forgive me all my synnes. Consider how myne enemies are many, and beare a malicious hate against me. O kepe my soul, and deliver me: let me not be confounded, for I have put my trust in thee. Let innocency and righteous dealing wayte upon me, for my hope is in thee. Deliver Israel (O God) out of all his trouble.

The XXV. A psalme of David.

Thou my iudge (O LORD) for I walke innocently: my trust is in the LORD, therefore shall I not fall.

Examine me O LORD, and prove me: trie out my reynes and my heart. For thy loving kindness is before myne eyes, and I walke in thy truth. I sit not among vain persons, and have no fellowship with the deceitfull. I hate the congregation of the wicked, and I will not sit among the ungodly.

I wash my hands with innocency O LORD, and so go I to thine altar. That I may shewe the voice of thy praise, and tell of all thy wonderful workes. LORD, I love the habitation of thy house, and the place where thy honour dwelleth. O destroy not my soul with the synners, nor my life with the bloudthirstie. In whose hands is wickedness, and their right hand is full of gifts. But as for me I will walke innocently: O deliver me, and be merciful unto me. My foot standeth right: I will praise thee (O LORD) in the congregation.

The xxvi. psalme. Ps. xvi.

The XXVI. A psalme of David.

The LORD is my light and my help: the LORD is the strength of my life, for whom shall I be afraid? Therefore when the wicked (even myne enemies and my foes) came upon me, to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell. Though an host of men were layed against me, yet shall not my heart be afraid: and though there rose up warre against me, yet will I put my trust in him. One thing have I desired of the LORD, which I will requyre: namely, that I may dwell in the house of the LORD all the dayes of my life, to behold the sayre beauty of the LORD, and to visit his temple.

For in the time of trouble he hath helped me in his tabernacle, yee in the secret place of his dwelling he hath kept me and set me up upon a rock of stone. And now hath he lift up my head above myne enemies, that compassed me round about. Therefore will I praise him in his dwelling, the oblation of the lips: I will both singe and speake praises unto the LORD. Hark unto my voice (O LORD) when I cry unto thee: have mercy upon me and heare me. My heart speaketh unto thee, my face seeketh thee, yee LORD, thy face will I see. O hide not thou thy face from me, cast not thy servant of displeasure. Thou art my succour, leave me not, neither forsake me, O God my saviour. For my father and my mother have forsaken me, but the LORD hath taken me up. Shew me thy way O LORD, and lead me in the right path, because of myne enemies. Deliver me not into the wylles of myne adversaries, for there are fals witnesses risen up against me, and they imagine mischief. Venerablest, I believe we rely to see the goodness of the LORD in the land of the living. O stay thou O LORD, O stay, be strong, let thine heart be of good comfort, and wayte thou still for the LORD.

The XXVII. A psalme of David.

Unto thee will I cry, O my strong defence: think no scorn of me, lest thou make me as though thou herdest not: I become like them that go down into the pit. Heare the voice of my humble petition, when I cry unto thee, and hold up my hands towards thy holy temple.

the LORDE shaketh the wilderness, yee the LORDE shaketh the wilderness of Cades.
The voyce of the LORDE moueth yf hyndes & discovereth the thicke bushes: in his temple shal euery man speake of his honou-
re. The LORDE stilleth the water floude, & yf LORDE remayneth a kynge for euer. The LORDE shall geue power vnto his people, the LORDE shall geue his people the blessing of peace.

The XXIX. A psalme of Dauid.

Will magnifie yf (O LORDE) for thou hast set me vp, & not suffred my foes to triumphe ouer me. O LORDE my God, I cried vnto the, and thou hast healed me. Thou LORDE hast brought my soule out of hell: thou hast kepte my life, where as they go downe to the pytte. Synge pray-ses vnto the LORDE (O ye sayntes of his) gene thankes vnto him for a remembraunce of his holynesse. For his wrath endureth but the twinklinge of an eye, and his pleasure is in life: heynesse maye well endure for a night, but ioye cometh in the mornynge.

As forme, whē I was in prosperite, I say be: Tush, I shal neuer fall more. And why thou LORDE of thy goodnesse haddest made my hill so stronge. But as soone as thou turnedest thy face from me, I was brought in feare. The cried I vnto yf (O LORDE) yee vnto yf LORDE made I my prayer. What profit is there in my bloude, yf I go downe to corrupcion? Maye the dust geue thankes vnto ye? O shal it declare thy faithful-nesse? Heare (O LORDE) and haue mercy vpon me: LORDE be thou my helper. And so thou hast turned my heynesse into ioye:
thou hast put of my sack cloth, & gydded me w gladnesse. That my hono<sup>r</sup> might synge prayes vnto the wth out ceassynge: O LOR-DE my God, I wil geue thankes vnto the for euer.

The XXX. A psalme of Dauid.

Let the, O LORDE, is my trust: let me neuer be put to confucion, but deliuer me in thy rightousnesse. Borne downe thine eare to me, make hast to deli-uer me: be thou my stronger rocke and a house of defence, that thou mayest saue me. For thou art my stronge holde & my castell: O be thou my gyde, & lede me for thy names sake. Drawe me out of the nett yf they haue layed pryncely forme, for thou art my strength.
Into thy hondes I commend my spere:
thou hast deliuered me O LORDE thou God of treuth. I hate them that holde of vanities, and my trust is in the LORDE. I will be glad and reioyse in thy mercy: for thou hast considred my trouble, thou hast knowen my soule in aduersite. Thou hast not deliue-red me ouer in to the hondes of the enemye, but hast set my fete in a larger rowme. Haue mercy vpon me, O LORDE, for I am intromble, myne eyes is consumed for very heynesse, yee my soule and my body. My life is wth wth olde with heynesse, and my yeares wth moun-nyng. My strength fayleth me because of my aduersite, and my bones are corrupte. I am become a very reprove amonge all myne enemies, my neyghbours & they of myne owne acquaintance are a frayd of me: they yf seme in the strete, cōveye them selues frome.
I am clene forgotten and out of mynde, as a deed man: I am become like a broken vessell.
For I haue herde the blasphemy of the multitude: euery man abhorreth me: they haue gathered a cōncel together agaynst me, and are purposed to take awaye my life.

But my hope is in yf O LORDE, & I saye:
thou art my God. My tyme is in thy hon-de: deliuer me from the honde of myne enemies, & from them yf persecute me. Shewe thy seruaut the light of thy countenaun-ce, helpe me for thy mercies sake. Let me not be confounded (O LORDE) for I call vpon the: let the vngodly rather be put to confucion, and brought vnto the hell. Let the lyngelippes be put to sylence, which cruelly, disdainedly & despitefully speake agaynst the righteous. O how greate and manifold is thy good, which thou haist hyd for them that feare yf? O what thinges bungest thou to passe for them, that put their trust in the, euen before the sonnes of men?

Thou hydest them pryncely by thine owne presence from the proude men, thou kepest them secretly in thy tabernacle, from the strife of tonges. Thanke be to the LORDE, for he hath shewed me maruelous greates kindnesse in a stronge cite. For when the sodaine feare came vpon me, I sayde: I am cast out of thy sight. Neuertheles, thou herdest myne humble prayer, when I cried vnto the. O loue the LORDE (all ye his sayntes) for the LORDE preserueth the faith-full, and plenteously rewardeth be the prou-de doer. Be stronge therfore & take a good berte vnto you, all ye that put youre trust in the LORDE.

The XXXI. A psalme of Dauid.

Blessed are they, whose vnrightousnesse is forgiven, and whose synnes are couered. Blessed is the man, vnto whom the LORDE imputeth no syn-ne, in whose spere there is no gyle. For whyle I helde my tonge, my bones confirmed awaye thow my daylie complaynyn-ges. And because thy hande was so heuy vpon me both daye and night, my moysture was like the drouth in Sommer. Sela.

Therfore I confessed my synne vnto the,
and hyd not myne vnrightousnesse. I saide: I will knowlege myne offence, and accuse my self vnto the LORDE, and so thou forgauest me the wickednesse of my synne.

Sela. For this shal euery saynte make his prayer vnto the in due season, therfore shal not the greates water floude come nye him. Thou art my defence in the trouble that is come aboute me, O cōpasse thou me aboute also with the ioye of deliuerance.

Sela. I wil enforme the, and shewe the the waye wherein thou shalt go: I wil fasten myne eyes vpon the. Benot ye now like horses & mooles, which haue no vnderston-dinge. Whose mouthes thou must holde with bytt & byddle, yf they wil not obeye the.

Greates plagies shal yf vngodly haue, but who so putteth his trust in the LORDE, mercy shal cōpasse him on euery syde. Be glad (O ye righteous) and reioyse in the LOR-DE, be ioyfull all ye that are true of herte.

The XXXII. A psalme of Dauid.

Reioyse in yf LORDE (O ye righteous) & for it becommeth well the iust to be thankfull. Praise the LORDE with harpe: synge psalmes vnto him with the la-re and instrument of ten strynges. Singe him a new songe, yee synge lustily vnto him with a good corage. For the worde of yf LORDE is true, and all his workes are faith-full. Heloueth mercy & iudgment: yf earth is full of the goodnesse of the LORDE. By the worde of the LORDE were the heanens made, & all the hoostes of them by yf brethof his mouth. He gathereth yf waters together as it were in a bottell, & laieth vp the depe in secrete. Let all the earth, feare the LORDE, and let all them that dwell in the worlde, stōde in awe of him. For loke what he sayeth, it is done: and loke what he comaūdeth, it stōdeth fast. The LORDE bryn-geth the cōncell of the heathen to naught, and turneth the deuices of the people.

But the cōfession of the LORDE endureth, and the thoughtes of his hert from generacion to generacion. Blessed are the people that holde the LORDE for their God, & blef-sed are the folke whom he hath chosen to be his heretage. The LORDE loketh downe from heauen, & beholdeth all the children of men: from his stronge seate he considreth all them yf dwell in the worlde. He only hath fashioned all the hertes of them, & knoweth all their workes. A kynge is not helped by his owne greates hoost, nether is a giante saued thow the might of his owne strength.

A horse is but a vayne thyng to saue a man, it is not the power of his strength that can deliuer him. Beholde, the eye of the LORDE loketh vnto them that feare him, & put their trust in his mercy. That he maye deliuer their soules from death, and to sede them in the deare tyme. Let oure soules patiently abyde the LORDE, for he is oure helpe and shyld. So shal oure hertes reioy-se in him, because we haue hoped in his holy name. Let thy mercifull & vngodly (O LOR-DE) be vpon vs, like as we put oure trust in the.

The Psalter.

The XXXIII. A psalme of Dauid.

I Wil allwaye geue thankes vnto the LORDE, his prayse shal euer be in my mouth. My soule shall make hir boast in the LORDE: the poore oppressed shal heare therof, and be glad. O prayse y<sup>e</sup> LOR DE with me, and let vs magnifie his name to gether. I sought the LORDE, and he her de me, yee he deliuered me out of all my fea
re. They that haue an eye vnto him, shal be lightened, & their faces shal not be asha med. This poore man cried vnto the LOR DE, and he herde him, yee and deliuered him out of all his troubles. The angell of the LORDE pitcheth his tente rounde aboute them that feare him, and deliuereth them.

O taist and se how frendly the LORDE is, blessed is the man y<sup>e</sup> trusteth in him. O fea re the LORDE, ye y<sup>e</sup> be his sayntes: for they that feare him, lacke nothinge. The rich shal want and suffre hunger, but they which seke the LORDE, shal wat no manner of thin re of the LORDE. Who so listeth to lye, & wolde sayne se good dayes. Let him re frayne his tonge from euell, and his lippes that they speake no gyle. Let him eschue euell, and do good: Let him seke peace & en sue it. For the eyes of the LORDE are ouer the righteous, and his eares are open vnto their prayers. But the face of the LORDE beholdeth them that do euell, to destroye the remembraunce of them out of the earth.

When the righteous crie, the LORDE heareth them, and deliuereth the out of all their troubles. The LORDE is nye vnto them y<sup>e</sup> are contrite in hert, & wil helpe soch as be of an humble spiete. Greate are y<sup>e</sup> trou bles of the righteous, but the LORDE deli uereth them out of all. He kepeth all their bones, so y<sup>e</sup> not one of them is broken. But misfortune shal slaye the vngodly, and they that hate y<sup>e</sup> righteous shal be giltye. The LORDE deliuereth the soules of his seruau shal not offende.

back and brought to confusion, what yma gin myschefe for me. Let the be as y<sup>e</sup> dust before the wynde, and the angell of the LOR DE scaterynge the. Let their waye be dar ke and slippery, and the angell of the LORDE to persecute them. For they haue pryncely laied their nett to destroye me without a cau se, yee and made a pitte for my soule, which I neuer deserued. Let a sodane destruc tion come vpon him vnawarres, and y<sup>e</sup> nett that he hath layed pryncely, catch him self, that he maye fall in to his owne myschefe. But let my soule be ioyfull in the LORDE, and reioy se in his helpe. All my bones shal saie: LOR DE, who is like vnto the: which deliuereth y<sup>e</sup> poore from those that are to stronge for him, yee the poore and the nedye from his robbers.

False witnesses are rysen vp, & laye to my charge thinges that I knowe not. They rewarde me euell for good, to the greate dis comforth of my soule. Neuertheles, when they were sicke, I put on a sack cloth: I hum bled my soule with fastinge, and my prayer turned in to myne owne bosome. I beba ued myself as though it had benemy friende or my brother, I wote heuely, as one y<sup>e</sup> mou neth for his mother. But in my aduersite they reioyse, and gather them together: yee y<sup>e</sup> very lame come together agaynst me vn awarres, makinge mooves at me, & ceasse not.

With y<sup>e</sup> greby & somefull ypocrites, they gnaished vpon me with their teth. LOR DE, when wilt thou lye vnto this? Ouf tore my soule from y<sup>e</sup> wicked rumoure of the,
my dearlinge from the Lyons. So wil I ge ue y<sup>e</sup> thankes in the greate congregacion, & praise the amonge moch people. O let the not triumphe ouer me, that are myne enemies

why? their comonyng is not for peace, but they ymagin false wordes agaynst y<sup>e</sup> outca stes of the londe. They gape vpon me wth their mouthes, sayenge: therethere: we se it with oure eyes. This thou seist, o LORDE: holde not thy tonge the: go not farre from me,
o LORDE. Awake (LORDE) and stonde vp: auengethou my cause, my God, and my LORDE. Judge me (o LORDE) my God, & acordinge to thy righteousness, y<sup>e</sup> they triu phe not ouer me. O let the not saye in the ir hertes: therethere, so wolde we haue it. O let them not saye: we haue ouercome him.

Let them be put to confusion and shame, that reioyse at my trouble: let the be clothed with rebuke and dishonoure, that boost the shal be talkyng of thy righteousness and of thy prayse, all the daye longe.

The XXXV. A psalme of Dauid.

Hert sheweth me the wickednesse of the vngodly, that there is no fea re of God before his eyes. For he dyssembleth before his face, so longe till his abominable synne be founde out. The wordes of his mouth are vnrighuousnesse and disceate, he wil not be lerned to do good.

He ymagineth myschefe vpon his bedde, he wil come in no good waye, ner refuse the thinge that is euell. Thy mercy (O LOR DE) reacheth vnto the heauen, and thy faith fulnesse vnto the cloudes. Thy righteous nesse stonde like the stronge mountaynes, & thy indgment like the greate depe. Thou LORDE pferuest both me & beestes. How precious is thy mercy (O God) that the chil
dow of thy wynges. They shal be satis fied wth the plenteousnesse of thy house, and thou shalt geue them drynke of the ryuer of thy pleasures. For by the is y<sup>e</sup> well of life, in thy light, shall we se light. O spiede forth thy lounge kyndnesse vnto them that knowe the, & thy righteousness vnto the char acter of hert. O let not the fote of pry de ouertake me, O let not the hande of y<sup>e</sup> vn godly cast me downe. As for wicked doers, they fall, they are cast downe, & are not able to stonde. The XXXVI. A psalme of Dauid.

Recte not thy self at the vngodly, be not thou envious agaynst the euell doers. For they shall soone be cut
greene herbe. Put thou thy trust in y<sup>e</sup> LOR DE, & be doinge good: so shalt thou dwell in the londe, & verely it shal feede the. Delyte thou in the LORDE, & he shal geue the thy her tes desire. Committe thy waye vnto y<sup>e</sup> LOR DE, set thy hope in him, and he shal brynge it to passe. Yee he shal make thy righteous nesse as cleare as the light, & thy iust dealin ge as the noone daye. Holde the still in y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, and abyde pacietyly vpon him: but greue not thy self at one that hath prosperi te, and lyueth in abhominacion. Leane of from wrath, let go displeasure, let not thy ge lousy moue the also to do euell. For wicked doers shal be roted out, but they that paciety ly abyde the LORDE, shal enheret the londe.
Suffre yet a litle whyle, & y<sup>e</sup> vngodly shal much rest. The vngodly layeth waye for the iust, & gnasheth vpon him wth his teth. c.

Matt. 2. a

But y<sup>e</sup> LORDE laugheth him to scorne, for he seith y<sup>e</sup> his daye is cominge. The vngod ly drawe out the swerde & benede their bowe, to cast downe y<sup>e</sup> simple & poore, and to slaye soch as go y<sup>e</sup> right waye. Neuertheles, their swerde shal go thorow their owne hert, and their bowe shal be broke. A small thinge y<sup>e</sup> the righteous hath, is better then greate ri ches of the vngodly. For the armes of y<sup>e</sup> vngodly shal be broken, but the LORDE vp holdeth the righteous. The LORDE kno weth the dayes of the godly, & their enheri taunce shal endure for euer. They shal not be cofounded in y<sup>e</sup> perlous tyme, & in y<sup>e</sup> day es of derth they shal haue ynough. As for y<sup>e</sup> vngodly, they shal perishe: & whē y<sup>e</sup> e nemies of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE are in their floures, they shal cosume, yee euen as the smoke shal they cosume awaye. The vngodly borroweth and paieth not a gayne, but the righteous is mercifull & liberall. Soch as be blessed of him, shal possesse the londe: & they whom he curseth, shal be roted out. The LORDE or dieth a good mans goinge, & hath pleasure in his waye. Though he fall, he shal not be hurte, for the LORDE vpholdeth him wth his hade. I haue bene yonge, & now am olde:
yet sawe I neuer the righteous forsake, ner his seide to seke their bred. The righteous is euer mercifull, & ledeeth gently, therfore shal his seide be blessed. Sle fies euell, & do y<sup>e</sup> thin

The Psalter.

Repe innocency, and take hede vnto the thinge that is right, for that shall bringe a man peace at the last. As for the trasgresours, they shal perishe together, and the vngodly shal be roted out at y last. The helpe of the righteous commeth of the LORDE, he is their strength in the tyme of trouble. The LORDE shal stode by them, and saue them: he shal deliuer them from the vngodly, and helpe the, because they put their trust in him.

The XXXVII. A psalme of David.

Unto me not to rebuke (O LORDE) in thine anger: Oh chasten me not in thy heuy displeasure. For thy arrows stick fast in me, and thy honde presseth me sore. There is no whole parte in my body, because of thy displeasure: there is no rest in my bones, by reason of my synnes. For my wickedneses are gone ouer my heade, and are like a sore burthen, to heuy forme to beare.

My woundes stynde & are corrupte, thoro my foolishnesse. I am brought in to so greate trouble and misery, that I go mourninge all the daye longe. For my loynes are clenched vp, and there is no whole parte in my body. I am feble and sore synnet, I roare for the very disquietnes of my hert.

LORDE, thou knowest all my desyre, & my gronyng is not hyd from the. My hert panted, my strength hath fayled me, & the light of myne eyes is gone fro me. My louers & frendes stonde loyng vpon my trouble, and my kynsmen are gone a farre of.

They that sought after my life, and to do me euell, spake of lyes and ymagined disceate all the daye longe. As for me, I was like a deaf ma, and herde not: and as one that were denme, not openyng his mouth. I am become as a man that heareth not, and that can make no resistance w his mouth.

For in the (O LORDE) is my trust, thou shalt heare me, O LORDE my God. My desyre is, y myne enemies triumphe not ouer me: for yf my foete slippe, they reioyse greatly against me. I am redy to suffre trouble, and my heuynesse is enen in my sight. For I confesse my wickednesse, & my synne greuethe me.

But myne enemies lyue, and are mightie: and they that hate me without a cause, are many in nombre. They that reward me euell for good, speake euell of me, because I followe the thinge that good is. For sake me not (O LORDE my God) go not farre fro me. Haist the to helpe me, O LORDE my succoure.

The XXXVIII. A psalme of David.

The xxxix. psalme.

Sayde: I wil kepe my waies, that I offended not in my tonge. And so I shut my mouth, whyle the vngodly layed wayte for me. I helde my tonge, I was denme, I kepte silence, yee eue from good wordes, but it was payne and gresse to me. My hert was hore within me, & whyle I was thus musyng, the fyre kyndled: so that I spake with my tonge. LORDE, let me knowe myne ende, and the nombre of my dayes: that I maye be certified what I wante. Beholde, thou hast made my dayes spanne longe, and my life is as it were nothinge before the. O how vayne are all mynynge: Sela. Yee every man walketh as it were a shadowe, and disquieteth him self in vayne: he heapeth vp riches, and can not tell to whom he gathereth them. And now LORDE, wherein shall I comfort me: my hope is in the. Deliyer me from all myne offences, and make me not a scoone vnto the foolish. I kepe sylence, and open not my mouth, for thou hast done it. Turne thy plagges awaye from me, for I am consumed thoro the feare of thy hade. When thou pynest man for synne, thou chastenest him: so that his beutie consumeth awaye, like as it were a mothe. O how vayne are all mynynge: Sela. Heare my prayer O LORDE, and confidre my callinge: shewe not thy self as though thou sawest not my teares. For I am a straunger and pilgrymme with the, as all my foefathers were. Oh spare me a litle, that I maye refresh myself, before I go hence, and be no more sene.

The XXXIX. A psalme of David.

Wayted patiently for the LORDE, which enclined himself vnto me, and herde my callinge. He brought me out of the horrible pitte, out of the myre and claye: he set my fete vpo the rocke, and ordeed my goinges. He hath put a new songe in my mouth, even a thankesgeyng vnto oure God. Many men seynge this, shal feare the LORDE, & put their trust in him. Blessed is the man that setteth his hope in the LORDE, and turneth not vnto the proud: to soch as go aboute with lies. O LORDE my God, greates are y wonderous workes which thou hast done: & in thy thoughtes toward vs there maye none be liened vnto the.

I wolde declare them, and speake of the, but they are so many, that they can not be tolde. Sacrifice and offeringe thou woldest not haue: but a body hast thou ordeined me: burnt offeringes and sacrifice for synne thou hast not allowed. Then sayde I: Lo, I me. In the begynnyng of the boke it is written of me, that I shulde fulfill thy wil O my God, & that am I content to do: yee thy lawe is within my hert. I wil preach of y righteousness in the greate congregacion: Lo, I wil not refrayne my lippes, O LORDE, & that thou knowest. I do not hyde y righteousness in my hert, my taltynge is of thy treuth and sauynge healeth: I kepe not thy louynge mercy and faithfulness backe from the greate congregacion. Turne not thou thy mercy from me O LORDE, but let thy louynge kyndnesse and treuth allwaye preserue me. For innumerable troubles are come aboute me: my synnes haue taken sodi holde vpon me, that I am not able to loke vp: yee they are mo in nombre then the hayres of my heade, and my hert hath fayled me. O LORDE, let it be thy pleasure to deliuer me, make haist (O LORDE) to helpe me. Let them be ashamed and confounded, that seke after my soule, to destroe it: let them fall backwarde and be put to confucion, that wysht me enell.

Let the soone be brought to shame, that enue me: there there. But let all these that seke the, be ioyfull and glad in the: and let all soch as desyre in thy sauynge healeth, saye allwaye: the LORDE be prayesd. As for me, I am poore & in misery, but the LORDE careth for me. Thou art my helper & redemer, make no longer cariage, O my God.

The XL. A psalme of David.

Blessed is he, y considreth y poore: y LORDE shal deliuer him in the tyme of trouble. The LORDE shal preserue him, and kepe him alyue: he shal make him to prospeere vpon earth, and shal not deliuer him into y wil of his enemies. The LORDE shal refresh him, when he lyeth sick vpon his bedd, yee thou makest his bed in all his sickness. I sayde: LORDE be mercifull vnto me, heale my soule, for I haue synned agaynst the. Myne enemies speake euill vpo me: when shal he dye, and his name perishe? Though he came in to se, yet meaured he falsede in his hert, heapinge myschese vpon himself. All they that hate me, runneth together agaynst me, and ymagin euell agaynst me. They haue geuen a wicked sentence vpon me: when he lyeth, he shal rise vp no more. Yee euen myne owne famillier frend, whom I trusted, which dyd eate my bred, hath lift vp his hele agaynst me. But be thou mercifull vnto me (O LORDE) rayseth me up, and I shal reward the. By this I knowe thou fauourest me, that my enemye shal not triumphe ouer me. Thou hast vp holden me because of my innocency, and set me before thy face for ever. Blessed be y LORDE God of Israel, from hence forth and for evermore. Amen, Amen.

The XLI. A psalme of y childre of Corah.

Like as the hert desyret the water brokes, so longeth my soule after the, O God. My soule is a thurst for God, yee eue for the lyuynge God: wha shal I come, & beholde the face of God? My teares are my meate daye and night, whyle it is daylie sayde vnto me: where is now thy God? Now when I thinke there vpo, I poure out my hert by my self: for I wolde saye ne go hence with the multitude, & passe ouer with them vnto the house of God, in y voyce of prayse & thankesgeyng, amonge soch as kepe holy daye. Why art thou so full of heuynes (O my soule) & why art thou so vnguiete within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet geue him thanks, for the helpe of his countenance. My God, my soule is vexed within me: therefore I remembre the lende of Iordane, & the litle hill of Sennem.

One depe calleth another w the voyce of thy whystles, all thy wayes & water flouds are gone ouer me. The LORDE hath promised his louynge kyndnesse daylie, therefore wil I prayse him in the night season, and make my prayer vnto y God of my life. I wil saye vnto God my stony rock: why hast thou forgotten me? why go I thus heuely: whyle the enemye oppreseth me? Whyle my bones are broken, & whyle myne enemies cast me in the tethe, daylie sayenge vnto me where is now thy God? Why art thou so heuely (O my soule) & why art thou so disquieted within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet thanke him for the helpe of his countenance, and because he is my God.

The XLII. psalme.

Sende sentence vpon me (O God) & defende my cause agaynst the vnholy people: Oh deliyer me from the deceitfull & wicked man. For thou (O God) art my strenght: why hast thou shot me from the? Why go I then so heuely, whyle the enemye oppreseth me? O sende out y light & thy truethe, y they maye lede me & bring me vnto thy holy hill and to thy dwelling.

That I maye go in to the antler of God: euen vnto the God which is my ioy & pleasure, & vpon the harpe to geue thanks vnto y O God, my God. Why art thou so heuely, my soule & why art thou so disquieted within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet geue him thanks for y helpe of his countenance.

ce, and because he is my God.

The XLIII. A psalme of y childre of Corah.

We haue herde with o' care (God) o' fathers haue tolde vs, what thou hast done in their tyme, of olde.

How thou hast drye out the heithen w' thy honde, & plated the in: how thou hast destroyed the nations & cast the out. For they gat not the londe in possession thow their owne swerde, nether was it their owne arme that helped them. But thy right hande, thy ne arme & the light of thy countenance, because thou haddest a sauoure vnto them.

Thou art y kinge & my God, thou sendest helpe vnto Jacob. Thow w' wil we ouerthrowe oure enemies: & in thy name will we treade them vnder, that rise vp agaynst vs.

For I will not trust in my bowe, it is not my swerde y shal helpe me. But it is thou that sauest vs fro oure enemies, and puttest them to confucion that hate vs. We will allway make oure boast of God, and prayse thy name for ever. Sela.

But now thou forsakest vs, & puttest vs to confucion, and goest not forth with oure hoostes. Thou makest vs to turne oure backs vpon oure enemies, so that they which hate vs, spoile oure goodes.

Thou lettest vs be eaten vp like shepe, & scatterest vs amonge the heithen.

Thou sellest thy people for naught, & takest no moneye for them. Thou makest vs to be rebuked of o' neighbours, to be laughed to scorne and had in derision, of them that are rounde aboute vs.

Thou hast made vs a very byworde amonge the heithen, & that the people shaketh their heades at vs. My confucion is daylie before me, & the shame of my face couereth me.

For the voyce of the slanderer & blasphemor, for the enemye and auenger. All this is come vpon vs, & yet haue we not forgotten the, ner behaued oure selues vnfaithfully in thy conuenaunt. Oure hert is not turned backe, nether oure steppes gone out of thy waye.

That thou smyttest vs so in the place of the serpent, & couerest vs with y shadowe of death. If we had forgotten the name of oure God, & holde vp on re' hondes to eny straunge God: Shulde not God fynde it out? for he knoweth the very secretes of the hert.

But for thy sake we are kylled all the daie longe, and are counted as shepe apointed to be slayne. O LORD, why sleepest thou? Awake, and cast vs not of for ever. Wherfore hydest thou thy face: wilt thou clene forget oure miserye and oppressio? For oure soule is brought lowe euen vnto the dust, and oure hely cleneth vnto the grounde. Arise o' LORD, helpe vs, and deliuer vs for thy mercie sake.

The XLIII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

Wher is dytinge of a good matter, I speake of that, which I haue made of the kynges: My tongue is y penne of a ready wyter. Thou art the sayest amonge the children of me, full of grace are thy lippes, therefore God blesteth the for ever.

Synde the with thy swerde vpon thy the (o' thou mightie) with worshippe and renoune. Good lucke haue thou with thine honoure, ryde on with the treuth, mekenesse & rightuousnes: & thy right hode shal teach y wonderfull thinges. Thy arrowes are sharpe, the people shalbe subdued vnto the, euen in the myddest amonge the kynges enemies.

Thy seate (o' God) endureth for ever: the cepter of thy kyngdome is a right cepter.

Thou hast loued rightenousnesse, & hath iniquite: wherfore God (which is thy God) hath annoynted the with the oyle of gladnes above thy blowes. All thy garments are like myrrour, Aloes & Cassia, when thou comest out of thine yuerie palaces in thy bent full glory.

Kynges doughters go in thy goodly araye, & vpon thy right honde stonderth the quene in a vesture of the most fyn golde. Herken (o' doughter) conside, & encline thine eare: forget thine owne people, & thy fathers house.

So shal the kyng haue pleasure in thy bentie, for he is thy LORD, & thou shalt worshippe him. The doughters of Tyre shal be there with giftes, theyche amonge the people shal make their supplicacion before the.

The kynges doughter is all glorious within, hir clothinge is of wrought golde. She shalbe brought vnto the kyng in rayment of nedle worke, and maydens after her: soch as be next her shalbe brought vnto the.

With ioye and gladnesse shal they be brought, and go into the kynges palace. In steade of thy fathers thou hast gotten children, whom thou shalt make prynces in all londes.

I wil remembre thy name from one generacio to another: therfore shal the people geue thankes vnto the, worlde without ende.

The XLV. A psalme of the children of Corah.

Wher troubles and aduersite, we haue founde, that God is oure refuge, oure strength and helpe.

Therefore wil we not feare, though the earth fell, and though the hilles were carried in to the myddest of the see.

The Psalter.

Though the waters of the see ragged & we rener so troublous, & though the mountaynes shoke at the tepest of the same. Sela.

For there is a floude, which w' his ryuers reioyseth y cite of God, the holy dwellynge of the most hyest. God is in y myddest of her, therefore shal she not be remoued: for God helpeth her, & y right early. The heithen are made, the kyngdomes make moch a doo: but wher he sheweth his voyce, y earth melteth awaye. The LORD of hoostes is w' vs, the God of Jacob is oure defence.

Sela. O come hither, & beholde y workes of the LORD, what destruccions he hath brought vp' y earth. He hath made warres to cease in all the worlde: he hath broken the bowe, he hath knapped the speare in sonder, & brett the charettes in the fyre.

Be still the & confesse y I am God: I wil be exalted amonge the heithen, & I wil be exalted vpon earth. The LORD of hoostes is w' vs, the God of Jacob is oure defence. Sela.

The XLVI. A psalme of the children of Corah.

Clappe your hodes together (all ye people) O synge vnto God with the voyce of thatefgenyng. For the LORD the most hyest is to be feared, & he is the greates kyng vps all y earth.

He shal subdue the people vnder vs, & the heithen vnder oure fete. He choseth vs for an heretage, the bentie of Jacob whom he loued. Sela.

God is gone vp w' a mery noyse, & the LORD w' the sounde of the crosset. O synge prayes, synge prayes vnto God: O synge prayes, synge prayes vnto oure kyng.

For God is kyng of all the earth, O synge prayes vnto him with vnderstandinge. God is kyng ouer the heithen, God sitteth in his holy seate.

The prynces of the people are gathered together vnto the God of Abraham: for God is farre farre hyer exalted, then the mightie lordes of the earth.

The XLVII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

Wher is y LORD & helyeto be prayd, in y cite of o' God, ene vps his holy hill. The hill of Sion is like a fayre plaite, wherof all the londe reioyseth: vpon the north syde lyeth the cite of the greates kyng.

God is well knowne in hir palaces, y he is the defence of the same. So lo, kynges are gathered, and gone by together. They marvelled, to se soch thinges: they were astonied, & sodely cast downe.

We wayte for thy louyng & yndnesse (o' God) in the myddest of thy temple. O God, acordinge vnto thy name, so is y prayse vnto the worlde's ende: thy right hode is full of rightuousnes.

Oh let the most Sion reioyse, & y doughters of Iuda be glad because of thy iudgementes. Walke aboute Sion, go rounde aboute her, and tell hir towres. Marke well hir walles, set v, hir houses: that it maye be tolde them y come after.

For this God is o' God for ever & euer, and he shal allwaie be o' gyde.

The XLVIII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

Hearke this, all ye people: pondre it well, all ye that dwell vps the earth. Hye & lowe, riche & poore, one w' another.

My mouth shal speake of wysdome, and my hert shal muse of vnderstandinge. I wil encline myne eare to the parable, & shewe my darcke speach vpon the harpe.

Wherfore shulde I feare the euell dayes, wher the wickednesse of my heles copaseth merounde aboute? They that put their trust in their good, & boost them selues in the multitude of their riches.

To man maye deliuer his brother, ner make agreement for him vnto God. For it costeth more to redeme their soules, so that he must let that alone for ever.

Nee though he lyue longe, & se not y grave. For it shalbe sene, y soch wysse me shal dye & perishe together, as well as the ignorant and foolish, & leaue their goodes for ether.

Loke what is in their houses, it continueth still: thei dwellinge places endure from one generacion to another, & are called after their owne names vpon the earth.

Neuerthelesse ma abydeh not in soch hono, but is copared vnto y brute beastes, & becōmeth like vnto the.

This waite of theirs is very foolishnesse, & yet their posterite prayse it w' their mouth. Sela.

They lyen in the hell like shepe, & shal gnawe vpon them, & the rightuous shal haue dominacion of them in the moynge by tymes: their strength shal consum.

But God shal deliuer my soule from the power of hell when he receaueth me. Sela. O be not thou afrayed, whan one is made riche, & the glory of his house increased. For he shal cary nothing awaye w' him when he dyeth: nether shal his p'shpe folowe him. W' le helyueth, he is counted an happie.

The Psalter.

so longe as he is in prosperite, me speake good of him. But whē he foloweth his fathers generacion, he shal neuer se light any more.

When a man is in honoure and hath no vnderstōdinge, he is compar'd vnto the brute beastes, and becommeth like vnto them.

The XLIX. A psalme of Asaph.

The LORDE euen the mightie God hath spokē, & called the wolde from the ysinge vp of the sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. Out of Sion appeareth the glorious bentie of God. Oure God shal come, and not kepe silence there goeth before him a consuminge fyre, and a mightie tempest rounde aboute him. He shal call the heauens from aboue, and the earth, that he maye iudge his people. Gather my sayntes together vnto me, these y set more by the couenaunt then by any offeringe. And the heauens shal declare his righteousnesse, for God is iudge himself.

Sela. Heare, o my people: let me speake, let me testifie amonge you, o Israel: I am God, euen thy God. I reprocue the not because of thy sacrifice, y burnt offerings are allwaye before me. I wil take no bullockes out of thy house, ner gores out of thy foldes. For all the bestes of the felde are my re, and thousandes of cattell vpon the hilles.

I knowe all the soules vpon the mountaynes, and the wilde beastes of the feide are in my sight. If I be hongrie, I wil not tell he: for y whole wolde is myne, and all that therein is. Thyntest thou, that I wil eate the flesh of oxen, or drynke the bloude of geaues? Offre vnto God prayse and thankes ieyninge, and paye thy vowes vnto the most yest. And call vpo me in the tyme of trouble, so wil I heare the, that thou shalt thanke me. But vnto the vngodly sayeth God: Why doest thou preache my lawes, and takest my couenaunt in thy mouth? Where is thou hatest to be reformed, and castest ny wordes behynde the? If thou seist a hefe, thou runnest with him, and art partaker with the aduouterers. Thou lettest y nouth speake wickednesse, & thy tonge payneth disceate. Thou syttest and speakest agaynst thy brother, yee and slaundrest thine vne mothers sonne. This thou doest, why I holde my tounge, and thinkest me to be e soch one as thy self, but I wil reprocue the, see my self agaynst the. me: & this is the waye, wherby I will shewe him the sauynge health of God.

The L. A psalme of David.

Gue mercy vpon me (o God) after thy goodnes, & acordinge vnto thy great mercies, do awaye myne offences. Wash me well fro my wickednesse, & cleanse me fro my synne. For I knowlege my fautes, and my synne is euer before me.

Agaynst the only, agaynst the haue I synned, and done euell in thy sight: that thou mightest be iustified in thy saynges, and shaldest ouercome when thou art iudged.

Beholde, I was borne in wickednesse, and in synne hath my mother conceaued me.

But lo, thou hast a pleasure in the treuth, and hast shewed me secrete mysdomme. O reconcile me with I hope, and I shal be cleane: wash thou me, and I shal be whiter then snowe. Oh let me heare of ioye and gladnesse, that the bones which thou hast broken, maye reioyse. Turne thy face fro my synnes, and put out all my mysdedes. Make me a cleane heart (o God) and renewe a right spirete within me. Cast me not awaie fro thy presence, and take not thy holy spirete fro me. O geue me the comforte of thy helpe agayne, and stablish me with thy fre spirete. Then shal I teach thy wayes vnto the wicked, that synners maye be converted vnto the. Deliuer me from bloude guyltynesse o God, thou that art the God of my health, that my tonge maye prayse thy righteousnesse. Open my lippes (O LORDE) that my mouth maye shewe thy prayse.

For yf thou haddest pleasure in sacrifice, I wolde geue it the: but thou delystest not in burnt offerings. The sacrifice of God is a troubled spirete, a broken and a cōcrite heart (o God) shalt thou not despise. O be favorable and gracious vnto Sion, that the walles of Ierusalem maye be buylded. For then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifice of righteousnesse, with the burnt offerings and oblations: then shal they laye bullockes vpon thine auter.

The LI. A psalme of David.

Why boastest thou thy self (thou Tyraunt) that thou canst do mysche? Where as the goodnesse of God endureth yet daylie. Thy tonge ymagineth wickednesse, and with lyes it cutteth like a sharpe rasoure. Thou louest vnglaciousnesse more the good, to talke of lyes more then righteousnesse. Sela.

The Psalter.

Thou louest to speake all wordes y maye do hurte, O thou false tōge. Therefore shal God cleane destroye the, smyte the in peces, plucke the out of thy dwellinge, and rote the out of the londe of the lyuinge. Sela.

The righteous shal se this, & feare, and laugh him to scorne. Lo, this is the mā, y toke not God for his strēgth, but trusted vnto the multitude of his riches, & was mightie in his wickednesse. As forme, I am like a grene olyuette in y house of God: my trust is in the tender mercy of God for euer & euer. I wil allwaye geue thankes vnto the, for that thou hast done: and wil hope in thy name, for thy sayntes like it well.

The LII. A psalme of David.

The foolish bodies saye in their herres: Ensh, there is no God. Corrupte are they, and become abominable in their wickednesse: there is not one, that doth good. God looked downe from heauen vpo the childien of men, to se yf there were any that wolde vnderstande, or seke after God. But they are all gone out of y waye, they are all become vnprofitable: there is none y doth good, no not one. How can they haue vnderstōdinge, that are the workers of wickednes, eatinge vp my people as it were bread, & call not vpon God? They are afrayed, where no feare is: for God breaketh the bones of them that beseege the: thou puttest them to confucion, for God despiseth them. Oh y the sauynge health were gotten vnto Israel out of Sion: Oh that the LORDE wolde deliuer his people out of captiuitie. Then shulde Jacob reioyse, & Israel shulde be right glad.

The LIII. A psalme of David.

Kepe me (o God) for thy names sake, and deliuer me in thy strēgth. Heare my prayer (o God) conside the wordes of my mouth. For straungers are risen vp agaynst me, and the mightie (which haue not God before their eyes) seke after my soule. Sela. But lo, God is my helper: it is he that vpholdeth my soule. He shall rewarde euell vnto myne enemies, and in thy treuth shalt thou destroye them. A few wil offeringe wil I geue the, and prayse thy name o LORDE, because it is so comfortable.

For thou hast deliuered me out of all my trouble, so that myne eye seyth his desyre vpo myne enemies.

My heart is heuy within me, and the feare of death is fallen vpon me. Fearfullnesse and tremblinge are come vpon me, and an horrible drede hath ouerwhelmed me. And I sayde: O that I had wynges like a doue, that I might fle somwhere, and be at rest. Lo, then wolde I get me awaye farre of, and remayne in the wilderness. Sela.

I wolde make haist to escape, from the stormy wynde and tempest. Destroye their tonges (o LORDE) and deuoyde them, for I se vnrightheousnes & strife in y cite. This goeth daye and night aboute the walles, myschese and vyce are in the myddest of it.

Wickednesse is therein, disceate and gyle go not out of his stretes. If it were myne enemy that reuyled me, I coude beare it: or yf one that ought me euell will dyd threaten me, I wolde hyde myself from him. But it is thou my companyon, my gyde and myne owne familiar frede. We had swete & secrete communicacion together, and longyn gly walked wtogether in y house of God.

Let death come hastely vpon them, and let them go downe quick into hell, for wickednes is amonge them in their dwellinges.

As forme, I will call vnto God, and the LORDE shal helpe me. In the eueninge, moynynge and at noon: daye wil I mourne and cōplayne: and he shal heare my voyce.

It is he that deliuereth my soule in peace, from them that laye waite forme: for they are many agaynst me. Recueen God that endureth for euer, shal heare me, and bringe them downe. Sela.

For they wil not turne: and why? they feare not God. See they laye hontes vpon soch as be at peace with him, and so thei breake his couenaunt. Their mouthes are softer then butter, & yet haue they batell in their mynde: their wordes are smooother then oyle, and yet be they very swerdes. O cast thy burthen (or care) vpon the LORDE, he shal nourish the, and not leaue the righteous in vnquietnesse. But as for them, thou (o God) shalt cast them downe in to the pitte of destruction. I call vnto God yf most hyest, enē yf God yf shal helpe me vp agayne. He shal sende fro heauen, & saue me fro the reproche of him that wolde swallowe me vp. Sela.

This shal God sende, for his mercy and faithfulness sake. I lye with my soule amonge the cruell Lyons: euē amonge the children of men, whosetethe are speares and arrowes, and their tonge a sharpe swerde.

Set vp thy self o God aboue the heauens, and thy glory aboue all the earth. They haue layed a nett for my fete, & pressed downe my soule: they haue dygged a pyt before me, and are fallen into it them selues.

Sela. My hert is ready (o God) my hert is ready, to synge and geue prayse. Awake (o my glory) awake lute and harpe, I my self wil awake right early. They godly are frowarde, euē from their mothers wombe: as soone as they be boine, they goe strait & speake lyes. They are as furons as the serpent, euē like the deafe Adder that stoppeth hir eares. That shoulde heare the voyce of the charmer, charmer neuer so wysely. Breakethir teeth (o God) in their mouthes, smyte the chaste bones of the Lyons whelpes in sonder, o LORD.

That they maye fall awaye, like water runneth a pace: and that when they shote their arrowes, they maye be broke. Let the cosume awaye like a snail, & like the vntimely frute of a woman, and let them not see the Sonne. Or euē youre thornes be sharpe, the wiath shal take them awaye quyte, like a stormy wynde. The righteous shal reioyse when he seyth the vengeance, and shal wash his fete in the bloude of the vngodly. So that men shal saye: verely, there is a rewarde for yf righteous: doubtles, there is a God that indgeth the earth.

Vnto the (o my strength) wil I synge, for thou (o God) art my defence, and my mercifull God.

The LIX. A psalme of Dauid.

God, thou yf hast cast vs out and scattered vs abroad, thou yf hast bene so sore displeased at vs, cosorte vs agayne. Thou yf hast remoued the lode & denyed it, heale the sores therof, for it shaketh. Thou hast shewed thy people heuythinges, thou hast geuen vs a drynke off wyne, yf we slothe withall. Yet hast thou geue a toke for such as feareth the, yf they maye cast it vp in yf treuch. Sela. That thy beloued might be deliuered, helpe them with thy right hand, and heare me. God hath spelle in his Sanctuary (which thinge reioyseth me) I wil deuyn de Sichē, & mete out the valley of Suchoth Galaad is myne, Manasses is myne, Ephraim is the strength of my heade, Juda is my captayne. Moab is my washpote, ouer Edom wil I stretch out my shue, Philistea shal be glad of me. Who will lede me in to the stronge cite? Who will bringe me in to Edom? Shalt not thou do it, o God, thou yf hast cast vs out: thou God, yf wentest not out w' o hostes? O be thou oure helpe in trouble, for wayne is the helpe of man. Thou God we shal do greates actes, for it is he that shal treade downe oure enemies.

The LX. A psalme of Dauid.

Hear my crienge (o God) geue hebe vnto my prayer. From the entes of yf earth wil I call vnto the, whē my hert is in trouble: Oh set me vp vnto an hye rocke. For thou art my hope, a stronge tower some agaynst the enemye. I will dwell in thy tabernacle for euer, that I maye be safe vnder the couerynge of thy wynges. Sela. For thou (o LORD) hast herde my desyres, thou hast geuen an heretage vnto those that feare thy name. Thou shalt graunte the kynge a lōge life, that his yeares maye endure thow out all generacions. That he maye dwell before God for euer: Oh let thy louynge mercy & faithfulness preserue him. So wil I allwaye synge prayse vnto thy name, yf I maye daylie persourne my vowes.

treadinges had wel nye slippe. And why?
I was greued at y wicked, to set the vngodly in soch prosperite. For they are in no parell of death, but stonde fast like a palace. They come in no misfortune like other folke, nether are they plaged like other men. And this is the cause that they be so puffed vp in pryde, & ouerwhelmed with cruelte and unrighteous-nesse. Their eyes swell for fatnesse, they do euen what they lyst. Corrupte are they, and speake blasphemies maliciously, proude and presumptuous are their wordes. They stretch forth their mouth vnto the heauen, & their tonge goeth thow the worlde. Therfore fall the people vnto them, and there out sucke they no small auantage. Tush (saye they) how shulde God perceaue it? is there knowledge in the most hyest? Lo, these are the vngodly, these prospere in the worlde, the se haue riches in possession. Shulde I then clense my hert in wayne (thought I) & wash my hondes in innocency? Wherefore shul-de I be then punysshed daylie, & be chastened euery mornynge? Yee I had almost also sayde euen as they: but lo, then shulde I haue condemned the generacion of thy children.
Then thought I to vnderstande this, but it was to harde for me. Vntill I were in to y Sanctuary of God, & considered the ende of thesemen. Namely, how thou hast set the in a slippery place, that thou maiest cast the downe headlynges & destroye the. O how so-denly do they consume, perishe, & come to a fear-full ende? Yee euenlike as a dreame when one awaketh, so makest thou their ymage to vanish out of the cite. Thus my hert was greued, & it wente euen thow my reynes.

So foolish was I and ignorant, and as it were a beest before the. Nevertheless, I am allwaye by the, thou holdest me by my right hande. Thou leddest me with thy councel, and afterwarde receauest me vnto glory. O what is there prepared for me in heauen? there is no hynge vpo earth, that I besyre in comparison of the. My flesh and my herte fayleth, but God is the strength of my hert, and my porcion for euer. For lo, they that forsake the, shal perishe, then destroyest all them that committe fornicacion agaynst the. But it is good for me, to holde me fast by God, to put my trust in the LORDE God, and to speake of all thy workes.

Treade vpon them with thy fete, & cast them downe to the grounde, for the enemy hath destroyed altogether in the Sanctuary. Thy aduersaries roare in thy houses, & set vp their banniers for tokens. Men maye see the axes glister aboue, like as those that be in the wood. They cutt downe all the sylinge worke of y<sup>e</sup> Sanctuary wth bylles & axes. They haue set fyre vpon y<sup>e</sup> Sanctuary they haue defiled y<sup>e</sup> dwellinge place of y<sup>e</sup> name, eue vnto the grounde. Yet they saye in the ir hertes: Let vs spoyle the all together, thus haue they brent vp all the houses of God in the londe. We se oure tokens nomore, there is not one prophet more, no not one that vnderstandeth eny more. Oh God, how longe shal the aduersary do this dishonour: how longe shal the enemy blaspheme thy name: for euer. Why withdrauest thou thine honde: why pluckest thou not thy right hōde out of thy bosome, to consume thine enemies? But God is my kynge of olde, the helpe that is done vpon earth he doth it himself. Thou denydest y<sup>e</sup> see the row thy power, thou breakest the heades of the dragons in the waters. Thou smyrest the heades of Lemathan in peces, & genest him to be meate for the people in the wilderness. Thou dygest vp welles & brokes, thou dryest vp mightie waters. The daye is thine, & the night is thine: thou hast prepared the lightes & the Sonne. Thou hast set all y<sup>e</sup> borders of the earth thou hast made both Sommer & wynter. Remembre this (o LORDE) how the enemye buteth, & how the foolish people blaspheme thy name. O deliuer not the soule of thy turtle doue vnto the beestes, & forget not the congregacion of the poore for euer. Loke vpon the couenaunt, for the darcke houses of the earth are full of wickednesse. O let not the symple go awaye ashamed, for the poore & nedye geue prayes vnto thy name. Arise (o God) & maneyne thine owne cause, remembre how the foolish mā blasphemet the daye lie. Hath the LORDE forgotten to be gracious? O, hath he shut vp his louynge kyndnesse in displeasure? Sela. At the last I came to this poynte, that I thought: O why art thou so foolish: the right honde of the most hiest can chaunge all.

Therefore wil I remembre the workes of the LORDE, and calle to mynde thy wonderes of olde tyme. I wil speake of all thy workes, and my talkynge shal be of thy doinges.

To the intent y<sup>e</sup> when they came vp, they might shewe their children the same. That they also might put their trust in God, & not to forget what he had done, but to kepe his commaundementes. ge bowes, turned them selues backe in the tyme of battayll. They kepte not the couenaunt of God, & wolde not walke in his lawe.

They forgat what he had done, and the wonderfull workes that he had shewed for them. Maruelous thinges dyd he in the sight of their fathers in the londe of Egypte, euen in the felde of Ioan. He denyed the see and let them go thorow it, and made the waters to stonde like a wall. In the daye tyme he led them with a cloude, and all the night thorow with a light of fyre. He cloatheth the hard rockes in the wilderness, and gaue them drynke therof, as it had bene out of the greate deepth. He brought waters out of the flint rocke, so that they gushed out like the riuers. Yet for all this they synned agaynst him, and prouoked the most hiest in the wilderness. They tempted God in their hertes, and requyred meate for the ir lust. For they spake agaynst God and sayde: Yee yee, God shal prepare a table in the wilderness, shall he? Lo, he smote the stony rocke, that the waters shoulde gush out, and the streames shoulde flowe withall: but how can he be geneted, and prouyde flesh for his people? When the LORDE herde this, he was wroth, for the fyre was kyndled in Jacob, and he was displeased agaynst Israel.

Because they belued not in God, and put not their trust in his helpe. So he commaunded the cloudes aboue, and opened the doores of heauen. He rayned downe Manna vpo them for to eate, and gaue them bred from heauen. Then at they angels fode, for he sent them meate ynough. He caused the east wynde to blowe vnder the heauen, and thorow his power he brought in the south wynde. He made flesh to rayne vpon them as thicke as dust, and fethered foules like the sonde of y<sup>e</sup> see. He let it fall amonge their tētes rounde aboute their habitacions. So they ate & were fylled, for he gaue them their owne desyre. They were not dispoyned of their lust.

But whye y<sup>e</sup> meate was yet in theyr mouthes: The heuy wrath of God came vpo the, slewe y<sup>e</sup> welchiest of the, & smote downe y<sup>e</sup> chosen men of Israel. But for all this they synned yet more, & belued not his wonderous workes. Therefore their dayes were consumed in vanite, and sodenly their yeaeres were gone. When he slewe them, they sought him, and turned them aily vnto God.

They thought then that God was their socoure, and that the hye God was their redeemer. Neuerthelesse, they dyd but flatter him in their mouthes, and dissembled with him in their tonges. For their herte was not whole with him, neither continued they in his covenant. But he was so merciful, that he forgave their mysdedes, and destroyed them not: Yee many a tyme turned he his wrath away, and wolde not suffer his whole displeasure to arise. For he considered y they were but flesh; even a wynde that passeth away, and commeth not agayne. O how oft have they greued him in the wilderness? How many a tyme have they provoked him in the deserte? They turned backe & tempted God, and moued the holy one in Israel. They thought not of his hode, in y daye when he deliuered them from the hande of y enemye. How he had wrought his miracles in Egypte, and his wonders in the londe of Soan. How he turned their waters into bloude, so that they might not drynte of the ryuers. How he sent lyse amonge them, to eatethem up, and fregges to destroye them. How he gaue their frutes vnto the catirpiller, and their laboure vnto the greshopper. How he bett downe their vynyardes with hayle stones, and their Molbery trees with the frost. How he smote their catell with haylestones, and their flockes with hote thoder boltes. How he sent vpon them y furiousnesse of his wrath, anger & displeasure: with trouble and fallinge in of euil angels. When he made a waye to his fearfull indignaciō, and spared not their soules from death, yee and gaue their catell ouer to the pestilence. But as for his owne people, he led them forth like shepe, and caried them in the wilderness like a flocke. He brought them out safely, that they shulde not feare, and overwhelmed their enemies with the see. He caried them vnto the borders of his Sanctuaries: even in to this hill, which he purchased with his right hande. He dyd cast out the heithen before them, caused their londe to be denyded amonge them for an heretage, and made y tribes of Israel to dwell in their tetes. For all this they tempted and displeased the most hye God, and kepte not his ceuenant. But turned their backes and fell awaye like their forefathers, startinge asyde like a broken bowe. And so they greued him with their he places, & prouoked him with their ymages. When God herde this, he was wroth, and toke sore displeasure at Israel. The fyre consumed their yonge men, and their maydes were not geuen to mariage.

Their prestes were slayne with the swerde, and there were no wyddowes to make lamentacion. So the LORDE awaked as one out of slepe, and like a giant refreshed with wyne. He smote his enemies in y hynder partes, and put them to a perpetuall shame. He refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the trybe of Ephraim. Nevertheless, he chose y trybe of Juda, euen the hill of Sion which he loued. And there he buylded his temple on hye, and layed y foundation of it like y grounde, that it might perpetuallly endure. He chose David also his seruant, and toke him awaye from the shepe foldes. As he was folowinge the yowes greate with yonge, he toke him, that he might fede Jacob his people, and Israel his enheritaunce. So he fed them with a faith full and true bert, and ruled them with all y diligence of his power.

The LXXVIII. A psalme of Asaph.

Wheritage: thy holy temple haue they defyled, and made Jerusalem an heape of stones. re my prayer: herken o God of Jacob.

Beholde o God oure defence, loke vpon the face of thyne annoynted. For one daye in thy court is better then a thousande: I had rather be a doer keeper in the house of my God, then to dwell in the tentes of the vngodly. For the LORDE God is a light and defence, the LORDE wil geue grace z wez-shipe, and no good thinge shal he witholde from them, that lyue a godly life. O LOR-DE God of hoostes, blessed is the man, y put-

My trueth also & my mercy shalbe with him, and in my name shal his horne be exalted. I wil set his honde in the see, and his right honde in the floudes. He shal call me: thou art my father, my God, and the strength of my saluacion. And I wil make him my firstborne, byer then the kinges of the earth.

My mercy wil I kepe for him for euermore, and my couenaunt shal stonde fast with him. His sede wil I make to endure for euer, yee and his Trone as the dayes of heauen. But yf his childre forsake my lawe, and walke not in my iudgements. If they breake myne ordinaunces, and kepe not my commandementes. Thou setteest vp the right hande of his enemies, and makest all his aduersaries to reioyse. Thou hast taken awaye the strength of his swerde, and geuest him not victory in the battayll. Thou hast put out his glory, and cast his Trone downe to the ground. The dayes of his youth hast thou shortened, and covered him with dishonoure.

Sela. LORDE, how longe wilt thou hyde thy selfe? For euer? shal thy wrath turne like fyre? O remembre how shorte my tyme is, hast thou made all men for naught? What man is he that lyueth, and shal not se death? Maye a man deliuer his owne soule from the honde of hell?

The LXXXIX psalme. A prayer of Moses the man of God.

LORDE, thou art oure refuge from one generacion to another. Before the mountaynes were brought forth, or enen the earth & the wolde were made, thou art God from euerslastinge and woldest not outende. Thou turnest man to dust, thou art Agayne, thou sayest: come agayne, children of men. For a thousande yeares in thy sight are but as yesterdaye that is past, and like as it were a night watch.

As soone as thou scatrest them, they are euen as a slepe, and fade awaye so doeth the grasse. In the mornynge it is grene and groweth vp, but in the euenynge it is cutt downe and wythered. For we consume awaye in thy displeasure, and are asrayed at thy wretchedfull indignacion. Thou setteest oure mistedes before the, and oure secreete synnes in the light of thy countenance. For when thou art angrie, all dayes are gone, we brynge o<sup>r</sup> yeares to an ende, as it were a taylor that is tolde. The dayes of oure age are iij. score yeares & ten: & then men be so stronge that they come to iij. score yeares, yet is their strength then but labour and sorowe: so soone passeth it awaye, & we are gone. But who regardeth the power of thy wrath, thy fear full & terrible displeasure? O teach vs to remembre oure dayes, that we maye applie oure herthes vnto wysdome.

Turne the agayne (O LORDE) at the last, and be gracious vnto thy seruantes. O satisfie vs with thy mercy, and that soone: so shal we reioyse and be glad all the dayes of oure life. Comforte vs agayne, now after the tyme that thou hast plaged vs, and for the yeares wherin we haue suffered aduersite. Shewe thy seruantes thy worke, & their children thy glory. And the glorious maiesty of the LORDE oure God be vpon vs: O prospere thou the worke of oure bondes vpon vs, O prosper thou oure bondy worke.

The XCIII. psalme.

LORDE God, to whom vengeance belongeth: thou God to whom vengeance belongeth, shewe thy self.

Arisethou iudge of the wolde, & rewarde the proude after their deservynge. LORDE, how longe shal the vngodly, how longe shal the vngodly triumphe? How longe shal all wicked boers speake so disdainedly, and make soch proude boastynge? They smyte downe thy people (O LORDE) and trouble thine heretage. They murthure the widowe and the straunger, and put the father lesse to death.

And yet they saie: Tush, the LORDE seyth not, the God of Jacob regeth it not. Take hede, ye vnwise amonge the people: O ye fooles, when wil ye vnderstonde? He that planted the eare, shal he not heare: he that made the eye, shal he not see? He that nurturith the cheiken, and teacheth a man knowlege, shal he not be punyssh?

The LORDE knoweth the thoughtes of men, that they are but vayne. Blessed is the man, whom thou lernest (O LORDE) and teachest him in thy lawe. That thou mayest geue him patience in tyme of aduersite, vntill the pytte be dygged vp for the vngodly. For the LORDE wil not fayle his people, nether wil he forsake his inheritance. And why? iudgment shal be turned agayne vnto righteousness, and all soch as be true of hert shal folowe it. Who ryseth up with me agaynst the wicked? who taketh my parte agaynst the euell doers? I shal soone destroye all the vngodly of the lōde, that all wicked doers maye be roted out of the cite of the LORDE.

The CI. psalme.

Hear my prayer (O LORDE) and let my crye come vnto the. Hydenoth thy face from me in the tyme of my trouble: encline thine eares vnto me when I call, O heare me, and that right soone. For my dayes are consumed awaye like smoke, & my bones are brynt vp as it were a fyre brande.

My hert is synette downe and wythered like grasse, so that I forget to eate my bred.

For the voyce of my gromynge, my bone wil scarfe cleue to my flesh. I am become like a pellicane in the wilderness, and like an Oule in a broken wall. I wake, and am enuen as it were a sparow sittinge alone vpon the house toppe. Myne enemies reuyle me all the daye longe, they laugh me to scorne, and are sworne together agaynst me. I eat ashes with my bred, and mengle my drynke with wepyng. And that because of y indignacion and wrath, for thou hast taken me vp, and cast me awaye. My dayes are gone like a shadowe, and I am wythered like grasse. But thou (O LORDE) endurest for ever, and thy remembraunce thow out all generacions.

Arise therfore and haue mercy vpon Sion, for it is tyme to haue mercy vpon her, yee the tyme is come. And why? thy seruantes haue a lone to hir stones, & it pitieth them to se her in the dust. The heithē shal feare: hy name (O LORDE) and all the kynges of the earth thy maiesty. For the LORDE shal buylde vp Sion, and shal appeare in his glory. He turneth him vnto the prayer of the poore destitute, and despyseth not their desyre. This shalbe written for those y come after, that the people which shalbe borne, maye prayse the LORDE.

For he loketh downe from his Sanctuary, out of the heauen both the LORDE be- holdeth the earth.

The Psalter.

That he maye heare the mournynges of
such as be in captiuite, and deliuer the children of death. That they maie preach the name of the LORDE in Sion, and his worshipec at Jerusalem. When the people are gathered together, and the kyngdomes also to serue y<sup>e</sup> LORDE. He hath brought dow nemy strength in my iourney, and shortened my dayes. Yet wil I saye: O my God, take me not awaye in y<sup>e</sup> myddest of myne age:
as for thy yeaues, they endure thorow out all generations. Thou LORDE in the begyn-nyng hast layed y<sup>e</sup> foundacion of the earth, and the heauens are the workes of thy hon-
des. They shal perishe, but thou shalt endure: they all shall weye olde as doth a garment, & as a vesture shalt thou chaunge the,
and they shalbe chaunged. But thou art the same, and thy yeaues shal not fayle.

The children of thy seruantes shal con-

The CIII. A psalme of David.

Rayse the LORDE (O my soule) & all that is within me prayse his holy name. Prayse the LORDE O my soule, & forget not all his benefites. Which forgeueth all thy synnes, and healeth all thy infirmities. Which saue thy life from destruc-cion, and crowne thy with mercy & louyn-ge kyndnesse. Which satisfieth thy desyre with good thynges, makynge the yonge and lusty as an Aegle. The LORDE executeth righteousnesse and iudgment, for all them y<sup>e</sup> suffre wronge. He shewed his wayes vnto Moses, and his workes vnto the children of Israel. The LORDE is full of compassion and mercy, longe sufferinge, and of greate goodnesse. He wil not allwaye be chydin-ge, nether wil he kepe his anger for ever.

He hath not dealt with vs after oure syn-nes, ner rewarded vs accordinge to oure wickednesse. For loke how hye the heaue is in comparison of the earth, so greate is his mercy also toward them that feare him.

Loke how wyde the east is from the west,
so farre hath he set oure synnes from vs.

Ree like as a father pitieth his owne children, euen so is the LORDE mercifull vnto the that feare him. For he knoweth wher-of we be made, he remembreth that we are but dust. That a man in his tyme is but as is grasse, & flourisheth as a floure of the felde.

For as soone as the wynde goeth ouer it, it is gone, and the place therof knoweth it no more. But the mercifull goodnesse of y<sup>e</sup> LOR-DE endureth for ever and ever, vpon them y<sup>e</sup> maunt, and thinke vpon his commaundmentes to do them. The LORDE hath prepared his seate in heaue, and his kyngdome leth ouer all. O prayse the LORDE ye angels of his, ye that be mightie in strength, filling his commaundment, that me maye heare the voyce of his wordes. O prayse the LORDE all ye his hoostes, ye seruantes of his, that do his pleasure. O speake good of the LORDE all ye workes of his, in euery place of his dominion: prayse thou the LOR-

The CIII. psalme.

Rayse the LORDE O my soule: O LORDE my God, thou art become ceadinge glorious, thou art clothed with maiesty and honoure. Thou dost thy self with light, as it were wth a garment, thou spreddest out the heauen like a curtayne.

Thou voltest it aboue with waters, thou makest the cloudes thy charet, and goest vpon the wynges of the wynde. Thou makest thine angels spretes, and thy ministres flammes of fyre. Thou hast layed y<sup>e</sup> earth vpon hir foundacion, that it neuer moueth at eny tyme. Thou couerest it with the pelike as with a garment, so that the water stonde aboue the hilles. But at thy rebuke they fle, at the voyce of thy thonder they are afraied. (Then are the hilles sene alote, & the valleys beneth in their place which thou hast appoynted for the.) Thou hast set them their boundes, which they maie not passe, that they turne not agayne to conuerth. Thou canst the welles to sprynge vp amonge the valleys, and the waters runne amonge y<sup>e</sup> hilles. That all the beas-tes of the felde maye haue drynke, & that the wylde asses maye quench their thyrste.

Aboue vpon the hilles haue the fowles of the ayre their habitation, and synge amonge the braunches. Thou watrest the hyles from aboue, the erth is fylled with y<sup>e</sup> fru-tes of thy workes. Thou bryngeest forth grasse for the catell, and grene herbe for the seruyce of men. Thou bryngeest fode out of the earth: wyne to make glad y<sup>e</sup> herte of ma-oyle to make him a chearfull countenance, & bried to strength mans herte. The trees of the LORDE are full of sappe, euen the trees of Libanus which he hath planted. They re make the bydes their nestes, and the fyre trees are a dwellinge for the sturcke. The hilles are a refuge for the wylde goates, and so are the stony rockes for y<sup>e</sup> conyes. Thou roare after the praye, and set their meate at God. But when the Sonne ariseth, they get them awaye together, and lye them down in their dennes. Then goeth man forth to his worke, and to till his londe vntill the euynge. O LORDE, how manifeste are thy workes, right wysely hast thou made the all: yee the earth is full of thy riches. So is this greate and wyde see also, wherin are thynges crepinge innumerable, both small and greate beastes. There go the shippes ouer, and there is that Leviathan, whom thou hast made, to take his pastyme therein.

They wayte all vpo the, that thou mayest geue them meate in due season. Whethou geuest it them, they gather it: whethou openest thine honde, they are fylled with good.

But when thou hydest thy face, they are froufull: yf thou takest awaye their breth, they dye, & are turned agayne to their dust.

Agayne, when thou lattest thy breth go forth, they are made, and so thou renewest the face of the earth. The glorious magesty of the LORDE endureth for euer, and the LOR-DE reioyseth in his workes. The earth treblat at the loke of him, he doth but touch y<sup>e</sup> hilles and they smoke. I will synge vnto the LORDE as long as I lyue, I wil pray-se my God whyle I haue my beinge. O that my wordes might please him, for my oye is in the LORDE. As for synners, they shalbe consumed out of the earth, and the vigylly shal come to an ende: but prayse thou the LORDE, O my soule. Halleluya.

The CIII. psalme.

Geuethankes vnto the LORDE, and call vpon his name: tell the people what thynges he hath done. O let your songes be of him: prayse him, and let your rakyng be of all his wonderous wor-
kes. Geue his holy name a good reporte, let their hertes reioyse that seke the LORDE.
Seke the LORDE, and his strength, seke his face euermore. Remembre the maruelous workes that he hath done, his wonders and the iudgmentes of his mouth. O ye seide of Abraham his seruant, ye children of Jacob his chosen. He is the LORDE oure God, whose punishmentes are thorow out all the woulde. He is allwaye myndfull of his conenant, and promyse that he made to a thousande generations.

The ciij. psalme. Fo. xxx.

Ree the conenant that he made wth Abraham, and the oath that he swore vnto Isaac. And apoynted the same vnto Jacob for a lawe, and to Israel for an everlastinge testament. Sayenge: vnto the wil I geue the londe of Canaan, the lott of youre heretage. When there was yet but a fewe of them, and they straungers therein. What tyme as they wente from one nacion to another, from one kyngdome to another. He suffred no man to hurte them, but reproveth euen kynges for their sakes. Touch not myne anoynted, to my prophetes no harme.

Moreover he called for a deth vpon the lode, and destroyed all the prouysion of bried.

But he had sent a man before them, euen
Joseph which was solde to be a bonde seruant. They hurte his fete in the stockes, the yron pearced his herte. Vntill the tyme that his worde came, and till the worde of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE had trieth him. Then sent the kin-ge and caused him be deliuered, the prynce of the people bad let him go. He made him lorde of his house, & ruler of all his substaun-
ce. That he might enfourme his prynces after his wil, and teach his Senatours wysdome. Israel also came in to Egipte, and Jacob was a straunger in the lode of Ham.

But he increased his people exceedingly,
and made them stronger then their enemies.

Whose hert turned, so that they hated his people, and dealt vntuly with his seruantes.
Then sent he Moses his seruant, and Aaron whom he had chosen. These dyd his tokens amonge them, and wonders in the londe of Ham. He sent darcknesse and it was darcke, for they were not obedient vnto his worde. He turned their waters in to bloude, and slewe their fishe. Their londe brought forth frogges, yee euen in their kynges chambers. He spake the worde, & their came all maner of flies & life in all their quarters. He gaue them hale stones for rayne, and flammes of fyre in their lode. He smote their vynyardes & fige trees, and destroyed the trees that were in their coastes. He spake y<sup>e</sup> worde, and they came greshoppers & catirpillers innumerable. These ate vp all the grasse in their lode, and deuoured the frutes of their groude. He smote all y<sup>e</sup> first borne in their lode, euen the chese of all their substaunce. He brought them forth wth syluer & golde, there was not one feble personne amonge their trybes. Egipte was glad of their departinge, for they were a fraied of the.

He spied out a cloude to be a couerynge, and fyre to geue light in the night season.

The LORDES name is worthy to be praysed, fro the risinge vp of the Sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. The LORDE is hye above all heithen, and his glory above the heauens. Who is like vnto the LORDE oure God, y hath his dwellinge so hye, which humbleth himself, to beholde that is in heauē and earth? Which taketh vp the symple out of the dust, and lifeth the poore out of the myre. That he maye set him amonge the prynces, euen amonge the prynces of his people. Which maketh the baren woman to kepe house, and to be a ioyfull mother of children. Halleluya.

The CXIII. psalme. When Israhel came out of Egipte, & the house of Jacob from amonge that straunge people. Juda was his Sanctuary, Israhel his dominion. The see sawe that, and fled, Jordan turned backe. The mountaynes slipped like rammes, & the litle hilles like yonge shepe. What ayled the (O thou see) that thou fleddest? and thou Jordan, that thou turnedest backe? Remountaynes, that ye slipped like rammes: and ye litle hilles, like yonge shepe? The earth trembled at the presence of the LORDE, at the presence of the God of Jacob. Which turned the harde rocke in to a standinge water, & the flynt stone in to a sprynginge well. Here the hebrues begynne the CXV. psalme.

Let vnto vs (O LORDE) not vnto vs, but vnto thy name geue the prayse, for thy lowynge mercy and faithfulness. Wherfore shal the heithen saye: where is now their God? As for oure God, he is in heauen, he doth what soeuer it pleaseth him. Their ymages are but syluer and golde, euen the worke of mens hōdes. They haue mouthes, and speake not: eyes haue they, but they se not. They haue eares, and heare not: noses haue they, but they smell not. They haue handes and handle not, fete haue they, but they can not go, nether can they speake thow their thioce. They that made them, are like vnto them, and so are all such as put their trust in them. But let Israhel trust in y LORDE, for he is their succoure & defence. Let the house of Aaron put their trust in y LORDE, for he is their succoure & defence. They that feare the LORDE, let the put their trust in the LORDE, for he is their succoure and defence. The LORDE is mynde full of vs, & blesteth vs: he blesteth y house of Israhel, he blesteth y house of Aaron. Yet he blesteth all them that feare the LORDE, both small & greate. The LORDE encrease you more & more: you, and youre childre. For ye are y blessed of the LORDE, which made heauen & earth. All the rohole heauens are the LORDES, but the earth hath he geue vnto y childre of men. The deed prayse not the (O LORDE) nether all they that go downe in to silen

This psalme do the Zebunes toyn vnto it that goeth before, and is with them the CXVI. psalme.

A Belued, and therefore haue I spokt, but I was sore troubled. I layde in my haist: All men are lyers. What rewarde shal I geue vnto y LORDE, for all the benefites y he hath done vnto me? I wil receaue the cuppe of saluaciō, and call vpon the name of the LORDE. I wil paye my vowes in the presence of all his people, right deare in the sight of y LORDE is the death of his sayntes. O LORDE, I am thy seruaunt, I am thy seruaunt, and the sonne of thy handmayden, thou hast broken my bondes in sōder. I wil offere the sacrifice of thankes geuynge, and wil call vpon the name of the LORDE. I wil paye my vowes vnto the LORDE in the sight of all his people, in the courtes of the LORDES house, cūe in the myddest of the, o Jerusalem. Halleluya.

The CXVI. psalme.

A Praise the LORDE all ye Gentiles, laude him all ye people. For his mercifull kyndnes is ever more and more towarde vs, & the trneth of the LORDE endureth for euer. Halleluya.

The CXVII. psalme.

A Geue thankes vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer. Let Israel now confesse, y his mercy endureth for euer. Let the house of Aaron now confesse, that his mercy endureth for euer. Yee let the now that feare the LORDE, confesse, that his mercy endureth for euer. I called vpon the LORDE in trouble, and the LORDE herde me wng. The LORDE is my helper, I wil walke, are what man doeth vnto me. The turned, is my helper, & I shal se my desyre se, y eate, y enemies. It is better to trust in the LORDE, then to put any confidence in Egypte. It is better to trust in the LORDE, any confidence in prynces. All

The cxxij. psalme.

Zeithen compased me rounde aboute, but in the name of the LORDE wil I destroye the. They kepte me in on euery syde, but in the name of the LORDE, I wil destroye them. They came aboute me like bees, & as hore as the fyre in the thornes, but in the name of the LORDE, I wil destroye them. They thrust at me, that I might fall, but the LORDE was my helpe. The LORDE is my strength, & my songe, & is become my saluacion. The voyce of ioye & mynth is in the dwellinges of y righteous, for y right hande of the LORDE hath gottē the victory. The right hande of the LORDE hath geuen premyence, the right hande of the LORDE hath gottē the victory. I wil not dye, but lyue, and declare the workes of the LORDE. The LORDE hath chastened & correcte me, but he hath not geuen me ouer vnto death. Open me the gates of rightuousnes, I maye go in therethorow, & geue thankes to the LORDE. This is the doye of the LORDE, the righteous shall entre in thow. I thanke the, y thou hast herde me, & become my saluaciō. The same stone whiche the buylders refused, is become the heade stone in the corner. This was the LORDE doinge, & it is marvelous in o eyes. This is the daye which the LORDE hath made, vs reioyse and be glad in it. Helpe now LORDE, o LORDE sende vs now prosper. Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the LORDE, we wish you good lucke, yet he of the house of the LORDE. God is the LORDE, & hath shewed vs light: O game the solempne feast with grenebraunches, vnto the homes of y aulter. Thou art my God, & I wil thanke the: thou art my God, & I wil prayse the. O geue thankes to the LORDE, for he is gracious, & his mercy endureth for euer.

The CXVIII. psalme.

Aleph.

Blessed are those y be vndeified in the waye: which walke in the lawe of the LORDE. Blessed are they that kepe his tymonies, & seke him with their whole hart. Which walke in his wayes, & do no wrongnesse. Thou hast geuen straye charge to kepe thy commaundementes. O that my wayes were stablyshed to kepe thy statutes. So shulde I not be confounded, for I haue respecte vnto all thy commaundementes. I wil thanke the with an vnspoyled herte, because I am lerned in the tymonies of thy rightuousnesse. I wil kepe thy statutes, o forsake me not vterly.

Psalm.

They came aboute me lyke bees / & were hore as the fyre in the thornes / but in the name of the LORDE I wil destroye them. They thrust at me / that I might fall / but the LORDE was my helpe. The LORDE is my strength / and my songe / is become my saluacion. The voyce of ioye and mynth is in the dwellinges of the ryghtuous / for the ryght hande of the LORDE hath gotten the victorie. The ryght hande of the LORDE hath geuen premyence, the ryght hande of the LORDE hath gottē the victorie. I wil not dye / but lyue / and declare the workes of the LORDE. The LORDE hath chastened & correcte me / but he hath not geuen me ouer vnto death. Open me the gates of ryghtuousnes / I maye goe in there thow / and geue thankes vnto the LORDE. This is the doye of the LORDE / the ryghteous shall entre in thow it. I thanke the / that thou hast herde me / & become my saluacion. The same stone whych the buylders refused / is become the heade stone in the corner. This was the LORDES doinge / and it is marvelous in oure eyes. This is the daye / which the LORDE hath made / let vs reioyse and be glad in it. Helpe now O LORDE / O LORDE sende vs prosperite. Blessed be he that commeth in the name of the LORDE / we wish you good lucke / ye that are of the house of the LORDE. God is the LORDE / & hath shewed vs light: O game the solempne feast with grenebraunches / vnto the homes of y aulter. Thou art my God / and I wil thanke the: thou art my God / and I wil prayse the. O geue thankes vnto the LORDE / for he is gracious / and his mercy endureth for euer.

The cxxij. psalme.

This psalme declarerth how moche the sayntes are let by the lawes of God / and how greatly they desire to be transgressed & withstandinge of the lawe. And how they praye to be taught the fre to be accustomed with the: a mythe as many as they can withstandinge them / to be destroyed and the waye.

Aleph.

Blessed are those that a* be vndeified in the waye: which walke in the lawe of the LORDE. Blessed are they that kepe his tymonies / and seke him with their whole herte. Which walke in his wayes / & do no wrongnesse. Thou hast geuen straye charge to kepe thy commaundementes.

Psalm.

That my wayes were stablyshed to kepe thy statutes. So shulde I not be confounded / whyle I haue respecte vnto all thy commaundementes. I wil thanke the with an vnspoyled herte / because I am lerned in the tymonies of thy ryghtuousnesse. I wil kepe thy statutes / O forsake me not vterly. Beth. Where withall shall a ponge man clente his waye? Euen by rulyngge hym selfe after thy worde. With my whole herte do I seke the / O let me not go wodge out of thy commaundementes. Thy wordes haue I hyd within my herte / that I shulde not synne agaynst the. Prayed be thou O LORDE / O teach me thy statutes. With my lippes will I be tellyng out all the iugmentes of thy mouth. I haue as greate deylte in the waye of thy testymonies / as in all maner of ryches. I will exerceple my selfe in thy commaundementes / & haue respecte vnto thy cōtepathes. My delite shall be in thy statutes / I will not forget thy wordes.

Gimel.

O do well vnto thy seruaut / that I maye lyue and kepe thy wordes. Open thou myne eyes / and so shall I spie out wonderous thynges in thy lawe. I am a stranger vpon earth / O hyde not thy commaundementes from me. My soule breaketh oute / for the very feruent desyre y I haue alwaye vnto thy iugmentes. Thou rebukest the proude / cursed are they that departe from thy commaundementes. O turne fro me shame and rebuke / for I kepe thy testymonies. Prynces also lyt & speake agaynst me / but thy seruaut is occupied in thy statutes. In thy testymonies is my deylte / they are my counceilers.

Daleth.

My soule cleaueth to the dust / O quykē thou me accordynge to thy worde. I knowledged my wayes / & thou herdest me / O teach me then thy statutes. Make me to vnderstande the waye of thy commaundementes / and so shall I talke of thy wonderous workes. My soule melteth awaye for berifull / as nesse / O let me be according vnto thy name. Take fro me y waye of lyenge / & geue that me thy lawe. I haue cholen the waye of treuth / and iugmentes haue I layed before me. I stycke vnto thy testymonies / O LORDE confounde me not.

I will runne the waye of thy commaunde-mentes / whē thou hast comforted my herte.
Teach me O Lorde the waye of thy statutes / and I shall kepe it vnto the ende.
O geue me vnderstandynge / and I shall kepe thy lawe / yee I shall kepe it wth my mouth / whē thou shalt heare.
Leade me in the path of thy commaunde-mentes / for that is my delyte.
Encline myne herte vnto thy testimonies / and not to couetousnes.
Turne awaye myne eyes / lest they be-holde vanitie / a quychen me in thy waye.
Stablish thy worde in thy seruauit / for
I maye feare the.
Take awaye & rebuke that I am afrayed of / for thy iudgmentes are amiable.
Beholde / my delyte is in thy commaunde-mentes / O quychen me in thy ryghteousnesse.
Let thy louynge mercy come vnto me / O Lorde / and thy sauynge health accordynge vnto thy worde.
That I maye geue answere vnto my blas-phemers / for my trust is in thy worde.
Take not thy worde of treuth vterly out of my mouth / for my hope is in thy iudgmentes.
So shall I alwaye kepe thy lawe / yee for euer and euer.
And I will walcke at liberty / for I seeke
thy commaundementes.
I will speake of thy testimonies euen before kynges / and will not be ashamed.
My delyte shall be in thy commaundmentes / which I loue.
My handes also will I lyft vp vnto thy commaundementes which I loue / & my tal-kyng shall be of thy statutes.
I praye.
O thynke vpon thy seruauit as conernyng thy worde / wherin thou hast caused me to put my trust.
For it is my comfort in my trouble / yee thy worde quycheneth me.
The proude haue me greatly in derisyon /
yet thynke not I from thy lawe.
I remembre thyne euerlastyng iudgmentes /
O Lorde / and am comforted.
I am horribly afrayed for the vngodly / &
I seeke thy lawe.
Thy statutes are my songes in the house of my praye.
I praye vpon thy name / O Lorde / in the counseyll / and kepe thy lawe.
Sanctify myne aune / for I kepe thy commaundmentes.

purposed to kepe thy lawe.
I make myne humble praye vnto thy presence with my whole herte / O be full vnto me accordynge vnto thy worde.
I call myne aune wayes to remember / and turne my fete in to thy testimonies.
I make haste / and prolonge not thy to kepe thy commaundementes.
The congregacions of the vngodly robbed me / but I forget not thy lawe.
At mynighthe stande I vp / to geue vnto the / for the iudgmentes of thy truthnesse.
I am a companyon of all them that the / and kepe thy commaundementes.
The earth / O Lorde / is full of thy lawe. Teach me thy statutes.
O Lorde / thou hast dealt frendly vnto thy seruauit / accordynge vnto thy worde.
I learne me thy kyndnesse / nou-ghe / for I beleue thy commaundementes.
Before I was troubled / I went but now I kepe thy worde.
Thou art good & frendly / O teach me thy statutes.
The proude ymagin theye vpon me kepe thy commaundementes with my herte.
Their herte is as fat as bryare / but delyte is in thy lawe.
It is good for me & I haue bene ble / that I maye learne thy statutes.
The lawe of thy mouth is deare me / then thousandes of golde and syluer.
Thy handes haue made me and sal-me / O geue me vnderstandynge / that I learne thy commaundementes.
Theye & feare the / will be glad wth se me / because I put my trust in thy I knowe / O Lorde / that thy iudgmentes are right / and that thou of very faith-fast caused me to be troubled.
O let thy mercifull kyndnesse be forte / accordynge to the praye that hast made vnto thy seruauit.
O let thy louynge mercies come vnto that I maye lyue / for thy lawe is my Let the proude be confounded / whē le me to falte.
But let such as feare the / and knowe testimonies / be turned vnto me.
O lett myne herte be vnderfyled in thy tutes that I be not ashamed.
Caph.
My soule longeth for thy sauynge health for my trust is in thy worde.
Myne eyes lōge for thy lawe / for thy
O when wilt thou comforte me?

I am become like a botell in smoke /
donot I forget thy statutes.
How many are the dayes of thy seruauit?
but yet thou be auēged of myne aduer-saries.
The proude haue dygged pyttes for me /
but they are not after thy lawe.
Thy commaundementes are true / they haue made me false / O be thou my helpe.
They haue almost made an ende of me
but I forsake not thy commaundementes.
O quychen me after thy louynge kyndnesse / that I maye geue testimonies of thy mercy.
Lamed.
O Lorde / thy worde endureth for euer in heauen.
The truth also remaineth fro one ge-neracion to another / thou hast layed thy foundacion of the earth / and it abydeth.
Thou contynue this daye accordynge to thy promise / for all thynges serue the.
My delyte were not in thy lawe / I perished in my trouble.
I will neuer forget thy commaundementes for with them thou quickenest me.
O helpe me / for I seeke thy commaundementes.
The vngodly laye waye for me to de-ceyue / but I confesse thy testimonies.
That all thynges come to an ende / but thy commaundement is exceedinge broad.
Mem.
What loue haue I vnto thy lawe / all daye longe is my talkynge of it.
Thou hast made thy commaundement hast me wiser then myne enemies / for it is thy me.
I haue more vnderstandynge then all my enemies / for thy testimonies are my studie.
I am wiser then the aged / for I kepe
thy commaundementes.
I refrayne my fete fro euery euell waye /
that I maye kepe thy wordes.
I syncke not from thy iudgmentes / for thou teachest me.
O how sweete are thy wordes vnto my soule.
More then honny vnto my mouth.
Thou hast made thy commaundementes standing / therefore I hate all false wayes.
Psal.
My worde is a lantern vnto my fete
that I maye not stumpe.
I haue sworne a vowe / and I will not forsake it / for thy ryghteousnesse.
I am troubled about measure / quychen me / O Lorde / accordynge vnto thy worde.
Let the freewill offeringes of my mouth praise the / O Lorde / & teach me thy iudgmentes.

My soule is alwaye in my hande / yet
do not I forget thy lawe.
The vngodly haue layed a snare for me /
but yet I shall not I fro thy commaundementes.
The testimonies haue I claymed as myne heritage for euer / and whye they are very toye of my herte.
I applye myne herte to fulfyll thy statutes alwaye / euen vnto the ende.
Shamech.
I hate the vngodly / but thy lawe do I loue.
Thou art my defence & myde / my trust is in thy worde.
I praye fro me ye wyched / I will kepe
the commaundementes of my God.
O stablish me accordynge vnto thy worde / that I maye lyue / & let me not be disapoynted of my hope.
O holde thou me by / and I shall be safe / yee
I shall euer be talkynge of thy statutes.
Thou treadest downe all them & departe fro thy statutes / for they ymagin but disceate Thou puttest awaye all the vngodly of the earth lyke drosse / therefore I loue thy testimonies.
My flesh trembleth for feare of the / and I am afrayed of thy iudgmentes.
Ain.
I deale wth the thynge & is lawfull & right /
O geue me not ouer vnto mine enemyes.
Be thou swete for thy seruauit to do him good / & the proude do me no wronge.
Myne eyes are wayted / waye with lo-kyng for thy health / and for the worde of thy ryghteousnesse.
O deale wth thy seruauit accordynge vnto thy louynge mercy / & teach me thy statutes.
I am thy seruauit / O graunte me vnderstandynge / that I maye knowe thy testimonies.
It is tyme for the (O Lorde) to laye to thyne harte / for they haue destroyed thy lawe.
For I loue thy commaundementes aboue golde and precious stone.
Therefore holde I strenght all thy commaundementes / and all false wayes I vterly abhorre.
I see.
Thy testimonies are wonderfull / therfore doth my soule kepe them.
When thy worde goeth forth / it geueth lyght & vnderstandynge / euen vnto babes.
I open my mouth and declare in my bryeth /
for I delyte thy commaundementes.
O loke thou vpon me / & be mercifull / as thou blest to do vnto those & loue thy name.
O drede my goynges after thy worde that no wychednesse raygne in me.
O delyuer me fro wrogeous dralynge of men / & so shall I kepe thy commaundementes.
Shewe I lyght of thy countenance vnto me / O Lorde / & I shall kepe thy lawe.

thy seruante/and learne me thy statutes.
Myne eyes gylthe out w water/ because men kepe not thy lawe.

Yade.

Righteous art thou/ O Lorde/ and true is thy iudgment.

The testymones that thou hast comanded are exceedynge/ ryghtuous and true.

My zeale hath eu consumed me/ because myne enemyes haue forgotten thy wordes.

Thy worde is tryed to the uttermost/ and thy seruante loueth it.

I am small and of no reputacyon/ yet do not I forget thy commaundementes.

Thy ryghtuousnesse is an euerylastynge ryghtuousnesse/ and thy lawe is true.

Trouble and heynesse haue taken holde vpon me/ yet is my deelyte in thy commaunde-mentes.

The ryghtuousnes of thy testymones is euerylastynge/ O graunte me vnderstandynge/and I shall ioue.

Roph.

I call with my whole herte/ heare me/ O
Lorde/ I will kepe thy statutes.

Yee euen vpon the do cal/ helpe me/ and I shall kepe thy testymones.

Early in the mornynge do I crye vnto cordynge as thou art wont.

They drawe nye that of malice persecute me/ and are farre from thy lawe.

Be thou nye at hande also/ O Lorde/ for thy promyses are saythfull.

As concernynge thy testymones/ I haue knowne euery tyme the begynnynge/ & thou hast grounded them for euery.

Res.

O cōsydye myne aduersyte/ & deliuer me/
for I do not forget thy lawe.

Wanteyn thou my cause and defende me/
quychen me accordynge vnto thy worde.

Health is farre from the vngodly/ for they regarde not thy statutes.

Great is thy mercy/ O Lorde/ quychen me as thou art wont.

Many there are that trouble me/ & persecute me/ yet do not I swaue from thy te-stymones.

It greueth me/ when I se/ that the trans-gressours kepe not thy lawe.

Consydre/ O Lorde/ how I loue thy commaundementes/ O quychen me with thy louynge kyndnesse.

The songe of the steares.

If the Lorde had not bene of oure syde (now maye Israel saye) If the Lorde had not bene of oure syde/ when men rose vpon agaynst vs.

They had swallowed vs vpon quychen/ when they were so wrathfully dyspleased at vs.

Yee the waters had drowned vs/ & streame had gone ouer oure soule.

The depe waters of the proude had gone euen vnto oure soule.

But prayed be the Lorde/ whych hath not geuen vs ouer for a praye vnto their teeth.

Oure soule is escaped/ euē as a byrde out of the snare of the fouler: the snare is broken and we are deliuered.

Oure helpe standeth in the name of the Lorde/ which hath made heauen and earth.

The. cxxv. Psalm.

The church or congregacyon is in safetie when the Lorde defendeth it/ and shalbe prosperous when he fauoreth it/ and purgeth the wycked theroute.

The songe of the steares.

They that put their trust in the Lorde/are euen as the mount Syon/ which may not be remoued/ but standeth fast for euery.

The hylls stande about Ierusalem/ euē so standeth the Lorde rounde about his people/ from this tyme forth for euery more.

That the rode of the vngodly come not into the lot of the ryghtuous/ lest & ryghtuous put their hande vnto wyckednesse.

Do well/ O Lorde/ vnto those & be good and true of herre.

As for soche as turne backe vnto their awne wyckednesse/ the Lorde shall leade the forth with the euill doers: but peace be vpon Israel.

The. cxxvi. Psalm.

The descreybeth the gladnes of the people returning agayne from Babylon/ & vnder the figure herof the reioysynge of the chrysten/ whom the sonne of God
hath made free from the captiuite of synne and deeth.

The songe of the steares.

When the Lorde turneth agayne the captiuite of Sion/ then shall we be lyke vnto them that dreame.

Then shall oure mouth be fylled with laughter/ and oure tonge with ioye.

Then shall it be sayd amonge the Heathen:
the Lorde hath done greate thynges for the.

The. cxxvii. Psalm.

The descreybeth the gladnes of the people returning
agayne from Babylon/ & vnder the figure herof the
reioysynge of the chrysten/ whom the sonne of God
hath made free from the captiuite of synne and deeth.

The songe of the steares.

When the Lorde turneth agayne the

Then shall it be sayd amonge the Heathen:
the Lorde hath done greate thynges for the.

Yee the Lorde hath done greate thynges for vs all reape/ wherof we reioyse.

Turne oure captiuyte/ O Lorde/as the ryuers in the south.

They shalowe in teares/shall reape in ioye.
He that now goeth in his waye wepyng & beareth forth good seede/shal come agayne with ioye/ & bringe his sheaves with hym.

The cxxvii. psalme.

By the only liberalyte & gyft of God is the house and household geuen the cytye defended meate mynyfred/chyldren & those toward and thyppe outayned.

The longe of the sheares.

Except the Lorde buyde the house/ their labour is but lost that buyde it.

Except the Lorde kepe the cytye/ the watchman waketh but in vayne.

It is but lost labour that ye rise by early/and take no rest/ but eate the bredde of carefulness: for loke to whom it pleaseh him/ he geueth it in slepe.

Lo/ chyldren and the frute of the wombe are an heritage & gift/ & cometh of y Lorde.

Lyke as the arrowes in the hande of the gpaunt/ euen so are the yonge chyldren.

Happy is the man/ that hath his quiver full of them: they shal not be ashamed/ when they speake with their enemyes in the gate.

The cxxviii. psalme.

That feareth God shall do well and fortunately at all seasons.

The longe of the sheares.

Letted are all they that feare y Lorde/and walke in hys wayes.

For I knowe y<sup>e</sup> LORD is greates. <sup>1</sup> y<sup>e</sup> LORD is above all goddes. What so ever y<sup>e</sup> LORD pleaseth, y<sup>e</sup> doth he in heave<sup>n</sup> & in earth, in the see & in all depe places. He bryngeth forth the cloudes from the endes of the world, he turneth y<sup>e</sup> lightnes into rayne, bringe the wyndes out of their treasures. Which smote the first borne of Egypte, both of man and best. He hath sent tokens and wonders in to the myddest of the (o thou) land of Egypte upon pharao and all his servants. Which smote dyverse nacions, & slew mightie kynges. Sihon kyng of y<sup>e</sup> Amontes, Og the kyng of Basan, and all the kyngdomes of Canaan. And gaue their lode for an heretage, for an heretage vnto Israel his people. Thy name (o LORD) endureth for ever, so doth thy memoriall (o LORD) from one generacion to another. For the LORD wil anige his people, & be gracious vnto his seruantes. As for the ymages of the heithen, they are but syluer and golde, the worke of mens handes. They haue mouthes, & speake not: eyes haue they, but they see not. They haue cares, and yet they heare not, nether is there eny lych in their mouthes. They that make them, are like vnto them, & so are all they that put their trust in the. Prayse the LORD ye house of Israel, prayse the LORD ye house of Aaron. Prayse the LORD ye house of Levi, yet that feare y<sup>e</sup> LORD. Prayse the LORD. Prayse the LORD out of Sion, which dwelleth at Jerusalem. Halleluya.

When the waters of Babilon we sat downe and wepte, when we remembred Sion. As for oure harpes, we hangd them vp vpon the trees, that are therein. The, they that led vs awaye captiue, requyred of vs a songe and melody in o<sup>r</sup> harpes. synge vs one of the songes of Sion. How shal we synge the LORDES songe in a strange lode? If I forget the (o Jerusalem) let my right hande be forgotten. If I do not remembre the, let my tonge cleue to the roofe of my mouth: yee yf I preferre not Jerusalem in my mynth. Remembre the childre of Sion (o LORD) in the daye of Jerusalem, how they sayde: downe with it, downe with it, to the grounde. O daughter Babilon, thou shalt come to misery thy self: yee happie shal he be, that rewardeth y<sup>e</sup> as thou hast serued vs. Blessed shal he be, that taketh thy children, and throweth them agaynst the stones.

The CXXXVII. A psalme of David.

Wil gene thankes vnto the (o LORD) with my whole hert, even before thy goddes wil I synge prayse vnto the. I wil worshippe toward thy holy temple, and prayse thy name because of thy lowly kyndnesse and treuth, for thou hast magnified thy worde, a cordinge vnto thy greates name. When I call vnto the, thou hearest me, and enderest my soule with much strength. All the kynges of the earth shal prayse the (o LORD) when they heare the wordes of thy mouth. Yee they shal synge in the wayes of the LORD, that greates is the glory of the LORD.

For though the LORD be hye, yet hath he respect vnto y<sup>e</sup> lowly: as for y<sup>e</sup> proude, he beholdeth him as farre off. ## The CXXXVIII. A psalme of David.

LORDE, thou sea: cheste me out, and knowest me. Thou knowest my downe syttinge & my vprisyng, thou knowest my thoughtes as farre off. Thou knowest my path & aboute my bedd, & spyed out all my wayes. For lo, there is not a worde in my tōge, but thou (o LORD) knowest it altogether. Thou hast fashioned me beforē, & layed thine hande vpon me. God knowlege is to wonderfull & excellēt in me, I can not atteyne vnto it. Whither shal I go then from thy spiere? Or, whither shal I fle from thy presence? If I clymme vp to heauen, thou art there: yf I go downe to hell, thou art there also. If I take the ringes of the moonyng, & remayne in the most parte of the see: Euen there also shal thy hande lede me, and thy right hande shal holde me. If I saye: peradventure the darcknesse shal couer me, then shal my night be turned to daye. Yee the darcknesse is no darcknesse with the, but the night is as cleare as the daye, the darcknesse & light are both alike. For my reynes are thine, thou hast covered me in my mothers wombe. I wil thanke the vnto the, for I am wonderously made: maruelous are thy workes, and that my soule knoweth right well. My bones are not hid from the, though I be made secretly, and fashioned beneth in the earth. Thine eyes se myne vnparticnesse, they stonde all write in thy booke: my dayes were fashioned, when as yet there was not one of them. The proude haue layed a snare for me, & spied a nett abroad with coardes, yee & sett trappes in my waye. Sela.

But my sayenge is vnto the LORD: thou art my God, heare the voyce of my prayer o LORD. O LORD God, thou strength of my health, thou hast covered my heade in y<sup>e</sup> daye of battayll. Let not y<sup>e</sup> vngodly haue his desyre (o LORD) let him not haue his purpose, lest they be to proude. Sela. Let the myschese of their owne lippes fall vpon y<sup>e</sup> head of the, y<sup>e</sup> copase me aboute. Let hote burnyng coales fall vnto the, let the be cast in to the fyre, and in to the pyrr, that they neuer rise vp agayne. A man full of wordes shal not prospere vpon earth: a malicious & wicked person shal be hunted away, and destroyed. ## The Proverbs of Salomon.

What this booke conteyneth.

- Chap. I. The wysdome of God calleth vnto the mouth of Salomon, exorteth vs, and gaue vs warnynge to eschue the wicked, whose godly cōuersation in worde and worke, and pnyshment also of the same, is here describer.
- Chap. II. How wysdome maye be gotten, and what profit cometh of it.
- Chap. III. He exorteth us to the feare of God, and to pacience, he commendeth wysdome, and requyeth us to cleue vnto the same.
- Chap. IV. A fatherly exortacion vnto wisdome with the profit therof, and how we ought to refrayne the members of our body fro euill.
- Chap. V. He exorteth vnto wysdome, and to warre of harlottes: he telleth what harme they dolewe therout, whē men medle with such teacheth men, louyngly to cleue vnto their wisedomes, and describeth the ende of them godly.
- Chap. VI. He warneth men to beware of flattery, exorteth the slouthfull to labour, and to the wisednesse of false tonges, and requyeth men to beware of aduocetry, because it is more perillous then theft or felony.
- Chap. VII. He exorteth vnto wysdome, sheweth the condicions of harlottes, and what hurt they do vnto such as encline to the prouocacions and desyres of the flesh.
- Chap. VIII. Wysdome calleth men sweetly vnto her, and telleth them what treasure and power she hath. A cōmendacion and prayse of wysdome, wherout euery mā is exorted to cleue vnto her.
- Chap. IX. Wysdome crieth vpon the ignorant, and promyseth them greates things. The foolish manner of a light woman.
- Chap. X. From this chapter forth vnto the XXXI, there are described many swete, lough, and wyse sentences, which teach men wysdome, and what profit cometh of it: Agayne, how men maye auoyde foolishnesse, and the hurt therof.
- Chap. XXXI. Wysdome warneth us to beware of euell women, and describeth the cōuersacion, maner, & behauioure of an honest married wyfe.

Salomons Proverbs.

These are the proverbes of Salomon the sonne of Dauid kynge of Israel: to lerne wysdome nurtoure, vnderstandinge, prudence, rightuousnesse, iudgment and equite. That the very babes might haue wyt, and that yonge men might haue knowlege and vnderstandinge. By hearinge, the wyse mā shal come by more wysdome: and by experience, he shal be more apte to vnderstande a parable, and the interpretation therof: the wordes of the wyse, and the darcke speaches of the same. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome. But fooles despise wysdome and nurtoure.

The first Chapter.

My sonne, heare thy fathers doctrine, and forsake not the lawe of y mother: for that shal bringe grace vnto thy heade, and shal be a cheyne aboute thy necke. My sonne, cōferte not vnto synners, yf they entyse the, and saye: come wyth us, let us laye wayte for bloude, and lurke preuely for the innocent wyth out a cause: let us swallowe the vp like y hell, let us deuoure the quicke and whole, as thou shalt go downe in to the pytt. So shal we fynde all maner of costely riches, and fyll oure houses wyth spoyles. Cast in thy lott amonge us, we shal haue all one purse.

My sonne, walke not thou with them, refrayne thy fore fro their wayes. For their fete rūne to euell, and are haistie to shed bloude. But in wayneis y net layed forth before the byrdes eyes. See they the selues laye wayte one for anothers bloude, and one of the wolde slaye another. These are the wayes of all such as be conetous, that one wolde rauyshe anothers life.

Wysdome crieth without, and putteth forth hir voyce in the stretes. She calleth before y congregation in y open gates, and sheweth hir wordes thorow y cite, sayenge: O ye childre, how longe wil ye lone childyshnesse: how longe wil y scorners delyte in scornynge, and y vnwyse be enemies vnto knowlege: O turne you vnto my correccion: lo, I wil expresse my mynde vnto you, and make you vnderstande my wordes. Seinge then that I haue called, and ye refused it: I haue stretched out my hande, and no mā regarded it, but all my counsell haue ye despysed, and set my correccion at naught. Therefore shal I also laugh in y destruccion, and mocke you, when y thinge that ye feare cometh vpon you: euen whē y thinge that ye be afrayed of, falleth in so-denly like a storme, and y misery like a tempest: yee whā trouble and heuynesse cometh vpon you. Then shal they call vpon me, but I wil not heare: they shal seke me early, but they shal not fynde me: And y because they hated knowlege, and receaved not y feare of y LORDE, but abhoyed my counsell, and despysed my correccion. Therefore shal they eate y frutes of their owne waye, and be fylled with their owne counsell: for y turnynge awaye of y vnwyse shal slaye the, and y prosperite of fooles shal be their owne destruccion. But who so hartneth vnto me, shal dwell safely, and haue ynough without eny feare of euell.

The II. Chapter.

My sonne, yf thou wilt receaue my wordes, and kepe my cōmaundmentes by the, that thine eare maye herken vnto wysdome, applie thine herte then to vnderstandinge. For yf thou criest after wysdome, and callest for knowlege: yf thou sekest after her as after money, and dyggest for her as for treasure: The shal theu vnderstande y feare of the LORDE, and fynde y knowlege of God. For it is the LORDE that geneth wysdome, out of his mouth cometh knowlege and vnderstandinge. He preserveth y welfare of the rightuous, and defendeth them y walke innocently: he keepeth them in y right path, and preserveth y waye of his sayntes. Then shalt thou vnderstande rightuousnesse, iudgment and equite, yee and euery good path. centes shal remayne in it: but the vngodly shal be robed out of it: and the wicked doers shal be taken out of it.

The III. Chapter.

21 Wisdomme, forget not my lawe, but se thyne hert kepe my comaundemētes. For they shal prologe & dayes & yeares of thy lyfe, & brynge & peace. Let mercy & faithfulness neuer go from thee: bynde the about thy necke, & wyte them in the tables of thine herte. So shalt thou fynde fauour and good vnderstandinge in the sight of God and men. Put thy trust in the LORD with all thine herte, and leane not vnto thine owne vnderstandinge. In all thy wayes haue respecte vnto him, and he shal ordie thy goynges. Be not wyse in thine owne conceite, but feare the LORD and departe from euill: so shal thy navel be whole, and thy bones stronge.

B Honour the LORD with substance, & with firstlinges of all thine increase: so shal thy barnes be fylled with plenteousnesse, and thy presses shal flowe ouer with swete wyne. My sonne, despise not the chastenynge of the LORD, nether saynte when thou art rebuked of him. For who the LORD loueth, him he chasteneth: and yet delyteth in him euen as a father in his owne sonne. Well is him that fyndeth wysdome, & opeyneth vnderstandinge, for the gettinge of it is better then eny marchaundise of syluer, & the profit of it is better then golde. Wysdome is more worth then the precious stones, & all thynges thou canst desyre, are not to be compared vnto her. Vpon hir right hande is longe life, & vpon hir left hande is riches & hono.

Gen. a. b Hir wayes are pleasaunt wayes, and all hir pathes are peaceable. She is a tre of life to them that laye holde vpon her, and blessed are they that kepe her fast.

C With wysdome hath the LORD layed the foundacion of the earth, & thorow vnderstandinge hath he stablished the heauens. Thorow his wysdome & depthes brake vp, & the cloudes droppe downe the dew. My sonne, let not these thynges departe from thyne eyes, but kepe my lawe and my counsell: so shal it be life vnto thy soule, & grace vnto thy mouth.

Pro. 1. c Then shalt thou walke safely in thy waye, & thy fete shal not stumbe. If thou sleepest, thou shalt not be a frayd, but shalt take thy rest & sleepest sweetly. Thou needest not to be a frayd of eny sodane feare, nether for the violent rushing in of the vngodly, when it cometh.

The iiij. Chap.

For the LORD shal be besyde the, & kepe thy fete & thou be not taken. Refuse not to do good vnto him that shalde haue it, so longe as thine hande is able to do it. Say thou vnto thy neighbour: go thy waye & come agayne, tomorrow wil I geue thee: where as thou hast now to geue him. Intende no hurte vnto thy neighbour, seynge he hopeth to dwell in rest by the. Stryme not lightly wth eny man, where as he hath done thee no harme. Solowe not a wicked man, and chuse none of his wayes: for the LORD abhouneth the frowarde, but his secrete is amonge the righteous. The curse of the LORD is in the house of the vngodly, but he blesseth the dwellings of the righteous. As for the scomefull, he shal laugh at to scorne, but he shal geue grace vnto the lowly. The wyse shal haue hono in possession, but shame is the promociō that foolis shal haue.

The III. Chap.

Beware (O ye children) the fatherly exortaciō, & take good hede, that ye maye lerne wysdome. See I shal geue you a good rewarde, yf ye wil not forsake my lawe. For when I myself was my fathers deare sonne, and tenderly beloued of my mother, he taught me also, sayenge: let thine herte receaue my wordes, kepe my comaundmentes, and then shalt lyue.

Get the wysdome, get the vnderstandinge, forget not thy wordes of my mouth, & shal kepe not from them. Forsake her not, and she shal preserue thee: loue her, and she shal kepe thee. The chiefe poynte of wysdome is, that thou be wyslynge to opeyne the vnderstandinge. Make moch of her, and she shal promote thee: & yf thou embracest her, she shal brynge thee vnto hono.

She shal make thee a gracious heate, and garnish thee with the crowne of glory. Heare my sonne, and receaue my wordes, that thy yeares of thy life maye be many. I wil shewe thee the waye of wysdome, and lede thee in the right pathes. So that yf thou goest therin, there shal no straytnesse hynder thee: and when thou runnest, thou shalt not fall. Take fast holde of doctryne, let her not go: kepe her, for she is thy life.

Come not in the path of the vngodly, and walke not in the waye of the wicked. Eschue it, & go not therin: departe ashyd, & passe ouer by it. For they can not sleepe excepte they haue first done some myschance.

Salomons Prouerbes.

nether take they eny rest, excepte they haue first done some harme. For they eate the bred of wickednesse, and drinke the wyne of robbery. The path of the righteous shyneth as the light, and is euer brighte & brighte vnto the perfecte daye. But the waye of the vngodly is as the darcknesse, wherein me fall, or they be awarre.

My sonne, marcke my wordes, and enclynethine eare vnto my saynges. Let them not departe from thine eyes, kepe them euen in the myddest of thine herte. For they are life vnto all those that finde the, and health vnto all their bodies. Kepe thine hert with all diligence, for there vpon hangeth life. Put awaye from thee a frowarde mouth, and let the lippes of slaunder be farre from thee. Let thine eyes beholde the thynges that is right, & let thine eye lyddes lōke straight before thee. Pōdier the path of thy fete, so shal all thy wayes be sure. Turne not asyde, nether to the right hande ner to the lefte, but witholdeth thy fete from euill.

The V. Chapter.

Wisdomme, geue hede vnto my wysdome, & bowe thine eare vnto my prouidence: yf thou mayest regarde good counsell, and that thy lippes maye kepe nūrtoure.

For the lippes of an harlot are a droppinge honny combe, and hir throte is softer then oyle. But at last she is as bitter as worme, and as sharpe as a two edged swerde. Hir fete go downe vnto death, and hir stepes pearse thorow vnto hell. She regardeth not the path of life, so vnstedfast are hir wayes, that thou canst not knowe them. Heare me therefore (O my sonne) and departe not fro the wordes of my mouth. Kepe thy waye farre from her, and come not nye thy doers of hir house. That thou geue not thine hono vnto another, and thy yeares to the cruell. That other men be not fylled with thy goodes, & that thy labours come not in a straunge house. See that thou mourne not at the last (when thou hast spent thy body and goodes) and then saye: Alas, why hated I nūrtoure: why dyd my hert despise correccion? Wherefore was not I obedient vnto the voyce of my teachers, & hearkened not vnto them that informed me? I am come almost in to all my fortune, in the myddest of the multitude and congregacion. Drinke of the water of thine owne well, and of the ryuers that runne out of thine owne sprynges. Let thy welles flowe out a brode, that there maye be ryuers of water in the stretes. But let them be only thine owne, & not straungers with thee.

The vi. Chap. Po. xxxix.

Let thy well be blessed, and be glad with the wife of thy youth. Louynge is the hynde, and frendly is the Roo: let her brestes alwaye satisfie thee, and holde the euer content with hir loue. My sonne, why wilt thou haue pleasure in an harlot, and embrace the bosome of another woman? For every mans wayes are open in the sight of the LORD, and he pōdereth all their goynges. The wickednesse of the vngodly shal catch himself, and with the snares of his owne synnes shal he be trapped. Because he wolde not be reformed, he shal dye: and for his greare foolishnesse he shal be destroyed.

The VI. Chapter.

Wisdomme, yf thou be suertie for thy neighbour, thou hast fastened thine hōde wth another mā: yee thou art boūde with thine owne wordes, and taken wth thine owne speach. Therefore (my sonne) do this, discharge thy self, for thou art come in to thy neighbours dainger. Go thy waye then soone, & intreate thy neighbour: let not thyne eyes sleepe, nether thine eye lyddes slomber. Saue thy self as a doo fro thy honde, & as a byrde fro the hōde of the fouler. Go to the Lemmet (thou slogarde) cōsidie hir wayes, & lerne to be wyse.

She hath no gyde, no teacher, no leder: yet in the sommer she prouideth hir meate, & gathereth hir fode together in the harvest. How longe wilt thou sleepe, thou slogish mā? Whā wilt thou aryse out of thy slepe? See slepe on still a litle, slōber a litle, foldethine handes together yet a litle, that thou mayest siepe: so shal pouerte come vnto thee as one yf tranayleth by the waye, & necessite like a wapened man. A disseimlynge person, a wicked man goeth with a frowarde mouth: he wyndeth with his eyes, he tokeneth wth his fete, he poynteth wth his fyngers, he is euer ymagyninge myschance & frowardnesse in his hert, & causeth discorde. Therefore shal his destrucciō come hastily vnto him, suddenly shal he be all to broken, and not be healed.

There be sūre thynges, which the LORD hateth, & the seuenth he utterly abhouneth: A proude lōke, a dysseimlynge tonge, hādes that shed innocent bloude, an herte yf goeth aboute wth wicked ymaginaciōs, fete that be swift in remynge to do myschance, a false wytnesse yf bringeth vp lyes, & soch one as soweth discorde amonge brethien. My sonne, kepe thy fathers comaundemētes, & forsake not thy lawe of thy mother. Put the vntogether in thine herte, and bynde the aboute thy necke. That they maye lede thee where thou goest, preserue thee when thou art aslepe, & yf when thou awakest, thou mayest take of the (For the commandment is a lanterne, and the law a light: yee chaffenyng & nurture is y waye of life) that they maye kepe the fro the enell woman, & from the flateringe tonge of the harlot: y thou lust not after her beuty in thine herte, & lest thou be take w hir saye lo kes. An harlot wil make a mā to begg his bried, but a married woman wil hunt for y pie cious life. Maye a man take fyre in his be some, and his clothes not be brient? Or can one go vpon hote coales, and his fete not be hurte? Euen so, who so euer goeth into his neighbours wife, and toucheth her, can not be vngiltie. Men do not utterly despyse a these, that stealeth to satiffie his soule, when he is hungerie: but yf he maye be gotten, he restoreth agayne seuen tymes as much, or els he maketh recompence with all the good of his house. But who so comitteth aduoutrie with a womā, he is a foole, and bryngeth his life to destruccion. He getteth him self also shame & dishonour, soch as shal neuer be put out. For the gelousy & wiath of the mā will not be treated, no though thou woldest ofie him greate giftes to make amendes, he will not receaue them.

The VII. Chapter.

A sonne, kepe my wordes, & laye vp my cōmandemētes by the. Acpe my cōmandemētes & my lawe, cūe as the aple of thine eye, & thou shalt lyue. Bynde them vpon thy fyngers, & wryte the in the table of thine hert. Saye vnto wys dome: thou art my sister, and call vnderston dinge thy kynswoman: that she maye kepe y fro y straunge womā, & fro y harlot which ge ueth swete wordes. For out of the wyndowe of my house I loked thow the treclies, & be helde the simple people: & amonge other yon ge folkes I spyed one yonge foole goinge ouer the stretes, by the corner in the waye to ward the harlottes house in the twylight of of the euenyng, when it begane now to be night and darcke. And beholde, there mett him a womā in an harlottes apparell (a dis ceatfull, waton & an vnstedfast womā: who se fete conde not abyde in y house, now is she without, now i y stretes, & lurketh i euery cor ner) she caught y yonge mā, & kyssed him & was not ashamed, saye ge: I had a poynt to paye, & this daye I perfourme it. Therfore came I forth to mete the, that I might see thy face, and so I haue founde the. I haue deckt my bed with coueringes & clothes of Egipte. My bed haue I made to smell of Myrrour, Aloes and Cynamom. Come, let vs lye toge ther, & take oure pleasure till it be dayeligh. For the good man is not at home, he is gone farre of. He hath taken the bagg of money with him, who can tell whē he cometh home? Thus with many swete wordes she ouercame him, and with hir flateringe lip pes she wanne him.

Immediatly he foloweth her, as it were an oxe led to the slaughter (and like as it were to the stockes, where fooles are punysshed) so longe till she hath wounded his lyuer with hir darte: like as yf a byrde haisted to the snare, not knowinge that the parell of his life ly eth there vpo. Heare me now therfore (om y sonne) and marcke the wordes of my mouth. Let not thine herte wandre in hir wayes, & be not thou disceaued in hir pathes. In many one hath she wounded and cast downe, yee many a stronge mā hath she slayne. Hir house is the waye vnto hell, where men go downe to the chambers of death.

The VIII. Chapter.

Doth not wysdome crie: doth not vnderstondinge put forth hir voyce? Stonde she not in the hye place in the stretes & wayes? doth she not crie before the whole cite, & in the gates where men go out & in? It is you, o ye men (sayeth she) whom I call. Vnto you (o ye childre of men) lift I vp my voyce. Take hede vnto know ledge o ye ignorant, be wyse in herte o ye fooles. Geue eare, for I wil speake of greate mat ters, & open my lippes to tell thinges that be right. For my throte shal be talkyng of f truethe, & my lippes abhorre vngodlynesse. All the wordes of my mouth are righteous, there is no frowardnesse ner falsede therein. They are all playne to soch as wil vnderstande, & right to the that fynde knowlege. Re ceauue my doctryne therfore and not syluer, & knowlege more then fyne golde. For wysdome is more worth then precious stones, yee all the thinges that thou cast desyre, are not to be compared vnto it.

I wysdome haue my dwellyng w know ledge, and prudent counsell is myne owne. With me is the feare of the LORDE, and y eschuyng of euell. As for pryde, disdain, an enell waye, & a mouth that speaketh wicked thiges, I utterly abhorre the. I can geue counsell, and be a gyde: I haue vnderstondinge, I haue strength.

Thow me, kynges reigne: thow me, pri ces make iust lawes. Thow me, lordes beate rule, and all iudges of y earth execute iudg ment. I am louyng vnto those that loue me, and they that seeke me early, shal fynde me.

Riches & honoure are to me, yee excellent goodes & rightuousnes. My frute is bet ter the golde & precious stone, & myne encrea semore worth then fyne syluer. I walke in y waye of rightuousnes, & in the strete of iudg ment. That I maye sende prosperite to those that loue me, & to encrease their treasure.

The LORDE himself had me in possessiō in the begynnynge of his wayes, or euer he begane his workes afore tyme. I haue bene ordered fro euerlastige, & fro y begynnynge or euer the earth was made. When I was borne, there were nether depthes ner springes of water. Before the foundations of y mountaynes were layed, yee before all hilles was I borne. The earth and all that is vpon the earth was not yet made, no not the grounde it self. For when he made the hea uens, I was present: whā he set the depthes in ordie: whan he hanged the cloudes abo ue: whan he fastened the sprynges of the de pe: whan he shutt the see within certayne boundes, that y waters shulde not go ouer their marches. When he layed the founda tions of the earth, I was with him, ordyng all thinges, delytyng daylie & reioysyng all waye before him. As for the rounde cōpase of his worlde, I make it ioyfull, for my dely te is to be amōge the childre of men.

Therfore harken vnto me (o ye childre) for blessed are they that kepe my wayes.

O geue eare vnto nurture, be wyse, and refuse it not. Blessed is y man that heareth me, watchyng daylie at my gates, & geuyng attendaunce at the postes of my dores.

For who so fyndeth me, fyndeth life, and shal optayne fauoure of the LORDE. But who so offendeth agaynst me, hurteth his owne soule. All they that hate me, are the louers of death.

The IX. Chapter.

Wysdome hath buylded herself an house, and hewen out seven piers: she hath slaughterd, poured out hir wyne, and prepared hir table. She hath sent forth hir maydens to crye vpo the hyest place of the cite: Who so is ignorant, let him come hither. And to the vnwise she sayde: O come on youre waye, eate my bried, and drynke my wyne, which I haue poured out for you. For sake ignorance, and ye shal lyue: and se that ye go in the waye of vnderstondinge.

Who so reproveth a scomefull personne, getteth him self dishonoure: and he that rebuketh the vngodly, stayneth himself.

Reproue not a scome, lest he owe the e uell wil: but rebuke a wyse man, and he wil louethe. Geue a discrete man but an occa sion, & he wil be the wysest teach a rightuous man, and he wil increase. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome, & the knowlege of holy thinges is vnderston dinge. For thow me y dayes shal be pro longed, and the yeares of thy life shal be ma ny. If thou be wyse, y wysdome shal do y selfe good: but yf thou thynkest scome ther of, it shal be thine owne harme. A foolish restless woman, full of wordes, and soch one as hath no knowlege, syteth in the dores of hir house vpo a stole above in the cite, to call soch as go by and walke straight in their wayes. Who so is ignorant (sayeth she) let him come hither, and to the vnwise she sayeth: stollen waters are swete, & the bried that is preuely eaten, hath a good taist.

But they cōsider not that death is there, and that hir gastes go downe to hell.

The X. Chapter.

These are prouerbes of Salomon.

Wyse some maketh a glad father, but an vnderstandinge sonne is the heynesse of his mother. Treasures that are wic kedly gotten, profit nothinge, but rightuous nesse delyuereth from death. The LORDE wil not let the soule of the rightuous suffre hōger, but he putteth y vngodly fro his de syre. An ydle hande maketh poore, but a quyk laboringe hande maketh riche.

Who so gathereth in Semmer, is wyse: but he that is slogish in harvest, bringeth himself to confucion. Louyng and fauor able is the face of the rightuous, but y fore heade of the vngodly is past shame, and pre sumptuous. The memoriall of the iust shal haue a good repoyte, but the name of the vngodly shal stynte. A wyse man wil recea ue warnyng, but a foole wil sooner be shyt ten in the face. He that leadech an inno cent life, walketh surely: but who so goeth a wōge waye, shal be knowne. He y wynteth with his eye, wil do some harme: but he that hath a foolish mouth, shal be beaten. The mouth of a rightuous man is a well of life, but y mouth of the vngodly is past shame, & presumptuous. Euell will stereth vp strife, but loue conereth y multitude of synnes.

In y lippes of him y hath vnderstondinge a mā shal fynde wysdome, but y rebde bels geth to y backe of y foolish. Wyse mā laye vpon knowlege, but y mouth of y foolish is nye destruccio. The rich mā goodes are his strō ge holde, but pouerte oppresseth the poore.

The righteous labourer to do good, but the vngodly useth his increase vnto synne.

E To take hede vnto y chastenynge of nurture, is y waye of life: but he that refuseth to be reformed, goeth wroge. Dissemblynge lippes kepe hatred secretly, and he that speaketh eny slander, is a foole. Where moch bablinge is, there must nedes be offence: he that refrayneth his lippes, is wysst of all. An innocent tonge is a noble treasure, but the herte of the vngodly is nothinge worth. The lippes of the righteous fede a whole multitude, but fooles shal dye in their owne foly. The blessinge of the LORDE maketh rich me, as for carefull trauaile, it doth nothinge therto. A foole doth wickedly z maketh but a spoote of it: neuertheles it is wysdome for a man to beware of sich.

Job. 41. c
Eccl. 11.
Sal. 126. a
Lam. 5. c. d

D The thinge that the vngodly are afrayed of, shal come vpon them, but the righteous shal haue their desyre. The vngodly is like a tempest that passeth ouer z is nomore sene, but the righteous remayneth sure for euer. As vynerger is to the teth, and as smoke is vnto y eyes, enē so is a slogish personne to them that sende him forth. The feare of y LORDE maketh a longe life, but y yeares of y vngodly shal be shortened. The pacient abydinge of the righteous shalbe turned to gladnesse, but the hope of the vngodly shal perish. The waye of the LORDE geneth a coraige vnto y godly, but it is a feare for wicked doers. The righteous shal neuer be ouerthrowne, but y vngodly shal not remayne in the londe. The mouth of the iust wilbe talkynge of wysdome, but the tonge of the frowarde shal perish. The lippes of the righteous are occupied in acceptable thinges, but the mouth of the vngodly taketh them to the worst.

Isa. 124. a
Sal. 36. d

The XI. Chapter.

A False balauce is an abhominacion vnto the LORDE, but a true weight pleaseth him. Where pryde is, there is shame also and confucion: but where as is lowlynes, there is wysdome. The innocent dealynge of the iust shal lede them, but the vnfaithfulnesse of the despyers shalbe their owne destruccion. Riches helpe not in the daye of vengeance, but righteousnesse deliuereth fro death. The righteousnesse of y innocent ordreth his waye, but the vngodly shal fall in his owne wickednesse. The righteousness of the iust shal deliuer them, but the despyers shalbe taken in their owne vngodlynesse. When an vngodly man dyeth,

Ro. 16. b
p. b. d

rou. 10. a

his hope is gone, the confidence of riches shal perish. The righteous shalbe deliuered out of trouble, z the vngodly shal come in his steade. Thow y mouth of y dyssembler is his neighbour destroyed, but thow knowledge shal the iust be deliuered. When is goeth well with the righteous, the cite is mery: and when the vngodly perish, there is gladnesse. When the iust are in wealth, the cite prospereth: but when the vngodly haue the rule, it decayeth. A foole bryngeth vp a slander of his neighbour, but a wyse man wil kepe it secrete. A dyssemblynge person wil discover preuy thinges, but he that is of a faithfull hert, wil kepe counsell. Where no good counsell is there the people decaye: but where as are many that can geue counsell, there is wealth. He that is suertie for a straunger, hurteyth himself: but he that medleth not with suertieshippe, is sure. A gracious woman manteyneth honestie, as for the mightie, they manteyne riches. He y hath a gentle liberall stomacke, is mercifull: but who so hurteyth his neghbo, is a tyrant.

The labour of the vngodly prospereth not, but he that soweth righteousness, shal receaue a sure rewarde. Like as righteousness bryngeth life, enē so to cleue vnto euell, bryngeth death. The LORDE abhorreth a fayned hert, but he hath pleasure in them that are vndefyled. It shal not helpe y wicked, though they laye all their bondes together, but the seide of the righteous shalbe preferred. A fayre woman without discrete manners, is like a ryng of golde in a swynes snoute. The iust labour for peace and tranquylite, but the vngodly for disquietnesse.

Some man geueth out his goodes, and is the richer, but y nygarde (hauynge ynough) wil departe from nothinge, and yet is euer in pouerte. He that is lyberall in genynge, shal haue plenty: and he that watereth, shal be watered also himself. Who so hoordeth vp his come, shalbe cursed amonge the people: but blessinge shal light vpon his heade that selleth it. He that labourerth for honesty syndeth his desyre: but who so seeketh after myschefe, it shal happē vnto him. He that trusteth in his riches, shal haue a fall, but y righteous shal flourish as the grene leaf.

Who so maketh disquietnesse in his owne house, he shal haue wynde for his heretage, and the foole shal be seruant to the wyse.

The frute of the righteous is as the tre of life, a wyse man also wyynneth mens soules. If y righteous be recōpēsed vpon earth, how moch more the vngodly z y synners

Who so loueth wysdome, wil be content to be reformed: but he that hath teth to be reformed, is a foole. A good man is acceptable vnto the LORDE, but y wicked wyl be condempne. A man can not endure in vngodlynesse, but y rote of y righteous shal not be moued. A stedfast woman is a crowne vnto hir husbond: but she that behaueth herself vnonestly, is a corruption in his bones. The thoughtes of y righteous are right, but the ymaginacion of the vngodly are disceatfull. The talkynge of the vngodly is, how they maye laye waye for bloude, but the mouth of y righteous wil deliuer them. O euer thou canst turne the aboute, the vngodly shal be ouerthrowne, but the house of the righteous shal stōde. A man shalbe commended for his wysdome, but a foole shal be despyed. A simple man which labourerth and workerth, is better the one that is gorgeous and wanteth bried. A righteous man regardeth the life of his cattell, but the vngodly haue cruell hertes.

He that tilleth his lōde, shal haue plenteousnesse of bried: but he y foloweth ydolnes, is a very foo'e. The desyre of y vngodly hunterth after myschefe, but the rote of the righteous bryngeth forth frute. The wicked falleth in to the snare thow y malyce of his owne mouth, but the iust shal escape out of parell. Euer man shal enioye good acoringe to the innocency of his mouth, and after the workes of his hādes shal he be rewarded. Loke what a foole taketh in honde, he thinketh it well done: but he that is wyse, wyl be couceled. A foole vttereth his wrath in all the haist, but a discrete man forgoeth wronge. A iust man will tell the truth, z sheweth the thinge y is right: but a false wytnesse disceaueth. A slanderous personne picketh like a swerde, but a wyse mans tonge is wholsome. A true mouth is euer content, but a dyssemblynge tōge is soone chaunged. They that ymagin euell in their mynde, wil disceane: but the counselors of peace shal haue ioye folowynge the. There shal no mysfortune happen vnto the iust, but the vngodly shal be fylled with misery. The LORDE abhorreth disceatfull lippes, but they that labour for treuth, please him. He that hath vnderstōdinge, can hyde his wysdome: but an vndiscrete herte telleth out his foolishnesse. A diligēt hande shal beare rule, but the ydle shal be vnder tribute. Henry nessē discourageth y herte of man, but a good word maketh it glad agayne. The righteous is liberall vnto his neighbour, but the waye of the vngodly wil disceane them selues. A disceatfull man shal synde no vantage, but he that is content wth that he hath, is more worth the golde. In the waye of righteousness there is life, as for eny other waye, it is the path vnto death.

The XIII. Chapter.

A Wyse sonne wyl receaue his fathers warnynge, but he y is scornfull, wyl not heare when he is reformed. A good mā shal enioye the frute of his mouth, but he that hath a frowarde mynde, shalbe spoyled. He that kepeth his mouth, kepeth his life: but who so speaketh vnaduyced, synneth harme. The slogarde wolde sayne haue, and can not get his desyre: but the soule of the diligent shal haue plenty. A righteous man abheth lyes, but the vngodly shameth both other and himself. Righteousnesse kepeth the innocēt in the waye, but vngodlynesse shal ouerthrowe the synner.

Some men are riche, though they haue nothinge: agayne, some mē are poore hauynge greate riches. With goodes euer man deliuereth his life, and the poore wyl not be reformed. The light of the righteous maketh ioyfull, but the candle of the vngodly shal be put out. Amonge the proude there is euer strife, but amonge those that do all thinges with aduysment, there is wysdome. Hastely gattē goodes are soone spent, but they that be gathered together with the hande, shal increase. Longe tarienge for a thinge that is dyfferred, geneth y herte: but when the desyre cometh, it is a tre of life. Who so despyeth the worde, destroyeth himself: but he that feareth the cōmaundement, shal haue peace. The lawe is a wel of life vnto the wyse, that it maye kepe him from the snares of death. Good vnderstōdinge geneth fauoure, but harde is the waye of the despyers. A wyse man doth all thinges with discrecion, but a foole wil declare his foly. An vngodly messenger bryngeth myschefe, but a faithfull embassitoure is wholsome. He that thinketh scone to be reformed, cometh to pouerte and shame: but who so receaueth correccion, shal come to honoure. When a desyre is brought to passe, it deliuereth the soule: but fooles abhorre him that eschueth euell. He that goeth in the company of wyse men, shal be wyse: but who so is a cōpany of fooles, shal be hurte. Myschese foloweth vpon synners, but the righteous shal haue a good reward. Which their childers childre shal haue in possessiō, for the riches of the synner is layed vp for y inst. There is plenteousnesse of fode in the felde of the poore, & shalbe increased out of measure. He that spareth the rodde, hateth his sonne: but who so loueth him, hol deth him euer in nurtoure. The righteous eateth, and is satisfied, but y bely of the vngodly hath neuer ynough.

The XIII. Chapter.

Wyse womā vpholdeth hir house, but a foolish wife plucketh it downe.

Who so feareth the LORDE, walketh in the right path: & regardeth not him that abhorreth the wayes of the LORDE. In the mouth of the foolish is the boostinge of lordshipe, but y lippes of y wyse wilbe warre of soch. Where no oren are, there the crybb is emptie: but where the oren laboure, there is moch frute. A faithfull wytnesse wyl not dyssemble, but a false recorde wil make a lye.

A scornfull body seth wyssdome, & syn deth it not: but knowlege is easy to come by, vnto him that wil vnderstonde. Se y thou medle not with a foole, & do as though thou haddest no knowlege. The wyssdome of him that hath vnderfoundinge is, to take he de vnto his waye, but the foolishnesse of the vnwyse disceaueth. Fooles make but a spor te of synne, but there is fauourable loue amo ge the righteous. The herte of him that hath vnderfoundinge wil nether dispare for eny sorow, ner beto presumptuous for eny so daine ioye.

The houses of the vngodly shalbe ouer throwne, but the tabernacles of y righteous shal flouische. There is a waye, which some men thinke to be right, but the ende therof le deth vnto death. The herte is sorowfull e uen in laughter, and the ende of myrth is he ryne. An vnfaithfull personne shal be fylled with his owne wayes, but a good mā wyl bewarre of soch. An ignorant body beleneth all thinges, but who so hath vnder foundinge, loketh well to his goinges. A wyse man, feareth, and departeth from euell, but a foole goeth on presumptuously. An unpacient man handeleth foolishly, but he that is well aduysed, doth other wayes.

The euell shal bowe them selues before y

good, and the vngodly shal wayte at the res of the righteous. The poore is ham enen of his owne neighbours, but the rich hath many frendes. Who so despyseth his neighbo, doth amysse: but blessed is he that hath pyte of the poore. They that yn gin wickednes, shalbe disapoynted: but they that muse vpo good thinges, vnto soch shal happen mercy and faithfulness. Dilige labo bryngeth riches, but where many vayne wordes are, truly there is scarcenesse.

Riches are an ornament vnto the wyse, but the ignorance of fooles is very foolish nes. A faithfull wytnesse deliuereth sh les, but a liar dysceaueth them. The feare of the LORDE is a strōge holde, for vnto him he wyl be a sure defence. The feare of the LORDE is a well of life, to auoyde the snare of death. The increase and prosperite of the comons is the kynges honoure, but the decaye of the people is the confusio of the prynce. Pacience is a token of wisdom, but wrath and haistie displeasure is a token of foolishnesse. A merry herte is the life of the body, but rancoure consumeth away the bones. He that doth a poore man wyl ge, blasphemeth his maker: but who so hath pitie of the poore, doth honoure vnto God.

The vngodly is afrayed of euery parr, but the righteous hath a good hope eue in death. Wyssdome resteth in the herte of him that hath vnderfoundinge, and he wyl teach them that are vnlearned. Righteous nes setteth vp the people, but wickednesse bryngeth folke to destruccion. A discre seruauit is a pleasure vnto y kyng, but on y is not honest, prouoketh him vnto wrath.

The XV. Chapter.

Softe aswere putteth downe displea sure, but frowarde wordes prouoketh vnto anger. A wyse tonge communic deth knowlege, a foolish mouth blabbeth out nothinge but foolishnesse. The eyes of the LORDE loke in every place, both vpon y good and badd. A wholsome tonge is a tre of life, but he that abuseth it, hath a baw ken mynde. A foole despyseth his fathers correccion, but he y taketh hede whan he is reprovied, shal haue y more vnderfoundinge.

In the house of the righteous are grea te riches, but in the increase of the vngodly there is mysorde. A wyse mouth poureth out knowlege, but y herte of the foolish doth not so. The LORDE abhorreth y sacrifice of the vngodly, but the prayer of the righteous is acceptable vnto him. The waye of the vngodly is an abhominaciō of LORDE, but who so foloweth righteous him he loneth.

He that forsaketh y right strete, shalbe sore punysshed: & who so hateth correccion, falleth in to death. The sell w hir payne is knowne vnto the LORDE, how moch more then the hertes of men.

A scornfull body loneth not one y rebu ter him, nether wil he come amonge y wyse. A merry herte maketh a chearfull counte nance, but an vnquyet mynde maketh it he vy. A wyse herte wil seke after knowlege, but y mouth of fooles medleth with foolish nes. All the dayes of the poore are miser able, but a quyet herte is as a cōtynmall fe off. Better is a litle with the feare of the LORDE then greatesse treasure, for they are not without sorowe. Better is a meace of po tage with loue, then a fat oxe w euell will.

An angrie man stereth vp strife, but he y is pacient stillerth discorde. The waye of y slouthfull is full of thornes, but y strete of the righteous is well censed. A wyse son ne maketh a glad father, but an vndiscrete body shameth his mother. A foole reioy sath in foolish thinges, but a wyse man lo teth well to his owne goinges. Vnady so thoughtes shal come to naught, but whe as are men y can geue counsell, there is sedfastnesse. O how ioyfull a thinge is it, a man to geue a conuenient answer. O how pleasaunt is a worde spoken in due sea son. The waye of life ledeth vnto heauē, a man shulde bewarre of hell beneth.

The LORDE wyl breake downe y house of y proude, but he shal make fast y borders of y wyddome. The LORDE abhorreth y ymagi nations of y wicked, but pure wordes are pleasaunt vnto him. The couetous man wntereth vp his owne house, but who so ha teth rewardes, shal lye. A righteous mā setteth in his mynde how to do good, but y mynde of the vngodly ymagineth, how he maye do harme. The LORDE is farre from the vngodly, but he heareth y prayer of the righteous. Like as y clearnesse of y eyes wyseth y herte, so doth a good name fede y bones. The eare y harkeneth vnto whol some warnynge, and enclyneth therto, shal well amonge y wyse. He that refuseth to be reformed, despyseth his owne soule: but he that submyteth himself to correccion, is wyse.

The XVI. Chapter.

He feare of y LORDE is y right scye ce of wyssdome, and lowlynes goeth before honō. A man maye well pur sea thinge in his harte, but y answer of

y tonge cometh of y LORDE. A mā thin keth all his waies to be cleue, but it is y LOR DE y fashioneth y myndes. Commytte thy woikes vnto y LORDE, and loke what thou deuysesh, it shal prospere. The LORDE doth all thinges for his owne sake, yee & when he kepeth y vngodly for y daye of wrath.

The LORDE abhorreth all presumptuous & proude hertes, theremaye nether strength ner power escape. With louynge mercy & faithfulness synnes be forgiven, and who so feareth y LORDE eschueth euell. When a mans wayes please y LORDE, he maketh his very enemies to be his frendes. Better is it to haue a litle thinge w righteousness, the greatesse rentes wrongeously gotten. A mā deuyseth a waye in his herte, but it is y LOR DE y ordreth his goinges. When y prophe cy is in y lippes of y kyng, his mouth shal not go wioge in iudgment. A true measu re & a true balasce are y LORDES, he maketh all weightes. It is a greatesse abhominaciō when kynges are wycked, for a kynges seate shulde be holden vpon righteousness.

Righteous lippes are pleasaunt vnto kyng es, and they loue him y speaketh y truethe.

The kynges displeasure is a messaunger of death, but a wyse man wyl pacify him.

The cherefull countenance of y kyng is life, and his louynge fauōr is as the euerynge dewe. To haue wyssdome in possession is better then golde, and to get vnderfoundinge, is more worth then syluer. The path of y righteous eschueth euell, & who so loketh well to his wayes, kepeth his owne soule.

Presumptuousnes goeth before destru cion, and after a proude stomake there fol loweth a fall. Better it is to be of humble mynde w the lowly, then to deuoyde y spoyle w y proude. He y handleth a matter wyse ly, opteyneth good: & blessed is he, y putteth his trust in y LORDE. Who so hath a wy se vnderfoundinge, is called to counsell: but he y can speake sayre, getteth more riches. Vnderfoundinge is a well of life vnto him y hath it, as for y chastenynge of fooles, it is but foolishnesse. The herte of the wyse enfourmeth his mouth, and amendeth y doe tryne in his lippes.

Sayre wordes are an hony combe, a refres hinge of y mynde, & health of y bones.

There is a waye y men thinke to be right, but the ende therof leadeh vnto death. A troublous soule disquyeteth hir selfe, for hir owne mouth hath brought her therto. An vngodly personne stereth vp euell, and in his lippes he is as an whore burnynge fyre.

A pacient man is better then one that is strōge: and he that can rule himselfe, is more worth then he that wyymeth a cite. The lottes are cast in to the lappe, but their fall stōdeth in the LORDE.

fall. Who so hath a frowarde herte, openeth no good: and he that hath an ouerthowen tonge, shal fall in to myschefe. An vngodly body bryngeth himselfe in to sorowe, and a father of a foole can haue no ioye. A man herte maketh a lusty age, but a sorrowfull de dryeth vp & benes. The vngodly talaketh giftes out of the bosome, to waiste the waye of iudgment. Wysdome shyneth in the face of him that hath vnderstōdinge, but the eyes of the foolles wandreth thorow out all lōdes. A discrete sonne is a grese vnto his father, and heuynesse vnto his mother that bare him. A punnysh & innocent, and to synne & prynces geue true iudgment, are both euell. He is wise and discrete, & tempereth his wordes: and he is a mā of vnderstōdinge, & maketh moche of his spiete. See a very foole (when he blyndeth his tonge) is counted wyse, and to vnderstōdinge, when he shattereth his lippes.

The XVIII. Chapter.

Who so hath pleasure to sowe dyscord, picketh a quarell in euery thinge. A foole hath no delyte in vnderstōdinge, but only in those thinges wherewith he reioyseth. Where vngodlynes is, there is also dysdayne: & so there foloweth shame & dyschōr. The wordes of a mā are like depe waters, and the well of wysdome is like a full streame. It is not good to regarde & personne of the vngodly, as to paye backe & righteous in iudgment. A foole is pes are ever brawlinge, and his mouth vncketh vnto batayll. A foole's mouth is his owne destruction, and his lippes are a snare for his owne soule. The wordes of a slanderer are very woundes, and go thorow vnto the ynnest partes of the body. Who so is sleuthfull and slacke in his labō, is a brother of him that is a waister. The name of the LORDE is a stronge castell, & righteous flyeth vnto it, and shal be saved. But a rich mā's good are his stronge holde, yee he taketh them for an hie wall to ride aboute him. A frend cometh desiruous, and honō after leuynesse: & he that geueth sentence in a matter before he heare it, is a foole, and worthy to be condemned. A good stomacke dryneth awaye a man's disease, but when a spiete is vexed, who maye abyde it? A wyse herte labourerth for knowledge, and a prudent eare seketh vnderstōdinge. Liberalite bryngeth a man to honō & worshippe, & setteth him amonge greates. The righteous accuseth himselfe first of all yf his neghbō cometh, he shal fynde him. He that pacifieth & variannce, & parteth & migh asunder. The vnite of brethren is stronge

then a castell, and they that holde together are like the barre of a palace. A mans bely shalbe satisfied with the frute of his owne mouth, and with the increase of his lippes shal he be fylled. Death and life stonde in the power of the tonge, he that leueth it, shal enioye the frute therof. Who so fyndeth a wise synndeth a good thyng, & receauneth an wholsome benefite of the LORDE. The poore maketh supplicacion and prayeth meekly, but the riche geueth a rough answer. A frende that delyteth in loue, doth a man more frōshipe, and sticketh faster vnto him then a brother.

The XIX. Chapter.

A letter is the poore that lyueth godly, the blasphemour that is but a foole. Where no discrecion is, there the soule is not well: and who so is swift on fote, stumblith hastily. Foolishnesse maketh a man to go out of his waye, & then is his herte impatient agaynst the LORDE. Riches make many frendes, but the poore is forsake of his owne frendes. A false wytnesse shal not remayne unpunished, and he that speaketh lyes shal not escape. The multitude bryngeth vnto greates men, & euery man fauoureth him that geueth rewardes. As for the poore, he is hated amonge all his brethren: yee his owne frendes forsake him, & he that geueth credence vnto wordes, getteth nothynge. He that is wyse, loueth his owne soule: and who so hath vnderstōdinge, shal prosper. A false wytnesse shal not remayne unpunished, & he that speaketh lyes shal perishe. Delicate ease becometh not a foole, moch more vnseemly is it, a bonde man to haue & rule of prynces. A wyse man putteth of displeasure, & it is his honō to let some fautes passe.

The kynges dysfauōr is like & roaringe of a lyon, but his frōshipe is like the dewe vnto a gras. An vndiscrete sonne is & heuynesse of his father, & a bawlyng wife is like the topp of an house, where thorow it is ever droppynge. House & riches maye a mā haue by & heretage of his elders, but a discrete woman is the gifte of the LORDE. Slouthfulness bryngeth slepe, & an ydell soule shal suffer hunger. Who so kepeth the commaundment, kepeth his owne soule: but he that regardeth not his waye, shal dye. He that hath pitie vpon the poore, ledeyth vnto the LORDE: & loke what he layeth out, it shalbe payed him agayne. Chastite & some whyle there is hope, but let not & soule be moued to slaye hi. For greates wrath bryngeth harme, therfore let him go, and so mayest thou teach him more nurture.

geue eare vnto good counsell, & be content to be reformed, that thou mayest bewyse here after. There are many deuices in a mā's herte, neuertheles the counsell of the LORDE shal stōde. It is a mans worshippe to do good, & better it is to be a poore mā, then a dyssembler. The feare of the LORDE preserveth the life, yee it geueth plētousnes, without the visitaciō of any plage. A slouthfull body shuteth his honde in to his bosome, so yf he can not put it to his mouth. If thou synnest a sorrowful personne, the ignorant shal take better hede: & yf thou reprove one yf hath vnderstōdinge, he wil be & wyser. He that hurteyth his father or shuteth out his mother, is a shamefull & an vnworthy sonne. My sonne, heare nomore the doctrine yf leadeyth the awaye from the wordes of vnderstōdinge.

A false wytnesse laugheth iudgment to scorn, & the mouth of the vngodly eateth vp wickednes. Punyshmentes are ordened for the scomefull, and stripes for foolles backes.

The XX. Chapter.

One is a voluptuous thinge, & drōckenness causeth sedicion: who so delyteth in hecherin, shal neuer be wyse. The kyng ought to be feared as the roaringe of a lyon, who so prouoketh him vnto anger, offendeth agaynst his owne soule. It is a mans honoure to kepe himselfe from strife, but they yf haue pleasure in brawlinge, are foolles eueryone. A slouthfull body wyl not go to plowe for colde, therfore shal he go a begginge in sommer, and haue nothinge. Wyse counsell in the herte of man is like a water in the depe of the earth, but he that hath vnderstōdinge, bryngeth it forth. Many there be that are called good doers, but where shal one fynde a true faithfull mā? Who so ledeyth a godly and an innocent life, happie shal his children be, whom he leaueth behynde him.

A kyng that sitteth in iudgment, and loketh well aboute him, dryneth awaye all euell. Who can saye: my hert is cleane, I am innocent from synne? To vse two maner of weightes, or two maner of measures, both these are abhominable vnto the LORDE.

A childe is knowne by his conversacion, whether his workes be pure and right. As for the hearinge of the eare & the sight of the eye, the LORDE hath made the both. Delyte not thou in slepe, lest thou come vnto poverte: but opene thine eyes, & thou shalt haue bryd ynough. It is naught, It is naught (saye men) when they haue it, but when it is gone, they geue it a good worde.

Salomons Proverbes

The xxi. Chap.

A mouth of understandinge is more worth then golde, many precious stones, and costly Jewels. Take his garment that is suertie for a stranger, and take a pledge of him for vnterone mans sake. Every man liketh the bread that is gotten with disceate, but at the last is mouth shalbe fylled with grauell.

Thow counsell the thinges that men deuise go forward: with discrecion ought warres to be taken in honde. Noble not with him that bewrayeth secretes, and is a flaunderer, and disceaueth with his lippes.
Who so curseth his father and mother, his light shalbe put out in the myddest of darck nesse. The heretage that cometh to haif-tely at the first, shal not be praysed at the en-
de. Saye not thou: I will recompence euell, but put thy trust in the LORDE, and he shal defende thee. The LORDE abhorreth two maner of weightes, and a false balace is an euell thinge. The LORDE ordieth euery mans goinges, for what is he, that vnderstandeth his owne wayes? It is a snare for a man to blaspheme that which is holy, and then to go aboute wth vowes. A wyse kynge destro-yeth the vngodly, and bryngeth the whele euer them. The lanterne of the LORDE is the birth of man, and goeth thorow all the inwarde par-tes of the body. Mercy and faithfulness preserue the kynge, and with louynge kyndnes his seate is holden vp. The strength of yonge men is their worshipec, and a gray heade, is an honour vnto the aged. Woundes dryue awaye euell, and so do stripes the inwarde partes of the body. The XXI. Chapter.

The kynge's hert is in the hande of the LORDE, like as are the ryuers of water: he maye turne it whither so euer he wyll. Every man thinketh his owne wa-ye to be right, but the LORDE iudgeth the her-tes. To do rightuousnesse and iudgment is more acceptable to the LORDE then sacrifice.

A presumptuous lorde, a proude stemacke, and the lanterne of the vngodly is synne. The deuises of one that is diligent, brynge plen-teousnes: but he that is vnadrysed, cometh vnto pouerte. Who so hoordeth vp riches wth disceatfulness of his tonge, he is a foole, and like vnto them that sette their owne death.

The robberies of the vngodly shalbe their owne destruccoon, for they wolde not do the thyng that was right. The wayes of the frowarde are straunge, but the workes of him that is cleane, are right. It is better to dwell in a corner vnder the house toppe, then with a braulinge woman in a wyde house.

The soule of the vngodly wyssheth euell, and hath no pitie vpon his negheure.

When the scornfull is punyshed, the ignorant take a better hede: and when a wyse man is warned, he wil receaue the more vnderstandinge. The rightuous enfourmeth the house of the vngodly, but the vngodly goon still after their owne wickednesse. Who so stoppeth his eare at the cryng of the poore, he shal crie himself and not be herde. A prieny rewarde pacifieth displeasure, and a gifte in the bosome stillerth furiousnesse.

The iust delyteth in doynge the thyng that is right, but the workers of wickednesse abhorre the same. The man that wandreth out of the waye of wysdome, shal remayne in the congregacion of the deed. He that hath pleasure in banquettes, shal be a poore man.
Who so delyteth in wyne and delicates, shal not be riche. The vngodly shalbe geuen for the rightuous, and the wicked for the iust.

It is better to dwell in a wyldernes, then with a chydng and an angrie woman. In a wyse mans house there is greatesse treasure and plenteousnesse, but a foolish body spendeth vp all. Who so foloweth rightuous-nesse and mercy, fyndeth both life, rightuous-nesse and honore. A wyse man wynerth the cite of the mightie, and as for the strength they trust in, he bryngeth it downe. Who so keepeth his mouth and his tonge, the same kepeth his soule from troubles. He that is prou-de and presumptuous, is called a scornfull man, which in wrath darre worke maliciously.

The voluptuousnesse of the slouthfull is his owne death, for his handes wyll not labore.

He coueteth and desyret all the daye lon-ge, but the rightuous is allwaye genynged keepeth nothyng backe. The sacrifice of the vngodly is abhominacion, for they offere the thinge that is gotten wth wickednes. A false wytnesse shal perishe, but he that wilbe content to heare, shal allwaye haue power to speake himself. An vngodly man goeth forth rashly, but the iust resourmeth his owne waye.

There is no wysdome, there is no vnderstandinge, there is no counsell agaynst the LORDE. The horse is prepared agaynst the daye of battayll, but the LORDE geueth the victory.

The XXII. Chapter.

fear of God, is riches, honore, prosperite and health. Speares and snares are in the waye of the frowarde, but he that wil kepe his soule, let himself fro such. If thou teachest a childe in his yowth what waye he shulde go, he shal not leaue it when he is olde. The rich rulerth the poore, and the borrower is seruaunt to the lender. He that soweth wickednesse, shal reape sowe, and the rodde of his plage shal destroye him. A louynge eye shalbe blessed, for he geneth of his bred vnto the poore. Cast out the scornfull man, and so shal strife go out w-him, yee variaunce and flaunder shal cease.
Who so delyteth to be of a cleane herte and of gracious lippes, the kynge shal be his frende.

The eyes of the LORDE preserue knowlege, but as for the wordes of the despyteful, he bryn-geth them to naught. The slouthfull body sayeth: there is a lyd wth out, I might be slay-ne in the streete. The mouth of an harlot is a depe pytt, wherein he falleth that the LORDE is angrie withall. Foolishnes sticketh in the herte of the lad, but the rodde of correccion driueth it awaye. Who so doth a poore man wronge to increase his owne riches, geneth (comely) vnto the rich, and at the last cometh to po-uerie himself. My sonne, lowe downe thine eare, and hearken vnto the wordes of wysdome, applye thy mynde vnto my doctrine: for it is a pleasaunt thinge yf thou kepe it in thine herte, and practise it in thy mouth: that thou mayest allwaye put thy trust in the LORDE.

Haue not I warned thee very oft with counsell and lerninge: I might shewe thee the treuth and that thou wth the verite mightest answe-re them that laye eny thinge agaynst thee? Se-thou robbe not the poore because he is weak, and oppresse not the simple in iudgment: for the LORDE himselfe wyll defende their cause, and do violence vnto them that haue used violence.

Make no frendshipe with an ancie wylfull man, and kepe no company wth the furious: lest thou lerne his wayes, and receaue hurte vnto thy soule. Be not thou one of them that bynde the hande vnto the pemyse, and are suertie for debt: for yf thou hast nothyng to paye, they shal take awaye thy bed from vnder thee.

Thou shalt not remene the lande marcke, which thy fore elders haue sett. Seist thou not, they which be diligent in their busines stande before the kynge, and not amonge the simple people?

The XXIII. Chapter

When thou syttest at the table to ea-te wth a lorde, ordre thy selfe maner-ly wth the thinges that are set before thee.
Measure thine appetite: and yf thou wilt rule thine owne selfe, be not euer greedy of his meate, for meate begyleth and disceaueth.

Take not ouer greatesse trauaile and labore to be riche, beware of such a purpose. Why wilt thou set thine eye vpon the thinge, which sodenly vanissheth awaye? For riches make them selues wynges, and take their flight like an eagle into the ayre. Eate not thou wth enuyous, and desyre not his meate, for he hath a maruelous herte. He sayeth vnto thee:
eate and drynke, where as his herte is not w-thee. See the morsels that thou hast eaten shal thou perbreake, and lese those swete wor-des. Tel nothyng in to the eares of a foole, for he wyll despyse the wysdome of thy wor-
des. Remoue not the olde lande marcke, and come not within the felde of the fatherlesse: for he that delinereth them is mightie, euen he shal defende their cause agaynst the. Applie thine herte vnto lernynge, and thine eare to the wordes of knowlege. Witholde not correccion from the childe, for yf thou beatest him w-the rodde, he shal not dye thereof. Thou syntest him wth the rodde, but thou delyuerest his soule from hell. My sonne, yf thy herte recea-ue wysdome, my herte also shal reioyce: yee my reynes shalbe very glad, yf thy lippes speake the thinge that is right. Let not thine herte be gelous to folowe synners, but kepe thee still in the feare of the LORDE all the daye longe:
for the ende is not yet come, and thy pacience abydinge shal not be in vayne. My sonne, ne eare and be wyse, so shal thine hert prospere in the waye. Kepe no company wth wyne bebers and ryotous eaters of fleshy: for such as be dronckardes and ryotous, shal come to po-uerie, and he that is geuen to moch slepe, shal go wth a ragged cote. Gene eare vnto thy father that be at the, and despyse not thy mother when she is olde. Labore for to get the treuth: sell not awaye wysdome, nourt vnto the vnderstandinge: for a righteous father is maruelous glad of a wyse sonne, and delyteth in him so shal thy father be glad, and thy mother that bare the, shal reioyse. My sonne, geue me thyne herte, and let thine eyes haue pleasure in my wayes. For an whore is a depe grane, and an harlot is a narrow pytt. She lur-keth like a thefe, and those that be not aware she bygeth vnto her. Where is woe? where is sorrow? where is strife? where is brawlynge? where are woundes without cause? where be reed eyes? Euen amonge those that be euer at the wyne, and seke out where the best is. Loke not thou vpon the wyne, how reed it is, and what a cold it geneth in the glasse.

It goeth downe softly, but at the last it byteth like a serpent, and styngeth as an adder. So shall thine eyes lōke vnto straunge women, & thine herte shall muse vpon frowarde thinges. See thou shalt be as though thou slepte, in thy myddest of thy see, or vpon thy topp of the mast. They wounded me (saith thou) but it hath not hurte me, they smote me, but I felt it not. When I am wel wakened, I wil go to thy daynte agayne.

The XXIII. Chapter.

Not thou gelous ouer wicked men, & desyre not thou to be amonge them. For their herte ymagineth to do hurte, & their lippes talke of myschese. Thow wysdome an house shall be buylded, & vnderstandinge it shall be set vp. Thow discrecion shall thy chambers be fylled wth all costely & pleasaunt riches. A wysdome is strōge, yee a mā of vnderstandinge is better, than he is mightie of strength. For with discrecion must warres be take in honde, and where as are many that can geue counsell, there is victory. Wysdome is an hie thinge, yee cūe to thy foole, for he darre not open his mouth in thy gate. He that ymagineth myschese, maye wel be called an vngacious personne. The thoughte of the foolish is synne, & he seemeth full is an abhominacion vnto me. If thou be ouersene & negligēt in tyme of nede, then is thy strength but small. Delyuer the & go vn to death, & are led awaie to be slaine, & be not negligēt therin. If thou wilt saye: I knewe not of it. Thyngest thou that he which made thy hertes, doth not cōsidre it? & he which regardeth thy soule, seith it not: Shall not he recōpence every man accordinge to his workes? My sonne, thou eatest hony & swete hony cōbe, because it is good & swete in thy mouth. When so shall thy knowledge of wysdome be vnto thy soule, as soone as thou hast gotten it. And there is good hope, yee thy hope shall not be in vayne. Laye no pryuy waite wickedly vpon thy house of thy rightuous, & disquiete not his restinge place. For a iust mā fallerth seuentymes, & ryseth vp agayne, but the vngodly fall in to wickednes. Reioyce not thou at the fall of thine enemye, and let not thine herte be glad when he stōmbleth.

Let thy LORD (when he seyth it) be angrie, & turne his wrath from him vnto the. Let not thy wrath & gelousy moue thee, to foolew & wicked and vngodly. And why? thy wicked hath nothinge to hope for, & thy candle of the vngodly shall be put out. My sonne, feare thou the LORD & thy kinge, & kepe no cōpany wth the flanderous: for their destruccō shall come suddenly, & who knoweth the fall of the both? These are also thy saynges of thy wysse.

The xxv. Chap.

It is not good, to haue respecte of any personne in iudgment. He that saith to thy vngodly: thou art rightuous, him shall the people curse, yee thy cōmōtie shall abhorre him. But they that rebuke the vngodly shall be cōmended, & a riche blessinge shall come vpon the. He that teacheth him self to be well loued, that getteth a good answer. First make vp thy worke & is wth out, & loke well vnto thy which thou hast in thy felde, & the buylde thine house. Deny falsse wysnesse agaynst thy neyghbo, & hurte him not wth thy lippes. Saye not: I wil haue him, euē as he hath deale wth me, & wil reme de every mā accordinge to his dedes. I went by thy felde of thy slouthfull, & by thy wynde of the foolish mā. And lo, it was all couered wth nettels, & stode full of thistles, & thy stone wall was broke downe. This I sawe, & cōsidered it wel: I loke vpon it, & toke it for a warnyng. See slepe on still a litle, sleepe a litle, folde thine hōdes together yet a litle: so shall pouerte come vnto the as one that uayleth by thy waye, & necessitye like a wapned man.

The XXV. Chapter.

These also are Salomons proverbes, which the men of Ezechias kinge of Iuda gathered together. It is the honō of God to kepe a thinge secrete, but thy kinges honō is to search out a thinge. The heauen is hie, & earth is depe, and thy kinges hert is vnsearcheable. Take thy dresse from thy syluer, & there shall be a cleane vessell therof. Take awaye vngodlinesse fro thy thynges, & his seate shall be stablised wth rightuousnes. Put not forth thy self in thy presence of thy kinge, & please not in to thy place of greates men. Better it is that it be sayde vnto thee: come vp hither, then thou to be set downe in thy presence of thy prynces, when thou seyst wth thy eyes. Be not haistie to go to the lawe, lest happle thou ordre thy self so at thy last, that thy neyghbo put thee to shame. Handle thy matter wth thy neyghbo himself, & discover not another mans secrete: lest when men heare thereof, it turne to thy dishonō, & lest thine euell name do not cease. A worde spoken in due season, is like apples of golde in a syluer dyshe. The correccion of the wysse is to an obedient eare, a golden cheyne and a Jewell of golde. Like as the wynter coole in the harnest, so is a faithfull messaunger to him that sent him, & refresheth his masters mynde. Who so maketh greates boastes & getteth nothinge, is like cloudes & wynde without rayne. With patience maye a prynces be pacified, & wth a soft tonge maye rigorousnes be broke. If thou findest hony, eate so much as is sufficient for thee: lest thou be ouer full, & thou breake it out agayne. With a rawe & fowle

Salomons Proverbes

thy neyghbours house, lest he be weery of the, and so abhorre the. Who so beareth falsse wysnesse agaynst his neyghbo, he is a veryspere, a swearde & a sharpe arowe. The hope of the vngodly in tyme of nede, is like a rotten roth and a slippery foote. Who so styngeth a songe to a wicked herte, clotheth him wth ragges in the colde, and poureth vyneger vpon chalker. If thine enemye hunger, feed him: if he thyrst, geue him drynke: for so shalt thou heape coales of fyre vpon his head, and the LORD shall rewarde the. The north wynde dryueth awaye the rayne, euē so doth an earnest sober countenance a backbiters tonge. It is better to syt in a corner vnder the rose, then to be a bawlyng woman in a wyde house. A good reporte out of a farre countre, is like colde water to a thyrstie soule. A righteous man fallynge downe before the vngodly, is like a troubled well and a springe that is destroyed. Like as it is not good to eate to moch hony, euē so he that wyll search out thy thynges, it shall be to heuyn for him. He that can not rule himself, is like a cite, which is broken downe, and hath no walles.

The XXVI. Chapter.

Like as snowe is not mete in sommer, ner rayne in harnest: euē so is worshipe vnseemly for a foole. Like as the byde and the swalowe take their flight and sle here and there, so the curse that is geuen in vayne, shall not lichte vpon a man. Vnto the horse belongeth a whyppe, to the Asse a bydle, and a rodde to the foolles backe. Geue not the foole an answer a fter his foolishnesse, lest thou become like vnto him: but make thy foole an answer to his foolishnesse, lest he be wyse in his owne cōceate. He is lame of his fete, yee droncken is he in vanite, that comitteth any thinge to a foole. Like as it is an vnseemly thinge to haue legges & yet to halce, euē so is a parable in thy foolles mouth. He that setteth a foole in hye dignite, & is euē as yf a mandyd cast a precions stone vpon thy galous. A parable in a foolles mouth, is like a thorne that pricketh a droncken man in the hande. A man of experience discerneth all thinges well, but who so hyereth a foole, hyereth soch one as wyl take no hede. Like as the dogg turneth agayne to his vomite, euē so a foole begynneth his foolishnesse agayne a fresh. If thou seyst a man that is wyse in his owne conceate, there is more hope in a foole then in hi. The slouthfull sayeth: there is a leopard in my waye, and a lyon in my myddest

The xxvii. Chap. Pro. xlv.

of the stretes. Like as the doer turneth aboute vpon the tresholde, euē so doth the slouthfull welter himself in his bedde. The slouthfull body thrusteth his hōde in to his bosome, and it greueth him to put it agayne to his mouth. The slogarde thinketh himself wysse, then vij. men that sytt and teach. Who so goeth by and medleth with other mens strife, he is like one that taketh a dogg by the eares. Like as one shutteth deadly arrowes and dartes out of a pryuy place, euē so doth a dyssembler with his neyghbo, and then sayeth he: Ioyd it but in spoite. Where no wodd is, there the fyre goeth out: and where the bachtyer is taken awaye, there the strife ceaseth. Coles kynde heate, and wodd & fyre: euē so doth a bawlyng fellowe steepe vpon variance. A flanderers wordes are like slattery, but they pearse & inwarde partes of thy body. Venymous lippes & a wicked herte, are like a potsherde couered wth syluer dyasse. An enemye dyssembleth with his lippes, and in the meane season he ymagineth myschese: but when he speaketh sayre, beleue him not, for there are seuen abhominacions in his herte. Who so kepeth euell will secretly to do hurte, his malyce shall be shewed before the whole congregacion. Who so dyggeth vp a pytt, shall fall therin: and he that wylteth a stone, shall stōmble vpon it hymselfe. A dyssemblinge tonge hateth one that rebuketh him, and a flateringe mouth worketh myschese.

The XXVII. Chapter.

Like not thy boost of tomorrow, for thou knowest not what maye happen todaye. Let another mā prayse the, & not thine owne mouth: yee other folles lippes, and not thine. The stone is heuy, and the sonde weyghtie: but a foolles wrath is heuyer then they both. Wrath is a cruell thinge, and furiousnesse is a very tempest: yee who is able to abyde enuy? An open rebuke is better, then a secrete loue. Faithfull are the woundes of a louer, but thy kysse of an enemye are disceatfull. He that is full, abhorreth an hony combe: but vnto him that is hōgric, euery sower thinge is swete. He that oft tymes flytteth, is like a byrde that forsaketh his nest. The herte is glad of a swete oyntment and sauoure, but a stomacke that can geue good counsell, reioysseth a mans neyghbo. Thyne owne frende and thy fathers frende se thou forsake not, but go not in to thy brothers house in tyme of thy trouble.

Salomons Proverbes.

The xxviii. Chap.

Better is a frende at hōde, then a brother farre of. My sonne, be wyse, and thou shalt make me a glad herte: so that I shal make an swere vnto my rebukers. A wyse man seynge the plage wyl hyde himself, as for fooles they go on still, and suffer harme. Take his garment that is suertie for a straunger, & take a pledge of him for the vnkownemans sake. He that is to hastie to praise his negh boure aboue measure, shalbe taken as one & geueth him an euell reporte. A biarolyng woman and the rose of the house droppynge in a raynie daye, maye well be compared together. He that refrayneth her, refrayneth the wynde, and holdeth oyle fast in his hōde. Like as one yrd whettereth another, so doth one man comforte another. Who so kepeth his fyge tre, shal enioye the frutes therof: he that wayteth vpon his master, shal come to honoure. Like as in one water there appeare dyuerse faces, euē so dyuerse men haue dyuerse hertes. Like as hell & destruccions are neuer full, euē so the eyes of mē can neuer be satisfied. Syluer is tryed in the moulde, & golde in the fornace, & so is a man, whan he is openly praysed to his face. Though thou shuldest bray a foole w a pestell in a mortar like otomeell, yet wil not his foolishnesse go from him. Se y thou knowe the nombre of thy catell thy self, and loke well to thy flockes. For riches abyde not allwaye, & the crowne endureth not for euer. The hay groweth, & grasse cometh vp, & herbes are gathered in & mountaines. The lambes shal clothe the, & for the goates thou shalt haue money to y husbandry. Thou shalt haue goates mylke ynough to fede the, to vpholde thy husholde, & to susteyne thy maydens.

The XXXVIII. Chapter.

The vngodly flyeth no man chasyng him, but the righteous stendeth stiff as a lyon. Because of synne y londe doth oft chaunge hir pryncer: but thorow men of vnderstandinge & wysdome a realme endureth longe. One poore man oppressing another by violence, is like a contynual rayne that destroyeth y frute. They that forsake the lawe, prayse y vngodly: but soch as kepe the lawe, abhorre them. Wicked men discerne not the thinge y is right, but they that seke after the LORDE, discusse all thinges. A poore man ledynge a godly life, is better then the richethat goeth in frowarde wayes. Who so kepeth the lawe, is a childe of vnderstandinge: but he y fedeth ryotous men, shameth his father. Who so increaseth his riches by vantage & wynginge, let him gather them to helpe the poore withall. He that turneth awaye his eare from hearinge y lawe, his prayer shalbe abhorred. Who so lederth y righteous into an euell waye, shal fall in to his owne pyne, but y iust shal haue the good in possession.

The rich man thynketh him self to be wyse, but the poore that hath vnderstandinge, can perceane him wel ynough. When righteous men are in prosperite, the doth honoure re floush: but when the vngodly come vp, y state of men chaungeth. He that hydeh his synnes, shal not prosper: but who so knowlegeth them and forsaketh them, shal haue mercy. Well is him that iudgeth all waye in awe: as for him that hardeneth his herte, he shal fall in to mischese. Like as a roaringe lyon and an hongrie beer, such is an vngodly pryncer ouer the poore people.

Where the pryncer is without vnderstandinge, there is greates oppression & wronge: but yf he be soch one as hateth couetynesse, he shal longe raigne. He that by violence sheddeth eny mans bloude, shal be a renagat vnto his graue, and no man shal be able to succor him. Who so leaderth a godly and an innocent life, shalbe safe: but he that geeth frowarde wayes, shal once haue a fall. He y tyllith his londe, shal haue plentyousnesse of bred: but he that foloweth yollnesse, shal haue pouerte ynough. A faithfull man is greatly to be commended, but he that maketh to moch haist for to be riche, shal not be vngiltie. To haue respecte of personnes in iudgment is not good: And why? he will do wronge, yee euē for a pece of bred. He that will be rich all to soone, hath an euell eye, and considereth not, that pouerte shal come vpon him. He that rebuketh a man, shal fynde more fauoure at y last, the he that flattereth him. Who so rebeth his father and mother, and sayeth it is no synne: the same is like vnto a motherer.

He that is of a proude stomacke, stretcheth vpon strife: but he that putteth his trust in y LORDE, shalbe well fedd. He that trusteth in his owne hert, is a foole: but he that dealeth wisely, shalbe safe. He that geueth vnto the poore, shal not wante: but he that turneth awaye his eyes from soch as be in neede, shal suffre greates pouerte himself.

Whan the vngodly are come vp, men are sayne to hyde them selues: but whe they perish, the righteous increase.

The XXIX. Chapter.

The xxx. Chap. Ho. xlii.

That is stiffnecked & wyll not be reformed, shal suddenly be destroyed & out eny helpe. Where y righteous haue the ouer hande, y people are in prosperite: but where the vngodly beareth rule, the re y people mourne. Who so loueth wysdome, maketh his father a glad man: but he y kepeth harlottes, spendeth awaye y he hath. With true iudgment y kynge setteth vp the londe, but yf he be a man y taketh giftes, he turneth it vpsyde downe. Who so flattereth his neghb, layeth a nette for his fete. The synne of y wicked is his owne snare, but y righteous shal be glad and reioyse. The righteous considreth the cause of the poore, but the vngodly regardeth no vnderstandinge. Wicked people brynge a cite in decaye, but wyse men set it vp agayne. As a wyse man go to lawe with a foole (whether he deale with him frendly or roughly) he getteth no rest. The blouderhyrtie hate the righteous, but the iust seke his soule. A foole poureth out his spirete alltogether, but a wyse man kepeth it in till afterwarde.

As a pryncer delyte in lyes, all his seruantes are vngodly. The poore and the lender mete together, the LORDE lighteneth both their eyes. The seate of the kynge y faithfully iudgeth the poore, shal continue sure for euermore. The rodde and correction mynistris wysdome, but yf a childe be not loked vnto, he bryngeth his mother to shame. When the vngodly come vp, wickednesse increaseth: but the righteous shal set their fall. Tortoure thy sonne with correction, and he shal comforte the, yee he shal do the good at thine hert. Where no prophet is, there the people perishe: but well is him that kepeth the lawe. A seruait wil not be the better for wordes, for though he vnderstonde, yet wil he not regarde them.

As thou seyst a man that is haistie to speake vnaduyced, thou mayest trust a foole more then him. He that delicately bryngeth vp his seruait from a childe, shal make him his master at length. An angrie man stretcheth vpon strife, and he that beareth euell wyll in his mynde, doth moch euell. After pryde cometh a fall, but a lowly spirete bryngeth greates worshippe. Who so kepeth company w a thefe, hateth his owne soule: he heareth blasphemies, & telleth it not forth.

He that feareth men, shal haue a fall: but who so putteth his trust in the LORDE, shal come to hono. Many there be that seke y prynces fauoure, but euery mans iudgment cometh from the LORDE.

The righteous abhorre the vngodly: but as for those that be in y right waye, y wicked hate them.

The XXX. Chapter.

The wordes of Agur the sonne of Jake.

The prophecie of a true faithfull man, A who God hath helped, whom God hath comforted & nourished. For though I am y leest of all, & haue no mas vnderstandinge (for I neuer lerned wysdome) yet haue I vnderstandinge & am wel enured in godly thinges. Who hath clymmed vp i to heauen? Who hath come downe from thence? Who hath holden y wynde fast in his hande? Who hath comprehended y waters in a garment? Who hath set all the endes of y world? What is his name, or his sonnes name? Canst thou tell? All the wordes of God are pure & cleane, for he is a shyld vnto all them, that put their trust in him. Put thou nothinge therfore vnto his wordes, lest he reprove the, and thou be founde as a liar.

Two thinges I requyre of the, that thou wilt not denye me before I dye. Remove from me vanite and lyes: geue me nether pouerte ner riches, only graunte me a necessary lyuynge. Lest yf I be to full, I denye y, & saye: what filowe is y LORDE? And lest I beinge constrained thorow pouerte, fall vnto swearinge, and forswere the name of my God.

Accuse not a seruait vnto his master, lest he speake euell of the also, and thou be hurte. He that bryngeth vp an euell reporte vpon the generacion of his father and mother, is not worthy to be commended.

The generacion that thynke them selues cleane, shal not be clensed from their fylthyneffe. There are people y haue a prenteloke, and cast vp their eye lyddes. This peoples tethe are swerdes, and with their chaste bones they consume and deuoure the symple of the earth, and the poore frem amonge mē.

This generacion (which is like an hois-leche) hath two daughters: y one is called, fetch hither the other, brynge hither.

There be thre thinges that are neuer satisfied, and the fourth saith neuer hoo. The hell, a womans wombe, and the earth hath neuer water ynough. As for fyre, it sayeth neuer: hoo. Who so laugheth his father to scoine, and setteth his mothers commaundement at naught: the rauenys pycke out his eyes in the valley, and deuoured be he of the yongle Aegles.

There be thre thinges to hye for me, and as for the fourth, it passeth my knowlege.

Salomons Prouerbes.

The waye of an Aegle in y ayre, & waye of a serpent ouer y stone, & waye of a shippe in y see, & y waye of a mā w a yonge womā. Soch is the waye also of a wyse y breaketh wedlocke, which wyppeth hir mouth like as whā she hath eatē, & sayeth: As for me, I haue done no harme. Thowowthe thinges the earth is disquieted, & the fourth maye it not beare: Thowow a seruaūt y beareth rule, thowow a foole y hath greate riches, thowow an ydle houswife, & thowow an handmayden y is heyre to hir mastres. There be foure thinges in the earth, the which are very litle: but in wysdome they excede the wyse. The Emmettes are but a weake people, yet gather they their meate together in y harvest.

The conyes are but a feble folke, yet make they their couches amonge the rockes. The greshoppers haue not a gyde, yet go they forth together by heapes. The spyder laboureth w hir hādes, & y in y kynges palace.

There be thre thinges y go stiffly, but the goinge of the fourth is the goodliest of all. A Lyon which is kyng of bestes, & geueth place to no man: A cock ready to fight: A rāme: And a kyng y goeth forth w his people.

If thou be so foolish to magnifie y self, or medlest w eny soch thinge, the laye thine hāde vpon y mouth. Who so chyneth mylck, maketh butter: he that rubbeth his nose, maketh it blede, and he that causeth wrath, bryngeth forth strife.

The XXXI. Chapter.

These are the wordes of Kyng Lamuel, & y lesson y his mother taught him. My sonne, thou sonne of my booby: O my deare beloued sonne, geue not ouer thy substaunce & mynde vnto women, which are the destruccioē of kynges. O Lamuel, geue kynges no wyne, geue kynges & prynces no stronge drynke: lest they beinge dronken forget the lawe, & regarde not y cause of the poore, & of all soch as be in aduersite. Geue stronge drynke vnto soch as are condemned to death, & wyne vnto those y mourne: that they maye drynke it, & forget their misery & aduersite. Be thou an aduocate & stonde in iudgment thyself, to speake for all soch as be dōme & sicourles. With y mouth defende y thinge y is lafull and right, and y cause of y poore and helpelesse.

mā, she is moch more worth the perles. The herte of hir husbāde maye safely trust in her, so that he shal haue no nede of spoyles.

She wil do him good & not euell all y dayes of hir life. She occupieth wollz slay, & laboreth gladly w hir handes. She is like a marchauntes shippe, that bryngeth hir vytayles from farre. She is vp in y night season, to prouyde meate for hir housholde, & foode for hir maydens. She considreth hē de, & byeth it, and w the frute of hir handes she planteth a vynyarde. She gyrdeth hir loynes with strength, and courageth hir armes. And yf she perceaue that hir houswifrie doth good, hir candle goeth not out by night. She layeth hir fyngers to the spyndle, & hir hande taketh holde of y rocke.

She openeth hir hande to y poore, yet she stretcheth forth hir hādes to soch as haue nede. She feareth not y the colde of wynter shal hurte hir house, for all hir housholde folkes are duple clothed. She maketh hir self fayre ornātes, hir clothinge is whyte sylke & purple. Hir husbāde is moch set by in y gates, whē he sytteth amonge y rulers of y londe. She maketh cloth of sylke & selleth it, and deliuereth a gyrdle vnto y marchaūt.

Strēgth and honoure is hir clothinge, & in the latter daye she shal reioyse. She openeth hir mouth with wysdome, & in hir tēge is the lawe of grace. She lokech wel to the wayes of hir housholde, & eateth not hir bred with ydilnes. Hir childien arise & call hir blessed, & hir husbāde maketh moch of her. Many daughters there be y gather riches together, but thou goest abouethē all.

Ecclesiastes.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I. All thinges (yf amāwyl cōsidre them wel) are but vanite. Neuertheles amōge them all there is nothige weaker and more vntedfast, then man him self.

Chap. II. In this chapter (and in the other also) he maketh oft tymes mētion of the wordes and cōuersaciō of the vngodly: that by this meanes he maye the better cause men to despyse all creatures, in respecte of the onely everlastinge God.

Chap. III. Every thinge hath a tyme. There is no thige, but God hath put redyousnesse and tranayle in it, to exercise men with. all. What so euer a man enioyeth of his labour, the same is a gift of God, geuen to the intent that men shulde feare him.

Chap. IIII. A cōsideraciō of diuerse thinges. There is nothinge so excellent and hye, but yf it do not the duty and office where vnto it is ordered, it shalbe brought lowe.

Chap. V. Agaynst foolish and remerariōus vowes. Let no man maruaile that so moch euell is done, for the wicked are many. Agaynst the riche and agaynst riches.

Chap. VI. Agaynst those riche mē that dare not enioye their riches: how mad and foolish they be.

Chap. VII. No man knoweth what is for to come. How worthy a thige it is to haue a good name. The profit of wysdome.

Chap. VIII. Of the obediēce which men owe vnto God and to their heades. The lōge sufferance of God is not to be despised. It is not possible for eny mā, to cōprehende the wordes that be in the worlde.

Chap. IX. Like thinges happen vnto all men: therfore with myrth and thankfulness shulde men enioye the giftes of God. Wyssdome passeth all thinges.

Chap. X. XI. In these two chapters are many wysse and profitable sentences, wel worthy to be considered of euery man.

Chap. XII. In this chapter the preacher she weth his whole meanyng, as though he wolde saye: As for all the thinges that be vnder the Sonne (wher of I haue spoken) I haue cōsidered them, and proued them metely wel by experience. And this is the conclusion, that there is nothinge stedfast and durable but God himself, whō men ought to feare, and to haue his cōmaundementes before their eyes euen from their youth vp.

The first. Chap. Ho. xlvij.

The first Chapter.

These are the wordes of the preacher, the sonne of Dauid, kyng of Ierusalem.

All is but vanite (saith y preacher) all is but playne vanite. For what els hath a mā, of all the labō y he taketh vnder the Sonne? One generaciō passeth awaye, another cometh, but the earth abyderh still. The Sonne aryseth, the Sonne goeth downe, & returneth to his place, y he maye there ryse vp agayne. The wynde goeth to warde y South, & fetcheth his cōpase aboute vnto the North, & so turneth in to himselfe agayne. All floudes runne in to the see, & yet the see is not fylled: for loke vnto what place the waters runne, thence they come agayne. All thinges are so harde, y no mā can expresse them. The eye is not satysfied w sight, the eare is not fylled w hearinge. The thinge y hath bene, cometh to passe agayne: & y thinge y hath bene done, is done agayne, there is no new thinge vnder the Sonne. Is there eny thinge, wherof it maye be sayde: lo, this is new? For it was lōge agoe in the tymes y haue bene before vs. The thinge y is past, is out of remēbraunce: Lūe so the thiges that are for to come, shal no more be thought vpo amōge the that come after. I myself y preacher, beyngē kyng of Irael & Ierusalem, applyed my mynde to seke cut & search for the knowlege of all thiges y are done vnder heaue.

Soch tranayle & labō hath God geue vnto y childē of mē, to exercise the seluestherē.

Thus I haue considered all the thinges that come to passe vnder the Sonne, & lo, they are all but vanite & vexaciō of mynde. The croked can not be mayde straight, & the sawtes cā not be nobred. I cōmoned w myne owne herte, sayēge: lo, I am come to a greate estate, and haue gottē more wysdome, the all they y haue bene before me in Ierusalem. Yee my hert had greate experience of wysdome & knowlege, for there vnto I applyed my mynde: y I might knowe what were wysdome & vnderstōdinge, what were errō & foolishnes. And I perceaued y this also was but a vexaciō of mynde: for where moch wysdome is, there is also greate tranayle & disquietnes: & y more knowlege a man hath, the more is his care.

The II. Chapter.

The sayde I thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease & haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: in so moch that I sayde vnto laughter: thou art mad, and to myrth: what doest thou?

The sayde I thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease & haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: in so moch that I sayde vnto laughter: thou art mad, and to myrth: what doest thou?

So I thought in my herte, to withdraue my flesh from wyne, to applye my mynde vnto wysdome, and to comprehend foolishnes vntill the tyme that (amonge all y<sup>e</sup> thinges which are vnder y<sup>e</sup> Sonne) I might see what were best for men to do, so longe as they lyue vnder heauen.

<sup>6.7</sup> I made gorgious sayre woikes, I buyl ded me houses, and planted vynyardes: I made me orchardes and gardens of pleasure, and planted trees in them of all maner frutes. I made poles of water, to water y<sup>e</sup> grene and frutesfull trees withall. I bought seruautes and maydes, and had a greatcheue holde. As for catell and shepe, I had more substance of them, then all they y<sup>e</sup> were before me in Jerusalem. I gathered syluer and golde together, euen a treasure of kynges and lordes.

B I prouided me syngers and womē which coude playe of instrumentes, to make me myrth and pastime. I gat me drynkyng cuppes also and glasses. (Shortly) I was greater and in more worshippe, then all my predecessors in Jerusalem. For wysdome remayned with me: and loke what so euer myne eyes desired, I let them haue it: and wherin so euer my herte desired or had any pleasure, I withhelde it not, so it. Thus my hert reioysed in all y<sup>e</sup> I dyd, and this I toke for the porcion of all my trauayle. But when I considered all the woikes y<sup>e</sup> my handes had wrought, and all the labours that I had taken therein: lo, all was but vanite and vexacion of mynde, and nothyng of any value vnder y<sup>e</sup> Sonne. Then turned I me to considere wysdome, erroure and foolishnesse (for what is he among men, that might be compared to me y<sup>e</sup> kyng in such woikes?) and I sawe, that wysdome excelleth foolishnesse, as farre as light doth darknesse. For a wyse man beareth his eyes aboute in his heade, but the foole geeth in the darknesse. I perceaued also that they both had one ende.

C Then thought I in my mynde: If it happen vnto the foole as it doth vnto me, what nedeth me then to labour any more for wysdome? So I confessed within my harte, that this also was but vanite. For the wyse are euer as litle in remembraunce as the foolish, and all the dayes for to come shalbe forgotten, yee the wyse man dyeth as well as y<sup>e</sup> foole. Thus begane I to be weery of my life, in so much that I coude awaye with nothyng that is done vnder the Sonne, for all was but vanite and vexacion of mynde: yee I was weery of all my labour, which I had taken vnder the Sonne, because I shulde be sayne to leane them vnto another man, that cometh after me: for who knoweth, whether he shalbe a wyseman or a foole? And yet shal he be lord of all my labours, which I with soch wysdome haue taken vnder the Sonne. Is not this a vayne thinge?

So I turned me to refrayne my mynde from all soch trauayle, as I toke vnder the Sonne: for so much as a man shulde weery him self with wysdome, with vnderstandinge and opportunitie, and yet be sayne to leane his labours vnto another, y<sup>e</sup> neuer sweet for them. This is also a vayne thinge and a greate misery. For what getteth a mā of all y<sup>e</sup> labo<sup>r</sup> and trauayle of his mynde, y<sup>e</sup> he cateth vnder the Sonne, but heuynesse, sorrowe and quyetnes all y<sup>e</sup> dayes of his life? In so much that his herte can not rest in the night. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Is it not better then for a mā to eate and drynke, and his soule to be mery in his labour? Yee I sawe that this also was a gifte of God: for who maye eate, drynke, or lrynge any thinge to passe without him? And why? he geueth vnto mā, what it pleaseth him: whether it be wysdome, vnderstandinge, or gladnesse. But vnto the synner he geueth weerynes and sorrow, that he maye gather and heape together y<sup>e</sup> thinge, y<sup>e</sup> afterwarde shalbe geuen vnto him whom it pleaseth God. This is now a vayne thinge, yee a very disquietnesse and vexacion of mynde.

The III. Chapter.

Every thinge hath a tyme, yee all that is vnder the heauen, hath is conuenient season. There is a tyme to be borne, and a tyme to dye. There is a tyme to plante, and a tyme to plucke vp the thinge, y<sup>e</sup> is planted: A tyme to slaye, and a tyme to make whole: A tyme to breake downe, and a tyme to buylde vp: A tyme to wepe, and a tyme to laugh: A tyme to mourne, and a tyme to danse: A tyme to cast awaye stones, and a tyme to gather stones together: A tyme to embrace, and a tyme to refrayne from embrace: A tyme to wyne, and a tyme to lese: A tyme to spare, and a tyme to spende: A tyme to cutt in peces, and a tyme to sowe together: A tyme to kepe sylence, and a tyme to speake: A tyme to loue, and a tyme to hate: A tyme of warre, and a tyme of peace.

What hath a mā els (that doth any thinge) but weerynesse and labour? For as touching the trauayle and carefullnesse which God hath geuen vnto mā, I see that he hath geuen it them, to be exercised in it. All this hath he ordered maruelous goodly, to enery thinge his due tyme. He hath placed ignorance also in the hertes of men, y<sup>e</sup> they shuldenot fynde out y<sup>e</sup> grounde of his woikes, which he doth from y<sup>e</sup> beginninge to y<sup>e</sup> ende. So I perceaued, y<sup>e</sup> in these thinges there is nothyng better for a man, then to be merry to do well so longe as he lyueth. For all y<sup>e</sup> a man eateth and drynke, yee what so euer a mā enioyeth of all his labo<sup>r</sup>, y<sup>e</sup> same is a gifte of God. I considered also y<sup>e</sup> what so euer God doth, it continueth for euer, and y<sup>e</sup> no thinge can be put vnto it ner take from it: and y<sup>e</sup> God doth it to y<sup>e</sup> intent, y<sup>e</sup> men shulde feare him. The thinge y<sup>e</sup> hath bene, is now: and the thinge y<sup>e</sup> is for to come, hath bene afore tyme, for God restoreth agayne the thinge that was past. Moreover, I sawe vnder y<sup>e</sup> Sonne, vngodlynesse in the steade of iudgment, and iniquite in steade of rightuousnesse.

Then thought I in my mynde: God shal separate the righteous from the vngodly, and then shal be the tyme and iudgment of all counteys and woikes. I comoned wth myne owne herte also concerninge the chyldre of men: how God hath chosen them, and yet letteth the appeare, as though they were beastes: for it happeneth vnto men as it doth vnto beastes, and as the one dyeth, so dyeth y<sup>e</sup> other: yee they haue both one maner of birth, so y<sup>e</sup> (in this) a man hath no preemynence aboue a beest, but all are subdued vnto vanite. They go all vnto one place, for as they be all of dust, so shal they all turne vnto dust agayne.

Who knoweth the spere of man y<sup>e</sup> goeth upwarde, and the birth of the beest y<sup>e</sup> goeth downe in to the earth? Wherfore I perceaued, y<sup>e</sup> there is nothyng better for a man, then to be ioyfull in his labour, for that is his porcion. But who wil brynge him to see the thinge, that shal come after him?

The IIII. Chapter.

So I turned me, and considered all the violent wronge that is done vnder the Sonne: and beholde, the teares of such as were oppressed, and there was no man to comforte them, or that wolde deliuer and defende them from the violence of their oppressours. Wherfore I iudged those that are deed, to be more happie then such as be alyue: yee him that is yet vnbome to be better at ease then they both, because he seith not the miserable woikes that are done vnder the Sonne. Agayne, I sawe that all trauayle and diligence of labour was hated of euery man. This is also a vayne thinge, and a vexacion of mynde. The foole fol deth his handes together, and eateth vp his owne flesh. One handfull (saith he) is better to rest, then both y<sup>e</sup> handes full with labo<sup>r</sup> and trauayle. Moreover, I turned me, and beholde yet another vanite vnder the Sonne. There is one man, no mo but himself alone, hauyng nether childe ner brother: yet is there no ende of his carefull trauayle, his eyes can not be satisfied with riches, (yet doth he not remembre himself, and saye:) For whom do I take soch trauayle? For whose pleasure do I thus consume awaye my lyfe? This is also a vayne and miserable thinge. Therfore two are better then one, for they maye well enioye the profit of their labour. If one of them fall, his companion helpe him vp agayne: But who is him, that is alone, for yf he fall, he hath not another to helpe him vp. Agayne, when two slepe together, they are warme: but how can a body be warme alone? One maye be overcome, but two maye make resistance: A thre folde cable is not lightly broken. A poore childe beyng wyse, is better then an olde kinge, that doth, and can not bewarre in tyme to come. Some one commeth out of prison, and is made a kyng: and another which is borne in the kyngdome, commeth vnto povertie. And I perceaued, y<sup>e</sup> all men lynyng vnder the Sonne, go wth the seconde childe, that commeth vp in the steade of the other. As for the people that haue bene before him, and that come after him, they are innumerable: yet is not their ioye the greater thowow him. This is also a vayne thinge and a vexacion of mynde. When thou comest in to the house of God, kepe thy foot, and drawe nye, that thou mayest heare: that is better then the offeringes of fooles, for they knowe not what euell they do.

The V. Chapter.

Not hastie with thy mouth, and let not thine hert speake any thinge rashly before God. For God is in heauen, and thou vpon earth, therfore let thy wordes be fewe. For wheremuch carefullnesse is, there are many dreames: and wheremany wordes are, there men maye heare fooles. If thou make a vowe vnto God, be not slacke to performe it. As for foolish vowes, he hath no pleasure in them. If thou promyse any thinge, paye it: for better it is that thou make no vowe, then that thou shuldest promise, and not paye. Use not thy mouth to cause y<sup>e</sup> flesh for to synne, y<sup>e</sup> thou saye not before the angell: my foolishnesse is in y<sup>e</sup> fault.

Baruc. 5. C

For the God wil be angrie at thy voyce, and destroye all thy workes of thine handes.

Eccles. 4. 2 And why? where as are many dreames & many wordes, there are also dyuerse vanities: but loke & thou feare God. If thou seest the poore to be oppressed and wrongously dealt withall, so & equite & the right of the lawe is waisted in the londe: maruell not thou at such iudgment, for one greater may kepe touch with another, and the mightie helpe the selues together. The whole londe also with the felde and all that is therein, is in subieccion and bondage vnto & kinge.

B For that loueth money, wil neuer be satisfied with money: and who so delireth in riches, shal haue no profit therof. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Where as many riches are, there are many also that spende them awaye. And what pleasure more hath he that possesseth them, sauynge that he maye loke vpon them with his eyes? A labouring man slepeth sweetely, whether it be little or moch that he eateth: but the abundaunce of the riche wil not suffre him to slepe.

Yet is there a soie plage, which I haue seene vnder the Sonne (namely) riches kepte to the hurte of him & hath them in possession.

Iob 1. c

For oft tyme they perishe with his great misery and trouble: and yf he haue a child, it getteth nothinge. Like as he came naked out of his mothers wombe, so goeth he thither agayne, and carrieth nothinge awaye with him of all his labour. This is a miserable plage, & he shal go awaye euen as he came. What helpeth it him then, & he hath labored in the wynde? All the daies of his life also must he eate in the darcke, with greate carefulnesse, sicknesse & sorow.

Eccles. 2. d

Therefore me thinke it a better and a fairer thinge, a man to eate and drynke, and to be refreshed of all his labour, & he taketh vnder the Sonne all the dayes of his life which God geueth him, for this is his porcion. For vnto whom so euer God geueth riches, goodes and power, he geueth it him to enioye it, to take it for his porcion, and to be refreshed of his labour: this is now the gifte of God. For he thinketh not moch how longe he shal lyue, for so moch as God fylleth his hert with gladnesse.

The VI. Chapter.

A Here is yet a plage vnder & Sonne, & it is a generall thinge amonge men: when God geueth a man riches, goodes & honoure, so that he wanteth nothinge of all that his herte can desire: and yet God geueth him not leue to enioye the same, but another man spiedeth them. This is a vayne thinge & a miserable plage. If a man begett an hundred children, and lyue many yeares, so that his dayes are many in number, and yet cannot enioye his good, neither be buried: as for him I saye, that an vnrighly byrth is better then he. For he cometh to naught, & goeth his waye in to darcknes, and his name is forgotten. Moreover, he seyth not the Sonne, and knoweth of none: neither here ner there: Yee though he lyue two thousande yeares, yet hath he no good life. Come not all to one place? All the labour that a man taketh, is for himselfe, and yet his desire is neuer fylled after his mynde. For what hath the wyse more then the foole? What helpeth it the poore, that he knoweth to walke before the lyuynge? The sight of the eyes is better, then that the shulde so departe awaye. Howbeit this is also a vayne thinge and a disquietnesse of mynde. What is more excellent then man? yet can he not in the lawe get the victory of him that is mightier then he: A vayne thinge is it to cast out many wordes, but what hath a man els?

The VII. Chapter.

For who knoweth what is good for man lyuynge, in & dayes of his vayne life, which is but a shadowe? Or who wil tell a man, what shal happen after him vnder the Sonne? A good name is more worth then a precious oymment, and the daye of death is better then & daye of byrth.

It is better to go in to an house of mourninge, then in to a bancket house. For the ende of all men, and he that is lyuynge, taketh it to herte. It is better to be silent then to laugh, for when the countenance is heavy, the herte is ioyfull. The herte of & wyse is in the mourninge house, but the herte of the foolish is in the house of myrth. It is better to geue eare to the chastenynge of a wyse man, then to heare the songe of foolles. For the laughinge of foolles is like & crackynge of thornes vnder a pott. And y is but a vayne thinge.

Who so doeth wronge, maketh a wyse man to go out of his witt, and destroyeth a gentle hert. The ende of a thinge is better then the begynnynge. The patient of sperte is better then the hie mynde. Be not haistely angrie in & mynde, for wrath teth in the bosome of a foole. Saye not thou: What is the cause that & dayes of & olde tyme were better, then they & be now? for that were no wyse question. Wyssdome is better then riches, yee moch more worth then the eye sight. For wyssdome defendeth as well as moneye, and the excellent knowlege and wyssdome geueth life vnto him that hath it in possession. Considre the worke of God, how that no man can make the thinge straight, which he maketh croked. Use well the tyme of prosperite, and remembre the tyme of myssfortune: for God maketh the one by the other, so that a man can fynde nothinge els.

E These thinges also haue I considered in & tyme of vanite: & the iust man perissheth for his rightuousnes sake, & the vngodly liueth in his wickednesse. Therefore bethou nether to rightuous ner ouer wyse, & thou perissh not: be nether to vnrighuous also ner to foolish, lest thou die before thy tyme. It is good for the to take holde of this, & not to let & go out of thy hande. For he & feareth God shal escape them all.

Wyssdome geueth more corage vnto the wyse, then ten mightie men of the cite: for there is not one iust vpo earth, & doth good, & sinneth not. Take not hede vnto euery worde & is spoken, lest thou heare thy seruauant curse the: for thine & wne hert knoweth, that thou thy self also hast oft tymes spokē euell by other men. All these thinges haue I produced because of wyssdome: for I thought to be wyse, but she wente farther fro me then she was before, yee & so depe that I might not reach vnto her. I applied my mynde also vnto knowlege, and to sette out sciēce, wyssdome and vnderstandinge: to knowe the foolishnesse of the vngodly, and the erreure of dotinge foolles. And I founde, that a woman is bytterer then death: for she is a very angle, hir hert is a nett, and hir handes are cheynes. Who so please & God shal escape from her, but the synner wil be taken w her.

Beholde (sayeth & preacher) this haue I diligently searched out & pruned, & I might come by knowlege: which as yet I sette, and fynde it not. Amonge a thousande men I haue founde one, but not one woman amonge all. So, this onely haue I founde, that God made man iust & right, but they sette dyuerse subtilties, where as no man hath wyssdome & vnderstandinge, to geue answer there vnto.

The VIII. Chapter.

Wysdome maketh a mā face to shyne, but malice putteth it out of fauoure. Kepe the kynges commaundment (I warne the) & the oath & thou hast made vnto God. Be not haistie to go out of his sight, & se thou cōtinue in no euell thinge.

ge: for what so euer it pleaseth him, & doeth he. Like as when a kyng geueth a charge, his commaundment is mightie: Euen so who maye saye vnto him: what doest thou? Who so kepe the commaundment, shall fele no harme: but a wyse mans herte discerneth tyme and maner: For euery thinge wil haue opportunitie and iudgment, and this is the thinge that maketh men full of carefulnes & sorowe. And why? a man knoweth not what is for to come, for who wyll tell him? Neither is there eny mā & hath power ouer & spere, to kepe stil & spere, ner to haue eny power in the tyme of death: It is not he also that can make an ende of the batayll, ne ther maye vngodlynes deliuer him & medleth withall.

Iob 5. Leui.

All these thinges haue I considered, and applied my mynde vnto euery worke that is vnder the Sonne: how one man hath lordshipe vpon another to his owne harme. For I haue oft sene & vngodly brought to their graues, and fallen downe from the hye and glorious place: in so moch & they were forgotten in the cite, where they were had in so hye & greate reputacion. This is also a vayne thinge. Because now that euell workes are not haistely punyshed, the hert of man geueth him self ouer vnto wickednesse: But though an euell personne offende an hundred tymes, and haue a longe life: yet am I sure, that it shal go well with the that feare God, because they haue him before their eyes. Agayne, as for the vngodly, it shal not be well with him, nether shal he prologe his dayes: but euen as a shadowe, so shal he be that feareth not God.

Yet is there a vanite vpon earth: There be iust men, vnto whom it happeneth, as though they had the workes of the vngodly: Agayne, there be vngodly, with whom it goeth as though they had the workes of & rightuous. This me thinke also a vaine thinge. Therefore I commende gladnesse, because a man hath no better thinge vnder the Sonne, then to eate and drynke, and to be mery: for that shal he haue of his labour all the daies of his life, which God geueth him vnder the Sonne. When I applied my mynde to tolerne wyssdome, and to knowe the trayle that is in the worlde (and that of such a fashion, & I suffred not myne eyes to slepe nether daye ner night) I vnderstode of all & workes of God, that it is not possible for a man, to attayne vnto & workes that are done vnder & Sonne: and though he bestowe his labour to sette them out, yet can he not reach vnto the: yee though a wyse man wolde undertake to knowe them, yet might he not fynde them.

The IX. Chapter.

All these thinges purposed I in my mynde to seke out. The righte- us and wyse yee and their workes al so are in the hande of God: and there is no man that knoweth ether the loue or hate of the thinge that he hath before him. It happeneth vnto one as vnto another: It goeth with the righte as with the vngodly: with the good & cleane as with the vncleane: with him that offereth as with him that offereth not like as it goeth with the vertuous, so goeth it also with the synner: As it happeneth vnto the periured, so happeneth it also vnto him that is a frayed to be man sworne. Amonge all thinges y come to passe vnder the Sonne, this is a misery, that it happeneth vnto all alyke. This is the cause also that the hertes of men are full of wickednesse, & madd foolishnesse is in their hertes as longe as they lyue, vntill they dye.

B And why? As longe as a man lyueth, he is careles: for a quyet dogg (saye they) is better the a deed lion: for they that be lyuynge, knowe y they shall dye: but they y be deed, knowe nothinge, nether deserue they eny more. For their memoriall is forgottē, so y they be nether loued, hated ner envoyed: nether haue they eny more parte in y worlde, in all y is done vnder the Sonne. So thou y waye then, eate thy bried with ioye, & drynke y wyne w gladnesse, for thy workes please God.

C Let thy garmentes be all waye whyte, & let y heade want no oyntment. Use thy self to lyue ioyfully w thy wife whom thou louest, all y daies of thy life (which is but vayne) y God hath geuen the vnder the Sonne, all y dayes of thy vanite: for y is thy porcion in this life, of all thy labors & trauayle y thou takest vnder the Sonne. What so euer thou takest in hande to do, that do with all thy power: for amonge the deed (where as thou goest vnto) there is nether worke, counsell, knowlege ner wysdome.

E So I turned me vnto other thinges vnder y Sonne, and I sawe, that in runnyng, it helpeth not to be swift in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge: to sedynge, it helpeth not to be wyse: to riches, it helpeth not to be sure: to be had in fauoure, it helpeth not to be connyng: but that all lyeth in tyme & fortune. For a man knoweth not his tyme, but like as the fyshes are takē with the angle, and as the byrdes are catched w the snare: Euen so are men taken in the perillous tyme, when it cometh sodenly vpon them.

This wysdome haue I sene also vnder y Sonne, & me thought it a greate thinge. There was a litle cite, & a fewme within it: so there came a greate kynge & beseged it, & made greate bulworkes agaynst it. And in the cite there was founde a poore man (but he was wyse) which w his wysdome delyuered the cite: yet was there no body, y had eny respecte vnto soch a symple man. Then sayde I: wysdome is better then strength. Neuertheles, a symple mans wysdome is despyed, & his wordes are not herde. A wise mans counsell that is folowed in sylence, is farre above the crienge of a captaine amonge fooles. For wysdome is better then harnesse: but one vnto thurst alone destroyeth moch good.

The X. Chapter.

Led flies y corruppe swete oymment & make it to styncke, are somthinge more worth then the wysdome & honors of a foole. A wyse mans hert is vpon the right hande, but a fooles hert is vpon the left. A dotinge foole thinketh, y eury mā doth as foolishly as himself. As a principall spere be geuen the to beare rule, be not negligēt the in thine office: for so shal grete wickednesse be put downe, as it were w a medecyne. Another plage is there, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne: namely, y ignorance y is comonly amonge prynces: in y a foole sytteth in greate dignite, & the rich are sett downe beneth: I se seruauntes ryde vpon horses, & prynces goynge vpon their feete as it were seruauntes. But he y byggeth vp a pytt, shal fall therin himself: & who so breaketh downe the hedge, a serpent shal bite him. Who so remoueth stones, shal haue trauayle with all: and he that heareth woth, shal be hurt therewith.

When an yron is blont, and y poynt not sharpened, it must be whett againe, and that with might: Euen so doth wysdome folowe diligence. A babler of his tounge is no better, then a serpent that styngeth without byssynge. The wordes out of a wyse mans mouth are gracious, but the lippes of a foole wil destroye himself. The begynnynge of his talkynge is foolishnes, and the last worde of his mouth is greate madnesse. A foole is so full of wordes, that a man can not tell what ende he wyll make: who wyl then warne him to make a conclusion? The labour of y foolish is grenous vnto the, while they knowe not how to go in to the cite.

Woe vnto the (O thou realme and londe) whose kynge is but a childe, and whose prynces are early at their banderettes. But well is the (O thou realme and londe) whose kynge is come of nobles, and whose prynces eate in due season, for strength and not for lust. Thowow slouthfulnesse the baltes fall downe, and thowow ydle hādes it rayneth in at the house. Meate maketh men to laugh, and wyne maketh them mery: but vnto money are all thinges obedient. Wysh the kynge no euill in y thought, and speake no hurte of y ryche in thy pryncy chambre: for a byrde of the ayre shal betraye thy voyce, and w hit fether shal he bewraye thy wordes.

The XI. Chapter.

Ende thy vytayles ouer the waters, and so shalt thou fynde the after many yeares. Geue it awaye amonge seuen or eight, for thou knowest not what miste ryshal come vpo earth. When the cloudes are full, they poure out rayne vpon the earth. And when y tre falleth, (whether it be toward the south or north) in what place so euer it fall, there it lyeth. He that regardeth y wynde, shal not sowe: and he that hath respecte vnto the cloudes, shal not reape. Nowe like as thou knowest not the waye of the wynde, ner how y bones are fylled in a mothers wombe: Euen so thou knowest not the workes of God, which is the workemaster of all.

Cease not thou therfore with thy handes to sowe thy seede, whether it be in y morninge or in the euenynge: for thou knowest not whether this or that shal prosper, & yf they both take, it is the better. The light is sweet, & a pleasaunt thinge is it for the eyes to lōke vpon the Sonne. As a man lyue many yeares, and be glad in them all, let him remembre the dayes of darknesse, which shal be many: & when they come, all thinges shal be but vanite. Be glad then (O thou yonge man) in thy youth, and let thine hert be mery in thy yonge dayes: folowe the wayes of thine owne hert, and the lust of thine eyes: but be thou sure, that God shal bringe the in to iudgment for all these thinges.

The XII. Chapter.

Remouew displeasure out of y hert, & remouew euill from thy body: for childehode and youth is but vanite. Remember thy mater in thy youth, or euer the dayes of aduersite come, and or the yeares drawe nye, when thou shalt saye: I haue no pleasure in them: before the Sonne, y light, y Moone and the starres be darkened, and or the cloudes turne agayne after the rayne: when the keepers of the house shal tremble, and when the stronge men shal bowe themselves: when the Myllers stonde still because they be so fewe, and when the sight of the wyndowes shal waue dymme: when the dores in the stretes shal be shutt, and when y voyce of the Myller shal be layed downe: when men shal ryse vp at the voyce of the byrde, and when all y daughters of musyck shal be brought lowe: when men shal feare in hye places, and be a frayd in the stretes: when the Almonde tre shal be despyed, the greshopper borne out, and when grete pouerte shal breake in: when man goeth to his longe home, and the mourners go aboute the stretes. Or euer the syluer lace be taken awaye, and or the golden benche be broken: Or the pott be broken at the well, & the whele vpon the Cisterne: Or dust be turnede agayne vnto earth from whence it came, and or the spiret retorne vnto God, which gaue it. All is but vanite (sayeth the preacher) all is but playne vanite.

The same preacher was not wyse alone, but taught the people knowlege also: he gaue good hede, sought out the grounde and set forth many parables. His diligence was to fynde out acceptable wordes, right scripture, and the wordes of truthe. For the wordes of y wyse are like prickes and nales that go thorow, wherewith men are kepte together: for they are geuen of one shepherde onely. Therfore beware (my sonne) that aboute the se thou make the not many & innumerable bootes, nor take dyuerse doctrynes in hande, to weery thy body with all.

Let vs heare the conclusion of all thinges: Feare God, and kepe his comaundementes, for that toucheth all men: For God shal iudge all workes and secreete thinges, whether they be good or euill.

The ende of Ecclesiastes,

Salomons Balettes,

Cantica Canticorum.

The first Chapter.

Qhat thy mouth wolde geue me a kysse, for y brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, & that because of the good and pleasaunt sauoure. Thy name is a swete smellynge oyntment; therfore do the maydens loue the: yee that same moueth me also to renne after the.

The kynge hath brought me into his preuy chambie. We wil be glad & reioyce in the, we thynke more of thy brestes then of wyne: well is them that loue the.

I am black (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) like as the tentes of the Cedarenes, and as the hanginges of Salomon: but yet am I faire & well fauoured withal. Maruell not at me y I am so black, & why? Sonne hath shyned vpon me. For whan my mothers childie had euell wil at me, they made me y keper of the vynyarde. Thus was I sayne to kepe a vynyarde, which was not myne owne.

Tell me (o thou whom my soule loneth) wherethou sedest, wherethou restest at the noone daye: lest I go wronge, and come vnto the flockes of thy companions.

As thou knowe not y self (o thou fayrest amonge women) tha go y waye forth after y foresteppes of the shepe, as though thou woldest fede y goates besyde y shepherdes tentes. There wil I tary for the (my loue) w myne hoost & with my charettes, which shal be no fewer then pharaos.

Then shal thy chekes & thy neck be made fayre, & hanged w spages & goodly iuwels: a neck bande of golde wil we make y w syluer bottons. When the kynge syttert at the table, he shal smell my Nardus: for a bodell of Myre (o my beloued) lyeth betwixte my brestes. A cluster of grapes of Cypers, or of the vynyardes of Engaddi, art thou vnto me, O my beloued.

O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou: thou hast dones eyes. O how fayre art thou (my beloued) how well fauored art thou: Oure bed is deckt with floures, & sylinges of oure house are of Cedre tre, & oure balkes of Cypressse.

The ii. Chap.

The II. Chapter.

I am the floure of the felde, and lyke of the valleys: as the rose amonge the thornes, so is my loue amonge the daughters.

Like as the aple tre amonge the trees of the wodd, so is my beloued amonge the sonnes. My delite is to sitt vnder his shadowe, for his frute is swete vnto my throte. He bryngeth me in to his wyne seller, and loneth me specially well. Refresh me w grapes, cosome me with apples, for I am sick of loue. His left hande lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embraeceth me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) by the Roes & hyndes of the felde, y ye wake not vpon my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

We thynke I heare the voyce of my beloued: lo, there cometh he hoppinge vpon y mountaynes, and leapinge ouer the litle hilles. My beloued is like a Roe or a yong hart. Beholde, he stondeth behynde y wall, he loketh in at the wyndowe, & pepeth thorow the grate.

My beloued answered & sayde vnto me: O stode vpon my loue, my doue, my bentysfull, & come: for lo, the wynter is now past, the rayne is awaie & gone. The floures are come vpon in the felde, the twystinge tyme is come, the voyce of the turtle doue is herde in oure lande. The sygetre bryngeth forth hir figes, the vynes beare blossoms, and haue a good smell.

O stode vpon my loue, my bentysfull, and come (my doue) out of the caues of the rockes, out of the holes of the wall: O let me see thy countenance and heare thy voyce, for swete is thy voyce and fayre is thy face. Get vs the fores, yee the litle fores that burre y vynes, for oure vynes beare blossoms.

My loue is myne, and I am his, (which fedeth amonge the lylies) vntill the daye breake, and till the shadowes be gone. Come agayne preuely (o my beloued) like as a Roe or a yong hart vnto the mountaynes.

The III. Chapter.

In the night in my bedd, I sought him, whom my soule loneth: yee diligent ly sought I him; but I founde him not. I wil get vp (thought I) and go aboute the cite: vpon the market and in all y stretes will I seeke him whom my soule loneth, but whan I sought him, I founde him not. The watchmen that go aboute y cite, founde me. Sawe ye not him, whom my soule loneth?

Salomons Balettes

So whan I was a litle past them, I founde him whom my soule loneth. I haue gotten holde vpon him, and wyl not let him go, till I brynge him into my mothers house, and in to hir chambie that bare me.

I charge you (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) by the Roes and hyndes of the felde, that ye wake not vpon my louener touch her, till she be content herself.

Who is this, that cometh out of y wylde, beset with pilers of smoke, as it were a smell of Myre, frankincense and all maner spices of the Apotecary?

Beholde, aboute Salomons bedsteadeth stande LX valeaunt men of the mightie in Irael. They holde swerdes euery one, & are opperte in warre. Euery man hath his swerde vpon his thee, because of feare in the night.

Kynge Salomon hath made himself a bedstead of the wodd of Libanus, the pilers are of syluer, the cowering of golde, & seate of purple, & grounde pleasauntly paved for the daughters of Ierusalem.

Go forth (o ye daughters of Sion) and beholde kynge Salomon in the crowne, wherewith his mother crowned him in the daye of his marriage, and in the daye of the gladnesse of his hert.

The IIII. Chapter.

O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou: thou hast dones eyes besyde that which lyeth hid within. Thy hayre lockes are like a flocke of shepe that be clippyd, which go first vpon from the washinge place: where euery one beareth two twyns, and not one vnfrutefull amonge them. Thy lippes are like a rose coloured rybende, thy wordes are lovely: thy chekes are like a peece of a pomgranate, besydes that which lyeth hid within. Thy neck is like the tower of David buylded with bulwoikes, wher vpon there haue a thousande sheldes, yee all the weapes of the gigantes. Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes, which fede amonge the lilies. O that I might go to the mountayne of Myre, and to the hyll of frankynsense: till the daye breake, and till the shadowes be past awaye. Thou art all fayre (o my loue) & no spot is there in the.

Come come from Libanus (o my spouse) come to me from Libanus: come soone the next waye from the toppe of Aman, from the toppe of Samir and Hermon, from the Lyons denmes and from the mountaynes of y leoparides. Thou hast wounded my hert (o my sister, my spouse) thou hast wounded my hert, with one of thine eyes, and with one

The v. Chap. Ho. li.

cheyne of thy neck. O how fayre and lovely are thy brestes, my sister, my spouse: Thy brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, and the smell of thy oyntmentes passeth all spices. Thy lippes (o my spouse) droppe as the hony combe, yee mylke and hony is vnder thy tongue, and the smell of thy garmentes is like the smell of frankynsense.

Thou art a well kepte garden (o my sister, my spouse) thou art a well kepte water sprynge, a sealed well. The frutes that sproute in the, are like a very paradysse of pograntes & swete frutes: as Cypressse, Nardus, Saffron, Calmus, and all the trees of Libanus: Myre, Aloes, and all the best spices. Thou art a well of gardens, a well of lynyng waters, which renne downe from Libanus. Vpon thou northwynde, come thou southwynde, and blowe vpon my gardē, that the smell therof maye be caried on euery syde: Yee that my beloued maye come in to my garden, & eate of the frutes and apples that growe therein.

The V. Chapter.

Come in to my garden o my sister, my spouse: I haue gathered my Myre & my spice. I wil eate my hony and my hony combe, I wil drynke my wyne & my mylke. Eate o (ye frenches) drynke and be mery, o ye belened.

As I was a slepe, & my hert wakynge, I herde the voyce of my beloued, whā he knocked. Open to me (sayde he) o my sister, my loue, my doue, my darlinge: for my heade is full of dew, and y lockes of my hayre are full of the night droppes.

I haue put off my cote, how ca I do it on agayne: I haue washed my fete, how shal I fyle them agayne: But whan my loue put in his hande at the hole, my hert was moued to warde him: so that I stode vp to open vnto my beloued. My handes dropped w Myre, & the Myre ranne downe my syngers vpon y lock. Neuerthelesse whā I had opened vnto my beloued, he was departed, and gone his waye.

Now like as afore tyme whan he spake, my hert coude no longer refrayne: Euen so now I sought hi, but I coude not fynde him: I cried vpon him, neuerthelesse he gaue me no answers. So the watchmen that wente aboute the cite, founde me, smote me, and wounded me: Yee they that kepte the walles, toke awaye my garment fro me. I charge you therfore (o ye daughters of Ierusalem) yf ye fynde my beloued, that ye tell him, how that I am sick for loue.

Who is thy loue aboue other louers. O thou

Salomons Balettes.

sayest amonge women: Or, what can thy loue do, more then other lovers, that thou chargest vs so straitly?

As for my loue, he is whyte and reade coloured, a singuler personne amonge many thousandes: his heade is the most fyne golde, the lockes of his hayre are busshed, browne as the euenynge: his eyes are as the eyes of doves by the water brokes, washen with mylke, and remaynyng in a plenteous place: his chetes are like a garden bedd, where in the Apotecaries plate all maner of swete thinges: his lippes droppe as the floures of the most princypall Myrre, his handes are full of golde rynges and precious stones. His body is as the pure yuery, deckt ouer with Sapphyres: his legges are as the pilers of Marbell, sett vpon sockettes of golde: his face is as Libanus, and as the beuety of the Cedre trees: his throte is swete, yee he is altogether lovely. Soch one is my loue (o ye doughters of Jerusalem) soch one is my loue.

Whither is thy loue gone the (o thou sayest amonge women) whither is thy loue departed, that we maye seeke him with the?

The VI. Chapter.

A lone is gone downe in to his garden, vnto a swete smellinge beddes, that he maye refresh himself in the garden, and gather floures. My loue is myne, and I am his, which sedeth amonge the lilies.

Then art pleasaunt (o my loue) even as loneliness itself, thou art sayre as Jerusalem, glorious as an armie of men with their banners (Turne awaye thine eyes fro me, for they make me to proude) Thy hayre lockes are like a flocke of goates vpon a mount of Galaad. Thy teth are like a flock of shepe that be clippyd, which go out of the washing place: where every one beareth two twyns, and not one infructfull amonge them. Thy chetes are like a pece of a pomgranate, besydes which lyeth hid within. There are thre score quenes, foure score concubynes, and yonge women without nombre. But one is my dowe, my derlyng. She is the onely beloued of hir mother, and deare vnto her that bare her. When the daughters sawe her, they sayde she was blessed: yee the quenes and concubines pray sed her. What is she this, that pepeth out as the moonyng: sayre as the Moone, excellent as the Sonne, glorious as an armie of men with their banners?

I wente downe in to the nutt garden, to see what grew by the brokes, to loke yf the vynyarde flourished, and yf the pomgranates were shot forth. Then the charettes of my prince of my people made me sodenly ashyed. Turne againe, turne againe (O thou damite) turne agayne, turne agayne, that I maye loke vpon the.

The vii. Chap.

The VII. Chapter.

What pleasure haue ye more in Jerusalem, than when she damyeth amonge the men of warre? O how pleasaunt are thy treadinges with thy shoes, thou princys daughter: Thy chetes are like a sayre iewell, which is wrought by a cunningge workmaster: Thy navell is like a round goblett, which is neuer without drynke. Thy wombe is like an heape of wheate, set aboute with lilies: Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonger ones: Thy neck is as it were a tower of yuery: Thyne eyes are like water poles in Zesebon, besyde the porte of Bathrabbim: Thy nose is like the tower of Libanus, which looketh towarde Damascan. That heade that stondeth vpon the is like Carmel: The hayre of thy heade is like thynges purple folden up in plates.

O how sayre and lovely art thou (my derlyng) in pleasures: Thy stature is like a date tre, and thy brestes like the grapes. I sayde: I wil clynime vp in to the date tre, and take holde of his braunches. Thy brestes also shalbe as the vyne grapes, the smell of thy nostrils like the smell of apples, and thy chete like the best wyne.

This shalbe pure and cleare for my loue, his lippes and teth shal haue their pleasure. There wil I turne me vnto my loue, and he shal turne him vnto me. O come on my loue, let vs go forth in to the felde, and take our lodginge in the vyllages. In the moonyng we wil ryse by tymes, and go se the vynyarde: yf it be spronge forth, yf the grapes be growne, and yf the pomgranates be shott out. There wil I geue the my brestes: There shal the Mandragoras geue their smell besyde our dore: There (o my loue) haue I kept vnto the all maner of frutes, both new and olde.

The VIII. Chapter.

What I might fynde the without tyme, whom I loue as my brother: which suckte my mothers brestes: that thou woldest not be offended, yf I take the and brought the in to my mothers house: that thou mightest teach me, and that I might geue the drynke of spiced wyne and of the swete sappe of my pomgranates. His left hande lyeth vnder my heade, and his right hande embraçeth me.

then am I as one that hath founde fauoure in his sight.

Salomon had a vynyarde at Baal Hamon, this vynyarde deliuered he vnto the keper: y every one for the frute therof shulde geue him a thousande peces of syluer. But my vynyarde (o Salomon) geneth the a thousande, and two hundred to the keepers of the frute.

Thou that dwellest in the gardens, O let me heare thy voyce, that my companions maye hearken to the same. O get the awaye (my loue) as a roo or a yonge hert vnto the swete smellinge mountaynes.

The prophet Isay.

This is the prophesy of Isay the sonne of Amos, which he shewed vpon Iuda and Ieru salem: In the tyme of Osi as, Joathan, Ahas, and Ezechias kynges
of Iuda.

The first Chapter.

Hear o heauen, herken o earth,
for the LORD speaketh: I ha ue nourished & brought vp chil dren, and they are fallen awaye fro me. An ope knoweth his LORDE, and an Alse his masters scall, but Israel knoweth nothinge, my people hath no vnderstandinge. Alas for this synful peo ple, which are experte in blasphemies, a fra werde generacion, vnmatural children. They haue forsaken the LORD, they haue prou oked the holy one of Israel vnto anger, and are gone backward. Wherfore shulde ye be plaged eny more? For ye are euer fallinge a waye. The whole heade is sick, and the her te is very heuy. From the sole of the foote vnto the heade, there is no whole parte in all yo body: but all are woundes, botches, sores and strypes, which can nether be hel ped, bounde vp, molified, ner eased with eny oynment.

Your londe lieth waist, youre cities a re brent vp, youre enemies deuoure youre londe, and ye must be fayne to stonde, and lo ke vpon it: and it is desolate, as it were with enemies in a batell. Morouer yf daughter of Syon is left alone like a cotage in a vyny arde, like a watchouse in tyme of warre, like a beseged cite. And excepte the LORD of hostes had left us a few alyue: we shulde ha ue bene as Sodoma, & like vnto Gomorra.

Heare the worde of the LORD ye ty rauntes of Sodoma: and herken vnto the lawe of oure God, thou people of Gomorra.
Why offere ye so many sacrifices vnto me? I am discontent for the brent offringes of we thers, and with yf fatnesse of sedbeastes. I haue no pleasure in the bloude of bullockes, lambes and gootes. When ye apeare before me, who requyretch you to treade within my porches? Offre me no mo oblacions, for it is but lost labour. I abhoire youre incense. I maye not awaye with youre newmoones, your Sabbathes and solempne dayes. Your re fastinges are also in vayne. I hate youre new holy dayes and fastinges, euen fro my very harte. They make me weery, I can not abyde them. Though ye holde out yo hon des, yet turne I myne eyes from you. And though ye make many prayers, yet heare I nothinge at all, for youre hondes are full of bloude.

Wash you, make you clene, put awaye yo euell thoughtes out of my sight, cease from doinge of euell and violence. Lerne to do right, applie youre selues to equyte, deluy er the oppressed, helpe the fatherlesse to his right, let the wydowes complaynte come be fore you. Now go to (saith the LORD) we wil talke together. Is it not so? Though youre synnes be as read as scarlet, shal they not be whyter then snowe? And though they were like purple, shal they not be like whyte well? Is it not so? Yf ye belouynge & obedient, ye shal enioye the best thinge that groweth in the londe. But yf ye be obstina te and rebellious, ye shalbe denoured with the swerde: so: thus the LORD hath pro mised with his owne mouth.

How happeneth it then that the right uous cite (which was full of equite) is beco me vnfaithfull as an whore: rightheousnes dwelt in it, but now murther. Thy Siluer is turned to drosse, and thy wyne myrre w water. Thy princes are traytours and com panyons of theues. They loue giftes altoge ther, and solowre rewardes. As for the fa therles, they halpe him not to his right, ne ther wil they let the wydowes causes come before them. Therfore speaketh the LORD God of hostes the mighty one of Israel: Ah
I must ease me of myne enemies, and a ven ge me vpon the. And therfore shal I laye my honde vpon the, and burne out thy drosse from the fynest and purest, and put out all thy leade, & set thy iudges agayne as they were somtyme, and thy Senatours as they were from yf begynnynge. Then shalt thou be called the rightheous cite, the faithful ci
tie. But Sion shalbe redeemed with equyte, and hyr captiuite with rightheousnesse. For the transgressours and vngodly, and soch as are become unfaithfull vnto the LORDE, must all together be utterly destroyed.

And excepte ye be ashamed of the oke-trees wherin ye haue so delited, and of the gardes that ye haue chosen: ye shalbe as an oke whose leaues are fallen awaye, and as a garden that hath no moystnesse. And as for the glory of these thinges, it shalbe turned to due strawe, and he that made them to a sparke. And they shal both burne together, so that no man shalbe able to quench them.

The seconde Chapter.

Worouer this is the worde that was epened vnto Esaye the sonne of Amos, vpon Juda and Jerusalem. It will be also in processe of tyme: That the hill where the house of the LORDE is buylded, shal be y chese amonge hilles, and exalted aboue all li-le hilles. And al heith shal prease vnto him and the multitude of people shal go vnto him, speakinge thus one to another: vp, let us go to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of y God of Jacob: y he maye shewe us his waye, and y we maye walke in his pathes. For y lawe shal come out of Syon, and the worde of God from Jerusalem, and shal geue sentence amonge the heithen, and shal reforme the multitude of people: So that they shal breake their swerdes and spea-res, to make scythes, cycles, and sawes therof.

From that tyme forth shal not one people lift vp wapen agaynst another, nether shal they lerne to fight from thensforth. It is to the that I crie (o house of Jacob) vp, let us walke in the light of the LORDE. But thou art scatred abroad with thy people (o house of Jacob) for ye go farre beyonde yo fathers, whether it be in Sorcerers whem ye haue as the phylistynes had) or in calkers of mens byrthes, wherof ye haue to many. As soone as youre londe was ful of syluer and golde, and no ende of youre treasure: so soone as youre londe was ful of stron-ge horses and no ende of youre charrettes: Inmediatly was it ful of Idols also, euen workes of youre owne hondes, which ye you re selues haue facioned, and youre fyngers haue made. There kneleth the man, there falleth the man downe before them, so y thou canst not bunge him awaye from thence.

And therfore get y soone in to some rock,
and hyde the in the grounde from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from y glory of his Magesstie. Which casteth downe y high lokes of presumptuous personnes, and bryn-geth lowe the pryde of mā, and he only shal be exalted in y daye. For the daye of y LOR-DE of hostes shal go ouer all pryde, and presumptio, vpon all thē that exalte the selues, and shal bunge them all downe: vpon all high stoute Cedie trees of Libanus, and vpon all the okes of Basan, vpon all high hilles, and vpon all stoute mountaynes, vpon all cossy towres, and vpon all stronge walles, vpon all shippes of the see, and vpon euery thinge

y is glorious and pleasant to lōke vpon.

And it shal bunge downe the pryde of man, and laye mans presumptuousnesse full lowe, and the LORDE shal only haue the victory in that daye. But the Idols shal utterly be rotted out. Men shal crepe in to holes of stone, and in to canes of the earth, from the sight of the fearful iudge, and from the glory of his magesstie: what tyme as he shal make him vp to shake the earth. Then, the shal ma cast awaye his goddes of syluer and golde (which he neuertheles had made to ho-noure the) vnto Molles and Baetes: the he maye the better crepe in to the canes and rockes, and in to the cliffes of hard stones, from y sight of the fearful iudge and from the glory of his Magesstie.

The thirde Chapter.

Every man can eschue a persone moued in Langer, for what doth he wysely? Euen so shal y LORDE of hostes take awaye fro y rusale z Juda, all possessiōs z power, all meat and dunke, y captaigne and the souldier, y iudge and the prophete, the wyse and the aged mā, the worshipful of siftrie yeare old, and the honorable: the Senatours, and mā of vnderstandinge: the masters of craftes and oratours. And I shal geue you childen to be youre prynces (saith the LORDE) and babes shal haue the rule of you. One shal euer be doinge violence and wronge to an-ther. The boye shal presume agaynst the elder, and the vyle persone agaynst the honorable. Yee one shal take a frende of his own kynred by y bosme, and saye: thou hast done this thinge, thou shalt be oure heade, for thou mayest kepe us from this fall and perell.

Then shal he sweare and saye: I can not helpe you. Morouer, there is nether meaner clothinge in my house, make me no reuer-ler of the people. For Jerusalem and Juda must decaye, because that both their wor-des and counsels are agaynst the LORDE:
they prouoke the presence of his magesstie to anger. The chaunginge of their counsaunce bewrayeth them, yee they declare their owne synnes themselves, as the mites, z hyde the not. Wo be vnto their son-les, for they shalbe heuely rewarded. Then shal they saye: O happy are the godly, for they maye enioye the frutes of their studies.

But wo be to y vngodly and vnrightrous for they shalbe rewarded after their wortes. O my people, rybaudes oppresse y, and women haue rule of the.

O my people, thy leders beceane the, and trade out the waye of thy footsteppes.
The LORDE is here to comon of the matter, and stonde to geue iudgment with the people. The LORDE shal come forth to reason with the Senatours and prynces of his people, and shal saye thus vnto them: It is ye that haue burnt vp my vnyearde, the robbery of the poore is in youre house. Wherfore do ye oppresse my people, and marre y faces of the innocentes? thus shal the God of hostes reuyle them.

Morouer thus saith y LORDE: Seinge
the daughters of Sion are become so prou-de, and come in with stretched out neckes, and with vayne wanton eyes: seinge they come in trippinge so nycely with their feet: Therfore shal the LORDE shane the heades of the daughters of Sion, and make their bawie bare in that daye. In that daye shal the LORDE take awaye the gorgeousnes of their apparel, and spanges, cheynes, partlettes, and colares, braceletes and hoores, y goodly floured, wyde and broderd raymēt, busshes and headbandes, rynges and garlandes, holy daye clothes and vales, kerch-ues and pynnes, glasses and smockes, bonet-tes and raches.

And in steade of good smell there shalbe stynck amonge them. And for their gyddles there shalbe lowse bondes. And for wellet haye there shalbe baldnesse. In steade of a stomacher, a sack cloth, and for their bewty wythrednesse and sonneburnyng. Their husbondes and their mightie men shal perish with the swerde in batell.

The fourth Chapter.

It that tyme shal their gates mourne and complayne, and they shal sit as desolate folck vpon the earth. Then shal seuen wyues take holde of one man, and saye:
we will laye all oure meat and cloothinge together in comon, only that we maye be called thy wyues, and that this shamefull reprose maye be take from us. After that tyme shal the braunch of y LORDE be bentiful and mightie, and y frute of the earth shal-be saye and pleasant for those Israelites that shal spunge therof. Then shal the remnant in Sion and the remnant at Jerusalem be called holy: namely all soch as are witten amonge the luynges at Jerusalem: what tyme as the LORDE shal wash awaye the desolacion of the doughters of Sion, and poure the bloude out from Jerusalem, w y wynde of his smoke and fyre.

Morouer vpon all the dwellinges of the hill of Sion and vpon their whole congregacion, shal the LORDE proude a cloude and smoke by daye, and the shynynge of a flammyng fyre by night, for all their glory shalbe preserved. And Jerusalem shal be a tabernacle for a shadowe because of hete in the daye tyme, a place and refuge where a man maye kepe him for wether and rayne.

The V. Chapter

Well than, I will synge my beloued frende a songe of his vnyearde. My beloued frende hath a vnyearde in a very frutefull plenteous grounde. This he hedged, this he walled rounde aboute, and planted it with goodly grapes. In the myddest of it buylded he a towre, and made a wyne presse therein. And afterwarde when he looked y it shulde bunge him grapes, it brought forth thornes. I shewe you now my cause (o ye Citysens of Jerusalem and whole Juda:) Judge I praye you betwixte me: and my wynegarding. What more coude haue bene done for it, that I haue not done? Wherfore then hath it geuen thornes, where I looked to haue had grapes of it?

Well, I shall tell you how I will do w my vnyearde: I will take the hedge from it, that it maye perish, and breake downe y wall, that it maye be troden vnder fore. I will laye it waist, that it shal nether be twysed nor cut, but beare thornes and bieares. I wil also forbyd y cloude, that they shal not rayne vpon it. As for the vnyarde of the LORDE of hostes it is the house of Israel, and whole Juda his sayre plantin-ge. Of these he looked forequyte, but se there is wronge: for rightuousnesse, lo, It is but misyry.

Wo to you that ioyne one house to another, and bunge one londe so nigh vnto another, till ye can get no more grounde. Wil ye dwell vpon the earth alone? The LORDE of hostes rowneth me thus in myne eares: shal not many greater and more gorgeous houses be so waist, that no man shal dwell in the? And ten akers of vynes shal geue but a Quarte, and xxx. bushels of sedge shal geue but thre.

The prophet Esay.

Wo be vnto them that ryse vp early to vse them selues in diontyennes, and yet at night are more superfluous with wyne. In whose companies are harpes and lutes, tabrettes and pipes, and wyne. But they regard not the worke of the LORDE, and consider not the operaciō of his hondes. Therefore cometh my folck also in captiuyte, because they haue no vnderstandyng. Their glory shalbe mytte with hūger, and their pryde shalbe marred for thurst. Therefore gaperth hel, and openeth hyr mouth marvelous wyde: that pryde, boostinge and wisdom, with such as reioyse therein, maye descende in to it.

Thus shal man haue a fall, he shalbe brought lowe, and the high lokes of the proude layde downe. But the LORDE of hostes, y holy God: shalbe exalted and vntouched, when he shal declare his equityte and rightuousnesse after this maner. Then shal y lambs cate their apoynted feder, and shal fede plenteously in the mountaynes. Wo vnto vayne persones, that drawe wickednes vnto the, as it were with a corde: and synne, as it were with a cart rope. Which vse to speake on this maner: let him make haist now, and go forth w his worke, that we maye se it. Let the counceill of y holy one of Israel come, and drawe me, y we maye knowe it.

Wo vnto them that call euil good, and good euil: which make darcknes light, and light darcknesse, y make sower swete, and swete sower. Wo vnto them that are wise in their owne sight, and thinke them selues to haue vnderstandyng. Wo vnto them, y are counyngte men to suppe out wyne, and experte to set vp dycknesse. These gyue sentence with the vngodly for rewardes, but condemne the iust cause of the rightuous.

Therefore, like as fyre licketh vp the strawe, and as the flame cōsumeth the stubble: Euen so (when their root is ful) their blossom shal vanishe awaye like dust or smoke for they despyse the lawe of the LORDE of hostes, and blasphemie the worde of the holy maker of Israel.

Therefore is the wrath of the LORDE kindled also agaynst his people, and he shal keth his honde at them: yee he shal smyte so, that the hilles shal tremble. And their carcasses shal lye in the open stretes, like myre. After all this, the wrath of God shal not cease, but he shal stretch his hōde wyder. And he shal gyue a tokē vnto a straunge people, and call vnto them in a farr countrie: and beholde, they shal come hastily with spede. There is not one saynt nor feble amonge them, no not a slogisly nor sleepy parson. There shal not one of them put of the gyrdle from his loynes, nor lose the lacher of his shue. Their arrows are sharpe, and their bowes bent. Their horse hoes are like flynt, and their cartwheles like a stormy wynde. Their crie is as it were of a lyon, and the roaringe of them like lyons helpes. They shal roare, and hatch vp the praye, and no man shal recover it or get it from the. In that daye they shal be so scarce vpon them, as the see. And yee like vnto the londe, beholde, it shalbe all darcknesse and sorowe. Yee loke to be anen: beholde, it shalbe darck with careful desperation.

The vii Chapter.

In the same yere y kynge Oshas dyed, y Iane the LORDE sittynge vpon an high and gloriouse seate, and his trayne fylled y palace. From aboue flakred the Seraphims, a herof every one had sex wynges. With twayne ech couered his face, w twayne his fete, and with twayne dyd he flye. They cried also ech one to other on this maner: holy, holy, holy is the LORDE of hostes. The whole world is ful of his glory. See the geastes and dorechekes moued at the criege, and the horse was ful of smoke. Then I sayde: Who is me. For I was astonyshe: that I (which am a man of vncleynnes, and dwell amonge people y hath vncleynnes also: Shulde y y kynge and LORDE of hostes with my ne eyes.

Then fiewe one of the Seraphims vnto me, hauinge a hote cole in his honde, a hich he had taken from the auter with the tonges, and touchd my mouth, and sayde: lo, this hath touchd thy mouth, and thy vrighteousnes is taken awaye, and thy synne forgiven. After this I herde the voyce of the LORDE takynge aduysment on this maner: Whom shal I sende, and who wilke cure messanger? The I sayde: here am I, sende me. And so he sayde: go, and tel this people: yee shall heare in deede, but yee shal not vnderstande, yee shal plainly see, and not perceaue. Hard en the hart of this people, stoppe their eares, and shut their eyes, that they se not w their eyes, heare not with their eares, and vnderstande not with their hartes, and conuerte and be healed.

Then spake I: LORDE, how longe shall swere: vntil the cities be utterly without inhabitours, and y houses without men, till the lōde be also desolate, and lye vnbuylded. For the LORDE shal take the men far awaye, so that the londe shal lye waiste. Nevertheless, the tenth parte shal remayne therein, for it shal conuerte and be fructifull. And likewise as the Terebintes and Okerrees bunge forth their frutes, so shal the holy fede haue frute.

The seuenth Chapter.

It happened in the tyme of Ahas the sonne of Ionathas, which was the sonne of Joathan kynge of Iuda: that Rezin the kynge of Siria, and Poca Rome lies sonne, kynge of Israel: wente vp to ward Jerusalem to beseye it (but wame it not). Now when the house of Dauid (that is Ahas) herde worde therof, y Siria and Ephraim were confederate together: his herrequated (yee and y herres also of his people) like as a tre in the felde, that is moued with the wynde.

Then sayde God vnto Esay: go mete Ahas (thou and thy sonne Sear Jasub) at the heade of y ouer pole, in the fore path by the fullers grounde, and saye vnto him: take hede to thyself and be still, but feare not, nether be saynt harted, for these two tales: that is: for these two smokynge fyre brandes, the wrath and furiousnes of Rezin the Sirian and Rome lies sonne: because that the kynge of Siria Ephraim and Rome lies sonne haue wickedly conspyred agaynst the, sayenge: We will go downe in to Iuda, vnto the, and brynge them vnder vs, and set a kynge there. euen the sonne of Taball. For thus saith the LORDE God thereto, It shall not so go forth, nether come so to passe: for the head citie of y Sirians is Damascus, but the head of Damascus is Rezin. And after fyue and threescore yere, shal Ephraim be nomore a people. And the chiefe citie of Ephraim is Samaria, but the head of Samaria is Rome lies sonne. And yf ye beleue not, there shall no promyse be kepte with you.

Moreover, God spake vnto Ahas, sayenge: requyre a token of the LORDE thy God, whether it be towarde the depty beneath or towarde y hight above. The sayde Ahas: I will requyre none, nether will I tempte the LORDE. The LORDE answered: Then heare to, ye of the house of Dauid: Is it not ynough for you, that ye be greuous vnto men, but ye must greue my God also? And therefore the LORDE shal geue you a token of himself: Beholde, a virgin shal conceaue and beare a sonne, and shal call his name Emanuel. But ter and hony shal he eate, y he maye knowe the enel, and chose y good. But ouer that childe come to knowlege, releschue the enel and chose the good: The londe (that thou art so afraide for) shalbe deplorate of both hir kynges.

The LORDE also shal sende a tyme vpon the, vpon thy people, and vnto thy fathers house (such as neuer came sence the tyme y Ephraim departed from Iuda) thore w y kynge of the Assirians. For at the same tyme shal the LORDE whyle for the flyes y are aboute the water of Egypte, and for y Beyes in the Assirians londe. These shall come, and shal light all in the valeyes, in y vountes of stone, vpon all grene thynges, and in all corners.

At the same tyme shal the LORDE shene the hayre of the heade and the fete and the beard cleue of, with the rasoure that he shal paye them withall beyonde the water: namely, with y kynge of the Assirians. At the same tyme shal a man lye with a corwe, and two shepe. Then because of the aboundaunce of mylk, he shal make butter and eat it. So that every one which remaineth in the londe, shal eate butter and hony. At the same tyme all vynyardes (though there be a thousand vynes in one, and were solde for a thousand siluer linges) shalbe turned to briers and thornes. Like as they shal come in to the londe with arrows and bowes, so shal all the londe become briers and thornes. And as for all hilles that now are hewen downe, thou shalt not come vnto them, for feare of briers and thornes. But the catel shal be dryuen thither, and the shepe shal fede there.

The viii Chapter.

Where the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take the a greate leaf, and wryte in it, as men do with a penne, that he spede him to robbe, and haist him to spoyle. And Immediately I called vnto me faithful wytnesses: Oshas the prest, and Zacharias y sonne of Barachias. After that went I vnto the prophetisse, that now had conceaue and borne a sonne. Then sayde the LORDE to me: geue him this name: Maher schal hafchbas, that is: a speedie robber, an hastie spoyle. For why, ouer the childe shal haue knowlege to saye: Abi and Im, y is father, and mother: shal y riches of Damascus and y substance of Samaria be take awaye, thore w the kynge of y Assirians.

B The LORDE spake also unto me, sayenge: for so moch as the people refuseth the stillrenninge water of Silo, and put their delite in Rezin and Remelies sonne. Beholde, the LORDE shal bring mightie and great flondes of water vpon them: namely, yf kynges of the Assirians with all his power.
Which shall poure out his fury vnto euery man, and renne ouer all their bankes.
And shal breake in vpon Iuda, increasynge in power, till he get him by the throte. He shal fyl also the wydenesse of thy londe wth his brode wynges, O Emanuel. Go together ye people, and gather you, hearken to all ye of farre countrees. Mustre you, and gather you: mustre you and gather you, take youre counsel together, yet must youre counsel come to nought: go in honde withal, yet shal it not prosper. Excepte Emanuel: (that is God) be with us. For the LORDE chastised me, and tete me by yf hon-de, and warned me, sayenge vnto me: that I shulde not walke in the waye of this peple. He sayde morouer: rounde with none of the, who so euer saye: yonder people are bounde together. Neuertheles feare them not, nether be a frayde of them, but sanctifie the LORDE of hoostes, let him be youre feare and drede. For he is the sanctifieng, and stone to stomble at, yf rock to fall vpon,
a snare and net to both the houses: to Irael, and the inhabitours of Ierusalem. And many shal stomble, fall, and be broke vpon him: yet they shal be snared and taken.

D Now laye the witness together (sayde the LORDE) and scale the lawe with my disciples. Thus I waite vpon the LORDE, that hath turned his face from the house of Jacob, and I loke vnto him. But lo, as forme, and the children which the LORDE hath geuen me: we are a token and a wondre in Irael, for the LORDE of hoostes sake, which dwelleth vpon the hill of Syon.

And therfore yf they saye vnto you: aske counsel at the soothsayers, with es, charmers and conurers, then make them this answere: Is there a people enywhere, that asketh not counsel at his God: whether it be concernynge the dead, or the lyuynge?
Yf eny man want light, let him loke vpon the lawe and the testimony, whether they speake not after this meanynge. Yf he do not this, he stombleth and suffreth hunger.
And yf he suffreth hunger, he is out of pacience, and blasphemeth his kyng and his God. Then loke he vpwarde, and dow-ne warde to the earth, and beholde, there

The ix. Chapter

Well sene, that yf londe of Zabulon and the londe of Nephtali (where thorow the see waye goeth ouer Jordane in to the lon-de of Galilee) was at the first in litle trouble, but afterward sore vexed.

Neuertheles yf people that haue dwelt in darcknesse, shal see a greate light. As for them that dwelt in the londe of the shade we of death, vpon them shal the light shy-ne. Shalt thou multiplie the people, and not increase the ioye also? They shal reioyse before the euen as men make mery in haruest, and as men that haue gotten the victory, when they deale the spoyle. For thou shalt breake the yocke of the peoples burthen: the staff of hys shulder, and the rod of his oppresseure, as in yf daye at Madia.

Morouer all temerarious and sedicious power (ye where there is but a core fylde wth bloude) shal be burnt, and fede the fyre.
For vnto us a childe shal be borne, and vnto us a sonne shal be geue. Vpon his shulder shal the kyngdome lye, and he shal be called wth his owne name: The wonderous gener of counsel, the mightie God, the everlastinge father, the prynce of peace, he shal make an ende to encrease the kyngdome and peace, and shal sit vpon the seate of David and in his kyngdome, to set vp the same, to sta-blishe it with equyte and righteounesse, from thence forth for evermore. This shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe.

The LORDE sent a worde in to Jacob,
the same is come in to Irael. All the people also of Ephraim, and they that dwell in Samaria, can saye with pryde and hie ste-maces, on this maner: The tyle worde is fallen downe, but we will buylde it with harder stones. The Molbery tymbre ys bo-ten, but we shal set it vp agayne with Cedre. Neuertheles, the LORDE shal prepare Rezin the enemye agaynst the, and so odre their aduersaries, that yf Surians shal laye holde vpon them before, and the phili-stynes behynde, and so denure Irael with open mouth.

After all this, the wrath of the LORDE shal not cease, but yet his hande shal be stretched out still. For the people turneth not vnto him, that chastiseth them, nether do they seke the LORDE of hoostes. Therfore the LORDE shal rote out of Irael both heade and tale, braunch and twygge in one daye. By the heade, is vnderstonde the Senatoure and honorable man, and by yf tale, the prophet that preacheth lyes. For all they which enfourme the people that they be in a right case, soch be disceainers.

Soch as men thynke also to be perfecte amonge these, are but cast awaye.

Therfore shal the LORDE haue no pleasure in their yonge me, nether fauoure their fatherlesse and wydowes. For they are altogether ypocrites and wicked, and all their mouthes speake fely. After all this shal not the LORDEs wrath cease, but yet his honde shal be stretched out still. For the ragodly burne, as a fyre in the briers and thornes: And as it were out of a fyre in a wod or a redbush, so ascendeth the smoke of their pryde.

For this cause shal yf wrath of the LOR-DE of hoostes fall vpon the londe, and the people shal be consumed, as it were with fy-re, no man shal spare his brother. Yf a man do turne him to the right honde, he shal famish, or to the lefte hande to eat, he shal not haue ynough. Euery man shal eate the flesh of his owne arme: Manasses shal ea-te Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasses, and they both shal eate Iuda. After all this
shal not the LORDEs wrath cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

The tenth chapter.

Woe be vnto you yf make vnrightheous lawes, and devyse thinges, which be to harde for to kepe: wherthorow the poore are oppressed, on enery syde, and the in-nocentes of my people are there with robbed of iudgment: that wydowes maye be your praye, and that ye maye robbe the fatherlesse. What will ye do in tyme of the visitation and destruction, that shal come from farre: To whom will ye reune for helpe: or to whom will ye geue youre honoure, that he maye kepe it: that ye come not amonge the prisoners, or lye amonge the dead? After all this shal not the wrath of the LORDE cease, but yet shal his honde be stretched out still.

Woe be also vnto Assur, which is a staff of my wrath, in whose honde is the rod of my punnyshment. For I shal sende him amonge those ypocritish poeple, amonge the people that haue deserued my disfauour: I shal sende him: that he maye utterly robbe them, spoyle them, and treade them downe like the myre in the strete. Howbeit his meanynge is not so, nether thinketh his harte of this fashion. But he ymagineth only, how he maye ouerthrowe and destroye moch people, for he saith: are not my princes all kynges? Is not Calno as ea-sie to wynde, as Charchamis? Is it harder to conquere Antiochia then Arphad? Or is it lighter to ouercome Damascus the Samaria? As who say: I were able to wynde the kyngdome of the Idolaters and their goddess, but not Ierusalem and Samaria.

Shal I not do vnto Ierusalem and their ymages, as I dyd vnto Samaria and the ir ymages?

Wherfore the LORDE saith: As soone
as I haue perfourmed my whole worke vpon the hyl of Syon and Ierusalem: the will I also vyset the noble and stoute kyng of Assiria, with his wysdome and pry-
de. For he stendeth thus in his owne coceate: This do I, thorow the power of myne owne honde, and thorow my wysdome: For I am wyse, I am he that remoue the lon-des of the people, I robbe their prynces:
and (like one of the worthies) I dryue them from their hie seates. My honde hath foun-de out the hoostes of the people, as it were a nest. And like as egges, that were lay-de here and there, are gathered together:
So do I gather all countrees. And there is no man, yf darre be so bolde, as to touch a fether, that darre open his mouth, or once whisper.

But doth the are boost itself, agaynst him yf heweth therewith, or doth the sawe make eny krakinge, agaynst him that rinleth it? That were euen like, as yf the red dyderalte it self agaynst him, that beareth it: or as though yf staff shulde magnifie it self, as who saye: it were no wodde. Therfore shal the LORDE of hoostes sende him po-uerie in his riches, and burne vp his power, as it were with a fyre. But the light of Irael shal be yf fyre, and his Sanctuary shal be the flame, and it shal kyndle, and burne vp his thornes and briers in one daye, yee all the glory of his woddes and felde shal be consumed with body and soule. As for himself, he shal be as one chased awaye. The trees also of his felde shal be of soch a nombre, that a childe maye tell them.

After yf daye shal the remnant of Irael, and soch as are escaped out of the house of Jacob, seke no more coforte at him that smote them, but shal comforte themselves with faithfulness and treuth in the LOR-

DE, the holy, one of Israel. Theremaunt, yee and the posterite of Jacob, shal conuer- te vnto God the mighty one. For though thy people (o Israel) be as the sonde of the see, yet shal but the remnaunt of them only conuerce vnto him. Perfecte is the iudgment of him that floweth in rightousnesse: and therfore y<sup>e</sup> LORDE of hoostes shal perfectly fulfil the thinge, that he hath determyned in the myddest of the whole worlde. Therfore thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: Thou my people, that dwellest in Sion, be not a frayde for the kinge of the Assirians: he shal wagge his staff at the, yee and beate the with the rodd, as the Egypciā dyd sometye: But soone after, shal my wrath and my indignacion be fulfilled agaynst their blasphemies.

Then shal his burthen be taken from thy shulders, and his yock from thy neck, yee the same yock shal corrupte for very fatnesse. he shal come to Aiath, and go thorow toward Migron. But at Machmas shal he muster his hooste, and go ouer y<sup>e</sup> foorde. Gaba shal be their resting place, Rhuma shal be a stayde, Gabea Saul shal sle awaye. The voyce of y<sup>e</sup> noyse of thy houses (o daughter Galim) shalbe herde vnto lais and to Anathoth, which also shalbe in trouble. Madmena shal tremble for feare, but the cities of Gabim are many, yet shal he remayne at Nob that daye. After that, shal he lift vp his honde agaynst the mount Sion, and agaynst the hill of Jerusalem. But se, the LORDE God of hoostes shal take awaye the proude from thence, wth feare. he shal hew downe the proude, and fel the hie mynded. The thornes of the wod shalbe rooted out wth yron, and Libanus shal haue a mightie fall.

After this there shal come a rod forth of y<sup>e</sup> kynrede of Jesse, and a blossome out of his rote. For he shal not gene sentence, after the thinge y<sup>e</sup> shal be brought before his eyes, nether reprove a matter at the first hearinge: but with rightousnesse shal he iudge the poore, and with holynes shal herefourme the symple of the worlde. he shal smyte y<sup>e</sup> wolde with y<sup>e</sup> staff of his mouth, & with y<sup>e</sup> breath of his mouth shal he slaye the wicked. Rightousnesse shalbe the gyrdle of his loynes, treuth and faithfulness the gyrdinge vp of his raynes. The shal y<sup>e</sup> wolfe dwell with the labe, and the leopard shal lye downe by the goat. Bullokes, lyons and catel shal kepe company together, so that a litle childe shal drye them forth. The cowe and the Beere shal fede together, and their yongones shal lye together. The lye shal eate strawe like the ore, or the corne. The childe whyle he sucketh, shal haue a desyre to the serpent's nest, and whē he is weened, he shal put his hande in to the Cockatrice denne. Roman shal do euil to another, no man shal destroye another, in all the hill of my Sanctuary. For the earth shalbe ful of y<sup>e</sup> knowlege of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, euen as though the water of the see flowed ouer the earth.

Then shal the Gentiles enquire after the rote of Jesse (which shalbe set vp for a token vnto the Gentiles) for his dwellinge shalbe glorious. At the same tyme shal the LORDE take in honde agayne, to conquer y<sup>e</sup> remnaunt of his people (which are lefte alyne) from the Assirians, Egypciā, Arabians, Morians, Elamites, Caldeyes, Antiochiā and Iudes of the see. And he shal set vp a toke amonge the Gentiles, and gather together y<sup>e</sup> dispersed of Israel, yee and the outcastes of Iuda from the foure corners of y<sup>e</sup> worlde. The hatred of Ephraim, and y<sup>e</sup> enmyte of Iuda shalbe cleue rooted out. Ephraim shal beare no euil wil to Iuda, and Iuda shal not hate Ephraim: but they both together shal flye vpo<sup>s</sup> the shulders of the philistynes toward the West, and spoyle them together that dwell toward the East. The Ioumytes and the Moabites shal let their hōdes fall, and the Ammonites shalbe obedient vnto them.

The LORDE also shal cleue the tynnes of the Egypciā see, and with a mightie wynde shal he lift vp his honde ouer Nilus, and shal smyte his seuē streames and make men go ouer drye shod. And thus shal he make a waye for his people, y<sup>e</sup> remayneth from the Assirians, like as it happened to y<sup>e</sup> Israelites, what tyme they departed out of the lande of Egypte.

wrath, and hast mercy vpon me. Beholbe, God is my health, in whom I trust, and am not a frayde. For the LORDE God is my strength, and my prayse, he also shalbe my refuge. Therfore with ioye shal ye drawe water out of the welles of the Samioure; and then shal ye saye: Let vs gene thanks vnto the lorde, and call vpon his name, and declare his counceyls amonge the people, and kepe them in remembraunce, for his name is excellent. O synge praises vnto the LORDE, for he doth greates thinges, as it is knowne in all the worlde. Crie out, and be glad, thou that dwellest in Sion, for greates is thy pryncer the holy one of Israel.

The XIII. Chapter.

This is y<sup>e</sup> hevy burthe of Babilō, which Esaye the sonne of Amos dyd se. Make some totes to the hie hilles, call vnto them, holde vp youre hōde, that the prynces maye go in at the dore. For I will sende for my debites and my gyautes (sayeth the LORDE) and in my wrath I will call for soch, as triumphe in my glory.

With that, me thought I herde in the mountaynes, a noyse, like as it had bene of a greates people: and a russhinge, as though the kyngdomes of all nacions had come together. (And the LORDE of hoostes was the caprayne of the whole armye.) As they had come not only out of farre countrees, but also from the endes of the heauens: Euen the LORDE himself with the ministers of his wrath, to destroye the whole lōde. Mourne therfore, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and cometh as a destroyer from y<sup>e</sup> almighty. Then shall all hondes be letten downe, and all mens herces shal melt awaie, they shal stonde in feare, carefulesse and sorrowe shal come vpo<sup>s</sup> them, and they shal haue payne, as a woman that traueleth with childe. One shall eue be abashed of another, & their faces shal burne, like y<sup>e</sup> flame.

For o, the daye of the LORDE shal come, terrible, full of indignacion and wrath: to make the lōde waite, and to root out the synne therof. For the starres and planetes of heauen shal not gene their light, the Sonne shalbe quenched in the rysinge, and the Moone shal not shyne with his light. And I will punish the wickednesse of the worlde, & the synnes of the vngodly, sayeth the LORDE. The byestomackes of the proude will I take awaye, and will laye downe the boostinge of cyrautes. I will make a man dearer the fine golde, and a man to be more worth, the a golden wedge of Ophir. Morouer, I will so shake the heauē, that the earth shal remo out of hir place.

Thus shall it go wth Babilon, in the wrath of the LORDE of hoostes in y<sup>e</sup> daye of his fearfull indignacio. And Babilon shalbe as an hunted or chased doo, and as a flocke wth out a shepherde. Every mā shal turne to his owne people, & fle echone into his owne lōde. Who so is founde alone, shalbe shot thorow: And who so gather together, shalbe destroyed wth the swerde. Their children shalbe slayne before their eyes, their houses spoyled, & their wyues rauynshed. For lo, I shall bringe vp y<sup>e</sup> Medes agaynst the, which shal not regarde syluer, nor be desyrons of golde. Then shall yonge mens bowes be knapped asunder. The Medes shal haue no pitie vpo<sup>s</sup> womē wth childe, & their faces shal not spare y<sup>e</sup> childe. And Babilō (y<sup>e</sup> glory of kyngdomes and bewtie of the Caldees hōd) shalbe destroyed, euen as God destroyed Sodom & Gomora. It shal neuer be more inhabited, ne- ther shal there be eny more dwellinge there, from generacion to generacion.

Gen. 19. c

The Arabians shal make no mo tentes there, nether shal the shepardes make their foldes there eny more: but wybe bestes shal lie there, & y<sup>e</sup> houses shalbe full of greates Oules. Estriches shal dwell there, & Apes shal daunse there: The litle Oules shal crie in the palaces, one after another, & Dragons shalbe in the pleasant perlours. And as for Babilons tyme, it is at honde, & hir dayes maye not be longe absent.

The XIII. Chapter.

But y<sup>e</sup> LORDE wilbe mercysfull vnto Ia- cob, & wyll take vp Israel agayne, & set the in their owne lōde. Strangers shal cleue vnto the, & get the to y<sup>e</sup> house of Jacob. They shal take y<sup>e</sup> people, & cary the home wth the. And y<sup>e</sup> horse of Israel shal haue the in possession, for seruautes & maydes in y<sup>e</sup> lōde of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE. They shal take those prisoners, whose captyues they had bene afore: & rule those, y<sup>e</sup> had oppressed the. When y<sup>e</sup> LORDE now shal bringe y<sup>e</sup> to rest, fro y<sup>e</sup> traunyle, feare, & harde bondage y<sup>e</sup> thou wast laden with all: then shalt thou vse this mockage vpon y<sup>e</sup> kinge of Babilon, & saye: How happeneth it y<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> oppressour leaueth of? It y<sup>e</sup> golden tribute come to an ende? Doubtes the LORDE hath broken the staff of the vngodly, & the cepter of y<sup>e</sup> lordly. Which whē he is wroth, smyteth y<sup>e</sup> people wth durable strokes, & in his wōders he persecuteth the, & tamereth the continually. And therfore y<sup>e</sup> whole worlde is now at rest and quyetnesse, & men synge for ioye.

They that se the, shal narrowly loke vpon the, and thinke in them selues, sayenge: Is this the man, that brought all lordes in feare, and made & Kingdomes afraide: Is this he that made the wolde in a manner wast, & and layde the cities to the grounde, which let not his prisoners go home?

Eze. 31. c

How happeneth it, that the kynges of all people lie, every one at home in his owne palace, with worshippe, and thou art cast out of thy graue like a wilde braunch: like as dead mens rayment that are shott thorow with the swerde: as they that go downe to the stones of the depe: as a dead carse that is troden vnder fete: and art not buried w them: Euen because that thou hast waisted thy lode, and destroyed thy people. For the generacion of the wicked shalbe without hono, for ener. There shal a waye be sought to destroye their childre, for their fathers wickednes: they shal not come vp agayne to possesse the londe, and fyll the wolde ful of castels and townes.

DI wil stonde vp agaynst them (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and root out & name and generacion of Babilon (saith the LORDE) & wil geue it to the Otters, and wil make water poddels of it. And I wil swepe them out with the besome of destruccion, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. The LORDE of hoostes hath sworne an ooth, sayenge: It shal come to passe as I haue determined: & shalbe fulfilled as I haue denyed. The Assirians shalbe destroyed in my londe, and vpon my mountayn: taines will I treade them vnder fore. Wher thorow his yocke shal come from you, & his burthen shalbe taken from youre shulders. This deuycce hath God taken thorow the whole wolde, and thus is his honde stretched out ouer all people. For ys the LORDE of hoostes determe a thinge, who wyl dysnulle it: And ys he stretch forth his honde, who wil holde it in agayne?

The same yere that kyng Achas dyd, & God threathened by Esay on this maner: Reioyse not (thou whole Palestina) as though & rod of him & beateh the were broken: for out of & serpent's rote, there shal waxe a bratatrice, & the frute shalbe a fyrie worme. But the poore shal fede of the best thinges, and the symple shal dwell in safetie. Thy rotes wil I destroye w hunger, and it shal slay & remnant. Mourn ye portes, wepe ye Cities. And feare thou (o whole Palestina) for thou shal come fro the North a smoke, whose power no man maye abyde. Who shall then mainteyne the messages of the Gentyles: But the LORDE stablisheth Syon, & the poore of my people shal put their trust in him.

The XV. Chapter.

This is & heuy burthe vpon Moab: Arise Moab was destroyed (as me thought) in the night season: The walles of Moab perished in the night, & vanished awaye: They wete to Baith and Dibon in the hie places for to wepe: Moab did mourne fro Medba: All their heades were colled, and all their beardes shauen. In their stretes they gyded aboute with sack cloth. In all the toppes of their houses & stretes was there nothinge, but mournynge and wepinge. Zesebon and Eleale cried, that their voyce was herde vnto Jahaz. The worthies also of Moab bleared and cried for very sorrow of their myndes: Wo is my hert for Moab sake. They fled vnto the cite of Zoar, which is like a fayre fruteful bullock, they went up to Lubith, wepinge. The waye toward Beronaim was ful of lamentacion for & harte. The waters of Nimrim were dried vp, the grasse was wythried, the herbes destroyed, & what necessary grene thinge there was destroyed. In like maner the thinge & was left of their substaunce, they caried it by water to Arabi. The crie went ouer the whole londe of Moab: from Eglaim vnto Beer, & there nothinge but mournynge. The waters of Dimon were full of blonde, for & crie: mie had sent thither a bonde of men, which as a lyon, layde waite for the remnant of the londe, and for them & were escaped.

The xvi. Chapter.

Ihesent the lordes of the lode a man of warre, from the rocke that lieth toward the deserte, vnto the hill of the daughter Sion (for as for the daughters of Moab, they were as it had bene a trymblinge byde, & is put out of hir nest, by the fery of Arnon) which messaunger sayde: gather youre councel, come together, couer vs with youre shadowe in the myddaye, as the night doth: hyde the chaced, & bewaie not the that are fled, let the persecuted abyde dwel amonge you, be oure open refuge agaynst the destroyer: for the aduersary oppreseth vs, the robber vndoeth vs, & the tyranted dryueth vs out of oure londe. But & Trone of youre Kingdome is ful of grace, therefore he that syteth vpon it w' faitfulnesse & treuth in the house of David, knowe the thinge & do his diligence to helpe shortly, accordinge to Equite and rightuousnes. As for Moabs pnde (shal they answeere) it is well knowne. And all though they be excellent, proude, arrogant, & he mynded: yet is their strength nothinge like. And therfore Moab complayneth vnto Moab, wher thorow they come all to mourne: & now & they be smytten, they take their deuycce beneth by the bryck wall, and make their complaynte.

The suburbs also of Zesebon were made wast, & the princes of the Gentyles bewed downe & vynyardes of Sibma, which were planted with noble grapes, and spied vnto Jazer, and went vnto the ende of the deserte, whose braunches stretched their selues forth beyonde the see. Therefore I mourned for Jazer, & for & vynyardes of Sibma w' greate sorrow. I poured my teares vpon Zesebon & Eleale, for all their songes were layde downe, in their haruest & gatheringe of their grapes: Myrth and chere was gone out of & felde & vynyardes, in so moch, that no man was glad ner synge. There wete no reader in to the wynepresse, their mery chere was layde downe. Wherfore my bely robled (as it had bene a lute) for Moabs sake, & myne inwarde membres, for the bryck walles sake. For it happened thus also: when Moab sawe that she was turned vpon syde downe, she went vpon an hie in to hir sanctuary to make hir prayer there, but she might not: & helped. This is the deuycce, which the LORDE toke in honde at that tyme agaynst Moab. But now the LORDE sayeth thus: In thre yere shal & power of Moab w' their pope (which is greate) be minished, like as & burthe of an hyred seruaunte: And as for & remnant of them, they shalbe lesse then a fewe, and not refened moch worth.

The xvij. Chapter.

This is the heuy burthe vpon Damascus: Beholde, Damascus shal be nomore a cite, but an heape of broken stones. The cities of Aroer shalbe wast, The catel shal lie there, & nomā shal fraye the awaye. Ephraim shal no more be stroge, & Damascus shal no more be a Kingdome. And as for & glory of & remnant of & Sirians, it shalbe as the glory of the childre of Israel, saith & LORDE of hoostes. At that tyme also shal & glory of Jacob be very poore, & his fatnes leane. It shal happē to the, as when one sheareth in harness, which cutteth his handful w' the sickle, & when one gathereth & sheaves together in the valley, of Rephaim, there remayneth yet some ears ouer. Or as when one shaketh an elyue tre, which syndeth but two or thre elyue berries aboue in the toppe, and foure or fyue in the braunches. Thus the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken.

Then shal man couerte agayne vnto his maker, & turne his eyes to the holy one of Israel. And shal not turne to the altars that are & worke of his owne hōdes, nether shal he loke vpon groaues & ymages, which his fingers haue wrought. At the same tyme shal their stronge cities be desolate, like as were once & forsake plowes & come, which they forsoke, for feare of & children of Israel.

So shalt thou (o Damascus) be desolate, because thou hast forgottē God & Samion re, & hast not called to remembraunce & rock of thy strength, Wherfore thou hast also set a fayre plāte, & grafted a straunge braunch. In the daye when thou diddest plante it, it was greate, and gaue soone the frute of the fete: But in the daye of haruest, thou shalt reape an heape of sorowes & miseries.

Wo be to the multitude of moch people, that rush in like the see, and to the heape of folke, that renne ouer all like greate waters. For though so many people increasē as the flowinge waters, and though they be armed, yet they fle farre of, and vanish awaye like the dust with the wynde vpon an hill, and as the whyle wynde thorow a stome. Though they be fearful at night, yet in the morninge it is gone with the, This is their porcion, that do vs harme, and heretage of them, that robbe vs.

See all ye y sit in the compasse of the worlde, and dwell vpon the earth: when the token shalbe geuen vpo the mountaynes, then loke vp: and when the home bloweth, then herken to, for thus hath y LORDE sayde vnto me. I layde me downe, and pondried the matter in my houle, at the noone daye when it was hote: and there fel a myslinge shower, like a dew, as it happeneth in harvest. But the frutes, were not yet ripe cut of, and the grapes were but yonge and grene. Then one smore of the grapes with an hoke, yee he hewed downe also the burwes and the braunches, z dyd cast the awaye. And thus they were layde waiste, for the foules of the mountaynes, and for y beastes of the earth together. So y the foules sat ther vpon, and the beastes of the earth wyntered there. Then shal there be a present brought vnto the LORDE of hoostes: euen that harde folke, that fearful folke, and that further is the this: y desperate and pyllid folke (whose londe is deuyled from vs with floudes of water) vnto the place of the name of the LORDE of hoostes: euen vnto the hill of Sion.

A This is the heuy burthen vpon Egipte: Beholde, the LORDE wil ryde vpon a swifte cloude, and come in to Egipte. And the goddes of Egipte shal trymble at his comynge, and the hert of Egipte shal quake within her. For thus saith the LORDE: I wil stere vp the Egyptians one agaynst a nother amonge them selues, so that one shalbe euer agaynst his brother and neighbour, yee one cite agaynst another, and one kyngdome agaynst another. And Egipte shalbe choked in hir self. Whe they are coun cel at their goddes, at their prophetes, at their soyt sayers and witches: then will I bunge their counsel to naught.

Sochas labour e vpon slay z sylcke, shal come to pouerte, z they also that weene fyne woikes. All the poundes of Egipte, all the policie of their Moates z diches shal come to naught.

See the vndiscerit prynces of Zoan, the coun cel of the wyse Senatours of Pharaos, shal turne to foolishnesse: Those that daue boaste z saye of Pharaos behalfe: I am come of wyse people, I am come of y olde regall progeny. But where are now thy wyse me? Let them tel the z shewe the, what the LOR DE of hoostes hath taken in honde agaynst Egipte. Fooles are those prynces of Zoan, z proude are the prynces of Noph: yee they dysceane Egipte with the nobilitie of their stocke. For the LORDE hath made Egipte dionck with the spiete of erreure, and they shal vse it in all matters: eue like as a dionck ma goeth sperwinge aboute. For Egipte shal lacke good coun cel, so y they shal not knowe what to do, nether begynnynge nor ende, nether vpon the lode nor water. The shal y Egiptians be like vnto we me, as frayde z affo ied, at the liftinge vp of the hode, which y LORDE of hoostes shal lifte vp ouer them.

The londe of Iuda also shal make the Egiptians a frayde, who so doth but speake vpon it, shal put them in feare: And that be cause of the coun cel, which y LORDE of hoostes hath deuysed agaynst them. Then shal the fyne cities of Egipte speake with the Canaanites tange, and sweare by the LORDE of hoostes, z Helopolis shalbe one of them. At the same tyme shal the LORDE of hoostes haue an auter in the myddest of the lon de of Egipte, with this tittle ther by: Vnto the LORDE. This shalbe a token or testame ny vnto the LORDE of hoostes in the londe of Egipte, when they shal crie vnto him, be cause of those that oppresse them: that he shal sende them a captayne and a Samioun to deliuer them.

Moreover, Egipte shalbe bought vnto the LORDE, and the Egyptians also shal knowe the LORDE at the same tyme: they shal do him reuerence with peace offringes, and with meat offringes: they shal promyse him offringes, yee z paye him also. Thus the LOR DE shal smyte Egipte, z heale it agayne.

shal they turne to y LORDE, and he also shal haue mercy vpo them, and saue them. Then shal there be a comon waye out of Egipte into Assiria. The Assirians shal come in to Egipte, and the Egyptians in to Assiria. The Egyptians also and the Assirians shal both haue one Gods seruyce. Then shal Is rael with honoure be the thirde to Egipte and Assur. And the LORDE of hoostes shal blesse them, sayenge: Blessed is my people of the Egyptians, Assur is the worke of my ho des, but Israel is myne inheritaunce.

And so he dyd, goinge naked z barefo te. Then sayde the LORDE: where as my ser uant Esaye goeth naked and barefote, it is a token and signifieng of the thinge, that after thre yeare shal come vpo Egipte and Ethiopia. For euen thus shal the kinge of the Assirians driue both yonge and olde, as prisoners naked and barefote, out of Egi pte and Ethiopia. And shal dyscouer y sha me of Egipte. They shalbe also at their wit tes ende, and ashamed one of another: the Egyptians of the Morians, and the Mo rians of the Egyptians, at the sight of the it glory.

Moreover they that dwel in y Iles shal saye euen the same daye: beholde, this is ou re hope, to whom we fled to seke helpe, that we might be deliuered from the kinge of y Assirians. How will we escape?

And the lyon cried: LORDE, I haue stonde waytinge all the whole daye, and haue kepre my watch all the night. For thus hath the LOR DE spoken vnto me: ouer a yeare shal all the power of Cedar be gone, like as when the of fice of an hyred seruaunte goeth out: And, the remnaunt of the good Archers of Cedar, shalbe very fewe. be out the valley of Visiōs, and breake downe the walles, with such a crack, that it shal geue a sownde in the mountaynes.

B I sawe the Elamites take the quyners to carte and to horse, and that the walles were bare from harnessse. Thy goodly valleys were ful of Charettes, the horse men made them soone to besege the gates. Then was the coueringe of Juda put from thence, and then was sene the sege of the tymbie house. There shal ye see the riftes in the walles of the cite of Dauid, wherof there shal be many. Ye shal gather together the waters of the lower pole, and tel the houses of Jerusalem, and breake of some of the to kepe y walles. And ye shal make a pyt betwixt y twa yne walles of the water of the olde pole, and nothinge regarde him, that toke it in honde and made it. And at the same tyme shal y LORDE of hoostes cal me to wepinge mourninge, to baldnesse and putinge on of sack clothe. But they to fulfil their lust and wilfulness, slaughter oxen, they kyll shepe, they eate costly meate, & drynke wyne: let vs eate and drinke, tomorrow we shal die. Neuertheless whē the LORDE of hoostes herde of it, he sayde: yee, yf this wickednes of yours shal be remitted, ye must die for it. This hath y LORDE God of hoostes spoken.

C Thus sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes: Go in to the treasury vnto Sobna the gouernoure, and saye vnto him: What hast thou here to do? & from whence comest thou? that thou hast made the a graue here? For he had caused a costly tombe of stone to be made for himself, and a place to lye in to be hewen out of a rock. Beholde the LORDE shal cast the out by violence, he will decke the of another fashion, and put vpon the a strange clothe. He shal carie y in to a farre countre, like a ball with his hondes. There shalt thou die, there shal the pompe of thy charettes haue an ende: thou vyllayne of the house of thy LORDE: I wil shute the out of thine office, and put the from thine estate.

D After this wil I cal my seruante Eliakim, y sonne of helkias, and araye him with thy cote, and gyde him with thy gyrdle, and I wil geue thy power in to his honde. He shal be a father of the citisens of Jerusalem, and of the kynned of Juda. I will also laye the keye of Dauids house vpon his shulders, and yf he open, no man shal shut, and yf he do shyte, no man shal open. I wil fasten him to a nale in the place of the most hie faithfulnessse, and he shal be vpon the glorious trone of his fathers house. They shal hage vpon him all the glory of his fathers house, of the children and childers childen, all apparel small and great, all instrumentes of measure & musike. This shal come to passe, (saith the LORDE of hoostes) when the nale, y is fastened to the place of the highest faithfulnessse: shal be pluckt of, And whē the weight that hangeth vpon it, shal fall, be broken, and hewen in peces. For the LORDE himself hath sayde it.

Newen burchen vpon Tirus. Mourn ye shippes of Tharsis, for she is throwne downe to the grounde, and conquered of them, that are come from Cithim. The dwellers of the Ilandes, the marchauntes of Sidon, and they that occupied the see (of whom thou wast ful somtyme) are at a poynte. For by see were there frutes brought vnto the, and all maner of corne by water. Thou wast the comon market of al people. Sidon is sory for it, yee and all y power of the see complaneth, and saith: O y I had neuer traueled with childe, that I had neuer borne eny, y I had nether nourished boye, ner brought vp doughter. As soone as Egypte perceaueth it, she wil be as sory as Tirus it self. Go ouer the see, Mourn ye y dwel in the Isles. Is not that the glorious cite, which hath bene of longe antiquite: whose natyues dwellinge farre of, commende her so greatly: Who hath deuysed such thinges vpon Tirus the crowne of alanes, whose marchauntes and capraynes were the highest and principal of the worlde? Euē the LORDE of hoostes hath deuysed it, that he maye put downe al pompe, and diminish all the glory of the worlde. Go thorow thy londe (o thou doughter of the see) as men go ouer the water, and there is not a gyrdle more.

Thus the LORDE that remoueth the Kingdomes, and hath taken in hande agaynst that mightie Canaan to rote it out: hath stretched out his honde ouer the see, and sayde: From hence forth shalt thou make no more myrth (o thou doughter Sidon) for thou shalt be put downe of the Cethes. Stonde vp therfore, and go where the enemie wil carie the, wher thou shalt also haue no rest. Beholde (for thyne ensample) The Caldees were such a people, that no man was like them, Assur buylded them: he set vp his castles & palaces, and broke them downe agayne. And therfore mourn (ye shippes of the see) for youre power shal be throwne downe.

The prophet Esay.

After that, shal the lxx yeares of Tirus (euen as longe as their kinges life was) be forgotten. And after lxx. yeares, it shal happen to Tirus as with an harlot that playeth vpon a lute. Take thy lute (saie men to her) and go aboute the cite, thou art yet an vnknowne wensche, make pastyme with dynerse balletes, wherby, thou mayest come in to acquaintance. Thus shal it happen after lxx. yeares. The LORDE shal visit the cite of Tirus, and it shal come agayne to hye Marchaundise, and shal occupie with al the Kingdomes that be in the worlde. But all hir occupiege and wynnynge, shal be halowed vnto the LORDE. For then shal they laye vp nothinge behinde them nor vpon heapes: but the marchaundise of Tirus shal beloge vnto the citisens of the LORDE, to the feedinge and sustenynge of the hūgrie, and to the clothynge of the aged.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

Behold, y LORDE shal waiste and plage the worlde, he shal make the face of the earth desolate, & scatre abroad y inhabitours therof. Then shal the prest be as the people, the master as the seruant, the dame like the mayde, the seller like the byer, he that ledeth vpon vsury, like him y boroweth vpon vsury, the creditoure, as the detter. Yee miserably shal y worlde be waysted & clene destroyed. For y LORDE hath so determed in himself. The earth shal be heuye and decaye: The face of y earth shal perishe & fal awaye, the proude people of y worlde shal come to naught, for y earth is corrupte of hir indwellers.

B For why they haue offended y lawe, chaunged the ordinaūces, and made the euerlastinge testamēt of none effecte, And therfore shal the curse deuoure the earth: for they y dwell therē, haue synned. wherfore they shal be brynt also, and those that remayne, shal be very few. The swete wyne shal mourne, the grapes shal be weake, and all y haue bene merry in harte, shal sighe. The myrth of tabrettes shal be layde downe, the chere of the ioyful shal cease, and the pleasure of lutes shal haue an ende: there shal no more wyne be dronke with myrth, the beer shal be bytter to the that drinke it, the wicked cities shal be broken downe, all houses shal be shut, that no man maye come in.

In the stretes shal there be lift vp a crie because of wyne, all mens chere shal vanish awaye, and all ioye of the earth shal passe. Desolacion shal remayne in the cities, and the gates shal be smytten with waistnesse. For it shal happen vnto all londes and to all people, like as when a mā smyteth downe y olyues, y are left vpon the tre: or sekerth after grapes, when the wyne gatheringe is out. And those same (that remayne) shal lift vp their voyce, and be glad, & shal magnifie the glory of the LORDE, euen from the see, & prayse the name of the LORDE God of Israel, in the valeis and Ilandes. We heare songes sung to the prayse of the righteous, fro al the endes of the worlde. Therfore I must speake: O my vnfruitfulnessse, o my pouerte, Woe is me, all is ful of synners, which offende of purpose and malice. And therfore, (o thou that dwellest vpon the earth) there is at hōde for the, feare, pyt and snare. Who so escapeth the terrible crie, shal fall in to the pyt. And yf he come out of the pyt, he shal be takē with the snare. For the wyndowes aboue shal be opened, and the foundation of the earth shal moue.

The earth shal geue a greate crack, it shal haue a fore ruine, and take an horrible fall. The earth shal stagger like a drunken man, and be takē awaye like a tent. Hir misdeedes shal lie so heuye vpon her, y she must fall, and neuer rise vp agayne. At the same tyme shal the LORDE mustre together the hie hooste aboue, and y kynges of the worlde vpon the earth. These shal be coupled together as prisoners be, and shal be shut in o ne warde and punished innumerable daies. The Moone and the Sonne shal be ashamed, when the LORDE of hoostes shal rule them at Jerusalem vpon the mount Sion, before and with his excellent counsel.

The xxv. Chapter

GLORDE, thou art my God, I wil pray se the, and magnifie y name: For thou bringest marvelous thinges to passe, accordinge to thine olde counsels, truly and stedfastly. Thou makest of towines, heapes of stone: and of head cities, broken walles: The palaces of the wicked destroyest thou out of the cite, that they shal neuer be buylded agayne. Therfore the very rude people must magnifie the, and the cities of the cruel helthen must feare the. For thou art the poore mans helpe, a strength for the needful in his necessite. Thou art a defence agaynst enel wether, a shadowe agaynst the heate. But vnto the presumptuous, thou art like a strōge whylle roynde, that casteth downe the boostynge of the vngodly, thou kepest men from heate with the shadow of the cloudes, thou cuttest of the braunches of tyrauntes.

Moreover the LORDE of hoostes shal once prepare a feast for all people vpon the hill: A plenteous, costly, pleasaunt feast, of fat and welshed beastes, of swete and most pure thinges. Upon the hill shal he take awaye the syde vale y hageth before y face of al people, and the cowering wherewith all Gentiles are conered. As for death, he shal utterly consume it. The LORDE God shal wipe awaye the teares from all faces, and take awaye the confusio of his people thorow y whole worlde. For y LORDE himself hath sayde it.

At the same tyme shal it be sayde: lo, this is oure God in whō we put oure trust, and he hath healed vs. This is the LORDE that we haue wayted for: Let vs reioyse & delyte in his health. For the hōde of y LORDE ceaseth vpon this hil. But Moab shal be trode downe vnder him, like as the straw is trode vnder fete in a dōge hill. For he shal stretch out his hōdes vpon him, like as a swimmer doth to swimme. And wth the power of his hondes shal he cast downe his hie pompe. As for his strōge holdes & hie walles: he shal burue them, cast thē downe, and fell thē to the grounde in to dust.

And thou, which art the deer and hast the matter in honde: shalt prouyde for peace, eue the peace y mē hope for in the. Hope stil in the LORDE, for in the LORDE God is enelastinge strēgth. For why, it is he, y bringeth lowe the hie mynded citisyns, & casteth downe the proude citis. He casteth thē to the groude, yee eue in to y myre, y they maye be trode vnder the fete of the symple, & with the steppes of the poore. Thou (LORDE) cōsidreth the path of y rightuous, whether it be right, whether the waye of y rightuous be right. Therefore (LORDE) we haue a respecte vnto the waye of thy iudgmentes, thy name and thy remē brauncerioyse the soule. My soule lusteth after the all the night lōge, & my mynde haisteth frely to the. For as soone as thy iudgment is knowne to the worlde, thē the inhabitours of the earth lerne rightuousnesse.

But the vngodly (though he haue recoued grace) yet lerneth he not rightuousnesse, but in that place where he is punished, he offendeth, & feareth not the glory of the LORDE.

nemies. But vnto vs (LORDE) prouyde for peace: for thou workest in vs all o<sup>ur</sup> woites. O LORDE oure God, though soch lordes haue dominacion vpon vs as knowe not they yet graunte, that we maye only hope in the, and kepe thy name in remembraunce. The malicious Tyrautes whē they die, are nether in lifenor in the resurrection, for thou restest thē and rootest thē out, and destroyest all the memoryall of them. Agayne, thou increasest the people (O LORDE), thou increasest the people, thou shalt be prayed and magnified in all y endes of the worlde. The people that seke vnto the in trouble, that same aduersite which they complaine of is vnto thē a chastenyng before the. Like as a wife wth childe (whē hir trauayle cometh vpon her) is ashamed, crieth and suffreth the payne: Eue so are we (O LORDE) in thy sight. We are with childe, we trauayle, & beare, & with the spiete we bringe forth health, wherethorow the earth is vnderstroyed, and the inhabitours of the worlde perish not.

But as for thy dead men and ours, that be departed, they are in life and resurrection. They lie in the earth, they wake, & haue ioye for y dew is a dew of life & light. But y place of the malicious Tyrautes is falle awaye. So go now my people in to thy chāce, and shut the doore to the, and suffre now y twicflinge of an eye, till the wrath be ouerpast. For behold, the LORDE wil go out of his habitacion, & vyset the wickednes of the that dwell vpon earth. He wil discover the bloude that she hath deuoured, she shal neuer hyde thē, that she hath murthered.

Then the LORDE with his henye, great and lōgeswearde shal vyset Leuiathā, that invincible serpet: eue Leuiathā y croked serpent, and shal slaye the Wallfish in y sea. At the same tyme shal mē synge of the symple arde of Muscatel. The LORDE kepe it, and water it in due season. I watch daye & night, that no man breake in to it. I beare no enel wil in my mynde. Who will compell me, that I greatly forgettinge all faithfulnessse, shal de burne it vp at once wth thornes & bushes? O: who will enforce me to kepe or make peace? It wil come to this poynte, y Jacob shal be rooted agayne, and Israel shal be grene & beare floures, & they shal fyll y whole worlde wth their frute. Smyteth he not his smyter, as enel as he is smytē himself? Destroyeth he not y murtherers, as he is murthered? de, as vpon the dayes of extreme heate. And therefore shal the inquite of Jacob be thus reconciled. And so shal he take awaye all y frute of his synnes.

As for aulter stones, he shal make them all as stones beaten to poulder: the Groves and Idols shal not stonde. The stronge citis shalbe desolate, and y fayre citis shal be left like a wilderness. The catel shal fede and liethere, and the shepe shal care it vp. Their haruest shal be brent, their wyues which were their bewtie when they came forth: shalbe defyled. For it is a people without vnderstōdinge, and therefore he y created them, shal not fauoure them: and he y made them, shal not be merciful to thē. In y tyme shal y LORDE shute from y swifte water of Euphrates, vnto y ryuer of Egipte. And there shal the children be chosen out one by one. Then shal the greates trompet be blowne, so that those which haue bene destroyed in the Assirians londe, and those that be scattered abroad in Egipte: shal come & worshipe the LORDE at Ierusalē, vpon the holy mount.

The xxvij. Chapter.

Go be to y crowne of pryde, to y dronken Ephraemites, and to the faydinge floure, to the glory of his pōpe, y is vpon the toppe of the plenteous valley: which mē be ouerladen wth wyne. Beholde, the strength and power of the LORDE shal breake in to the londe on euery syde, like a tempest of hale, that beareth downe stronge holdes, and like an horrible, mightie and ouerflowinge water. And the proude crowne of the dronken Ephraemites, shal be troden vnder foot. And as for the faydinge floure, the glory of his pompe, which is vpon the toppe of the plenteous valley: it shal happen vnto him, as to an vntymely frute before the haruest come. Which as soone as it is sene, is by and by deuoured, or euer it come well in a mans honde.

And then shal the LORDE of hoostes be a ioyful crowne, and a glorious garlāde vnto the remnant of his people. Vnto the lowly, he shalbe a spiete of iudgment, and vnto them that dryue awaye the enemies from y gates, he shalbe a spiete of strēgth. But they go wronge by y reason of wyne, they fall and stacter because of strōge drynke. See eue the prestes and prophetes them selues go amisse, they are dronken with wyne, and weake braned thorow stronge drynke. They erre in sēge, and in iudgment they faile. fylthynes, y no place is clene. What is he amonge them, y can teach, instructe or enfourme the chylde, which are weened from suck or taken from the brestes: of eny other fashion, then: Commaunde y maye be commaunded, byd y maye be bydde, for byd that maye be forbydde, kepe backe y maye be kepte backe, here a litle, there a litle. And therefore the LORDE also shal speake wth lippinge lippes and wth a straunge lāguage vnto this people, to whom he spake afore of this manner: This shal bringe rest, yf one refresheth the weery, ye this shal bringe rest. But they had no will to heare. And therefore the LORDE shal answer their stubbournes (Commaunde y maye be commaunded, byd y maye be bydden, for byd y maye be forbydde, kepe backe y maye be kepte backe, here a litle, there a litle) That they maye go forth, fall backwarde, be buissed, snared and taken. Wherefore heare the worde of the LORDE, ye mockers that rule the LORDES people, which is at Ierusalē. For ye cōfōrte yo<sup>r</sup> selues thus: Tush, death & we are at a poynte, & as for hell, we haue made a cōdicion with it: that though there breake out eny sore plague, it shal not come vpon vs. For with disceate wil we escape, and with hymblenes will we defende o<sup>ur</sup> selues. Therefore thus saierth the LORDE God: Beholde, I will laye a stone in Sion, a greates stone, a costly corner stone for a sure foundacion: y who so putteth his trust in him, shal not be confounded. Rightuousnes wil I set vp agayne in y balauce, and iudgment in the weightes. The tēpest of hale shal take awaye yo<sup>r</sup> refuge, that ye haue to disceane withal, and y ouerflowinge waters shal breake downe yo<sup>r</sup> strōge holdes of dissimulaciō. Thus the appoyntmēt that ye haue made wth death, shalbe done awaye, and the cōdicion that ye made with hell, shal not stōde. When the greates destruction goeth thorow, it shal all to treade you, It shal take you quyte awaye before it. For it shal go forth early in the mornynge, and contynue only y daye and y night. And the very feare only shal teach you, when ye heare it. For y bedde shal be so narrow y a mā cā not lye vpon it. And the cowering to small, that a mā maye not wynde him self therein. For the LORDE shal steppe forth as he dyd vpon the mount perazim, and shal take on as he dyd vpon the dale of Gabaon: that he maye bringe forth his dewyce, his straunge dewyce: and fulfil his worke, his wonderful worke. And therefore make no mockes at it, that youre captiwyte increase not: or I ha-

Goeth not the husbonde man euer in due season earnestly to his londe: he moweth & ploweth his grounde to sowe. And whē he hath made it playne, he soweth it with fitches or comyn. He soweth y wheate and Barlye in their place, Milium and Rye also in their place. And y he maye do it right, his God teacheth him and sheweth him. For he treadeth not the fitches out with a wayne, nether bringeth he the cart here and there ouer the comyn, but he throsf sheth y fitches out with a flae, and the comyn with a rod. As for the wheate, he gryndeth it to make bried therof. In as moch as he can not bunge it to passe w treadinge out. For nether the brussinge that the cart wheles make, ner his beastes can grynde it. This and soch like thinges come of the LORDE of hoostes which is maruelous in counsell, and gre are in rightuousnesse. The xxx. Chap.

W vnto the o Ariel Ariel, thou cite that David wane. Take yet some yeaeres, and let some feastes yet passe ouer: then shal Ariel be beseged, so that she shal be heuy and so rousful, and shal be vnto me euen as a lyon. For I wil laye sege to the rounde aboute, and kepe y in with towers, and grane vp dy kes agaynst y. And thou shalt be brought lowe, and speake out of the earth, and thy wordes shal go humbly out of y grounde. Thy voyce shal come out of the earth, like the voyce of a witch, and thy talkinge shal groane out of the myre. For the multitude of thine enemies shalbe like meal dust. And then ombre of Tyrauntes shalbe as y dust that the wynde taketh awaye sodenly.

Thou shalt be visited of the LORDE of hoostes with thondre, earth quake, and with a greate crack, with the whyrle wynde, tempest, and with the flame of a consuming fyre. But now the multitude of all the people, that went out agaynst Ariel: the whole hooste, the stronge holdes, and sege is like a dreame which appeareth in the night. It is like as when an hungrie man dreameth that he is eatynge, and when he awaketh, he hath nothinge like as when a thurstie man dreameth that he is drinkynge, and when he awaketh, he is saynt, and his soule vnpatient.

shalbe abashed: ye shal stacke and relete and fro. Ye shalbe dronken, but not of wyne. Ye shal fall, but not thorow dronkenes. For the LORDE shal geue you an hard sleepinge spere, and holde downe youre eyes: namely y<sup>e</sup> prophetes and heades which shuldes, them shal he couer. And all visions shalbe vnto you, as the wordes that stonde in a sealed lettre, when one offreth it to a man that is lerned, and sayeth vnto vs this lettre. The he answereth: I ca not rede it, for it is shutt. But yf it be geue to one y is not lerned, or sayde vnto him: rede this lettre: Then sayeth he. I can not rede.

Therefore thus sayeth the LORDE: For so moch as this people draweth nye me w their mouth, and prayseth me highly with their lippes (where as there herte neuer the les is farre fro me, and the feare which they owe vnto me, that turne they to mens lawes and doctrynes) therefore wil I also shewe vnto this people, a maruelous terrible and greate thinge (Namely this: I wil destroye the wisdom of their wise, and the understandinge of their lerned men shal perish. Wo be vnto them that seke so depe, to byde their ymaginacion be fore the LORDE, which rehearce their counsels in y darkness, and saye: who seith vs, or who knoweth vs?

Which ymaginacion of yours is euen as when the potters claye taketh advisement, as though the worke might saye to y worke master: make me not, or as when an earthen vessel saith of the potter: he understandeth not. Se ye nor that it is hard by, that Libanus shalbe turned in to Charnel, and that Charnel shalbe taken as a wodde? Then shal deaf men understande the wordes of the boke, and the eyes of the blynde shal se without eny cloude or darkness. The oppressed shal holde a mery feast in the LORDE, and the poore people shal reioyse in the holy one of Israel.

Then shal the furious people cease, and y mockers shal be put awaye, and all they y do wronge shalbe rooted out, soch as labour to drawe me vnto synne, and y discue him, which reprocureth them in the gate, & soch as turne good personnes to vanite.

And therefore the LORDE (euen the defender of Abraham) saith thus vnto the house of Jacob: Now shal not Jacob be ashamed, nor his face cofounded, when he seith amonge his children (whom my handes haue made) soch as halowe my name amonge them: that they maye sancifie the holy one of Jacob, and feare the God of Israel.

The xxx. Chapter.

W be to those shrekinge children (saye the LORDE) which seke counsell, but not at me: which take a webbe in honde, but not after my will: that they maye heape one synne vpon another. They go downe into Egypte, (and are me no counsell) to seke helpe at the power of pharao, and coforte in the shadowe of the Egipcians. But pharao helpe shalbe youre cofucion, and the comfote in the Egipcians shadowe shalbe youre owne shame. Your rulers haue bene at Zoan, and y<sup>e</sup> messaungers came vnto Hanes. But ye shal all be ashamed of the people y maye not helpe you, which shal not bunge you strength or comfote, but shame and confucion.

Your beastes haue borne burthens vpon their backes towarde the South, thorow the waye that is ful of parell and trouble, because of the lyo and lyones, of the Cockatrice and shurynged dragon. Yee the Mules bare youre substaunce, and the Camels brought y<sup>e</sup> treasure vpon their croked backes, vnto a people that cannot helpe you. For the Egipcians helpe shalbe but vane and lost. Therefore I tolde you also y youre pryde shulde haue an ende. Wherefore go hece, and write them this in their tables, and note it in a booke: that it maye remayne by their posterite, and be stil keppe. For it is an obstinate people, vnfaithful children, children that will not heare the lawe of the LORDE.

They darre saye to the prophetes: Intro mitte youre selues with nothinge, and vnto y<sup>e</sup> Soythsayers: tell us of nothinge for to come, but speake frendly wordes vnto vs, and preach vs false thinges. Treade out of the waye, go out of the path, turne the holy one of Israel from vs. Therefore thus saith the holy one of Israel: In as moch as ye haue cast of youre bewtie, and confortd youre selues with power and nymbleness, and put youre confidence therein: therfore shal ye haue this myschese agayne for youre destruction and fall, like as an hie wall, that falleth because of some rift (or blast) whose breakinge cometh sodenly.

And youre destruction shalbe like as an erthe pot, which breaketh no man touchinge it, yee and breaketh so sore, that a man shal not fynde a sheuer of it to fetch fyre in,

For the LORDE God, euen the holy one of Israel hath promised thus: With stultitunge and rest shal ye be healed, In quyetnesse and hope shal youre strength lie. Not with standinge ye regarde it not, but ye will saie: No, for thus are we cōstrayned to fle vpon hoyses. (And therefore shal ye fle) we must ryde vpon swift beastes, and therefore youre persecutours shal yet be swifter. A thousand of you shal fle for one, or at the most for syue, which do but only geue you euell wordes: vntill ye be desolate, as a ship mast vpon an hie mountayne, and as a beken vpon an hill.

And as soone as the LORDE stretcheth out his honde, then shal the helper fall, and he that shulde haue bene helped, and shal altogether be destroyed. And my people shal dwell in the ynnies of peace, in my tabernacle and pleasure, where there is ynough in the all. And whē the hale filleth, it shal fall in the wodde and in the citie. Stronde vpon LORDE, thou that dwellest on hie: Let Sion be fylled with equyte and rightuousnesse. Let treuth and faithfulness be in hir tyme: power, health, wisdom, knowlege & the feare of God are hir treasure. Beholde, their aungels crie with out, the messangers of peace wepe bitterly. The stretes are waite, there walke no man therein, the appoyntment is broken, the cities are despised, they are not regarded, the desolate earth is in heuynes. Libanus taketh it but for a spoite, that it is hewen downe: Saron is like a wyldernes: Bazis & Charmel are turned vpside downe. The xxxvii. Chapter.

When Ezechias herde that, he rente his clothes, & put on a sack cloth, & went in to the temple of the LORD. But he sent Eliachim the presider, Sobna the scribe & the eldest prestes cloothed in sack, vnto the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos, & they sayde vnto him: Thus saith Ezechias: this is the daye of trouble, of plague & of wrath: like as when a childe cometh to the byrth, but the woman hath no power to bringe it forth. The LORD thy God (no doute) hath well considered the wordes of Rabsaches, whom his lord & kinge of the Assirians hath sent, to desie & blasphemethe luyng God: with soch wordes, as the LORD & God hath herde right well. And therfore lift vp y prayer for the remnaunt, that yet are left. So the seruantes of kinge Ezechias came to Esay.

And Esay gaue them this answer: Saie thus vnto youre lord: thus saith the LORD: Be not a frayde of the wordes that thou hast herde, wherewith the kinge of Assirias seruantes haue blasphemed me. Beholde, I will cause a wynde go ouer him, as soone as he heareth it, he shal go agayne in to his countre, there will I distroye him with the swerde. Now when Rabsaches returned, he founde y kinge of Assiria layenge sege to Lobna, for he had vnderstonde, that he was departed from Lachis. For there came armour, y Taracha kinge of Ethiopia was come forth to warre agaynst him.

And when the kinge of Assiria herde y, he sent other messaungers to kinge Ezechias, with this commaundement. Saye thus to Ezechias kinge of Iuda: Let not thy God disceane the, in whom thou hopest, & sayest: Ierusalem shal not be geue in to the bondes of the kinge of Assiria. For thou knowest well, how the kinges of Assiria haue handled all the londes, that they haue subuerted, & happest thou to escape? Were the people of the Gētilis (whom my progenitours coquered) deliuered at eny tyme thorow their goddes? As namely, Bozan, Haran, Rezech, & the childre of Eden, which dwell at Thalassar. Where is the kinge of Hemath, & the kinge of Arphad, & the kinge of the cite Sephar-naim, Ena and Aua? Now when Ezechias had receaued y lettre of the messaungers, & red it, he went vp into the house of the LORD, & opened the lettre before y LORD. And Ezechias prayed before the LORD on this maner: O LORD of hostes, thou God of Israel, which dwellest vps Cherubin. Thou of lambes and gootes, with the fatnesse of neeres of the wethers. For the LORD shal kyl a great offringe in Bostra, and in the londe of Idumea. There shal the Unicomes fall with the Bulles, (that is with the gaintes) and their londe shalbe washed with bloude, & their grounde corrupte with fatnesse. Vnto the also (o Sion) shal come the daye of the vengeance of God, and the ye are when as thynne owne iugdmentes shalbe recompensed. Thy floudes shalbe turned to pyrch, and thine earth to brymstone, & therewith shal the londe be kyndled, so that it shal not be quenched daye ner night: But smoke euermore, & so forth to lie waist. And no man shal go thorow thy londe for ever: But pellicanes, Storckes, great Oules, and Ravens shal haue it in possession, & dwell therein.

For God shal spiede out the lye of desolacion vpon it, & weye it with the stones of emptynes. When kinges are called vps, the re shalbenone, and all princes shalbe awaye. Thornes shal growe in their palaces, nettles & thistles in their stronge holdes, y the dragons mayehaue their pleasure therein, & that they maye be a couite for Estriches. There shal straunge visures and monstrous beastes mete one another, & the wylde kepe company together. There shal the lamia lye, & haue hir lodginge. There shal the hedghogge buylde, digge, be there at home, and bunge forth his yongeones. The reshale the kyres come together, ech one to his life.

Seke thorow the scripture of the LORD & rede it. There shal none of these thinges be left out, there shal not one (ner soch) like) sayle. For what his mouth commaundeth, that same doth his spiete gather together (or fulfilleth). Vpon whom soeuer y lot fall, or to whom he dealeth it with the line: those shal possesse the enheritaunce from generation to generation, and dwell therein.

The xxxv. Chapter.

Wt the deserte & wilbernesse shal reioyse, y waist grounde shal be glad, and flourish as the lilly. She shal flourish pleasantly, and be ioyful, and euer be geuyng of thankes more and more. For y glory of libanus, the bewty of Charnel & Sars shalbe geuen her. These shal knowe the honoure of the LORD, and the magesty of oure God. And therfore strength y weake hōdes, and conforte the feble knees. Saye vnto them that are of a fearful hert: Be of good chere, and feare not. Beholde: youre God cometh, to take vengeance & to rewarde. God cometh his owne self, and wil deliuer you. Then shal the eyes of the blinde be lightned, and the eares of the deaff opened. Then shal the lame man leape as an hart, & the domme mas tūge shal geue thanke.

In the wilbernesse also there shal welles spunge, and floudes of water in the deserte. The drie grounde shal turne to ryuers, and the thurstie to springes of water. Where as dragons dwelt afore, there shal growe sweete floures and grene ruffhes. There shalbe footpathes & comon stretes, this shalbe called the holy waye. No vnclene person shal go thorow it, for the LORD himself shal go with the that waye, and the ignorant shal not erre. There shalbe no lyon, and no ranshing beast shal come therein nor be there, but men shal go there fre and safe. And the redemed of the LORD shal conuerte, and come to Sion with thankes geuyng. Euerlastinge ioye shal they haue, pleasure & gladnesse shalbe among them, And as for all sorow and heynnes, it shal vanish awaye.

The xxxvi. Chapter.

In the xiiij. yeare of kinge Ezechias, came Sennacherib kinge of the Assirians downe, to laye sege vnto all the stronge cities of Iuda. And the kinge of the Assirians sent Rabsaches from Lachis toward Ierusalem, agaynst kinge Ezechias, with agnons hooste, which set him by the condite of the ouerpole, in the waye that goeth thorow y fullers lode. And so there came forth vnto him Eliachim & Ezechias sonne the presyent, Sobna the scribe, and Joab Asaphs sonne the Secretary.

And Rabsaches sayde vnto them: Tell Ezechias, that the greate kinge of Assiria sayeth thus vnto him: What presumption is this, that thou trustest vnto: Thou thinkest (peraduēture) that thou hast counsell & power ynough, to mayntene this warre: & els wher to trustest thou, that thou castest this self of fro me: lo, Thou puttest thy trust in a broken staff of rede (I meane Egipte) which he that leaneth vpon, it goeth in to his honde & shuteth him thorow. Euen so is pharao the kinge of Egipte, vnto all the that trust in him. But yf thou woldest saye to me: We trust in y LORD oure God: A godly god, in dede: whose hie places & alters Ezechias toke downe, and commaunded Iuda and Ierusalem, to worshipec only before the altier. A byde the, thou hast made a condicion with my lord the kinge of the Assirians, that he shulde geue the two thousand be houses: Art thou able to set me there vp? Singe now that thou canst not resist the power of the smallest pryncethat my LORD hath, how darrest thou trust in y charettes and horse men of Egipte? No more, thinkest thou y I am come downe hither, to destroye this londe with out the LORDS will: The LORD sayde vnto me: go downe in to thar londe, that thou mayest destroye it.

Then sayde Eliachim, Sobna & Johah vnto Rabsaches: Speake to vs thy seruantes (we praye the) in the Sirians language, for we vnderstonde it well: And speake not to vs in the Jewes tūge, lest the folcke heare, which lieth vpon the wall. Then answered Rabsaches: Thinke ye, y the kinge sent me to speake this only vnto you: Hath he not sent me to the also, that lie vps the wall: that they be not cōpelled to eate their owne donge, and drinke their owne stale with you?

And Rabsaches stode stiff, & cried with a londe voyce in the Jewes tūge, and sayde: Now take hede, how the greate kinge of the Assirias geueth you warnyng. Thus saith the kinge: Let not Ezechias disceane you, for he shal not be able to deliuer you. No more, let not Ezechias comforte you in the LORD, when he saith: The LORD with out doute shal defende vs, & shal not geue ouer this citie in to the bondes of the kinge of the Assirians, beleue him not. But thus saith the kinge of Assiria: opteyne my fauoure, encline to me: So maye euery mā enioye his vynyardes and sygetrees, and drinke the water of his cistern: vnto the tyme that I come myself, & bringe you in to a londe, y is like youre owne: wher in is wheat and wyne, which is both so wen with sede, and planted with vynyardes. Let not Ezechias disceane you, when he sayeth vnto you: The LORD shal deliuer us.

Might the goddes of the Gentiles kepe everymans londe, from the power of the kinge of the Assirians? Wher is the God of hemath & Arphad? Wher is the God of Sephar-naim? And who was able to defende Samaria out of my honde? Or which of all the goddes of the lōdes, hath deliuered the countre out of my power, so that the LORD shulde deliuer Ierusalem fro my honde? Vnto this, Ezechias messaungers helde the it tūges, and answered not one worde: for the kinge had charged them, that they shulde geue him none answer. So came Eliachim & Ezechias sonne the presyent, Sobna the scribe, and Joab Asaphs sonne the Secretary, vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, & tolde him the wordes of Rabsaches.

art the God, that only is God of all the king domes of the worlde, for thou only hast crea ted haue z earth. Encline thine eare LORDE z considre, open thine eyes (o LORDE,) z se, and pondre all the wordes of Sennacherib, which hath sent his embassage to blasphemethe, the lyvinge God. It is true (o LORDE) that the kinges of Assiria have conquered all king domes z londes, z cast their goddes in the fy re. Notwithstondinge those were no goddes but the workes of mens hondes, of wodd or stone, therfore haue they destroyed them. De lyuer vs then (o LORDE oure God) from the hondes of Sennacherib, y all kingdomes of the earth maye knowe, that thou only art y LORDE. Then Esay the sonne of Amos sent vnto Ezechias, sayenge: Thus saith y LOR DE God of Israel: Where as thou hast ma de thy prayer vnto me, as couchinge Senna cherib, this is the answere, that the LORDE hath geuen concernynge him: Despised art thou, z mocked (o daughter of Sion) he hath shaken his heade at the, o daughter of Jeru salem. But thou Sennacherib, whom hast thou defied or blasphemed? And agaynst whō hast thou lifted vp thy voyce, z exalted thy proude lokes? euen agaynst the holy one of Israel. Thou with thy seruantes hast blas phemed the LORDE, and thus holdest thou of thyself: I couer the hiemountaynes, z sy des of Libanus with my hoisinen. And the re wil I cut downe the hie Cedre trees z the fayrest fyre trees. I will vp in to the heyth of it z in to the chesest of his timbre woddess. If there be no water, I wil graue z drynke. And as for waters of defence, I shal drie them vp with the fete of myne hooste. Yee (saist thou) hast thou not herde, what I ha ue taken in honde, z brought to passe of olde tyme? That same wil I do now also: waiste, destroye, z bringe the stronge cities vnto hea pes of stones. For their inhabitours shal be li ke lame men, brought in feare z confounded. They shal be like the grasse z grene herbes in the felde, like the hay vpon house toppes, that wythereth, afore it be growne vp.

And soch of the house of Juda as are esca ped, shal come together, and the remnaunt shal take rote beneth, z bringe forth frute a boue. For the escaped shal go out of Jerusa le, z the remnaunt from the mount Sion. And this shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe. Therfore thus sa ieth the LORDE, concernynge the kinge of the Assirians: he shall not come in to the cite, and shal shute no arrowe in to it, there shall no shilde hurte it, nether shal they graue a boue it. The same waye that he came, shal he returne, and not come at this cite, saith the LORDE. And I wil kepe and saue the cite (saith he) for myne owne, z for my ser uante Dauids sake.

Thus the angel went forth, and slew of the Assirians hooste, an clxxxv. thousand. And when men arose vp early (at Jerusa le:) Beholde, all laye ful of deed bodies. So Sennacherib the kinge of the Assirians brake vp, and dwelt at Nimue. Afterwarde it chaunced, as he prayed in the Temple of Ne rah his god, that Adramalech and Sarsar his owne sonnes slewe him with the swea de, and fled in to the londe of Ararat. And Esarhadon his sonne reigned after him.

The xxxviij. Chapter.

Not longe afore this, was Ezechias de ad sick: And the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos came vnto him, and sayde: Thus commaundeth the LORDE: Set thyne hou se in ordie, for thou must dye, and shalt not escape. Then Ezechias turned his face to ward the wall, z prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: Remembre (o LORDE) that I ha ue walked before the in treuth and a stedfast hert, and haue done the thinge that is plea sant to the. And Ezechias wepte sore. The sayde God vnto Esay: Go and speake vnto Ezechias: The LORDE God of Dauid thy fa ther sendeth y this worde: I haue herde thy prayer, and considred thy teares: beholde, I will put xv yeres mo vnto thy life, and deli uer the and the cite also, from the honde of the kinge of Assiria, for I will defende the a te. And take the this token of the LORDE, y he will do it, as he hath spoken: Beholde, I will returne the shadowe of Achas Diall, y now is layed out with the Sonne, and bringe it ten degrees backward. So the Sonne turned ten degrees backward, the which he was descended afore.

A thankesgeuyng, which Ezechias kin ge of Juda wrote, when he had beneficke, z was recovered.

The prophet Esay.

I thought I shulde haue gone to the ga tes of hell in my best age, and haue wanted the residue of my yeres.

I spake within my self: I shal neuer viset the LORDE God in this life: I shal neuer se man, amonge the dwellers of the worlde.

Myne age is folden vp together and ta ken awaye fro me, like a sheperdes cotage: my lyfe is hewen of, like as a weener cutteth of his webbe.

Why? I was yet takinge my rest, he he wed me of: z made an ende of me in one daie.

I thought I wolde haue lyued vnto the morow, but he brused my bones like a lyon, and made an ende of me in one daye.

Then charred I like a swalowe, and like a Crane, and mourned as a dove.

I lift vp myne eyes in to y hight: O LOR DE, (sayde I) violence is done vnto me, be thou swertie for me.

What shal I speake or say, et hat he maye this doo? y I maye lyue out all my yeres, yee in the bytternesse of my life?

Verely (LORDE,) men must lyue in bytter nesse, z all my life must I passe ouer therin: forthou raysest me vp, and wakest me. Vnt lo, I wil be wel content with this bytternes.

Neuertheles my conuersacion hath so ple ased y, that thou woldest not make an ende of my life, so that thou hast cast all my syn nes behynder thy backe.

For hell prayseth not the, death doth not magnifie the.

They that go downe into the graue, pra yse not thy treuth: but the lyvinge, yee the ly uynge acknolegethe, like as I do this da ye. The father telleth his children of thy fa ithfulnesse.

Deliyuer vs (o LORDE) and we wil synge prayses in thy house, all the dayes of oure life.

And Esay sayde: take a playster of fyges, and laye it vpon the soie, so shal it be whole. Then saide Ezechias: O what a greate thin ge is this, that I shal go vp in to the house of the LORDE.

The xxxix. Chapter.

At the same tyme Merodach Baladā, Baladās sonne kinge of Babilon, sent lettres and presentes to Ezechias. For he understode, how that he had bene sick, z was recovered agayne. And Ezechias was glad therof, z shewed them the comodities of his treasure: of syluer, of golde, of spycies z rootes, of precious oyles, all that was in his cubboodes and treasure houses. There was not one thinge in Ezechias house, z so tho-row out all his kingdome, but he let them se it.

Then came Esay the prophet to kinge Ezechias, and sayde vnto him: What haue y men sayde, and from whence came they vnto the? Ezechias answered: They came out of a farre countre vnto me: out of Babilon. Esay sayde: what haue they looked vpon in thyne house? Ezechias answered: All that is in myne house, haue they sene: and there is no thinge in my treasure, but I shewed it them.

Then sayde Esay vnto Ezechias: Under stode the worde of the LORDE of hoostes, Be holde, the tyme wil come, that every thinge which is in thine house, and all that thy pro genitours haue layde vp in stoare vnto this daye, shal be caried to Babilon, and nothin ge left behinde. This sayeth the LORDE. Yee and parte of thy sonnes that shal come of the, and whom thou shalt get, shal be caried hence, and become gelded chamberlaines in the kinge of Babilons courte: Then sayde Ezechias to Esay: Now God prospere his owne councel, which thou hast tolde me. He sayde morouer: So that there be peace, and faithfulnesse in my tyme.

The xl. Chapter.

Of good chere my people, be of go od chere (saith youre God) Conforte Jerusalem, and tell her: that hir tra uale is at an ende, that hir offence is pardo ned, that she hath receaued of the LORDEs honde sufficient correction for all hir synnes. A voyce crieth: Prepare y waye for the LOR DE in the wyldernes, make straight y path for oure God in the deserte. Let all valleis be exalted, and euery mountayne and hill be layde lowe. What so is croked, let it be made straight, and let the rough places be made playne feldez. For the glory of the LORDE shal apeare, z all flesh shal se it, for why, y mouth of the LORDE hath spoken it.

The same voyce spake: Now crie. And I sayde: what shal I crie? Then spake it: that, all flesh is grasse, and that all the bewtie the rof, is as the floure of the felde. When the grasse is wythered, the floure falleth awa ye. Euen so is the people as grasse, when the breath of the LORDE bloweth vpon them. Neuerthelesse whether the grasse wyther, or the floure fade awaye: Yet the worde of oure God endureth for euer. Morouer the voyce cried thus: Go vp vnto the hill (o Si on) thou that bringest good tidinges, lift vp thy voyce with power, o thou preacher Je rusalem. ## The prophet Esay.

Beholde, the LORD, even the almightiest, come with power, & beare rule with his arme. Beholde, he bringeth his treasure with him, and his workes go before him. He shal feed his flock like an herdman. He shal gather the lambs together with his arme, and carie them in his bosome, & shal kindly intreate those that beare yonge.

Who hath holden the waters in his fist? Who hath measured heaven with his spanne, and hath comprehended all the earth of y<sup>e</sup> wolde in thre syngers? Who hath weyed the mountaynes and hilles? Who hath reformed the mynde of the LORD? Or who is of his counsel to teach him? At whom hath he asked counsell, to make him vnderstande, and to lerne him the waye of iudgment: to teach him science, and to enstrucke him in the waye of vnderstandinge? Beholde, all people are in comparisoun of him, as a droppe to a bucket full, and are counted as the leest thinge y<sup>e</sup> the balaunce weyeth. Beholde, y<sup>e</sup> Iles are in comparisoun of him, as the shadowe of the Sonne beame. Libanus is not sufficient to minstre fyre for his offeringe, and all the bestes therof are not ynough to one sacrifice. All people in comparisoun of him, are rekened, as nothinge, yee vayne vanite and emptynesse.

To whom then will ye liken God? or what similitude will ye set vp vnto him? Shal the caruer make him a carued ymage? and shal the goldsmith couer him with golde, or cast him in to a forme of syluer plates? Moreover shal the ymage maker (y<sup>e</sup> the poore man which is disposed, maye haue somthinge to set vp also) sette out and chose a tre, that is not rotten, and carue therout an ymage, y<sup>e</sup> moueth not? Knowe ye not this? Herde ye neuer of it? Hath it not bene preached vnto you sence the begynnyng? haue ye not bene enformed of this, sence the foundation of y<sup>e</sup> earth was layde: That he syteth vpon the Circle of the wolde, and that all the inhabitants of the wolde are in comparisoun of him, but as greshoppers: That he spredeth out the heauens as a coneueringe, that he stretcheth them out, as a tent to dwell in: That he bringeth princes to nothinge, and the iudges of the earth to dust: so that they be not planted nor sowne a gayne, nether their stocke rooted a gayne in the earth? For as soone as he bloweth vpon them, they wither & fade awaye, like the strawe in a whirle wynde.

To whom now will ye liken me, & whom shal I be like, saith the holyone? Lift vp youre eyes an hie, and confidre. Who hath made those thinges, which come out by so greate heapes? and he can call them all by their names. For there is nothinge hyd vnto the greatnesse of his power, strength, and might. How maye then Jacob thinke, or how maye Israel saye: My wayes are hyd from the LORD, and my God knoweth not of my iudgements. Knowest thou not, hast thou not herde, that the euerlastinge God, the LORD which made all the corners of the earth, is nether weery nor saynt, and that his wisdom can not be comprehended: but that he geueth strength vnto the weery, and power vnto the saynt? Children are weery and saynt, and the strongest men fall. But vnto them that haue the LORD before their eyes, shal strength be increased, Angles wynges shal growe vpon them: When they runne, they shal not fall: and when they go, they shal not be weery.

The xli. Chapter.

Still (ye I londes) and herken vnto me. Be stronge ye people, Come hither, and shew youre cause, we will go to the lawe together. Who rayseth vp y<sup>e</sup> iuste from the rynging of the Sonne, and calleth him to go forth? Who casteth downe the people, and subdueth the kinges before him: that he maye throwe them all to the grounde with his swearde, and scatere them like stubble with his bowe? He foloweth vpon them, and goeth safely himself, and cometh in no footpath with his fete. Who hath made, created, and called the generacions from the begynnyng? Euen I the LORD, which am the first, and with the last.

Beholde ye Iles, that ye maye feare, and ye endes of the earth, that ye maye be abashed, draw nye, and come hither. Every man hath exorted his neghbour, and brother, and bydden him be stronge. The Smyth comforted the moulder, & the Ironmyth the hammerman, sayenge: It shal be good, that we fasten this cast worke: and then they fastened it with nailes, that it shulde not be moued. And thou Israel my seruante: Jacob my electe sede of Abrahā my beloued, whom I led from the endes of the earth by the hande: For I called the from farre, & saide vnto the: Thou shalt be my seruante: I have chosen the, & will not cast y<sup>e</sup> awaye: be not afrayde, for I will be with y<sup>e</sup>. Take not behinde y<sup>e</sup>, for I will be thy God, to strength y<sup>e</sup>, helpe y<sup>e</sup>, & to kepe y<sup>e</sup> with this right hode of myne. shal be destroyed & brought to naught. So that who so seeketh after them, shal not fynde them. Thy destroyers shal perish, & so shal they that vnder take to make batell agaynst the. For I thy LORD & God, wil strength thy right honde. Euen I that saie vnto the: Feare not, I will helpe the. Be not afrayde thou litle womne Jacob, and thou despyed Israel: For I will helpe the, saith the LORD, & the holyone of Israel thine avenger. Beholde, I wil make the a treadinge cart & a newe flake, y<sup>e</sup> thou mayest thross the & grynde the mountaynes, and bringe the hilles to powder. Thou shalt sanne them, & the wynde shal carie them awaye, & the whyll wynde shal scatere the. But thou shalt reioyse in the LORD, and shalt delite in prayyinge the holyone of Israel.

When the thurstie and poore seeke water & fynde none, & when their tunge is drie of thurst: I geue it them, saith the LORD. I the God of Israel forsake them not. I bringe forth floudes in the hilles, & welles in the playne feldes. I turne y<sup>e</sup> wildernes to ryuers, and the drie londe to condytes of water. I plante in the wayst grounde trees of Cedre, Dore, Myre and olyues. And in the drie, I set fyre trees, elmes and hawthornes together. All this do I, y<sup>e</sup> they altogether maye se and marcke, perceaue with their hertes, & confidre: that the honde of the LORD maketh these thinges, and that the holyone of Israel bringeth them to passe. Stonde at youre cause (saith the LORD) and bringe forth youre strongest grounde, councelet the kinge of Jacob. Let the goddes come forth them selues, and shewe vs the thinges y<sup>e</sup> are past, what they be: let the declare the vnto vs, y<sup>e</sup> we maye take them to herte, and knowe them herafter. Either, let the shewe vs thinges for to come, and tel vs what shal be done herafter: so shal we knowe, that they be goddes. Shewe somthinge, ether good or bad, so wil we both knowlege y<sup>e</sup> same, & tel it out.

Beholde, ye goddes are of naught, & yo<sup>r</sup> makinge is of naught, but abomination hath chosen you. Nevertheless I haue waked vpon one from the North, & he shal come. And another from the East, which shal call vpon my name, & shal come to the princes, as the Potter to his claye, & as y<sup>e</sup> Potter treadeth downe the myre. Who tolde y<sup>e</sup> afore? So wil we confesse & saie, that he is righteous. But there is none that sheweth or declareth eny thinge, there is none also that heareth youre wordes. Beholde, I will first graunte the of Sion & Jerusalem to be Euangelistes. But Beholde now therfore, this is my seruante whom I will kepe to my self: my electe, In whom my soule shal be pacified. I will geue him my spiete, that he maye shewe forth iudgment & equitye amonge the Gentiles. He shal not be an outcrys, ner an hie mynded person. His voyce shal not be herde in y<sup>e</sup> stretes. A blyssed rede shal he not breake, & the smoking flax shal he not quench: but faithfully & truly shal he geue iudgment. He shal nether be ouersene ner haustie, that he maye restore rightuousnesse vnto the earth: & the Gentiles also shal kepe his lawes. For thus saith God the LORD vnto him: (Euen he that made the heauens, and spred them abroad, & set forth the earth with hir encrease: which geueth breath vnto the people that is in it, & to them that dwell therein) I the LORD haue called y<sup>e</sup> in rightuousnesse, & led the by the honde. Therfore wil I also defende the, & geue the for a couenaunt of the people, & to be the light of the Gentiles. That thou mayest open the eyes of the blinde, let out the prysoners, & them that syt in darknesse, out of the dongeon house. I myself, whose name is the LORD, which geue my power to none other, nether myne honoure to the goddes: shewe you these new tidinges, and tel you them: or they come, for olde thinges also are come to passe.

Synge therfore vnto the LORD, a new songe of thakes geuyng, blow out his prayse vnto the ende of the wolde. They that be vpon the see, & all that is therein, prayse him, the Iles & they that dwell in them. Let the wildernes with hir cities lift vp hir voyce, the townes also that be in Cedar. Let them be glad that syt vpon rockes of stone, and let them crie derne from the hie mountaynes: ascribinge almightynes vnto the LORD, & magnifyinge him amonge the Gentiles. The LORD shal come forth as a gyaunte, and take a stomacke to him like a fleshy man of warre. He shal roare and crie, and ouercome his enemies.

I haue longe holden my peace (saith the LORD) shulde I therfore be still, and kepe sylence for ever? I will crie like a trauelinge woman, and once wil I destroye, and denoure. I wil make waist both mountayne & hill, and die vpon euery grene thinge, that groweth thereon. I wil die vpon the floudes of water, and drinke vpon the ryuers. I wil bringe the blinde into a strete, that they knowe not: and lede them in to a forepath, that they are ignorant in. I shal make darknesse light before the, and the thinge yf is croked, to be straight. These thinges will I do, and not forget them. And therefore let them conuerter, and be ashamed earnestly, that hope in Idols, and saye to fashioned ymages: ye are oure godes.

and because I set by the, and loued the, I pilled all men for the, and deliuered vpon all people for thy sake, that thou shuldest not feare, for I was with the. I wil bringe thy side from the east, and gather the together from the west. I wil saye to the north: let go. And to the south, kepe not backe: But bringe me my sonnes from farre, and my daughters from the endes of the worlde: Namely, all those that be called after my name: For the haue I created, fashioned, and made for myne honoure.

Bring forth that people, whether they haue eyes or be blynde, deaf or haue eares. All nacions shal come in one, and be gathered in one people. But which amonge yonder goddes shal declare soch thinges, and tell vs what is to come? Let them bringe their witness, so shal they be fre: for the men shal heare it, and saye: it is truth. But I bringe you witnesses (saith the LORDE) even those that are my seruantes, whom I haue chosen: to the intent that ye might be certified, and geue me faithfull credence: yee and to confide, that I am he, before whom there was neuer any God, and that there shal be none after me. I am only the LORDE, and without me is there no Sauoure. I geue warnynge, I make whole, I teach you, that there shal be no straunge God amonge you. And this recorde must ye beare me youre selues (saith the LORDE) that I am God. And euen he am I from the begynnynge, and there is none, that can take any thinge out of my honde. And what I do, can no man chaunge.

Thus saith the LORDE the holi one of Israel your redeemer: For youre sake I will sende to Babilon, and bringe all the strongest of them from thence: Namely, the Caldees that boost them of their shippes: Euen I the LORDE your holi one which haue made Israel, and am your kinge. uers of water in the wilderness. The wilde beastes shal worshippeme: the dragon, and the Estrich. For I shal geue water in yf wilderness, and streames in the deserte: that I maye geue drinke to my people, whom I chose. This people haue I made for my self, and they shal shewe forth my prayse. For thou (Jacob) woldest not call vpon me, but thou haddest an vnlust towarde me, o Israel. Thou gauest me not thy yonge beastes for burnt offringes, nether didest honoure me with thy sacrifices. Thou boughtest me no deare spice with thy money, nether pourest the fat of thy sacrifices vpon me. Howbeit I haue not bene chargeable vnto the in offringes, nether greuous in Incense.

But thou hast laden me with thy synnes, and weered me with thy vngodlynes: Where as I yet am euen he only, that for myne owne selues sake do awaye thine offences, and forget thy synnes: so that I wil neuer thinke vpon them. Put me now in remembraunce (for we will reason together) and shewe what thou hast for the, to make the quyte. Thy first father offended sore, and thy rulers haue synned agaynst me. Therefore I ether suspended, or slewe the chiefe prynces: I dyd curse Jacob, and gaue Israel into reprose.

The xliij. Chapter.

Heare now, o Jacob my seruauant, and Israel whom I haue chose. For thus saith the LORDE, that made the, fashioned the, and helped the, euen from thy mothers wombe: Be not a frayde (o Jacob my seruauant,) thou righteous, whom I haue chosen. For I shal poure water vpon the drie grounde, and ryuers vpon the churste. I shal poure my sprete vpon thy side, and myne encrease vpon thy stocke. They shal growe together, like as the grassee, and as the Willies by the waters side. One will saye: I am the LORDE. Another wil call vnder the name of Jacob. The thirde shal subscribe with his honde vnto yf LORDE, and geue him self vnder the name of Israel.

Moreover, thus hath the LORDE spoke: euen the kinge of Israel, and his avenger, yf LORDE of hooftes: I am the first, and the last, and without me is there no God. For what is he, that ener was like me, which am from enerlastinge? Let him shewe his name and do wherthorow he maye be likened vnto me. Let him tell you forth plainly thinges, that are past and for to come: yee and that without eny feare or stoppe. For haue not I ener tolde you hitherto, and warned you? Ye can beare me recorde youre selues. Is there eny God except me? or eny maker, that I shulde not knowe him?

Wherefore all caruers of Idols are but vayne, and their labour lost. They must beare recorde them selues, that (seinge they can nether seer nor vnderstonde) they shal be confounded. Who shulde now make a god, or fashion an Idol, that is profitable for nothinge? Beholde all the felashippe of the must be brought to confucion. Let all the workmasters of them come and stonde together from amongemen: they must be abashed and confounded one with another. The smith taketh yron, and tempreth it with hote coles, and fashioneth it with hammers, and maketh it to all the strength of his armes: Yee somtyme he is saynt for very hunger, and so churste, that he hath no more power. The carpenter (or ymage caruer) taketh methetymbre, and spredeth forth his lyne: he marketh it with some coloure: he playneth it, he ruleth it, and squareth it, and maketh it after the ymage of a man, and accordinge to the bewtie of a man: that it maye stonde in the temple.

Moreover, he goeth out to hewe downe Cedre trees: he bringeth home Elmes and okes, and othertymbre of the wodd. Or els the Syre trees which he planted himself, and such as the rayne hath swelled, which wodd serueth for me to burne. Of this he taketh and warmeth himself withall: he maketh a fyre of it to bake bread. And afterwarde maketh a god there of, to honoure it: and an Idol, to knele before it. One pece he burneth in the fyre, with another he roseth flesh, that he maye eat: roste his bely full: with the thirde he warmeth himself, and saith: A ha: I am well warmed, I haue bene at the fyre. And of the residue, he maketh him a god, and an Idol for himself. He kneleth before it, he worshippeth it, he prayeth vnto it, and sayeth: deliuer me, for thou art my god.

Yet men nether consider ner vnderstonde, because their eyes are stopped, that they can not se: and their hertes, that they can not perceave. They pondre not in their myndes (for they haue nether knowlege ner vnderstodinge) to thinke thus: I haue bred one pece in the fyre, I haue baked bread wth yf coles there of, I haue rosted flesh withall, & eaten it: Shal I now of the residue make an abhominacion, and fall downe before a rotten peece of wodd? The keepinge of dust, and folishnesse of herte hath turned them a syde: so that none of them can haue a fre conscience to thinke: maye not Jerre?

Consider this (o Jacob and Israel) for thou art my seruaut. I haue made the, that thou mightest serue me. O Israel, forget me not. As for thyne offences, I dryue them awaye like the cloudes, and thy synnes as the myst. Turne y agayne vnto me, & I will deluyery.

Be glad ye heauens, whom the LORDE hath made, let all y is here beneth vpon the earth, be ioyfull. Reioyse ye mountaynes & wooddes, with all the trees that are in you: for y LORDE shal redeme Jacob, & shewe his glory vpon Israel. For thus saith the LORDE thy redemer, euen he that fashioned the from thy mothers wombe: I am the LORDE, which do all thinges myself alone. I only haue spied out the heauens, and I only haue layde the foundation of the earth. I de stroye the tokens of witches, and make the Soothsayers go wronge. As for the wise, I turnethem backward, and make their conninge folishnesse.

But I set vpon the purpose of my seruantes, and fulfil the counsel of my messangers. I saye to Ierusalem: turne agayne: And to the cities of Iuda, be ye buylded agayne: and I repayre their decayed places. I saye to the groundes: be drie. And I drie vpon thy water floudes. I saye to Cirus: thou art myne hyrd man, so that he shal fulfill all thinges after my will. I saye to Ierusalem: be thou buylded, and to the temple: be thou fast grounded.

The xlv. Chapter.

Thus saith the LORDE vnto Cirus his anoynted, whom he ledeyth by y right hō: be that the people maye fall downe before him: I wil lowse the gyrdle of kinges, y they shal open the gates before thy face, and not to shut their doies. I wil go before the, and make the croked straight. I shal breake the brasen doies, & burst the yron barres. I shal geue thee the hyd treasure, & the thinge which is secretly kepte: that thou mayest knowe, y the God of Israel haue called the by thy name: and that for Jacob my seruaut sake, & for Israel my chesen. For I called the by y name, and ordered the, or euer thou knewest me: Euen I the LORDE, before whom there is none other, for w out me there is no God. of the Sonne to the goinge downe of the same, that all is nothinge without me. For I am the LORDE, & there is els none. It is I y created the light and darcknes, I make peace and trouble: Yee euen I the LORDE do all thes thinges. The heauens aboue shal droppe downe, and the cloudes shal rayne righte ousnes. The earth shal open it self, and brynge forth health, and therby shal righte ousnes flourish. Euen I the LORDE shal brynge it to passe.

Wo be vnto him that chydeth w his master, the potsherde with the potter. Saith y claye to the potter: What makest thou? or y worke serueth for nothige: Wo be vnto him, y saith to his father: why begetteth thou? And to his mother: why bearest thou? Thus saith the LORDE, euen the holy one & maker of Israel: Are me of thinges for to come, concernyng my sonnes: and put me in remembrance, as touchyng the workes of my hōdes: I haue made the earth, and created mā vpon it. With my hondes haue I spied forth heauen, and geuen a commaundment for all the hooftethers of. I shal wake him vp with righte ousnesse, and ordie all his wayes. I shal buylde my cite, & let out my pisoners: that nether for gift nor rewardes, saith the LORDE of hooftes.

The LORDE hath sayde morouer: The occupiers of Egypte, the marchauntes of the Mooryans and Sabees, shal come vnto the with tribute, they shal bethine, they shal sold we the, and go with cheynes vpon their fetters. They shal fall downe before the, and make supplicacion vnto the. For God (w out who there is none other God) shal be with the. O how profounde art thou o God, thou God? Sauoure of Israel: Confounded be ye, and put to dishonoure: go hence together with shame, all ye that be workmasters of errorre: (that is worshippers of Idols) But Israel shal be saued in the LORDE, which is the ende lastyng saluaciō: They shal not come to shame ner confucion, woulde without ende.

For thus sayeth the LORDE: euen he that created heauen, the God y made the earth, that fashioned it, and set it forth: I haue not made it for naught, but I made it to be inhabited: Euen I the LORDE, without whom there is none other. I haue not spoken secretly, nether in darcke places of the earth. It is not for naught, that I sayde vnto the sede of Jacob: seke me. Let men drawe nye, let them come hither, ad aske counsel one at another, and shewe forth: What is he, that tolde this before? or, who spake of it, euer sence the begynnynge? haue not I y LORDE done it: without whom there is none other God: the true God and sauoure, and there is els none but I? And therfore turne you vnto me (all ye endes of the earth) so shal ye be saued, for I am God, & there is els none. I sweare by myself: out of my mouth cometh y worde of righte ousnesse, and that maye no man turne: but all knees shal bowe vnto me, and all tynge shal sweate by me, sayenge: Verely in the LORDE is my righte ousnes and strength. To him shal me come: but all they that thinke scorne of him, shal be confounded. And the whole sede of Israel shal be iustified, & praysed in y LORDE.

The xlvj. Chapter.

Yenertheles Bel shal fall, & Labō shal be broken: whose ymages are a burthe for the beastes and catell, to overlade the, and to make them weery. They shal syncke downe, and fall together: for they maye not ease them of their burthen, therfore must they go into captiuyte.

Herken vnto me, o house of Jacob, and all ye that remayne yet of the housholde of Israel: whom I haue borne from youre mothers wombe, and brought you vp from y byrth, till ye were grown: I y which shall beare you vnto youre last age: I haue made you, I will also nourish you, beare you and saue you. Whom will ye make me like, in fastyng or ymage, that I maye be like him? Ye soles (no doute) wil take out syluer and golde out of youre purses, and weye it, and hyre a goldsmith to make a god of it, that men maye knele downe and worshiipe it. Alas that men shulde crie vnto him, which geueth no answer: and deluyereyth not the man that calleth vpon him, from his trouble.

Consider this well, and be ashamed, Go into youre owne selues (o ye runnagates). And yet both these thiges shal come to the vpon one daye in the twinklinge of an eye: Namely, wyddowhead, and desolacion. They shal mightely fall vpon the, for y multitude of thy witches, and for the greates heape of thy conuicers. For thou hast comforted thy self in thy disceatfulness, and hast sayde: I am alone, and without me is there none. Therfore shal trouble come vpon y, & thou shalt not knowe, from whence it shal arise. the in the fyre of pouerte. And that only for myne owne sake, for I geue myne honoure to none other, that thou shuldest not despise me. Herken vnto me O Jacob, & Israel who I haue called. I am euen he that is, I am yf first and the last. My honde is the foundacion of the earth, & my right honde spanneth ouer the heauens. As soone as I called the they were there. Gather you all together, and herken: Which of yonder goddes hath declared this, that the LORDE wil do by the kinge of Babilon, (whom he loueth & fauoureth) and by the Caldees his arme: I my self alone haue tolde you this before. Yee I shal call him and bringe him forth, & geue him a prosperous iourneye. Come nye & heare this: haue I spokē eny thi ge dardly sence the begynnyng: whē a thi ge begynneth, I am there.

Wherfore the LORDE God with his spirit hath sent me, And thus saith the LORDE thine avenger, the holy one of Israel: I am yf LORDE thy God, which teach the profitable thinges, and lede yf the waye, that thou shuldest go. Yf thou wilt now regarde my commandement, thy welthynges shalbe as the water streame: & thy rightuousnes as the waves flowinge in the see. Thy sede shalbe like as the sonde in the see, & the frute of thy body, like the grauel stones therof: Thy name shal not be roted out, nor destroyed before me. Ye shal go awaye from Babilon, and scape the Caldees with a mery voyce. This shalbe spoken of, declared abroad, & go forth vnto the ende of the worlde: so that it shalbe sayde: The LORDE hath defended his seruante Jacob, that they suffred no thurst, whē they trauayled in the wilderness. He claued the rockes a sonder, and the water gusshed out. As for the vngodly, they haue no peace, saith the LORDE.

The xlii. Chapter.

Herken vnto me, ye Iles, and take heede ye people from farre: The LORDE hath called me fro my byrth, and made me cion of my name fro my mothers wobe: he hath made my mouth like a sharpe swerde, vnder yf the dome of his honde hath he defended me, and hyd me in his quyer, as a good arrowe, and sayde vnto me: Thou art my seruante Israel, I wil be honoured in the. Then answered I: I shal lese my labour, I shal spende my strength in vayne. Neuertheles, I wil commytte my cause and my worke vnto the LORDE my God. And now saith the LORDE whē he that fashioned me fro my mothers wombe to be his seruante, that I maye bringe I ab agayne vnto him: howbeit, Israel will not be gathered vnto hi agayne. In whose sight I am greace, which also is my LORDE, my God and my strength. Let it be but a final thinge, that thou art my seruante, to set vp the kinredde of Jacob, & to restore the desolacion of Israel: yf I make the not also the light of the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my healeth vnto the ende of the worlde.

Moreover thus saith the LORDE the avenger and holy one of Israel, because of the abhorringe and despisinge amonge the Gentiles, concernyng the seruante of all them yf beare rule: Kynges and prynces shal se, and anse and worshipec; because of the LORDE that he is faithfull: and because of the holy one of Israel, which hath chosen the.

And thus saith the LORDE: In the tyme apoynted wil I be present with the. And in the houre of health wil I helpe the, & deluyner the. I wil make the a pledge for yf people, so yf thou shalt helpe vpon the earth agayne, and chalenge agayne the scattered heretages: That thou mayest saye to yf prisoners: go forth, & to them that are in darknesse: come into the light, that they maye fede in the hye wayes, & get their lyuynge in all places. There shal nether hunger ner thirste, heate nor Sonne hurt them. For he that fauoureth them, shal lede them, and geuethem drinke of the springe welles. I will make wayes vpon all my mountaynes, and my fote pathes shalbe exalted. And beholde, they shal come from farre: lo, some from the north and west, some from the south. Reioyse ye heauens, and synge prayses thou earth: Talke of ioye ye hilles, for God wil cōfōrte his people, & haue mercy vpon his, yf be in trouble.

Then shal Sion saye: God hath forsaken me, and the LORDE hath forgottē me. Doth a wife forget the childe of hir wombe, ad the some whō she hath borne: And though she do forget, yet wil not I forget the. Beholde, I haue writtē the vp vpon my bondes, thy malles are euer in my sight. They that haue broken the downe, shal make haist to buylde the vp agayne: and they that made the waste, shal dwell in the. Lift vp thine eyes, and loke aboute the: all these shal gather them together, and come to the. As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE) thou shalt put them all vpon the, as an apparell, and ryde the to the, as a byde doth hir Jewels. As for thy londe that lieth desolate, waisted & destroyed: it shalbe to narrow for the, that shal dwell in it. And they yf wolde denoure the, shalbe farre awaye. Then the childe whō yf bare shal

Then shalt thou thinke by thy self: Who hath begottē me these? seinge I am bare & alde, a captyue & an outcast: And who hath nourished the vp for me? I am desolate & alone, but frō whēce come these?

And therfore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde to the Gentiles, and set vp my token to the people. They shal bringe the thy sonnes in their lappes, & carie thy doughters vnto yf vpon their shulders. For kynges shalbe thy nursinge fathers, and Quenes shalbe thy nursinge mothers. They shal fall before the wth their faces flat vpon the earth, and lick vp the dust of thy fete: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. And who so putterh his trust in me, shal not be confounded. Who spoyleth the giant of his pray: or who taketh the prisoner from the mightie: And therfore thus saith the LORDE: The prisoners shalbe taken from the giant, and the spoyle deluynered from the violēte: for I wil maynteyne thy cause agaynst thine aduersaries, and saue thy sonnes. And wil fede thine enemies with their owne fle. she, and make the drinke of their owne bloude, as of swete wyne. And all flesh shal knowe (O Jacob) that I am the LORDE thy Sauoure, and stronge auenger. Chap. i.

Thus saith the LORDE: Where is the bill of yf mothers denoucement, that I sent vnto her: or who is the vsurer, to whō I sold you? Beholde, for youre owne effees are ye sold: & because of youre transgression, is youre mother forsake. For why wolde no man receaue me, when I came: & when I called, no man gaue me answere. Was my hōde cleane synne of, that it might not helpe: or, had I not power to deluyner: lo, at a worde I drinke vpon the see, & of water floudes I make drie lōde: so yf for want of water, the fish corruppe and die of thirst. As for heauen, I clooth it with dardnesse, and put a sack vpon it.

The LORDE God hath geue me a weller ned tūge, so that I can conforthe them which are troubled, yee & yf in due season. He waked myne eare vp by tymes in yf moynnyng (as yf scolemasters do) yf I might herke. The LORDE God hath opened myne eare, therfore can I not saye naue, ner wth drawe myself, but I offere my backe vnto yf synners, and my chees to the nyppers. I turne not my face frō shame ad spittinge, for the LORDE God helpeth me, therfore shal I not be cōfounded. I haue hardened my face like a flyne

Who so walketh in darcknesse, and no light shyneth vpon him, let him hope in the LORDE, and holde him by his God. But take hede, ye haue all kyndled a fyre, and gyrded youre selues with the flame: Ye walke in the glistring of youre owne fyre, and in the flame that ye haue kyndled. This cometh vnto you from my honde, namely, yf ye shal slepe in sorowe.

The li. Chapter.

A Erken vnto me, ye that holde of rightuousnes, ye that seke the LORDE. Take hede vnto the stone, wherout ye are hewen, and to the grane wherout ye are digged. Considre Abraham youre father, and Sara that bare you: how that I called him alone, prospered him wel, and increased him: how the LORDE comforted Siō, and repayed all hir decaye: makinge hir deserte as a paradise, and hir wilderness as the garden of the LORDE. Myrth and ioye was there, thankes geuynge and yf voyce of prayse. Hauere specte vnto me then (o my people) and laye thine eare to me: for a lawe, and an ordinance shal go forth from me, to lighten the Gentiles. mes past, euer and sence the wolde began. Art not thou he, that hast wounded the pride lucifer, and hewen the dragon in peeces? Art not thou euen he, which hast druck vp the depe of the see, which hast made playne the see grounde, that the deluyered might go thorow? That the redemed of the LORDE, which turned agayne, might come with ioye vnto Siō, there to endure for euer. That myrth and gladnesse might be with them: that sorowe and wo might fle from the. Yee J, I am eue he, that in all thynges geueth you consolacion. What art thou then, that fearest a mortall mā, yf childe of man, which goeth awaye as doeth the floure? And forgettest the LORDE that made the, that spred out the heauens, and layde the foundation of the earth. But thou art euer a frayde for the sight of thine oppressoure, which is ready to do harme: Where is the wrath of the oppressoure? It cometh on fast, it maketh haist to appeare: It shal not perish, yf it shalde not be able to destroye, nether shal it faile for faute of nourishinge. I am the LORDE, God, that make the see to be still, and to rage: whose name is the LORDE of hostes. I shal put my worde also in thy mouth, and sende the with the turnynge of my honde, that thou mayest plante the heauens, and laye the foundations of the earth, and saye vnto Siō: thou art my people.

Awake, awake, and stonde vpon Jerusalem, thou that from the honde of the LORDE, hast dronke out the cuppe of his wrath: thou that hast supped of, and sucked out the slombunge cuppe to the botome. For amonge all the sonnes whom thou hast begotten, there is not one that maye holde the vp: and not one to lede the by the honde, of all the sonnes that thou hast nourished. Both these thinges are happened vnto the, but who is sorry for it? Yee, destruction, mourninge, hunger and swerde: but who hath comforted the? Thy sonnes lie comfortles at yf heade of a ry strete like a take vnyson, and are ful of yf a terrible wrath of yf LORDE, and punysshment of thy God. And therefore thou miserable and diont (howbeit it not w' wyne) heare this: Thus saith the LORDE: thy LORDE and God, yf defender of his people: Beholde, I wil take yf a barge cuppe out of thy hōde, eue yf cuppe of the dregges of my wrath: yf fro hence forth thou shalt neuer drinke it more, and wil put in their hōde that trouble the: which haue spoken to thy soule: stoupe downe, that we maye go ouer the: make thy body eue with the grounde, and as the strete to go vpon.

Upon Siō vp, take thy strength vnto the: put on thine honest rayment o Jerusalem, thou cite of the holy one. For from this tyme forth, there shal no vncircumcised ner vncleane person come in the. Shaker the fro the dust, arise and stonde vp, o Jerusalem. Pluck out thy neck from the bodde, o thou captyue daughter Siō. For thus saith the LORDE: Ye are solde for naught, therefore shal ye be redeemed also without eny money.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: My people were downe afore tyme into Egypte, there to be strangers. Afterwarde dyd the kinge of the Assirians oppresse the, for naught. And now what profit is it to me (saith yf LORDE) yf my people is frely caried awaye, and brought in to heuynes by their rulers, and my name euer still blasphemed? saith the LORDE. But yf my people maye knowe my name, I my self will speake in that daye. Beholde, here am I. O how bewtiful are the feet of the Embassitoure, yf bringeth the message fro the mountayne, and proclaimeth peace: yf bringeth the good tydings, and preacherh health, and saith vnto Siō: Thy God is the kinge. Thy watchmen shal lift vp their voyce, w' loude voyce shal they preach of him: for they shal see him present, where the LORDE shal come agayne to Siō.

Be glad, o thou desolate Jerusalem, and reioyce together: for the LORDE will comforte his people, he wil deluyner Jerusalem. The LORDE wil make bare his holy arme, and shewe it forth in the sight of all the Gentiles, and all the endes of the earth shal see the sayunge health of oure God. Awaye, awaye, get you out fro then, and touch no vncleane thinge. Go out from amonge soch, and be cleane, yf that beareth the vessel of the LORDE. But ye shal not go out with sedicio, ner make haist as they that fle awaye: for the LORDE shal go before you, and the God of Israel shal kepe the watch.

Beholde, my seruante shal deale wysely, therefore shal he be magnified, exalted and greatly honoured. Like as yf multitude shal woe vpon him, because his face shalbe so deformed, and not as a mans face, and his bewtie like no man: Euen so shal the multitude of the Gentiles loke vnto him, and yf kinges shal shut their monthes before him. For they yf haue not benetolde of him, shal se him: and they yf herde nothinge of him, shal beholde him.

He shalbe the most symple and despised of all, which yet hath good experience of sorowes and infirmities. We shal reken him so symple and so vyle, that we shal hyde oure faces fro him. Howbeit (of a treuth) he only taketh awaye oure infirmite, and beareth oure payne: Yet we shal iudge him, as though he were plaged and cast downe of God: where as he (not withstandinge) shal be wounded for oure offences, and smytten for oure wickednes. But the wynde shal take them all awaye, & cary the in to yf ayre. & neuertheles, they yf put their trust in me, shal inheret the londe, and haue my holy hill in possession.

And therfore thus he saith: Make redy, make redy, and clense yf strete, take vp what ye can out of the waye, that lede to my people. For thus saith the hie and excellēt, euen he that dwelleth in euerlastingnesse, whose name is the holy one: I dwel hie aboue and in the sanctuary, & with him also, yf is of a cōtrite and humble spiere: yf I maye heale a troubled mynde, and a cōtrite herte. For I chide not euer, & am not wroth w out ende. But yf blastinge goeth fro me, though I make the breath. I am wroth w hi for his conetousnes & lust, I synye him, I hyde me, and am angrie, whe he turneth himself, and foloweth yf bywaye of his owne hert. But yf I maye se his right waye agayne, I make him whole, I lede him, and restore him vnto them whom he maketh ioyful, & that were sory for him. I make the frutes of thākesgeuynge. I geue peace vnto them that are farre of, and to them that are nye, saye I the LORDE, that make him whole. But the wicked are like the raginge see, that cā not rest, whose water someth with the myre & granel. & uēso yf wicked haue no peace, saith my God.

their symes. For they seke me dalye, and wil knowe my wayes, euen as it were a people that dyd right, and had not forsaken the statutes of their God. They argue with me concerninge right iudgment, and wil pleate at the lawe with their God. Wherfore fast we (saye they) and thou seist it not: we put oure liues to straitnesse, and thou regardest it not?

B Beholde, when ye fast, your lust remaineth still: for ye do no lesse violence to your detters: lo, ye fast to strife and debate, and to synne him with your fist, that speaketh vnto you. Ye fast not (as somtyme) that your voyce might be heard aboue. Thynke ye this fast pleaseth me, that a man shulde chaste himself for a daye, and to wryth his head aboue like an hoke in an hairy cloth, and to lye vpon the earth? Shulde that be called fastinge, or a daye of pleasure? LORDE: But this fastinge pleaseth not me, till I tyme ke thou loose him out of bondage, that is in thy daunger: that thou breake the ooth of wicked bargaynes, that thou let the oppressed go fre, and take from them all maner of burthens. It pleaseth not me, till thou deale thy bread to the hongrie, and brynge the poore fatherlesse home in to thy house, when thou seist the naked that thou couer him, and hyde not thy face from thine owne flesh. Then shal thy light breake forth as the morninge, and thy health flourish right shortly: thy rightousnesse shal go before the, and thy glory of the LORDE shal embrace the.

Then yf thou callest, the LORDE shal answer the: yf thou criest, he shal saye: here I am. Yee yf thou layest awaye thy burthens, and holdest thy fingers, and ceaseest from blasphemous talkinge, yf thou hast compassion vpon the hongrie, and refrefhest the troubled soule: Then shal thy light springe out in the darknesse, and thy darknesse shal be as the noone daye. The LORDE shal neuer be thy gyde, and satisfie the desyre of thine hert, and fyl y bones with marry. Thou shalt be like a freshwatred garden, and like the founteyne of water, that neuer leaueth runnyng. Then the places that haue euer bene wast, shal be buylded of the: there shalt thou laye a foundacion for many kynreds. Thou shalt be called the maker vpon of hedges, and y buylder agayne of y waye of the Sabbath.

Yee yf thou turne thy sete from the Sabbath, so that thou do not the thinge which pleaseth thyself in my holy daye: then shalt thou be called vnto the pleasur, holy and glorious Sabbath of the LORDE, where thou shalt be in hono: so y thou do not after thine owne ymaginacion, nether seke thine owne wil, ner speake thine owne wordes. The shal thou haue y pleasure in y LORDE, which shal carie y hie aboue y earth, and fede the with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the LORDE owne mouth hath so promised.

The LIX. Chap.

Behold, the LORDE honde is not shortened: y it can not helpe, nether is his care so stopped: y it maye not heare. But y mysdebes haue separated you from y God, and y synnes hyde his face from you, y he heareth you not. For y hondes are defyled with bloude, and y fingers with rightousnesse: y lippes speake lesynges, and y tonge setteth out wickednes. No man regardeth rightousnes, and no man iudgeth truly. Euery man hopeth in vayne thinges, and ymagineth disceate, conceaeth weerynes, and bringeth forth euell. They brede cockatrice egges, and weene y spyders webb. Who so eateth of their egges, dieth. But yf one treade vpon the, there cometh vpon a serpent. Their webbe maketh no clothe, and they maye not ouer the with their labours. Their dedes are y dedes of wickednes, and y worke of robbery is in their hondes. Their sete runneth to euell, and they make haist to shed innocet bloude. Their counsels are wicked counsels, harme and destruction are in their wayes. But y waye of peace they knowe not. In their goinges is no equitye, their wayes are so croked, y who so eny goeth therein, knoweth nothinge of peace.

And this is y cause y equite is so farre from vs, and y rightousnes cometh not nye vs. We loke for light, lo, it is darknesse: for y meyne ge shyne, se, we walke in y darke. We grope like y blynde vpon y wall, we grope euen as one y hath none eyes. We stembles at y noone daye, as though it were toward night in y fallinge places, likemen y are half dead. We are all like Deeres, and mourne still like dones. We loke for equite, but there is none for health, but it is farre from vs. For y offences are many before y, and y synnes testifye agaynst vs. Yee we must confesse y we offende, and knowlege, y we do amysse: Namely, transgresse y dyssemble agaynst y LORDE, and fall a waye from y God: y synge presumpuous and malicious ymaginacions, and castinge false matters in y hertes. And therefore is equitye gone asyde, and rightousnes stoderth farre of: it is fallen downe in the strete, and the thinge that is playne and open, maye not be shewed. Yee y treuth is lade in prison, and he that refraineth himself from euell, must be spoyled. When the LORDE sawe this, it displeased him sore, y there was no where eny equite. He sawe also, that there was no man, which had pitie therof, or was greued at it. And he helde him by his owne power, and cleued to his owne rightousnes. He put rightousnes vpon him for a brest plate, and set the helmet of health vpon his heade. He put on wrath in steade of clothe, and toke gelously aboute him for a cloke: like as when a man goeth forth worthfully to recopence his enemies, and to be avenged of his aduersaries. Namely, that he might recompence and rewarde the Jldes, wherthorow the name of the LORDE might be feared, from the risinge of the Sonne: and his magesty, vnto the goinge downe of the same.

The prophet Esay.

For he shal come as a violent waterstreame, which the wynde of the LORDE hath moued. But vnto Sion there shal come a redeemer, and vnto them in Jacob that turne from wickednesse, saith the LORDE. I will make this conuenant with them (sayeth y LORDE): My spierethat is come vpon the, and the wordes which I haue put in y mouth, shal neuer go out of thy mouth, nor out of y mouth of thy childre, no ner out of y mouth of thy childers childre, from this tyme forth for euer more.

The lx. Chapter.

Now therfore get the vp by tymes, for thy light cometh, and the glory of y LORDE shal ryse vpon y. For lo, while y darknesse and cloude couereth the earth, and the people, the LORDE shal shewe the light, and his glory shal besene in the. The Gentiles shal come to thy light, and kynges to the brightnes y springeth forth vpon y. Lift vpon thine eyes, and loke rounde aboute the: All these gather the selues, and come to the. Sonnes shal come vnto y from farre, and daughters shal gather the selues to the on every side. When thou seist this, thou shalt maruel exceedingly, and thine hert shal be opened: when the power of the see shal be couerted vnto the (that is) when the strength of the Gentiles shal come vnto the. The multitude of Camels shal couer y, the Diomedaries of Madia and Ephra. All they of Saba shal come, bringinge golde and incense, and shewing the prayse of the LORDE. All the catel of Cedar shal be gathered vnto y, the rames of Labaioth shal serue the, to be offred vpon myne auter, which I haue chosen in the house of my glory which I haue garnished. But what are these that fle here like the cloudes, and as the dones flienge to their wyndowes:

The Jles also shal gather the vnto me, and specially the shippes of y see: that they maye bunge the sonnes from farre, and their syluer and their golde with them, vnto the name of the LORDE thy God, vnto the holy one of Israel, that hath glorified the. Strangers shal buylde vpon thy walles, and their kynges shal do the seruyce. For when I am angrie, I synne the: and when it pleaseth me, I pardon the. Thy gates shal stonde open still both daye and night, and neuer be shut: that the hooste of the Gentiles maye come, and that their kynges maye be brought vnto the. For every people and kingdome that serueth not the, shal perish, and be destroyed with the swerde. The glory of libanus shal come vnto the: The fyre trees, Boxes and Cedres together, to garnish the place of my Sanctuary, for I wil glorifie the place of my sete.

Moreover those shal come kneeling vnto the, y haue vexed the: and all they that despised y, shal fall downe at y fore. Thou shalt be called the cite of the LORDE, the holy Sion of Israel. Because thou hast bene forsaken and hated, so that no man went thorow the: I wil make the glorious for euer and euer, and ioysful thorew out all posterities. Thou shalt sucke the mylk of the Gentiles, and kynges brestes shal fede the. And thou shalt knowe that I the LORDE am thy Sauoure and defender, the mighty one of Jacob. For brasie wil I geue the golde, and for yron syluer, for wood brasie, and for stones yron. I wil make peace thy ruler, and rightousnes thyne officer. Violence and robbery shal neuer be herde of in thy ionde, nether harme and destruction with in thy borders. Thy walles shal be called health, and thy gates the prayse of God. The Sonne shal neuer by thy daye light, and the light of the Moone shal neuer shyne vnto the: but y LORDE himself shal be thy euerlasting light, and thy God shal be thy glory.

Thy Sonne shal neuer go downe, and thy Moone shal not be taken awaye, for the LORDE himself shal be thy euerlasting light, and thy sorrowful dayes shal be rewarded y. Thy people shal be all godly, and possesse the lande for euer: the floure of my plantinge, the worke of my hondes, wherof I wil reioyce. The yongest zleest shal growe in to a thousande, and the symplest in to a stronge people. I the LORDE shal shortly bunge this thinge to passe in his tyme.

The spier of the LORDE God is w me, for y LORDE hath anoynted me, and sent me, to preach good tydiges vnto the poore, yf I might bynde vp yf wounded hertes, yf I might preach deliuerance to yf captyne, & open the pryson to the that are bounde: yf I might declare yf acceptable yeare of yf LORDE, & the daye of yf avégeaunce of our God: that I might comfore all them that are in heuynesse, that I might geue vnto them yf mourne in Sion, bewty in the steade of ashes, ioyful oymēt for sighinge, pleasaunt raymēt for an heuy mide: That they might be called excellent in rightuousnesse, a platin ge of the LORDE for him to reioyce in.

They shal buylde the lōge rough wildernes, & set vp yf olde deserte. They shal repaire the waist places, & soch as haue bene voyde thow out many generaciōs. Straungers shal stōde & fede yf catel, & the Aleauntes shal be yf plowmē & reapers. But ye shal be named the prestes of the LORDE, & me shal call you the seruantes of our God. Ye shall enioye the goodes of yf Gētiles & tryūphe in their substāce. For yf greaier repiose & shame, shal they haue ioye, yf ye maye haue parte wthē. For they shal haue dubble possiō on i their lōde, & euerlastinge ioye shal be wth them. For I the LORDE, which loue right ad hate robbery (though it were offred me) shal make their woikes ful of faithfulness, & make an euerlastinge couenaunt wth them.

Their sede also and their generacion shal be knowne amōge the Gētiles, and amōge the people. All they that se them, shall knowe, that they are the hie blessed sede of yf LORDE. And therefore I am ioyful in the LORDE, & my soule reioysē in my God. For he shall put vpon me the garmēt of health, & couer me with the mātē of rightuousnes. He shal decke me like a brydegrome, & as a bryde that hath hir apparell vpo her. For like as yf tro unde bringeth forth frute, & as the garde shutteth forth sede: So shal the LORDE God cause rightuousnes, and the feare of God to flourish forth befor all the heithen.

The li. Chapter.

Of Sions sake therefore wil I not holde my tūge, & for Ierusalem sake I will not ceasse: vntill their rightuousnes breake forth as yf shyninge light, & their health as a burnyng lampe. Then shal the Gētiles se thy rightuousnesse & all kinges thy glory. Thou shalt be named with a new name, which the mouth of yf LORDE shal shewe. Thou shalt be a crowne in the honde of the LORDE, and a glorious garlade in the hōde of thy God. From this tyme forth thou shalt neuer be called the forsake, & thy lōde shal nomore be called the wildernes. But thou shalt be called Zephziba (that is, my beloued) & yf lōde Zēula (that is) a married womā: for yf LORDE loueth yf, & thy lōde shal be inhabited. And li ke as yonge mā taketh a daughter to marriage, so shal God marry himself vnto yf sonnes. And as a brydegrome is glad of his bryde, so shal God reioyse ouer the.

I wil set watchmē vpo thy walles (o Jerusalem) which shall nether ceasse daye nor night, to preach yf LORDE. And ye also shall not kepe him close, nor leaue to speake of him, vntill Ierusalem be set vp, & made the prayse of the worlde. The LORDE hath sworne by his right honde & by his stronge arme, that frō hence forth he wil not geue thy come to be meate for thine enemies, ner yf wyne (where thou hast laboured) to be drynke for yf straungers. But they that haue gathered in the come, shal eate it, & geue thankes to the LORDE: & they that haue borne in the wyne, shall drynke it in the court of my Sanctuary.

Stōde back, & departe a sūder, ye yf stōde vnder yf gate, make rowme ye people, repaire the strete, & take awaye yf stones, & set out a tokē for the people. Beholde, yf LORDE proclameth in the endes of the worlde: yf daughter Sion: se, thy Saluaciō cometh, behold, he bringeth his treasure wth him, & his woikes go before him. For they whō yf LORDE deliuereth, shal be called the holy people: & as for the, thou shalt be named the greatly occupied, and not the forsaken.

The lxiij. Chapter.

What is he this, that cometh from Edom, with stayned reade clothes of Bosra: (which is so costly cloth) & cometh in so neebly with all his strength: I am he yf teacheth rightuousnes, & am of power to helpe. Wherefore the is thy clothing reade, & thy raymēt like his yf treadeth in yf wyne presse: I haue troddē the presse my self alone, & of all people, there was not one wth me. Thus haue I troddē downe myne enemies in my wrath, and set my fete vpo them in my indignacion: And their bloude sprange vpo my cloothes, & so haue I stayned all my rayment. For the daye of vengeance that I haue take in honde, & the yeare of my deliuerance is come. I looked aboute me, and there was no mā to shewe me eny helpe, I fel downe, and no man helde me vp. The I helde me by myne owne arme, & my seruētēesse susteyned me. And thus haue I troden downe the people in my wrath, and bathed them in my displeasure: In so moch that I haue shed their bloude vpon the earth.

The prophet Esay.

I will declare the goodnesse of the LORDE, yee and the prayse of the LORDE for all that he hath gyuen vs, for the greaie good yf he hath done for Israel: which he hath gyuen them of his owne fauoure, & accordinge to the multitude of his louynge kindneses. For he sayde: These no doute wil be my people, and no shietinge children, and so he was their Sauoure. In their troubles he forsoke thē not, but the angel that went forth from his presence, deliuered them: Of very loue & kindnesse that he had vnto them, redemed he them. He hath borne them, and caried them vpon his arme, since the worlde begāne. But after they prouoked him to wraath and vexed his holy minde, he was their enemye, and fought agaynst them him self. Yet remēbered he the olde tyme, of Moses & his people: How he brought them from the water of the see, as a shepheard doth with his shepe: how he had gūen his holy spire amonge them: how he had led Moses by the right honde with his glorious arme: how he had dewyded the water before them (whereby he gat him self an euerlastinge name) how he led them in the deserte, as an hoise is led in the playne, that they shulde not stōmble. The spire of the LORDE led them, as a tame beast goeth in the felde.

Thus (o God) hast thou led thy people, to make thy self a glorious name with all. Loke downe then from heaue, and beholde the dwellinge place of thy sanctuary & thy glory. How is it, yf thy gelousy, thy strength, the multitude of thy mercies and thy louynge kindnesse, wyl not be entreated of vs: Yet art thou o father: For Abraham knoweth vs not, nether is Israel acquainted with vs. But thou LORDE art our father and redeemer, and thy name is euerlastinge. O LORDE wherefore hast thou led vs out of thy waye: wherefore hast thou hardened oure hertes, that we feare the not: Be at one with vs agayne, for thy seruantes sake yf are of the generaciō of thy heretage. Thy people hath had but litle of thy Sanctuary in possesiō, for oure enemies haue take it in: And we are become, cūen as we were from the begynnynge: but thou art not their LORDE, for they haue not called vpon thy name.

The lxiij. Chapter.

That thou woldest cleue the heauen in sonder, & come downe: that the mountaynes might melt awaye at thy presence, like as at an hore fyre: and that the malicious might boyle, as the water doth vpon the fy re: Whereby thy name might be knowne amōge thine enemies, & yf the Gētiles might tremble before yf. That thou mightest come downe with thy wonderous straunge woikes, then shulde the hilles melt at thy presence. For since the begynnynge of the worlde there was none (excepte thou o God) that herde or perceaued, nether hath eny eye sene what thou host for the, that put their trust in the.

Thou helpest him that doth right with cherefulness, and them that thynke vpon thy wayes. But lo, thou art angrie, for we offende, and haue bene euer in synne, and there is not one whole. We are all as an vnclene thinge, & all oure rightuousneses are as the clothes stayned with the floures of a woman: we fall euerychone as the leafe, for oure synnes caue vs awaye like the wynde. There is no man that calleth vpon thy name, that stōnderth vpo to take holde by the. Therefore hydest thou thy face from vs, and confuseth vs, because of oure synnes.

But now o LORDE, thou father of ours: we are the claye, and thou art oure potter, and we all are the worke of thy hondes. Be not tofore displeased (o LORDE) and kepe not oure offences to lōge in thy remembraunce, but considre that we all are thy people. The cities of thy Sanctuary lye waist, Sion is a wildernes, and Jerusalem a deserte. Our holy house which is oure bewty, where oure fathers praysed the, is brent vp, yee all oure comodities and pleasures are waysted awaye. Wilt thou not be intreated (LORDE) for all this: Wilt thou holde thy peace, and scourge vs so sore?

The lxx. Chapter.

They shal seke me, that hitherto haue not seded for me: they shal fynde me, that hitherto haue not sought me. Then shal I saye immediatly, to the people that neuer called vpon my name: I am here, I am here. For thus longe haue I euer holden out my hondes to an vnfaithful people, that go not the right waye, but after their owne ymaginacions: To a people, that is euer desyng me to my face. They make their oblacions in gardens, and their smoke vpon altars of bakke, they lurke amonge the graues, and lie in the dennes all night. They eate swyne flesh, and vnclene broth is in their vessels. If thou comest nye them, they saie: touch me not, for I am holier then thou.

All these men when I am angrie, shal be turned to smoke and fyre, that shal burne for ever. Beholde, it is written before my face, and shall not be forgotten, but recompensed. I shall reward it them in to their bosome: I mean your mysdedes, and the mysdedes of your fathers together (saith the LORDE) which have made their smokes upon the mountaynes, and blasphemed me upon the hills: their fore will I measure their olde dedes in to the ir bosome agayne.

B Moreover thus saith the LORDE: like as when one wolde gather holy grapes, men saye unto him: breake it not of, for it is holy: Even so will I do also for my seruantes sake, that I will not destroye them all. But I will take a sede out of Jacob, and out of Iuda one, to take possession of my hill. My chosen shall possesse these things, and my seruantes shall dwell there. Saron shall be a shepefold, and the valley of Achor shall geue stal linge for the catell of my people, that feare me. But as for you, ye are they, y haue forsaken the LORDE, and forgotten my holy hill. Ye haue set up an auker vnto fortune, and gotten rich drinke offeringes vnto treasure. Therefore wil I nombre you with the swerde, that ye shall be destroyed all together. For when I called, no man gaue me answer: when I spake, ye hearkened not vnto me, but dyd wickednes before myne eyes, and chosed the thinge that pleased me not.

C Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, my seruantes shall eate, but ye shall haue hunger. Beholde, my seruantes shall drynke, but ye shall suffre thurst. Beholde, my seruantes shall be merry, but ye shall be confounded. Beholde, my seruantes shall reioyse for very quietnesse of herte. But ye shall erie for sorrow of herte, and coplayne for veracion of mynde. Your name shall not be sworn by amonge my chosen, for God the LORDE shall slaye you, and call his seruantes by another name. Who so reioysyth vpon earth, shall reioyse in the true God: And Who so sweareth vpon earth, shall sweare in the true God. For the olde enemye shall be forgotten, and taken awaye out of my sight. For lo, I shall make a new heauē, and a new earth. And as for the olde, they shall neuer be thought vpon, ner kepte in mynde: but me shall be glad and enermore reioyse, for the thinges, that I shall do.

D For why: Beholde, I shall make a ioyfull Ierusalem, yee I myself will reioyse with Ierusalem, and be glad with my people: And the voyce of wepinge and waylinge shall not be herde in her from thence forth. There shall neuer be childe ner olde man, that haue not their full dayes. But whē the childe cometh to an hūderth yeare olde, it shall dye. And whē he that is an hūderth yeare of age do wronge, he shall be cursed. They shall buyld houses, and dwell in them: they shall plante vnyardes, and eate the frute of them. They shall not buyld, and another possesse: they shall not plante, and another eate: But the life of my people shall be like a tre, and so shall the works of their hondes.

My chosen shall lyue longe, they shall not labour in vayne, ner beget w trouble: for they are the hie blessed sede of the LORDE, and their frutes with them. And it shall be, that or euer they call, I shall answer them. Why le they are yet but thynkinge how to speake, I shall heare them. The wolff and the lambe shall fede together, and the lyon shall eate haye like the bullocke. But earth shall be the serpentes meate. There shall no man hurte ner slaye another, in all my holy hill, saith the LORDE.

The lxxvi. Chapter.

Thus saith the LORDE: Heauē is my seate, and the earth is my fote stole. Where shall now the house stonde, y ye will buyld vnto me? And where shall be the place, y I wil dwell in? As for these thinges, my hōde hath made them all, and they are all created, saith the LORDE. Which of them shall I then regarde? Eue him that is of a lowly troubled spiere, and stōdeth in awe of my wordes. For who so slayeth an oxe for me, doth me so greate dishonoure, as he y killeth a mā. He that killeth a shepe for me, chooketh a dogge. He that bringeth me meat offeringes, offereth swynes blode: Who so maketh me a memonall of Incense, prayseth the thinge y is vnright. Yet take they such wayes in honde, and their soule delireth in these abhominacions.

Therefore wil I also haue pleasure in iauinghing them to scorne, and the thinge that they feare, wil I bunge vpon thē. For when I called, no man gaue answer: when I spake, they wolde not heare: But dyd wickednesse before myne eyes, and chosed the thinges that displeasē me. Heare the worde of God all ye, that feare the thinge which he speket. Your brethren that hate you, and cast you out for my names sake, saye: Let the LORDE magnifie himself, that we maye se your gladnesse: and yet they shall be confounded.

For as touchinge the cite and the temple, I heare the voyce of the LORDE, that will reward, and recompence his enemies: like as when a wife bringeth forth a man childe, or er she suffre the payne of the byrth and angryll of y trauayle. Who euer herde or sawe such thinges: doth the grounde beare in one daye: or are the people borne all at once, as Sion beareth his sonnes? For thus saith the LORDE: Am I he that maketh other to beare, and beare not my self? Am not I he that beareth, and maketh barren: saith thy God. Reioyse with Ierusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that loue her. Be ioyful with her, all ye that mourned for her. For ye shall sucke cosorte out of hir breasts, and be satisfied. Ye shall taist, and haue delite in the plenteousnesse of hir power. For thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I wil let peace i to her, like a water floude, and y might of the heithē like a flowing stream. Then shall ye sucke, ye shall be borne vpon hir sydes, and be ioyful vpon hir knees. For like as a childe is comforted of his mother, so shall I comforte you, and ye shall be comforted in Ierusalem. And when ye se this, your herte shall reioyse, and your bones shall flourish like an herbe.

Thus shall the honde of the LORDE be knowne amonge his seruantes, and his indignacion amonge his enemies. For beholde, the LORDE shall come w fyre, and his charret shall be like a whyrlwynde, that he maye recompence his vengeance in his wiarth, and his indignacion with the flame of fyre. For y LORDE shall iudge all flesh with the fyre and with his swerde, and there shall be a greate nombre slayne of the LORDE. Soch as haue made themselues holy and cleane in the gardens, and those that haue eaten swyne flesh, myce, and other abhominacions, shall betaken awaye together, saith the LORDE. For I wil come to gather all people and ton ges, with their workes and ymaginacions: these shall come, and se my glory. Vnto them shall I geue a tokē, and sende certayne of thē (that be deliuered) amonge the Gentiles: in to Celicia, Africa and Lidia (where men can handle bowes) in to Italie also and Greke londe.

The Iles farre of, that haue not herde speake of me, and haue not sene my glory: shall preach my prayse amonge the Gentiles, and shall bunge all your brethren for an offering vnto the LORDE, out of al people, vpon horses, charettes and hoise lytters, vpon Mooles and carres to Ierusalem my holy hill (saith the LORDE) like as the children of Israel bunge the offeringe in cleane vessels, to the house of the LORDE.

And I shall take out certayne of them for to be prestes and leuites, saith y LORDE. For like as the new heauē and the new earth which I wil make, shall be fast stablished by me: (saith the LORDE) So shall your sede and your name contynue, and there shall be a new Meone for the other, and a new Sabbath for the other, and all flesch shall come to worshiipe before me, (saith y LORDE.) And they shall go forth, and loke vpon the caryons of them, that haue transgressed agaynst me.

For their wormes shall not dye, nether shall their fyre be quenched, and all flesh shall abhorre them.

The prophet Jeremy.

These are the Sermons of Jeremy the sonne of helchia the prest, one of them that dwelt at Anathot in the londe of Ben Jamin: when the LORDE had first spoken with him, in the tyme of Josias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, in the xij yeare of his kingdome: and so durynge vnto the tyme of Joachim the sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda, and vnto the xi yeares of Sedechias the sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda were ended: when Jerusalem was taken, euen in the fyfth Moneth.

The first Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE spake thus vnto me: Before I fashioned the in thy mothers womb, I dyd knowe the: And ere thou wast borne, I sanctified the, & ordered the, to be a prophet vnto the people. The sayde I: Oh LORDE God, I am vnmete, for I am yet but yonge. And the LORDE answered me thus: Saye not so, I am to yonge: For thou shalt go to all that I shall sende the vnto, and whatsoeuer I commaunde the, that shalt thou speake. Be not afrayed of their faces, for I wil be with the, to deliuer the, saith the LORDE.

And with that, the LORDE stretched out his honde, and touched my mouth, and sayde: morouer vnto me: Beholde I put my wordes in thy mouth, and this daye do I set the ouer the people and kingdomes: that thou mayest rote out, breake of, destroye, and make waile: and that thou mayest buylde vp, and plate. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me sayenge: Jeremy, what seist thou? And I sayde: I see a watynge rodde. Then sayde the LORDE: thou hast sene right, for I will watch diligently vpon my worde, to perforce me it.

It happened afterwarde, that the LORDE spake to me agayne, & sayde: What seist thou? And I sayde: I do see a seethinge pot, lookinge from out of the north hitherwarde.

The ii. Chap. Ifo. xxiii.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Out of the north shall come a plage vpon all the dwellers of the londe. For so, I will call all the officers of the kyngdomes of the north, (saith the LORDE.) And they shall come, and euery one shall set his seate in the gates of Jerusalem, and in all their walles rounde aboute, and thorow all the cities of Iuda. And thorow them shall I declare my iudgment, vpon all the wickednesse of these men that haue forsaken me: that haue offred vnto straunge goddes, & worshipped the workes of their owne bondes.

And therefore gyde vp thy loynes, arise, and tell them all, that I geue the in commaundement. Feare them not, I will not haue the to be afrayed of the. For beholde, this daye do I make the a stroge fenced towne, an yron pyler, and a wall of stele agaynst the whole londe, agaynst the kinges and mightie men of Iuda, agaynst the prestes and people of the londe. They shall fight agaynst the, but they shall not be able to ouercome the: for I am with the, to deliuer the, saith the LORDE.

The II. Chapter.

Oreuer, the worde of the LORDE commaunded me thus: Go thy waye, & crie in the eares of Jerusalem, & saye: Thus saith the LORDE: I remembre the for the kyndnesse of thy youth, and because of thy stedfast loue: in that thou folowdest me thorow the wilderness, in an vntilled londe. Thou Israel wast halowed vnto the LORDE, and so was his first frutes. All they that denoured Israel, offended: misfortune fell vpon them, saith the LORDE. Heare therefore the worde of the LORDE, O thou house of Jacob, and all the generacion of the house of Israel. Thus saith the LORDE vnto you:

What vnfaithfulness founde yeure fathers in me, that they wente so farre awaye from me, fallinge to lightnesse, and beinge so wayne? They thought not in their hertes: Where haue we left the LORDE, y brought vs out of the lode of Egypte: y led vs thorow the wilderness, thorow a deserte and rough londe, thorow a drie and a dedly londe, yee a londe that no man had gone thorow, and wherein no man had dwelt. And when I had brought you in to a pleasaunt & elubylde londe, that ye might enioye the frutes and all the comodities of the same: ye went forth and defyled my londe, & brought myne heretage to abhominacion.

The prestes the selues saide not once: where is the LORDE? They y haue the lawe in the ir bondes, knowe me not: The shepherdes offende agaynst me. The prophetes do serue ce vnto Baal, & folowe such thinges as shall bunge them no profit.

Wherefore I am constrained (sayeth the LORDE) to make my complaynte vpon you, and vpon youre children. Go in to the Iles of Cerchim, and loke wel: sende vnto Cedar, ta ke diligent hede: and se, whether such thinges be done there, whether the Gentiles themsel ues deale so falsly & vntuly with their god des (which yet are no goddes in dede.) But my people hath genen ouer their hie honou re, for a thinge that maye not helpethem.

Be astonished (o ye heauens) be afraide,
& abashed at soch a thinge, saith the LOR
DE. For my people hath done two euils.
They haue forsake me the well of the water of life, and digged them pittes, yee vile and broken pittes, that holde no water. Is Isra el a bonde seruaunt, or one of the household?
Why is he then so spoyled? Why do they roa re and crie then vpon him, as a lyon? They haue made his londe wayst, his cities are so bient vp, that there is no man dwellinge in them. Yee the children of Toph and Tapha nes haue defyled thy necke.

Cometh not this vnto the, because thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God, euer sen ce he led the by the waye? And what hast thou now to do in y strete of Egypte? to dun ke foule water? Either, what makest thou in the waye to Assiria? To dunke water of the floude? Thine owne wickednesse shall repro ue the, and thy turnynge awaye shall condem ne the: that thou mayest knowe and vnder stonde, how euil and hurtful a thinge it is, y thou hast forsaken the LORDE thy God, and not feared him, saith the LORDE God of hoofes.

I haue euer broken thy yock of olde, & bur stenthy bondes: yet saiest thou, I wil nomore serue, but (like an harlot) thou runnest aboute vpon all hie hilles, & amonge all grene trees:
where as I planted the out of noble grapes and good rotes. How art thou turned then into a bytter, vnfrutefull, and straunge gra pe? Yee and that so sore: that though thou was shest the with Vitrus & makest thyself to sauoure with that swete smellingge herbe of Bouth: yet in my sight thou art stayned with thy wickednesse, saith the LORDE thy God.

Saye not now: I am not vnclene, and I haue not folowed the goddes. Loke vpon thy ne owne waies in the woddes, valleis & den nes: so shalt thou knowe, what thou hast do ne. Thou art like a swife Diomedary, that

The ii. Chap.

goeth easely his waye: and thy wantonnes is like a wilde Ass, that vseth the wilderne se, and that shuffeth and bloweth at his wil.
Who can tame the? All they that sette the,
shal not saile, but synde the in thine owne vnclennes. Thou kepest thy fore from nath nes, and thy throte from thurst, and thou kest thus in thy self trust, I wil take no sor we, I wil lone the straunge goddes, & ban ge vpon them.

Like as a shefe that is taken with the de de, cometh to shame, enso is the house of Israel cometo confucion: the comon people, their kinges and rulers, their prestes and pro phetes. For they saye to a stock, thou art my father, and to a stone: thou hast begotten me, yee they haue turned their back vpon me, & not their face. But in the tyme of their trou ble, when they saye: stonde vp, and helpe vs,
I shal answere the: Where are now thy god des, that thou hast made the: by them shal de vp, and helpe the in the tyme of neede? For loke how many cities thou hast (o Juda) so many goddes hast thou also.

Wherefore the wil ye go to lawe with me, seinge ye all are synners agaynst me, saith the LORDE? It is but lost labour, that I smyte youre children, for they receaue not my correction. Your owne swearde destroyeth your prophetes, like a deuouringe lyon. Y ye be the people of the LORDE, then heare v to his worde: Am I the become a wilderne se vnto the people of Israel? or a londe that hath no light? Wherefore saith my people then: we are falle of, and we wil come no mo re vnto the? Doth a mayden forget hir ray met, or a bryde hir stomacher? And doth my people forget me so longe? Why boofest thou thy wayes so hylie, (to opraune fauoure ther thorow) when thou hast yet stained them w blasphemies?

Vpon thy wynges is founde the blonde of poore and innocent people, and that ne in corners and holes only, but opely in all the se places. Yet darrest thou saye: I am gill lesse: Tush, his wraich can not come vpon me.
Beholde, I wil reason with y, because thou darrest saye: I haue not offended. O howe nel wil it be for the, to abyde it: when it shall be knowne, how oft thou hast gone backward.
For thou shalt be confounded, as wel of Egypte, as of the Assirians: Yee thou shalt go thy waye from the, & smyte y ne bondes together vpon thy heade. Because the LOR DE shal bringe that confidence and hope of thine to naught, and thou shalt not prosper with all.

The prophet Jeremy.

The iii. Chapter.

Only, when a man putteth awaye his wife, and she goeth from him, and marieth with another, then the que stion is: shulde he resorte vnto her eny more after that? Is not this selde then defyled and vnclene? But as for the, thou hast played the harlot with many louers, yet turne agay ne to me, saith the LORDE. Lift vp thine eyes on euery syde, and loke, yf thou be not defyled. Thou hast waited for them in the streets, and as a murtherer in the wilderne se. Thorow thy whordome and shamefull blasphemies, is the londe defyled.

This is the cause, that the rayne and e uenynge dew hath ceased. Thou hast got ten the an whores foreheade, and canst not be ashamed. Els woldest thou saye vnto me: O my father, thou art he that hast brought me vp, and led me from my youth: Wilt thou then put me awaye, and cast me of for euer?
Or wilt thou withdrawe thy self clene fro me? Neuertheles, thou speakest soch wor des, but thou art euer doinge worse, and worse.

The LORDE sayde also vnto me, in the tyme of Josias the kinge: Hast thou sene what that shentinge Israel hath done: how she hath runne vp vpon all hie hilles, and amonge all thicke trees, and there played the harlot: hast thou sene also, (when she had do ne all this) how I sayde vnto her: that she shulde turne agayne vnto me, and yet she is not returned? Juda that vnfaithfull sister of hirs also sawe this: Namely, that after I had well sene the aduoutrye of the shenting ge harlot Israel, I put her awaye, and ga ue her a byll of deuorcement.

For all this, hir vnfaithfull sister Juda was not ashamed, but wente backe and pla yed the whore also. Yee and the noyse of hir whordome hath defyled the whole lode. For she hath committed hir aduoutrie with sto nes and stockes.

Neuerthelesse, hir vnfaithfull sister Juda is not returned vnto me agayne with hir who le herte, but faynedly, saith the LORDE.
And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The bac syder Israel is more rightuous, the vn faithfull Juda: and therfore go preach the se wordes toward the north, & saye: Thou shentinge Israel, turne agayne (saith the LORDE,) and I will not turne my face from you, for I am merciful, saith the LORDE, & I will not all waye beare displeasure agaynst the: but on this condicion, that thou knowe thy greute blasphemy: Namely, that thou

The iiij. Chap. Fo. xxv.

hast vnfaithfully forsaken the LORDE thy God, & hast made thy self partaker of straun ge goddes vnder all grene trees, but hast had no wil to heare my voyce, saith the LOR DE.

O ye shentinge children, turne agayne, saith the LORDE, and I wil be married with you. For I will take one out of the citie and two out of one generacion from amonge you, and bringe you out of Sion: and will gene you hyrdme after myne owne mynde, which shal fede you with lernynge and wysdome.
Moreover, when ye be increased and multi plied in the londe, then (saith the LORDE)
there shall nomore boost be made of the arke of the LORDES Testament: No man shall thinke vpon it, nether shall eny man make mention of it: for from thence forth it shall nether be visited, ner honoured with giftes.

Then shall Jerusalem be called the LOR DES seate, and all heithen shalbe gathered vnto it, for the name of the LORDES sake, which shalbe set vp at Jerusalem. And from that tyme forth, they shall folowe nomore the ymaginacion of their owne frauwerde
herte.

Thē those y be of the house of Juda, shal go vnto the house of Israel: And they shal come together out of the north, in to the sa me londe that I haue genen youre fathers.
I haue shewed also, how I toke the vp bein ge but a childe, and gauethe a pleasaunt lon de for thine heretage, yee and a goodly hoo ste of the heithen: and how I commaun ded the, that thou shuldest call me father on ly, and not to shentke fro me.

But like as a woman sayleth hir lover, so are ye vnfaithfull vnto me (o ye house of Is rael) saith the LORDE. And therfore the voy ce of the children of Israel was herde on e uery side, wepinge and waylinge: for they ha ue defyled their waye, and forgotten God their LORDE.

O ye shentinge children, turne agayne, (saynge: lo, we are thine, for thou art the LORDE oure God:) And so shal I heale you re backturnynges. The hilles fall, and all the hie pryde of the mountaynes, but the health of Israel shal stand only vpon God oure LORDE.

Confucion hath deuoured oure fathers laboure from oure youth vp: yee their shepe and bullockes, their sonnes and daughters:
So do we also slepe in oure confucion, and shame couereth vs: for we and oure fathers from oure youth vp vnto this daye haue syn ned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and ha

Jer. 5. a
and 12. a

A Israel, yf thou wilt turne the, then turne vnto me, saith the LORDE.
And yf thou wilt put away thy ab-ominacions out of my sight, thou shalt not be moued: And shalt sweare: The LORDE lyueth: in trowth, in equite and rightuous-nesse: and all people shall be fortunable and ioyfull in him. For thus saith the LORDE, to all Juda and Jerusalem: plowe youre lon-de, and sowe not amonge the thornes.

Jer. 6. b
and 9. a
Jer. 21. c

Be circumcised in the LORDE, and cut awaye the foreskynne of youre hertes, all ye of Juda, and all the indwellers of Jerusalem: that my indignacion breake not out like fyre, & kyndle, so that no man maye quench it, because of the wickednes of youre yma-ginacions.

Esa. 58. a

Preach in Juda and Jerusalem, crie out and speake: blowe the trompettes in the lon-de, crie that every man maye heare, and sa-ye: Gather you together, and we will go in to stronge cities. Set vp the token in Sion, speede you, and make no tarienge: for I will bringe a greate plage, and a greate destruction from the north. For the spoyler of the Gentiles is broken vp from his place, as a lyon out of his dene, that he maye make the londe waist, and destroye the cities, so, that no man maye dwell therein. Wherfore gyde yourselues aboute wth sack cloth, mourne, and wepe, for the fearfull wiath of the LOR-DE shall not be withdrawn from you.

Jer. 1. c

At the same tyme (saith the LORDE) the hert of the kinge and of the prynces shall be gone, the prestes shall be astonished, and the prophetes shall be sore afraied. Then sayde J: O LORDE God, hast thou then disceaued this people and Jerusalem, sayenge: ye shall haue peace, and now the swerde goeth tho-row their lyues? Then shall it be saide to the people: to Jerusalem: there cometh a war-me wynde from the north thorow the waye of my people, but nether to fanne, ner to clese.

Deut. 28. a
Jer. 1. b

After that shall there come vnto me a stronge wynde, and then wil I also geue sentence vpon them. For lo, he cometh downe like as a cloude, and his charettes are like a stormy wynde: his horsmen are swifter then the Aegle. Wo vnto vs, for we are destroyed. O Jerusalem, wash thine hert from wickednesse, that thou mayest be helped. How longe shall thy noysome thoughtes remayne with thee?

the thinge that I haue purposed and ta-

the cities shall be voyde, and no man dwel-linge therein.

What wilt thou now do, thou beinge de-

Ephraim speaketh out, and telleth of a destruction. Beholde, the heithen gene Jerusalem warnynge, and preach vnto her, that hir destroyers are comynge from farre coun-trees. They tell the cities of Juda the same also, they shall geue them warnynge in every place, like as the watch men in the felde. For they haue prouoked me to wiath, saith the LORDE.

Thy wayes and thy thoughtes, haue brought the vnto this, this is thyne owne wickednesse and disobedience, that hath possessed thyne hert: Ah my bely, ah my bely, (shalt thou crie) how is my hert so sore? my hert paunteth within me, I can not be still,
for I haue herdethe crienge of the trompetes, and peales of warre.

They crie murther vpon murther, the whole londe shall perish. Immediatly my tentres were destroyed, and my hanginges, in the twynkinge of an eye. How longe shall I see the tokens of warre, and heare the noy-se of the trompettes?

Nevertheless this shall come vpon them, because my people is become foolish, and hath vtterly no vnderstandinge. They are the children of foolishnes, and without eny dis-creit. To do euell, they haue witt ynough:
but to do well, they haue no wisedome. I haue looked vpon the earth, and se, it is wayst and voyde. I looked towarde heauen, and it had no shynne.

I behelde the mountaynes, and they tranbled, and all the hilles were in a feare. I loked aboute me, and there was no body, and all the byrdes of the ayre were awaye. I marked well, and the plowed felde was become waist: yee all their cities were broken downe at the presence of the LORDE, and indignacion of his wiath.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: The whole londe shall be desolate, yet will I not then haue done. And therefore let the eare mourne, and let the heauen be sore aboue: for
the thinge that I haue purposed and ta-

and Juda forsaken me, saith the LORDE.
They haue denied the LORDE, and sayde: it is not he.

Tush, there shall no misfortune come vpon vs, we shall se nether swerde ner hon-
ger. As for the warnynge of the prophetes, they take it: but for wynde, yee there is none of these, which will tell them, that soch thin-ges shall happen vnto them.

Wherfore thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: because ye speake soch wordes, beholde: The wordes that are in thy mouth will I turne to fyre, and make the people to be wod, that it maye consume them.

Lo, I will bringe a people vps you from farre, o house of Israel (saith the LORDE) a mightie people, an olde people, a people who se speach thou knowest not, nether vndersto-dest what they saye.

Their arrowes are sodane death, yee they them selues be very giauntes. This people shall eate vp thy fyre & thy meate, yee they shall deuoure thy sonnes and thy daughters, thy shepe and thy bullockes.

They shall eate vp thy grapes & fyges.
As for thy stronge and well sensed cities, wherin thou didest trust, they shall destroye them with the swerde.

Nevertheless I will not then haue done with you, saith the LORDE. But yf they saye: wherfore doth the LORDE oure God all this vnto vs?

Then answerethem: because, that like as ye haue forsake me, and serued straunge god-des in youre owne londe, euen so shall ye ser-ue other goddes also in a straunge londe.

Preach this vnto the house of Jacob, & crie it out in Juda, and saye thus: Heare this (thou folish) and vndiscrete people.) Ye haue eyes, but ye se not: eares haue ye, but ye hea-

not passe his boundes: For though it rage, yet can it do nothinge: and though the waues therof do swell, yet maye they not go ouer.

But this people hath a false and an obstibed you herof. For amonge my people are founde wicked personnes, that pynely laye snares and waite for men, to take them, and destroye them.

And like as a net is full of byrdes, so are their houses full of that, which they haue gotten with falsede and disceate. Herof cometh their greatesubstaunce and riches, herof are they fat and welthy, and are runne awaye fro me with shamefull blasphemies. They minstre not the lawe, they make no ende of the fatherlesse cause, they iudge not the poore accordinge to equite.

Shulde I not punysh these thinges, saith the LORDE: Shulde I not be avenged of all such people, as these be? Horrible and greuous thinges are done in the londe.

The prophetes teach falsely, and the prestes folowe them, and my people hath pleasure therein. What will come therof at the last?

The VI. Chapter.

Come out of Jerusalem, ye stronge childre of Ben Jamin: blowe vp the trompettes ye Tecuites, set vp a token vnto Bethacarem, for a plage and a greate miserye pepeth out from the North.

I will liften the daughter Sion to a sayre and tendie woman, and to her shall come the shepherdes with their flockes. Their tentes shall pitch rounde aboute her, and everyone shall fede with his honde. Make battell agaynst her (shall they saye:) Arise, let vs go vp, while it is yet daye.

Alas, the daye goeth awaye, & the night shadowes fall downe: Arise, let vs go vp by night, and destroye hir stronge holdes, for thus hath the LORDE of hostes commaunded.

Hew downe hir trees, and set vp bulwarkes agaynst Jerusalem. This is the cite that must be punished, for in her is all maliciousnes. Like as a codyte aboundeth in water, eue so this cite aboundeth in wickednes. Robbery and vnrightrousnesse is herde in her, sorow & woundes are euer there in my sight. Amende the (o Jerusalem) lest I with drawe my herte from the, and make the desolate: & thy londe also, yf no man dwel in it. For thus saith the LORDE of hostes: The residue of Israel shall be gathered, as the remnaunt of grapes.

And therefore turne thine honde agayne into the basket, like the grape gatherer. But vnto whom shall I speake: whom shall I warne, that he maye take hede? Their eares are so vncomfited, that they maye not heare.

The vi. Chap.

Beholde, they take the worde of God but for a scone, and haue no lust therto. And therefore I am so full of thy indignacion (o LORDE, that I maye suffre no longer. Shed out thy wrath vpon the children that are without, and vpon all yonge men. For the man must be taken prisoner with the wife, and the aged with the crepel. Then with their londes and wines shall be turned vnto straungers, whē I stretch out myne hand vpon the inhabitours of this londe, saith the LORDE. For from the leest vnto the most, they hange all vpon covetousnes: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they go all aboute with falsede and lies.

And besyde that, they heale the hurte of my people with swete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, when there is no peace at all. Therefore they must be ashamed, for they haue committed abheminacion. But how shulde they be ashamed, when they knowe nothinge, neither of shame ner good nurture? And therefore they shall fall amonge the slayne, and in the houre when I shall viset them, they shall be brought downe, saith the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE: go into the stretes, conside and make inquisition for the olde waye: and yf it be the good and right waye, then go therein, that ye maye fynde rest for youre soules. (But they saye: we will not walke therein) and I will set watchmen ouer you, and therefore take hede vnto the voyce of the trompet. But they saye: we will not take hede. Heare therefore ye Gentiles, and thou congregation shalt knowe, what I haue denyed for them. Heare thou earth also: beholde, I will cause a plage come vpon this people, euen the frute of their owne ymaginations.

For they haue not bene obedient vnto my wordes and to my lawe, but abhorred them. Wherefore bringe yeme incense from Saba, & swete smellinge Calamus from farre countries: Your burnt offerings displeas me, and I reioyse not in youre sacrifices.

And therefore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make this people fall, and they shall fall from amonge them the father of the children, one neyghboure shall perish with another.

Morouer thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, there shall come a people from the North, & a greate people shall arise from ynter of earth, w bowes & w dartes shall they be weaponed: It is a rough & scarce people, an vmerciful people: their voyce roareth like the see, they ride vpon horses wel appointed to fite.

tell agaynst the, o daughter Sion. Then shall this crie be herde: Oure armes are feeble, benynes and sorow is come vpon vs, as vpon a woman trauelinge with childe. No man go forth in to the felde, no man come vpon the hie strete: for the swearde and feare of the enemye shall be on euery side.

Wherefore, gyde a sack cloth aboute the (othou daughter of my people) sprynkle thy self with ashes, mourne and wepe bitterly, as vpon thy only beloued sonne: For the destroyer shall sodenly fall vpon vs. The haue I set for a prouer of my harde people, to seke out and to trye their wayes. For they are all vnfaithful and fallen awaye, they hange vpon shameful lucre, they are clene brasse and yron, for they hurte and destroye euery man. The bellous are brient in the fyre, the leade is consumed, the melter melteth in vayne, for the euil is not taken awaye from them. Therefore shall they be called naughty syluer, because the LORDE hath cast them out.

The VII. Chapter.

These are the wordes, that God spake vnto Jeremy: Stonde vnder the gates of the LORDES house, and crie out these wordes there, with a loude voyce, and saye: Heare the worde of the LORDE, all ye of Iuda, that go in at this doore, to honoure the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel. Amende youre wayes and youre counsels, and I wil let you dwell in this place. Trust not in false lyengewordes, sayenge: here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE.

For yf ye will amende youre waies and counsels, yf ye wil indge right betwixte a man and his neyghboure: yf ye wil not oppresse the straunger, the fatherles & the wyddowe: yf ye wil not shed innocent bloude in this place: yf ye wil not cleue to straunge goddes to youre owne destruction: then wil I let you dwell in this place, yee in the londe that I gaue afore tyme vnto youre fathers foreuer. But take hede, yee trust in counsels, that begyle you and do you no good. For when ye haue stollē, murthured, committed adoutrie, and periury: Whē ye haue offred vnto Baal, folowinge straunge & vntowne goddes: Then come ye, and stonde before me in this house (which hath my name geuen vnto it) and saye: Tush, we are absolved quyte, though we haue done all these abominacions.

What? thinke you this house that beareth my name, is a denne of theues? And these thinges are not done pynely, but before myne eyes, saith the LORDE. Go to my place in Silo, where vnto I gaue my name afore tyme, and loke well what I dyd to the same place, for the wickednes of my people of Israel. And now, though ye haue done all these dedes (saith the LORDE) and I myself rose vp euer by tymes to warne you and to comon with you: yet wolde ye not heare me: I called, ye wolde not answer. And therefore euen as I haue done vnto Silo, so wil I do to this house, that my name is geuen vnto, (and that ye put youre trust in) yee vnto the place that I haue geuen to you and your fathers. And I shall thrust you out of my sight, as I haue cast out all youre brethien the whole sede of Ephraim.

The vii. Chap. Ho. xxvii.

Therefore thou shalt not praye for this people, thou shalt nether geue thanks, nor byd prayer for them: thou shalt make no intercession to me for them, for in no wise will I heare the. Seist thou not what they do in the cities of Iuda, and without Jerusalem? The children gather stickes, the fathers kindle the fyre, the mothers kneade the dowe, to bake cakes for the quene of heauen. They poure out drinke of fringes vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath: how be it they hurte not me (saith the LORDE) but rather confounde, and shame them selues.

And therefore thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, my wrath and my indignacion shall be poured out vpon this place, vpon men and catell, vpon the trees in the felde and all frute of the londe, & it shall burne so, that no man maye quench it.

Thus saith the LORDE of hostes, the God of Israel: Reheape vp youre burnt offerings with youre sacrifices, & eate yf flesh. But when I brought youre fathers out of Egypte, I spake no worde vnto them of burnt offerings and sacrifices: but this I commaunded them, sayenge: hearken and obeye my voyce, and I shall be youre God and ye shall be my people: so that ye walke in all the wayes, which I haue commaunded you, that ye maye prospere.

But they were not obedient, they inclined not their eares there vnto, but went after their owne ymaginations and after the motions of their owne wicked herte, and so turned them selues awaye, and converted not vnto me. And this haue they done, from the tyme that youre fathers came out of Egypte, vnto this daye.

At the same tyme, saith the LORD, the bones of the kinges of Juda, the bones of his princes, the bones of the prestes and prophetes, yee and the bones of the citisens of Jerusalem, shalbe brought out of their graues and layed agaynst the Sonne, the Moone and all the heauenly hostes: whom they loued, whom they serued, whom they ranne after, whom they sought & worshipped. They shal nether be gathered together ner buried, but shal lye vpon the earth, to their shame and despisinge.

Jer. 22. e

And all they that remayne of this wicked generacion, shal desyre rather to dye then to lye: where so euer they remayne, & where as I scatere them, saith the LORD of hostes. This shalt thou saye vnto them also: Thus saith the LORD: Women fall so, that they arise not vp agayne: And turne they so farre awaye, yf they neuer conuerter. Wherefore then is this people and Jerusalem gone so farre backe, that they turne not agayne? They are euer the longer the more obstinate, and will not be conuerted.

For I haue looked, and considered: but there is no mā, that speaketh a good worde: there is no man, that taketh repentaunce for his synne, that will so much as saye: wherfore haue I done this? But every man (as soone as he is turned backe) runneth forth still, like a wilde horse in a battayl. The Scourge knoweth his apoynted tyme, the Turtledowe, yf Swallow and the Crane, consider the tyme of their traualle: but my people will not knowe the tyme of the punishment of the LORD. How darre ye saye then: we are wise, we haue the lawe of the LORD amonge vs?

Beholde, the disceatfull penne of the scribes, setteth forth lies: therefore shal the wise be confounded, they shalbe afrayed and taken: for lo, they haue cast out the worde of the LORD: what wysdome can then be amonge them? Wherefore, I will geue them wyues vnto aleauntes, and their seldesto destroyers.

For from the lowest vnto the hiest, they folowe all shamesfull lucre: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they deale all with lies. Nevertheless, they heale the harte of my people with sweete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, where there is no peace at all.

Ye for shame, how abhominable thinges do they? And yet they be not ashamed, yf they knowe of no shame.

Wherefore in the tyme of their visitacion, they shal fall amonge the deed bodies, saith the LORD.

Morouer I will gather them in (saith the LORD) so that there shal not be one grape vpon the vyne, nether one fyge vpon the fyge tre, and the leaues shalbe plucked of.

Then will I cause them to departe, and saye: why prolonge we the tyme? Let vs gather oure selues together, and go in to the stronge cite, there shall we be in rest: for the LORD oure God hath put vs to silence, and geuen vs water myrte with gall, to drynke, because we haue synned agaynst him.

We looked for peace, and we saye not the better, we wayted for the tyme of health, and lo, here is nothinge but trouble.

Then shall the noyse of his horses be herde from Dan, the whole londe shall be assayed at the neyge of his stronge horses: for they shal go in, and deuoure the londe, with all that is in it: the cities, and those that dwell therein. Morouer, I will make Cockatrices & serpentes amonge you (which will not be charmed) and they shal byte you, sayeth the LORD.

Sorrowe is come vpon me, and benynes vexeth my herte: for lo, the voyce of the crying of my people is herde from a farre countrey: Is not the LORD in Sion? Is not he kinge in her? Wherefore then haue they grieved me (shall the LORD saye) with their ymages and foolish straunge fashions? The harvest is gone, the Sommer hath an ende, and we are not helped. I am sore vexed, because of the hurte of my people: I am heavy and abashed, for there is no more Triacle at Galaad, and there is no physician, that can heale the hurte of my people.

The IX. Chapter.

Who will geue my heade water ynough, & a well of teares for my ne eyes: that I maye wepe night and daye, for the slaughter of my people? Wolde God that I had a cotage some where farre from folke, that I might leaue my people, and go from thence: for they be all aduourters and a shrenkinge sorte. They be de their tinges like bowes, to shute out lies: As for the truth, they maye nothinge awaye with all in the wolde. For they go from one wickednes to another, and holde nothinge of me, saith the LORD.

Yee one must kepe himself from another, no man maye safely trust his owne brother: for one brother vndermyne another, & one neighbour begyleth another. Yee one dissembleth with another, and they deale with no truth. They haue practised their tinges to lye, and taken greate paynes to do myschefe. They haue set their stole in the myddest of disceate, and (for very dissemblinge falsede) they wil not knowe me, saith the LORD.

Therefore thus saith the LORD of hostes, beholde, I wil melte them and trie the, for what shulde I els do to my people? The tinges are like sharpe arrowes, to speake disceate. With their mouth they speake peaceably to their neighbour, but priuely they laye waite for him. Shulde I not punyssh them for these thinges, saith the LORD? Or shulde I not be auenged of eny soch people, as this? Vpon the mountaynes will I take vp a lamentacion and sorowfull crie, and a mourninge vpon the sayre playnes of the wildernes: Namely, how they are so biente vp, that no man goeth there enymore: Yee a man shal not heare one beast crie there.

Bydes and catell are all gone from thence. I will make Jerusalem also an heape of stones, and a denne of venymous wormes. And I wil make the cities of Juda so waiste, that no man shal dwell therein. What man is so wise, as to vnderstande this? Vnto whom hath the LORD spoken by mouth, that he maye shewe this, and saye: O thou londe, why perishest thou so? Wherefore art thou so brient vp, and like a wilderness, that no mā goeth thowow? Yee the LORD himself tolde the same vnto them, that forsoke his lawe, and kepte not the thyng that he gaue them in commaundement, nether lyued thereafter: but folowed the wickednes of their owne herites, and serued straunge goddes, as their fathers taught them.

Therefore, thus saith the LORD of hostes, the God of Israel: Beholde, I will fede this people with wormwood, and geue them gall to drynke. I will scatere them also amonge the heithen, whom nether they ner their fathers haue knowne: and I will sende a fire arde amonge them, to persecute them, vntill I bringe them to naught. Morouer, thus saith the LORD of hostes: loke that ye call for mourninge wyues, and sende for wise women: that they come shortly, and singe a mourninge songe of you: that the teares maye fall out of oure eyes, and that oure eye lydes maye gush out of water.

For there is a lamentable noyse heard of Sion: O how are we so sore destroyed? O how are we so piteously confounded? We must forsake oure owne natural countrey, and we are shot out of oure owne lodgiges. Yet heare the worde of the LORD (o ye women) and let your eares regarde the wordes of his mouth: that ye maye lerne your daughters to mourne, and that every one maye teach hir neighbouresse, to make lamentacion. Namely thus: Deech is clymme vp in at oure wyndowes, he is come in to oure houses, to destroye the childe before the doore, & yf yongeman in the strete.

But tell thou planely, thus saith yf LORD: The deed bodies of men shal lye apon yf ground, as the donge vpon the felde, and as the hay after the mower, and there shal be no man to take them vp. Morouer, thus saith the LORD: Let not the wise man reioyse in his wysdome, ner the stronge man in his strength, neither the rich man in his riches: But who so wil reioyse, let him reioyse in this, that he vnderstandeth, and knoweth me: for I am the LORDE, which do mercie, equite and rightuousnes vpon earth. Therefore haue I pleasure in such thinges, saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE. Beholde, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I wil viset all them, whose foreskynne is vncircumcised: The Egipcians, the Jewes, the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and the shauen Madianites, that dwel in the wilderness. For all y<sup>e</sup> Gentiles are vncircumcised in the flesh, but all the house of Israel, are vncircumcised in the herte.

The x. Chapter.

Hear the wordes of the LORDE, y<sup>e</sup> he speaketh vnto the, o thou house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE: Ye shal not lerne a fter the maner of the heithen, and ye shal not be afrayed for the tokens of heauen: for the heithen are afrayed of such: See all the customes and lawes of the Gentiles are nothinge, but vanite. They hewe downe a tre in the wod with the hondes of the woike man, and fashion it with the axe: they coner it ouer with golde or syluer, they fasten it wth nailes and hammers, that it moue not. It stodeh as stiff as the palme tre, it can nether speake ner go, but must be borne. Be not ye afrayed of such, for they can do nether good ner euil. But there is none like vnto y<sup>e</sup> (o LORDE) thou art greate, and greate is the name of y<sup>e</sup> power. Who wolde not feare the? or what finge of the Gentiles wolde not obeye the?

For amonge all the wysmen of the Gentiles, and in all their kingdomes, there is none, that maye belikened vnto the. They are all together vnlearned and vnwise. All their connyng is but vanite: namely, wod, syluer, which is brought out of Tharsis, and beate to plates: and golde from Ophir, a woike y<sup>e</sup> is made with the honde of the craftsman, and the caster, clothed with yalow sylck and scarlet: euen so is the woike of their wysmen all together. But the LORDE is a true God, a lyvinge God, and an everlastinge kinge. If he be wroth, the earth shaketh: all the Gentiles maye not abyde his indignacion.

As for their goddes, it maye well be sayde of the: they are goddes, that made nether haue ner earth: therefore shal they perish fro the earth, and from all thinges vnder heauen. But as for oure God, he made the earth with his power, and with his wisdom hath he fynished the whole compasse of the worlde, with his discrecion hath he spred out the heavens, At his voyce the waters gather together in the ayre, he dra weth vp y<sup>e</sup> cloudes from the vttemost partes of y<sup>e</sup> earth: he sendeth lighteninge to rayne, and bringeth forth the wyndes out of their treasures: his wisdom maketh all men fooles. And confounded be all casters of ymages, for that they cast, is but a vayne thinge, and hath no life. The vayne craftes men with their woikes, that they in their vanite haue made, shal perish one with another in the tyme of visitacion. Neuertheles, Jacobs poise is not such: but it is he, that hath made all thinges, and Israel is the rodd of his inheritaunce: The LORDE of hoostes is his name. Put awaye thy vnclemesse out of the londe, thou that art in the stronge cities. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil now thrust out the inhaours of this londe a greate waye off, and trouble them of such a fashio, that they shal no more be founde.

Alas, how am I hurte: Alas, how painefull are my scourges vnto me: For I considre this sorow by my self, and I must suffre it. My tabernacle is destroyed, and all my coardes are broken. My children are gone from me, and can no where be founde. Now haue I none to spiede out my rente, or to set vp my hanginges. For the hyrdmen haue done foolishly, that they haue not sought the LORDE. Therefore haue they dealt vnwisely with the ir catell, and all are scatred abroad. Beholde, the noyse is harde at honde, and greate sedicio out of the north: to make the cities of Iuda a wilderness, and a dwellinge place for Dragons. Now I knowe (o LORDE) that is not in mas power to ordie his owne waies, or to rule his owne steppes and goings. Therefore chastethou vs (o LORDE) but with sauoure, and not in thy wrath, bringe vs not vterly to naught. Poure out thy indignacion rather vpon the Gentiles, that knowe y<sup>e</sup> not, and vpon the people that call not on thy name: And that because they haue consumed, denoured and destroyed Jacob, and haue re ted out his glory.

The XI. Chapter.

This is another Sermon, which the LORDE commanded Jeremij for to preach, sayenge:

Hear the wordes of the couenant, and speake vnto all Iuda, and to all them that dwel at Jerusalem. And saye thou vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Cursed be euery one, that is not obedient vnto y<sup>e</sup> wordes of this couenant: which I commanded vnto youre fathers, what tyme as I brought them out of Egipte, from the yron fornaice, sayenge: Be obedient vnto my voyce, and do accordinge to all that I commaunde you: so shal ye be my people, and I wil be youre God, and will kepe my promyse, y<sup>e</sup> I haue sworne vnto youre fathers: Namely, that I wolde geue them a londe which floweth with mylke and hony, as ye se, it is come to passe vnto this daye.

Then answered I, and sayde: Amen. It is euen so LORDE, as thou sayest. Then the LORDE sayde vnto me agayne: Preach this in y<sup>e</sup> cities off Iuda and rounde aboute Jerusalem, and saye: Heare the wordes off this couenant, that ye maye kepe them. For I haue diligently exorted youre fathers, euer sen cethertyme that I brought them out off the Londe off Egipte, vnto this daye. I gaue them warnyng by tymes, sayenge: hearken vnto my voyce: Neuertheles, they wolde not obeye me, nor encline their eares vnto me, but folowed the wicked ymaginacions of their owne hertes. And therefore haue I accused them as transgressours of all the wordes off this couenant, that I gaue them to kepe, which they (notwithstoddinge) haue not kepte.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: It is soe out, that whole Israel and all the citisens off Jerusalem are gone backe. They haue turned them selues to the blasphemies off their fore fathers, which had no lust to heare my woide. Euen likewise haue these also folowed straunge goddes, and worshipped them. The house off Israel and Iuda haue broken my couenant, which I made wth the ir fathers.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will sende a plage amonge you, which ye shal not be able to escape: and though ye cry vnto me, I will not heare you. The shal the crownes off Iuda and the citisens of Jerusalem go, and call vpon their goddes, vnto whom they made their oblaciōs: but they are not able to helpe them in tyme off their trouble. For as many cities as thou hast (o Iuda) so many goddes hast thou also: And loke how many stretes there be in the (o Jerusalem) so many shameful aulters haue ye set vp, to offre vpon them vnto Baal. But praye not thou for this people, byd nether prayse ner prayer for them: for though they cry vnto me in their trouble, yet will I not heare them.

O thou beloued, why doest thou so shamefull greate blasphemies in my house: euen as though that holy flesh might absolve the, specially when thou hast made thy boost off thy wickednes. The LORDE called the a grene olyue tre, a sayre one, a frutesfull one, a goodly one: but now that there is a contrary report off the abroad, he will burne the vp, and destroye thy braunches. For the LORDE off hoostes that plated the, hath deuysed a plague for the (o thou house of Israel and Iuda) for y<sup>e</sup> euil that ye haue done, to prouoke him to wrath, in that ye dyd seruyce vnto Baal.

This (o LORDE) haue I lerned of the, and vnderstode it, for thou hast shewed me the ir ymaginacions. But I (as a meke lambe) was caried awaye to beslayne: not knowinge, that they had deuysed such a counel agaynst me, sayenge: We will destroye his meate with wod, and dryue him out of the londe off the lyuynge, that his name shal neuer be thought vpon. Therefore I will beset the now (o LORDE of hoostes) thou rightuous iudge, thou that tryest the reynes and the hertes: let me se the auenged of them, for vnto the haue I committed my cause. The LORDE therefore spaketh thus of the citisens of Anathoth, that sought to slaye me, sayenge: preach not vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, or els thou shalt dye of oure hondes. Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I will viset you. Your yonge me shal perish with the swearde, y<sup>e</sup> sonnes and youre daughters shal vterly dye of hunger, so that none shal remayne. For vpon the citisens off Anathoth wil I bringe a plage, and the yeare of their visitacion.

The XII. Chapter.

LORDE, thou art more rightuous, then that I shulde dispute with the: Neuertheles, let me talke with the in thinges reasonable. How happeneth it, that the waye off the vngodly is so prosperous: and that it goeth so wel with them, which (with out eny shame) offende and lyue in wickednesse: Thou plantest them, they take rote, they growe, and bringe forth frute. They boost moch off the, yet doest thou not punyssh them. But thou LORDE (to whom I am well knowne) thou that hast sene, and proued my herte, take them awaye, like as a flock is caried to the slaughter house, and apoynte them for the daye off slaughteringe.

How longe shall the londe mourne, and all the herbes off the felde perish, for the wickednes off them that dwell therein?

The catell and the bydes are gone, yet saye they: rush, God will not destroye vs vterly.

Seinge thou art weery in runnyng with the fore men, how wilt thou then runne wth hoises? In a peaceable sure londe thou mayest be safe, but how wilt thou do in the furious pryde of Jordane? For thy biethren ad thy kynred haue altogether despised the, and cried out vpon the in thine absence. Beleue them not, though they saye fayre wordes to the. As for me (saye I) I haue forsaken my ne owne dwellinge place, and lest myne here tage. My life also that I loue so wel, haue I geuen in to the hōdes of myne enemies. My ne heretage is become vnto me, as a Lyon in the wod. It cried out vpon me, therefore haue I forsaken it. Myne heretage is vnto me, as a spreckled byrde, a byrde of dyuerse coloures is vpon it. So hence, and gather all the beastes of the felde together, that they maye eate it vp.

Dyuerse hyrdmē haue broken downe my vynyarde, and troden vpon my porcion. Of my pleasaunt porcion, they haue made a wil dernes & deserte. They haue layed it waist: and now that it is waist, it sigheth vnto me. Yeethe whole londe lieth waist, and no man regardeth it. The destroyers come ouer the heeth every waye, for the swearde off the LORDE shal consume from the one ende of y<sup>e</sup> lōde to the other, and no flesh shal haue rest. They shal sowe wheat, and reepe thornes. They shal take heretage in possession, but it shal do them no good. And ye shalbe conso unded of youre owne wynnynge, because of the greate wraith of the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE vpon all myne enel neighbours, that laye honde on myne heretage, which I haue geuen my people of Is rael: Beholde, I wil plucke them (namely Is rael) out of their londe, and put out the hou se of Juda from amonge them. And whē I haue rooted the out, I wil be at one with the agayne, and wil haue mercy vpon them: and bryngethem agayne, euery man to his owne heretage, and in to his lōde. And yf they (na mely that trouble my people) wil lerne y<sup>e</sup> wa yes of them, to sweare by my name: The LOR DE lyuerh (like as they lerned my people to sweare by Baal) the shal they be rekened a mōge my people. But yf they wil not obeye, the will I rote out the same folke, and dest royethem, saith the LORDE.

The XIII. Chapter.

Worouer, thus saied the LORDE vnto me: go thy waye & get the a lyn nen bieche, and gyde it aboute thy loynes, and let it not be wet. Then I got me a biech, acordyng to the commaundemēt of the LORDE, and put it aboute my loynes. Af ter this, the LORDE spake vnto me agayne: Take the bieche that thou hast prepared, & put aboute the, and get the vp, and gome to Euphrates, and hyde it in a hole off the rock. So wēt I, and hydde it, as the LORDE commaunded me. And it happened longe af ter this, that the LORDE spake vnto me: Up, and get the to Euphrates, and fet the bieche from thence, which I commaunded the to hyde there. Then went I to Euphrates, and digged vp, and toke the biech from the place where I had hyd it: and beholde, the biech was corrupte, so that it was profitable for nothinge.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thus saith the LORDE: Euen so will I corrupte the pryde off Juda, and the hie mynde off Ierusalem. This people is a wicked people, they will not heare my woide, they folowē y<sup>e</sup> wicked ymaginacions off their owne heart, & hange vpon straunge goddes, the haue they serued & worshipped: and therfore they shal be as this biech, that serueth for nothinge. For as stratel y as a biech lieth vpon a mā loynes, so stratel y dyd I bynde y<sup>e</sup> whole hou se of Is rael, and the whole house of Judam to me, saith the LORDE: that they might be my people: that they might haue a glorious name: y<sup>e</sup> they might be in honoure: but they wolde not obeye me. Therfore laye this ry dle before them, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God of Is rael: euery pot shal be fyl led with wyne. And they shal saye: thūstest thou we knowe not, y<sup>e</sup> euery pot shalbe fyl led with wyne? Then shalt thou saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I shal fyll all the inhabitours of this lōde wth dioncēnes, the kynges that syt vpo Dāuides stole, the prestes and prophetes, with all y<sup>e</sup> dwell at Ierusalem. And I will smyte them one agaynst another, yee y<sup>e</sup> fathers agaynst the sonnes, saith the LORDE.

I wil not pardon them, I wil not spare them, ner haue pitie vpon them: but destroye them. Be obedient, gene eare, take no dyspay ne at it, for it is the LORDE himself that spea keth. Honour y<sup>e</sup> LORDE youre God herein, or he take his light from you, and or ener you re fete stembles in darknesse at y<sup>e</sup> hill: lest whē ye loke for the light, he turne it in to y<sup>e</sup> shado we and darknesse of death. But yf ye wil not heare me, that gene you secrete warnynge, I will mourne from my whole herte for youre stubburnesse. Piteously will I wepe, and the teares shal gush out of myne eyes. For the LORDES flocke shal be caried awaye captiue.

Tell the kinge & the rulers: Humble yo<sup>r</sup> sel ues, set you downe lowe, for y<sup>e</sup> crowne of yo<sup>r</sup> glory shal fall from youre heade. The cities toward the south shalbe shut vp, & no man shal open the. All Juda shal be caried awa ye captyue, so that none shal remayne.

Lift vp youre eyes, and beholde the, that came from the North: Like a fat flocke shal they fall vpon the. To whom wilt thou ma kethy mone, when they come vpon the: for thou hast taught the thy self, and made the masters ouer the. Shal not sorowe come vpo the, as on a woman tranelinge with childe? And yf thou woldest saye the in thine hert: Wherfore come these thinges vpo me? Eue for the multitude of thy blasphemies, shal thy hynder partes & thy fete be disconered. For like as the man of Jude maye chaunge his kynne, & the cat of the mountayne hir spettes: so maye yet that be exercised in euell, do good. Therfore will I scatre you, lyke as y<sup>e</sup> stobbe that is take awaye with y<sup>e</sup> south wynde. This shal be youre porcion, and the porcion of youre measure, wher with ye shal be rewarded of me, saith the LORDE: becau se ye haue forgotten me, and put youre trust in disceatful thinges. Therfore shal I tur ne thy clothes ouer thy heade, and discover thy thees, that thy pruyties maye be sene: y<sup>e</sup> aduourie, thy deedly malice, thy beastlynnes and thy shamefull whordome. For vpon the feldes and hilles I haue sene thy abhomin a tions. Wo be vnto the (o Ierusalem) whē wilt thou ener be clensed enymore?

The XIII. Chapter.

The woide of the LORDE shewed vn to Jeremy, cōcernynge y<sup>e</sup> derth off the frutes.

Juda shal mourne, men shal not go moch more thorow his gates: the lon de shal be no more had in reputacion, & the crye of Ierusalem shal breake out. The lordes shal sende their seruantes to fetch water, & when they come to the welles, they shal fynde no water, but shal carie their ves sels home emptye. They shal be ashamed ad confounded, & shal couer their heades. For the grounde shalbe dried vp, because there cō meth no rayne vpon it. The plowmen also shalbe ashamed, ad shal couer their heades. The hynde shal forsake the yonge sawne, that se bugeth forth in y<sup>e</sup> felde, because there shalbe no grasse. The wilde Asses shal ston de in the Masse, and diawe in their wynde like the Diagōs, their eyes shal sayle for wāt of grasse.

Donles oure owne wickednesse rewarde us: But LORDE do thou acordyng to y<sup>e</sup> na me, though cure transgressions and synnes be many. For thou art the comforte & helpe of Is rael in the tyme of trouble. Why wilt thou be as a straunger in the Londe, and as one that goeth ouer the felde, ad cometh in only to remayne for a night? Why wilt thou make thy self a coward, and as it were a giant that yet maye not helpe? For thou art our (o LORDE) and we beare thy name, therfore forsake vs not.

Then spake the LORDE, concernynge this people y<sup>e</sup> haue pleasure to go so nembly wth their fete, and loue not of, and therfore displeaseth the LORDE: in so moch, that he will now bringe agayne to remembraunce all the ir mys dedes, ad punysh all their synnes. See euen thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt not praye to do this people good. For though they fast, I will not heare their pray ers. And though they offre burnt offrages & sacrifices, yet wil not I acceptethem. For I will destroyethem with the swearde, hunger and pestilence. Then answerde I: O LORDE God, the prophetes saye vnto them: Tush, ye shal se no swearde, and no hunger shal come vpon you, but the LORDE shal geue you con tinuall rest in this place.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The pro phetes preach lies vnto them in my name. I haue not spoken with them, nether gaue I them eny charge, nether dyd I sende the: yet they preach vnto you false visions, charmyn ge, vanite, and disceatfulnesse of their owne herte. Therfore thus saith the LORDE: As for those prophetes that preach in my name (whom I neuer theles haue not sent) and y<sup>e</sup> saye: Tush, there shal nether batel ner hon ger be in this londe: With swearde ad with hunger shal those prophetes perish, and the people to whom they haue preached, shal be cast out of Ierusalem, dye of hunger, ad be slayne with the swearde, (and there shalbe no man to burie them) both they ad their wy ues, their sonnes and their daughters. For thus wil I p<sup>r</sup>re their wickednes vpon the. This shal the saye also vnto them: My ne eyes shal wepe without ceassinge daye & night. For my peep<sup>e</sup> shalbe destroyed with greate harme, and shal perish with a gre ate plage. For yff I go in to the felde, lo, it lieth all full off slayne men: Off I co me in to the cite, lo, they be all famished of hunger.

See their prophetes also and prestes shal be led in to an unknowne londe.

D Hast thou then utterly forsaken Juda? (sayde J) Dost thou so abhorre Sis? Or hast thou so plagued vs, that we can be healed no more? We looked for peace, and there cometh no good: for the tyme of health, & lo, here is nothinge but trouble. We knowlege (o LORDE) all oure mysdedes, and the synnes of oure fathers, that we haue offended y. Be not displeased (o LORDE) for thy names sake, for get not thy lowynge & yndnes: Remembre y throne of thyne honoure, breake not the covenaut, that thou hast made with vs. Are there any amonge the goddes of the Gentiles, that sende rayne, or geue the showers of heauen? Dost not thou it o LORDE oure God, in whō we trust? Yee LORDE, thou dost all these thinges.

The XV. Chapter.

When spaketh the LORDE vnto me, & sayde: Though Moses and Samuel stode before me, yet haue I no herte to this people. Dryne them awaye, that they maye go out of my sight. And yf they saye vnto the: Whyther shal we go? The tell the: The LORDE geueth you this answer: Some vnto death, some to the swearde, some to hunger, some in to captiuite. For I will bringe foure plagis vpon them, saith the LORDE. The swearde shal stragle them, the dogges shal deuoure them, the foules of the ayre & beeestes of the earth shal eate them vp, and destroye them. I will scatere them aboute al so in all kingdomes and londes to be plagued, because of Manasses the sonne of Ezechias kinge of Juda, for the thinges that he dyd in Jerusalem.

Who shal then haue pite vpon the, o Jerusalem? Who shal be sory for the? Or who shal make intercession, to opteyne peace for the? Seinge thou goest frome, & turnest backward, saith the LORDE: Therefore I will stretch out myne honde agaynst the, to destroye the, and I will not be intreated. I will scatere the abroad with the fanne on every side of the londe: I will waiste my people and destroye them, for they haue had no lust to turne from their owne wayes. I will make their wyddowes mo in nombre, then the sonnes of the see. Vpon y mothers of their children, I shal bringe a destroyer in the noone daye. Sodenly and vnawarres, shal I sende a feare vpon their cities. She that hath borne vij. children, shal haue none, hir herte shal be ful of sorowe.

The Sonne shal saye her in the cleare daye, when she shalbe confounded and saynte for very heynesse. As for those y remay-ne, I wil deluyner them vnto the swearde of their enemies, saith the LORDE. O mother, alas that euer thou dydest beare me, anemie and hated of the whole londe: Though I neuer lente ner receaued vpon vsury, yet every man speake euell vpon me. And y LORDE answered me: Lede not I the then vnto good: Comenot I to the, when thou art in trouble: and helpe y, when thine enemye oppresseth the: Dost one yron hurte another, or one metall that cometh from the north, another? As for youre riches and treasure, I wil geue them out in to a pray, not for any money, but because of all youre synnes, that ye haue done i all youre coastes. And I wil bigge you with youre enemies in to a londe, y ye knowe not: for the fyre that is kyndled in my indignacion, shal burne you vp.

O LORDE sayde I then thou knowest all thinges, therefore remembre me, & visite me, deluyner me fro my persecuters: Receaue my cause in y lōge wrath, yet thou knowest, that for thy sake I suffre rebuke. When I had founde thy wordes, I at them vpgredely: they haue made my hert ioyfull & glad. For I call vpon thy name, o LORDE God of hoostes. I dwell not amonge the scoiners, nether is my deluyte therein: but I dwell only in the feare of thy honde, for thou hast fylled me with bytternes. Shall my heynes endure for euer? Are my plagis then so greates, y they maye neuer be healed? Wilt thou be as a water, that falleth, and can not contynue? Vpon these wordes, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Yf thou wilt turne agayne, I shal set the in my seruyce: and yf thou wilt take out the thinge that is precious from the vyle, thou shalt be euen as myne owne mouth. They shal conuerte vnto the, but turne not thou vnto the: and so shal I make the a stronge wall of stele agaynst this people. They shal fight agaynst the, but they shal not preuaile. For I myself will be with the, to helpe the, and deluyner the, saith the LORDE. And I will ryd the out of the hondes of the wicked, and deluyner the out of the honde of trauntes.

The XVI. Chapter.

Ouer, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt take y no wife, ner beget children in this place. For of the children that are borne in this place, of their mothers that haue borne them, and of their fathers that haue begotten them in this londe, thus saith the LORDE: They shal dye an horrible death, no man shal mourne for them, ner burie them, but they shal lye as do ge vpon the earth. They shal perish thorow the swearde and hunger, and their bodies shal be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beeestes of the earth. Agayne, thus saith the LORDE: Go not vnto them, that come together, for to mourne and wepe: for I haue taken my peace fro this people (saith the LORDE) yee my fauoure and my mercy. And in this londe shal they dye, olde and yonge, and shal not be buried: no man shal bewepe them, no man shal clippe or shawe himself for them.

There shal not one viset another, to mourne with them for their deed, or to comforte them. One shal not offre another the cuppe off consolacion, to forget their heynes for father and mother. Thou shalt not go in to their feast house, to syt downe, moch lesse to eate or drynke with them. For thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God off Israel: Beholde, I shal take awaye out of this place, the voyce off mynth & gladnesse, the voyce off the brydegrome and off the bryde: yee and that in youre dayes, that ye maye se it.

Now when thou shewest this people all these wordes, and they saye vnto the: Wherefore hath the LORDE deuysed all this greates plage for vs? Or what is the offence and synne, that we haue done agaynst the LORDE oure God? Then make thou them this answer: Because youre fathers haue forsaken me (saith the LORDE) and haue cleued vnto straunge goddes, whom they haue honoured and worshipped: but me haue they forsaken, and haue not kepte my lawe. And ye w youre shamefull blasphemies, haue exceded the wickednes off youre fathers. So every one off you foloweth the frawerde euell ymaginacion off his owne hert, and is not obediēt vnto me.

Therefore wil I cast you out off this londe, in to a londe that ye and youre fathers knowe not: and there shall ye serue straunge goddes daye and night, there will I shewe you no fauoure. Beholde therefore (saith the LORDE) the daies are come, that it shall no more be sayed: The LORDE lyueth, which brought the children of Israel out of the lōde of Egypte: but (it shall be sayde) the LORDE lyueth, that brought the children of Israel from the North, & from all londes where I had scatred them. For I wil bringe the agayne in to the lōde, that I gaue vnto their fathers.

Beholde, (saith the LORDE) I will sende out many fishers to take them, and after y wil I sende out many hunters to hunte the out, from all mountaynes and hilles & out of the caues of stones. For myne eyes beholde all their wayes, and they can not be hyd from my face, nether can their wicked dedes be kepte close out of my sight. But first will I sufficiently rewarde their shamefull blasphemies and synnes, wherewith they haue defyled my londe: Namely, with their stinkinge Idols and abominacions, wherw they haue fylled myne heretage. O LORDE, my strength, my power, and refuge in tyme off trouble. The Gentiles shal come vnto the from the endes off the worlde, and saye: Vnto oure fathers haue cleued vnto lies, their Idols are but vayne and vnprofitable. How can a man make, those his goddes, which are not able to be goddes? And therefore, I will once teach them (saith y LORDE) I wil shewe them my honde and my power, that they maye knowe, y my name is y LORDE.

The XVII. Chapter.

Oure synne (o ye off the trybe of Juda) is writte in the table of y hertes, & graue so vpon the edges of y altars w a penne of yron & with an Adamant clawe: y youre children also maye thynke vpon youre altars, woddes, thicke trees, hie hilles, mountaynes & felde. Wherefore, I will make all youre substance & treasure be spoyled, for the greates synne that ye haue done vpon youre hie places, thorow out all y coostes off youre lōde. Ye shal be cast out also from the heretage, that I gaue you. And I wil subdue you vnder the heuy bōdage of youre enemies, in a londe that ye knowe not. For ye haue ministred fyre to my indignacion, which shal burne euermore. Thus saith the LORDE: Cursed be the man that putteth his trust in man, & that taketh flesh for his arme: and he, whose herte departeth from y LORDE. He shal be like the heeth, that groweth in the wilderness. As for the good thinge that is for to come, he shal not se it: but dwell in a drie place off the wilderness, in a salt and vnoccupied londe. O Blissed is the man, that putteth his trust in the LORDE, and whose hope the LORDE is himself. For he shalbe as a tre, that is planted by the water syde: which spredeth out the rote vnto moystnesse, whom the heate can not harne, when it commeth, but his leaues are grene. And though there growe but litle frute because off drowth, yet is he not carefull, but he neuer leaueth off to bringe forth frute. Amonge all thinges lyuynge, man hath the most disceatfull and vnsercheable hert.

The prophet Jeremy.

The xviij. Chap.

Who shall then knowe it? Euen I the LORDE ripe out the grounde off the hert, ad search the reynes and rewarde euery mā acordinge to his wayes, and acordinge to the frute off his counceils.

The disceatfull maketh a nest, but bringeth forth no yonge: he commeth by riches, but not righteously. In the myddest off his life must he leaue them behinde him, and at the last be founde a very soole. But thou (o LORDE) whose throne is most glorious, excellent and off most antiquite, which dwellest in the place of oure holyrest: Thou art the comfote off Israel. All they that forsake the, shalbe confounded: all they that departe from the, shalbe witten in earth, for they haue forsaken the LORDE, the very condite of the waters of life.

Heale me, o LORDE, and I shall be whole:
saue thou me, and I shall be saued, for thou art my prayse. Beholde, these men saye vnto me: Where is the worde of the LORDE? Let it come. Where as I neuertheles ledinge the flock in thy wayes, haue compelled none by violence. For I neuer desyred any mā's deeth, this knowest thou well. My wordes also were right before the. Be not now terrible vnto me (o LORDE) for thou art he, in whom I hope, when I am in parrill. Let my persecuters be confounded, but not me: let them be a frayed, and not me. Thou shalt bunge vpon the the tyme off their plage, and shalt destroye them right. soie.

Agayne, thus hath the LORDE sayde vnto me: Go and stonde vnder the gate, where thorow the people and the kinges of Iuda go out and in, yee vnder all the gates of Jerusalem, and saye vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, and all thou people of Iuda, and all ye citefyns of Jerusalem, that go thorow this gate: Thus the LORDE commaundeth: Take hede for youre lyues, that ye carie no burthen vpon you in the Sabbath, to bringe it thorow the gates of Jerusalem: ye shall beare no burthen also out of youre houses in the Sabbath: Ye shall do no labour there in, but ha-lowe the Sabbath, as I commaunded you re fathers. How be it they obeyed me not, nether hearkened they vnto me: but were obstinate & stubburne, ad nether obeyed me, ner re-ceaued my correccion.

Neuertheles, yf ye will heare me (saith the LORDE) and beare no burthen in to y cite thorow this gate vpon the Sabbath:
If ye will halowe the Sabbath, so that ye do no worke there in: then shal there go tho-

row the gates of this cite, kinges and pry-ces, that shall sit vpon the stole of David:
They shall be caried vpon charettes, and ry-
de vpon horses, both they and their princes: Yee whole Iuda and all the citefyns of Jerusalem shall go here thorow, and this cite shall euer be the more and more inhabited.
There shall come men also from the cities of Iuda, from aboute Jerusalem, ad from y londe of Ben Jamun, from the playne felde, from the mountaynes and from the wildernesse: which shall bunge burnt offrings, sacrifices, oblations, and incense, and offre vp thankes geuyng in the house of the LORDE.
But yff ye will not be obedient vnto me, to halowe the Sabbath, so that ye will beare youre burthens thorow the gates off Jerusalem vpon the Sabbath: Then shall I set fyre vpon the gates off Jerusalem, ad it shal burne vpon the houses off Jerusalem, and no man shal be able to quench it.

The XVIII. Chapter.
This is another communica-cion, that God had with Jeremy, sayenger.

Rise, and go downe in to the potters house, and there shall I tell the more off my mynde. Now when I came to the potters house, I founde him makinge his worke vpon a whele. The vessel that the potter made off claye, brake amonge his ho-des: So he beganne a new, and made another vessel, acordinge to his mynde. Then sayde the LORDE thus vnto me: Maye not I do w<sup>t</sup> you, as this potter doeth, O ye house off Israel: saith the LORDE: Beholde, ye house off Israel: ye are in my honde, euen as the claye in the potters honde.

When I take in honde to rote out, to destroye, or to waiste awaye any people or kig-dome: yff that people (agaynst whom I haue thus deuysed) couerte from their wickednes: Immediately, I repente off the plage, that I deuysed to bringe vpon the. Agayne: When I take in honde, to buylde, or to plante a people or a kingdome: yff the same people do euell before me, and heare not my voyce: Im-mediatly, I repente off the good, that I de-uysed to do for them.

Speake nowtherfore vnto whole Iuda, and to them that dwell at Jerusalem: Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I am deuysinge a plage for you, and am takinge a thynge in honde agaynst you.

Therefore, let euery man turne from his enell waye, take vpon you the thynge that is good, and do right. But they saye: No more of this, we will folowe oure owne ymagina-cions, and do euery mā acordinge to the wilfulnesse of his owne mynde.

Therfore thus saith the LORDE: Are amonge the heithen, yf eny man hath herde soch horrible thinges, as the doughter of Sion hath done. Shal not yf snowe (yf melteth vpon the stony rockes of Libanus) moysturre the felde? Or maye the springes off waters be so granen awaye, that they runne no more, geue moystnesse, ner make frutefull?
But my people hath so forgotten me, yf they haue made sacrifice vnto vayne goddes.
And whyle they folowed their owne wayes
they are come out of the hie strete, and gone into a sore waye not vsed to be troden. Where thorow they haue brought their londe in to an enerlastinge wildernesse and scone:
So yf who so euer trauayleth ther by, shal-be abashed, and waggeth their heades. With an East wynde will I scatere the, before their enemies. And when their destruction cometh, I will turne my backe vpon them, but not my face.

Then sayde they: come, let vs ymagin-sinthynge agaynst this Jeremy. Yee this dyd euen the prestes, to whom yf lawe was commytted: the Senatours, yf were the wy-fest: and the prophetes, which wanted not yf worde off God. Come (sayde they) let vs cut out his tūge, and let vs not regarde his wor-des. Considre me (o LORDE) and heare the voyce of myne enemies. Do they not recompence enell for good, when they dygg a pye for my soule? Remembre, how that I stode before the, to speake for the, ad to turne awaye thy wrath from them.

Therfore let their childre dye of hunger,
and let them be oppressed with the swearde.
Let their wyues be robbed of their childre, and become wyddowes: let their husbōdes be slayne, let their yonge men be kyled with the swearde in the felde. Let the noyse be her-de out of their houses, when the murderer cometh sodenly vpon them: For they haue digged a pit to take me, and layed snares for my fete. Yet LORDE, thou knowest all their cōcell, that they haue deuysed, to slaye me.
And therfore forgue them not their wickednes, and let not their synne be put out of thy sight: but let them be iudged before the as the giltie: This shalt thou do vnto the in y tyme of thy indignacion.

The XIX. Chapter.

Oroner, thus saide the LORDE vnto Jeremy: Go thy waye, and bye the an erthen pytcher, and bunge forth the Senatours and chiefe prestes in to the valley of the childre off Ennon, which lieth before the porte that is made of brick, & shewe them there the wordes, that I shall tell the, and saye thus vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Iuda, ad ye citefyns of Jerusalem: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bunge soch a plage vpon this place, that yf eares of all that heare it, shal glo-
we. And that because they haue forsake me, and unhalowed this place, and haue offred in it vnto straunge goddes: whō nether they,
their fathers, ner the kinges off Iuda haue knowne. They haue filled this place also w<sup>t</sup> the bloude of innocentes, for they haue set vp an altare vnto Baal, to burne their children for a burnt offering vnto Baal, which I nether commaunded, ner charged them, nether thought once there vpon.

Beholde therfore, yf tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) yf this place shal no more be called Tophet, ner yf valley of yf childre off En-non, but yf valley of slaughter. For in this place wil I slaye the Senatours of Iuda & Jerusale, & kill the downe w<sup>t</sup> the swearde in yf sight of their enemies, ad of them that seke their lyues. And their deed carcases wil I ge-ue to be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the felde. And I wil make this cite so desolare, ad despyed: that who so goeth there by, shal be abashed & geast vpon her, because of all hir plagis.

I will fede them also w<sup>t</sup> the flesh of their sonnes & their doughters. Yee euery one shal eate vp another in the beseginge & straitnes-se, wher w<sup>t</sup> their enemies (yf seke their lyues) shal kepe the in. And the pytcher shalt thou brike in the sight of the mē, yf shalbe w<sup>t</sup> the,
and saye vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE off hostes: Ene so wil I destroye this people & cite: as a potter briketh a vessel, that can not be made whole agayne.

In Tophet shal they be buried, for they shal haue none other place. Thus wil I do vnto this place also, saith the LORDE, and to the yf dwell there in: yee I wil do to this cite, as vnto Tophet (for the houses of Jerusalem & the houses of the kinges of Iuda are despyled, like as Tophet, because off all the houses, in whose parlors they dyd sacrifice vnto all the hostes of heauē, and poured out drynke offrings vnto straunge goddes.
And so Jeremy came from Tophet, where the LORDE had sent him to prophesie, and stode in the courte off the house off the LORDE, and spake to all the people: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe vpon this cite and vpon euery towne aboute it, all the plagues that I haue deuysed agaynst them: for they haue bene obstinate, and wolde not obeye my warnynges.

The XX. Chapter.

When Pashur the preast, the sonne off Immer, chese in the house off the LORDE, herde Jeremy preach so fastidiously: he smote Jeremy, and put him in the stockes, that are by the hie gate of Ben Jamin, in the house off the LORDE. The next daye followinge, Pashur brought Jeremy out of the stockes agayne. Then sayde Jeremy vnto him: The LORDE shall call the name of Pashur (that is excellent and increasinge) but Magor (that is fearfull and afayed) euery where. For thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I will make the afayed, the thy self, and all that fauoure y: which shall perish with the swearde off their enemies, euen before y face.

And I wil geue whole Iuda vnder the power off the kinge off Babilon, which shall carie some vnto Babilon prisoners, and slaye some with the swearde. Moreover, all y substaunce off this londe, all their precious and gorgeous woikes, all costlynesse, and all the treasure off the kinges off Iuda: wil I geue into the hodes off their enemies, which shall spoyle them, and carie them vnto Babilon.

But as for the (o Pashur) thou shalt be caried vnto Babilon with all thine household, and to Babilon shalt thou come, where thou shalt die, and be buried: thou and all thy fauourers, to whom thou hast preached lies. O LORDE, thou makest me weake, but thou refreshest me, and makest me stronge agayne. All the daye longe am I despysed, and laughed to scoone off euery man: because I haue now preached longe agaynst malicious Tyranny, and shewed them off destruction. For y which cause they cast the worde off the LORDE in my teth, and take me euer to the worst.

Wherefore, I thought from hence forth, not to speake off him, ner to preach eny more in his name. But the worde off the LORDE was a very burnyng fyre in my hert and in my bones, which when I wolde haue stopped, I might not. For why, I herde so many derisiois and blasphemies, yee euen off my ne owne companyons, and off soch as were conuersaunte with me: which wente aboute, to make me afayed sayenge: vpon him, let vs go vpon him, to feare him, and make him holde his tounge: y we maye ouer come him, and be a venged off him.

But the LORDE stode by me, like a mighty giaunte: therfore my persecuters fell, and coude do nothinge. They shall be sore confounded, for they haue done vnwisely, they shall haue an euertlasting shame. And now, O LORDE off hoostes, thou righteous searcher, which knowest the reynes and the very hertes: let me se them punished, for vnto the I committe my cause.

Synge vnto the LORDE, and prayse him, for he hath deliuered the soule off the oppressed, from the honde off the violent. Cursed be the daye, wherein I was borne: vnhappie be y daye, wherein my mother brought me forth. Cursed be the man, that brought my father the tidings, to make him glad, sayenge: thou hast gotten a sonne. Let it happen vnto that man, as to the cities which the LORDE turned vpside downe (when he had longe herde the wicked rumoure off them) because he slewe me not, as soone as I came out off my mothers wombe, and because my mother was not my graue herself, that the byrth might not haue come out, but remained still in her. Wherefore came I forth off my mothers wombe? To haue experience off labour and sorrow: and to lede my life with shame.

The XXI. Chapter.

These are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy, what tyme as kinge Sedechias sent vnto him Pashur the sonne off Nethania, and Sephonias the sonne off Maasia prest, sayenge: Are we uncalled at the LORDE (we praye the) off our behalfe, for Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon besegeth vs, yff the LORDE (peradventure) will deale with vs, accordinge to his marvelous power, and take him from vs.

Then spake Jeremy: Geue Sedechias this answer. Thus saith the LORDE God off Israel: beholde, I will turne backe the weapons, that ye haue in youre hondes, wherewith ye fight agaynst the kinge off Babilon and the Caldees, which besege you rounde aboute y walles: and I wil brige the together in to the myddest off this cite, and I myself will fight agaynst you, with an outstretched honde, and with a mighty arme, in great displeasure and terrible wrath: and will smyte them, that dwell in this cite: yee both me, and the cite, that shall dye off the pestilence.

The prophet Jeremy.

And after this (saith the LORDE) I shall deliuer Sedechias the kinge off Iuda, and his seruantes, his people (and soch as are escaped in the cite, from the pestilence, swearde, and hunger) into the power off Nabuchodonosor kinge off Babilon: yee in to the hodes off their enemies, in to the hodes off those y folowe vpon their lyues, which shall smyte them with y swearde: they shall not pite the, they shall not spare them, they shall haue no mercy vpon them.

And vnto this people thou shalt saye:

Thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I laye before you the waye off life and deeth. Who so abyde in this cite, shall perish: ether w the swearde, with hunger, or with pestilence. But who so goeth out to holde on y Caldees parte, y besege it, he shall saue his life, and shall wyne his soule for a pray. For I haue set my face agaynst this cite (saith the LORDE) to plage it, and to do it no good. It must be gea in to the honde off the kinge off Babilon, and be brent with fyre.

And vnto the house off the kinge off Iuda, saye thus: heare the worde off the LORDE (o thou house off David) for thus saith the LORDE: I will geue righteuousnes, and that soone, deliuer the oppressed fro violent power: or euer my terrible wrath break out like a fyre, and burne so, that no man maye quench it, because off the wickednes off youre ymaginations. Beholde (saith the LORDE) I wil come vnto you, that dwell in the valles, rocks and felde, and saye: Tush, who will make vs afayed? or who will come in to oure houses? For I will vset you (saith the LORDE) because off the wickednes off youre inventions, and will kyndle soch a fyre in youre wod, as shall consume all, that is aboute you.

The XXII. Chapter.

Thus sayde the LORDE also: Go downe in to the house off the kinge off Iuda, and speake there these wordes, and saye: heare the worde off the LORDE, thou kinge off Iuda that syttest in the kyngly seate off David: thou and thy seruantes and y people, that go in and out at this gate. Thus the LORDE commaundeth: kepe equite and righteuousnesse, deliuer the oppressed fro the power off the violent: do not greue ner oppresse the straunger, the fatherlesse ner the wyddowe, and shed no innocent bloude in this place.

And yff ye kepe these thinges faithfully, then shall there come in at the dore off this house kynges, to syt vnto Dauids seate: they shall be caried in Charettes and ryde vpon houses, both they and their seruantes, and their people. But yf ye wil not be obedient vnto these commaundementes, I sweare by my ne owne self (saith the LORDE) this house shall be waist. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vpon the kinges house off Iuda: Thou art the heade, as Galaad is in Libanus: What wilt thou laye off it, yf I make the not so waist (and thy cities also) that no man shall dwell there in? I will prepare a destroyer with his weapons for the, to hew downe thy special Cedre trees, and to cast them in the fyre.

And all the people that go by this cite, shall speake one to another: Wherefore hath the LORDE done thus vnto this noble cite? Then shall it be answered: because they haue broken the couenamt off the LORDE their God, and haue worshipped and serued strange goddes. Mourne not ouer the deed, and be not wo for them, but be sorry for him that departeth awaye: for he cometh not agayne, and seeth his natyue countre no more. For thus saith the LORDE, as touching Sellum the sonne off Josias kinge off Iuda, which reigned after his father, and is caried out off this place:

He shall neuer come hither agayne, for he shall dye in the place, where vnto he is led captiue, and shall se this londe nomore. Wo worth him, that buyldeth his house with vnrighteuousnes, and his perlers with the good, that he hath gotten by violence: which neuer recompenseth his neghburs labour, ner payeth him his hye. He thinketh in himself: I wil buylde me a wyde house, and gorgeous perlers: he causeth wyndowes to be hewen there in, and the sylinges and geastes make he off Cedre, and paynteth them with Zenober. Thinkest thou to reigne, now that thou prouokest me to wrath with y Cedre trees?

Dyd not thy father eate and drynke, and prospere well, as longe as he dealt with equite and righteuousnesse? Yee when he helped y oppressed and poore to their right, then prospered he well.

From whence came this, but only because he had me before his eyes: saith the LORDE. Where theles, as for thine eyes and thine herte, they loke vpon covetousnesse, to shed innocent bloude, to do wrenge and violence. And therfore, thus saith the LORDE agaynst Joachim, y sonne off Josias kyng off Iuda: They shall not mourne for him: (as they vseto do) alas brother, alas syfter:

Nether shall they saye vnto him: Alas sye, alas for that noble prynce. But as an Asse shall he be buried, corrupte and be cast with out the gates of Jerusalem.

D Clymme vpon the hill off Libanus (o thou doughter Sion) lift vp thy voyce vpon Basan, crie from all partes: for all thy louers are destroyed. I gaue the warninge, whyle thou wast yet i prosperite. But thou saydest: I wil not heare. And this maner hast thou vsed from thy youth, that thou woldest neuer heare my voyce. All thy hyrdmen shal be dryuen with the wynde, and thy derlinges shal be caried awaye in to captiuite: Then shalt thou be brought to shame and confucion, because of all thy wickednes: thou that dwellest vpon Libanus, ad makest thy nest in the Cedre trees. O how greateshal ymour nyngbe, when thy sorowes come vpon the, as a woman trauelinge with childe.

As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE.) Though Jechonias the sonne off Joachim kinge off Juda were the signet off my right honde, yet will I plucke him off: And I wil geue the in to y power off the that seke to slaye the, and in to the power off them that thou fearest: in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon, and in to the power of the Caldees. Moreover, I will sende the, and thy mother that bare the, in to a straunge londe, where ye were not borne, ad there shall ye dye. But as for the londe that ye will desire to retorne vnto, ye shall neuer come at it agayne. This man Jechonias shal belike an ymaginacion robbed and torne in peces, which pleaseth no man, for all his apparell. Wherefore both he and his sede shal be sent awaye, and cast out in to a lode, that they knowe not.

O thou earth, earth, earth: heare the worde off the LORDE: Wyte this man amonge the outlawes, for no prosperite shall this man haue all his life longe. Nether shall any of his sede be so happie, as to sit vpon the seate of David, and to beare rule in Juda.

O be vnto the shepherdes, that destroye, and scatere my flocke, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, this is the commaundment of the LORDE God of Israel, vnto the shepherdes that feede my people: Ye scatere ad thrust out my flocke, and loke not vpon them. Therfore, now will I viset the wickednes of youre ymaginacions, saith y LORDE: And will gather together the remna unt of my flocke, from all londes that I haue dryuen them vnto, and will bringe them agayne to their pastures, that they maye growe and increace. I will set shepherdes also amonge them, which shall fede them. They shall no more feare and drede, for there shall none off them be lost, saith the LORDE. Beholde, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I will raise vp the righteous braunch off David, which shall beare rule, and discusse matters with wysdome, and shall set vp equitye and rightuousnes agayne in the earth.

In his tyme shall Juda be saued, and Israel shal dwell without feare. And this is the name that they shall call him: euen the LORDE oure rightuous maker. And therfore beholde, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that it shall no more be sayde: the LORDE lyne, which brought the children off Israel out of the londe of Egypte: But the LORDE lyne, which brought forth, ad led the sede of the house off Israel, out off the north londe, and from all countrees where I had scatred them, and they shal dwell in their owne londe agayne.

My herte breaketh in my body because of the false prophetes, all my bones shate: I am become like a droncken man (that by the reason of wyne can take no rest) for very feare of the LORDE, and of his holy wordes. Because the londe is full of aduocaters, where therow it is destroyed and mourneth, and y pleasaunt pastures of the deserte are dried vp. See the waye that men take, is wicked, z their gouernaunce is nothinge like the holy worde of the LORDE. For the prophetes and the prestes them selues are polluted wypoetes, ad their wickednes haue I founde in my house, saith the LORDE. Wherefore, their waye shall be slippery in the darcknesse, where in they maye sticke and fall. For I will bringe a plage vpon them, euen the yere of the ir visitacion, saith the LORDE. I haue sene folly amonge the prophetes of Samaria, y they preached for Baal, ad disceaued my people off Israel. I haue sene also amonge the prophetes off Jerusalem foule aduocaters, and presumptuous lies. They take the most shamefull men by the hode, flatteringe them, so that they can not retorne from their wickednes. All these with their citsyns are become, as Sodom, and as the inhabitours off Gomorre.

Therfore thus saith the LORDE of hostes concernynge the prophetes: Beholde, I wil fede them with worme wood, z make them drynke the water of gall. For so the prophetes of Jerusalem is the sicknes of Apocri sic come in to all the londe.

And therfore the LORDE of hostes geth you this warnynge: heare not the wordes of the prophetes, that preach vnto you, and disceane you: for they speake the meanynge of their owne herte, and not out of the mouth of the LORDE. They saye vnto them, that despyse me: The LORDE hath spoken it: Tush, ye shal prospere right well. And vnto all them, that walke after the lust of their owne herte, they saye: Tush, there shall no mysfortune happen you. For who hath sytten in the counsell of the LORDE, that he hath herde and vnderstonde, what he is aboute to do? Who hath marked his deuys, and herde it? Beholde, the stormy wyther of the LORDE (that is, his indignacion) shal go forth, and shal fall downe vpon the heade of the vngodly. And the wyath of the LORDE shal not turne agayne, vntill he perforce, and fulfill the thoughte of his herte. And in the latter dayes ye shall knowe his meanynge.

I haue not sent these prophetes, (saith the LORDE) and yet they ranne. I haue not spoken to them, and yet they preached. But yf they had continued in my counsell and herde my wordes: they had turned my people from their euell wayes and wicked ymaginacions. Am I the God that seeth but the thinge, which is nye at honde, and not that is farre off? saith the LORDE. Maye any man hyde him self so, that I shal not se him? saith the LORDE. Do not I fulfill heauen and earth? saith the LORDE. I haue herde well ynough, what the prophetes saye, that preach lyes in my name, saye ge: I haue dreamed, I haue dreamed. How longe wil this continue in the prophetes hertes, to tel lyes, and to preach the craftie sotslye of their owne herte? Whose purpose is, (with the dreames that every one tell) to make my people forget my name, as their fore fathers dyd, when Baal came vp. The prophet that hath a dreame, let him tell it: and he that vnderstandeth my worde, let him shewe it faithfully.

For what hath chaffe and wheat to do together? saith the LORDE. Is not my worde like a fyre, saith the LORDE) and like an hammer, that breaketh the harde stone? Therfore thus saith the LORDE: beholde, I wil vpo the prophetes, that steale my worde purely from euery man. Beholde, here am I (saith the LORDE) agaynst the prophetes, that take vpon their tungen to speake:

The LORDE hath sayde it. Beholde, here am I (saith y LORDE) agaynst those prophetes, that darre prophesy lyes, and disceane my people with their vanities and miracles, whom I neuer sent, ner commaunded them. They shal do this people greatesharne, saith the LORDE.

If this people, ether eny prophete or prest are the, and saye: what is the burthen of the LORDE? Thou shalt saye vnto them: What? burthen? Therfore will I cast you fro me (saith the LORDE) because ye youre selues are a burthen. And the prophet, prest or people that vseth this terme (the burthen of the LORDE) him will I viset, and his house also.

But thus shall ye saye, every one to another: What answer hath the LORDE geuen? or, what is the LORDES commaundement? And as for the burthen of the LORDE, ye shal speake nomore of it: for euery mans owne worde is his burthen, because ye haue altered the wordes of the lyuynge God the LORDE of hostes oure God.

Thus shall euery man saye to the prophetes: what answer hath the LORDE geuen the? Or, what saith the LORDE? And not once to name the burthen of the LORDE. Therfore thus saith the LORDE: For so moch as ye haue vsed this terme (the burthen of the LORDE) where as I notwithstandinge sent vnto you, and forbade you to speake of the LORDES burthen:

Beholde therfore, I will repute you as a burthen, and will cast you out of my presence: yee and the cite also, that I gaue you and youre fathers: and will bringe you to an everlastinge confucion, and in to soch a shame, as shal neuer be forgotten.

The XXIII. Chapter.

The LORDE shewed me a visio: Beholde, there stode two maundes of figes before y Temple of the LORDE. After y Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon had led awaye captiue Jechonias the sonne of Joachim kinge of Juda, the mightie men also of Juda, with the workemasters and conyngemen of Jerusalem, vnto Babilon. In the one maunde were very good fyges, euen like as these that be first ripe. In the other maunde were very naughtie figes, which might not be eaten, they were so euell.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: what seist thou Jeremyn? I sayde: fyges, where of some be very good, and some so euell, that no man maye eate them.

The prophet Jeremy.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, after this maner: Thus saith y LORDE the God of Israel: like as thou knowest the good fyges, so shal I knowe the men led awaye, whom I haue sent out of this place in to the londe of the Caldees, for their profite: and I will set myne eyes vpon them for the best, for I will bringe them agayne in to this londe: I will buylde them vp, and not breake them downe: I will plante them, and not rote them out. And I will geue them an herte, to knowe, how that I am the LORDE. They shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God, for they shal retorne vnto me with the ir whole herte.

And like as thou knowest the naughtie fyges, which maye not be eatē, they are so euell: Euen so wil I (saith the LORDE) let Sede chias the kinge of Iuda, (ye and all his prynces, & the residue of Ierusalem that remayne ouer in this londe, & them also that dwell in Egipte) to be vexed & plagued in all kingdomes & londes. And will make them to be a re prose, a comon by worde, a laughinge stocke & shame, in all the places, where I shal sca tre them. I will sende the swearde, hunger & pestilence amonge them, vntill I haue clene consumed them out of the londe, that I ga ne vnto them & their fathers.

The XXV. Chapter.

A Sermon that was geuen vnto Jeremy, vpon all the people of Iuda: In the fourth yeare of Joachim the sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda, that was, in the first yeare of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon. Which sermone, Jeremy the prophet made vnto all the people of Iuda, & to all y Inhabitours of Ierusalem, on this maner:

From the xij yeare of Josias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda, vnto this present daye, (that is euen xxiij yeare) the worde of the LORDE hath bene committed vnto me. And so I haue spokē to you, I haue rysen vp early, I haue geuē you warnynge in season, but ye wolde not heare me. Though the LORDE hath sent his seruantes, all the prophetes vnto you in season: Yet wolde ye not obeye, ye wolde not encline yo' cares to heare.

He sayde: turne agayne euery man from his euell waye, & from youre wicked ymaginations, & so shal ye dwell for euer in the lon de, that the LORDE promised you & youre fore fathers: And go not after straunge god des, serue them not, worshi pe them not, & an gre me not with the workes of youre hōdes: then will not I punyssh you. Neuertheles, ye wolde not heare me (saith the LORDE) but

The xxv. Chap.

hane defied me with the workes of youre hō des, to youre owne greate harme.

Wherefore, thus saith the LORDE of hoos tes: Because ye haue not hearkened vnto my worde, so, I will sende out, & call for all the people, y dwell in the north (saith the LOR DE) & wil prepayre Nabuchodonosor the kin ge of Babilon my seruauant, and wil bringe them vpon this londe, and vpon all y dwell therein, & vpon all the people that are abou te them, and will vterly rote them out. I will make of them a wilderness, a mockage, and a continuall deserte.

Morouer, I will take from them the voy ce of gladnesse and solace, the voyce of the brydegrome & the bryde, the voyce of the a noynted, with the cresshettes: & this whole londe shal become a wilderness, & they shal serue the sayde people and the kinge of Ba bilon, thie score yeares and ten. When the xij yeares are expyied, I wil viset also the wic kednesse of the kinge of Babilon & his peo ple, saith the LORDE: yee & the londe of the Caldees, & wil make it a perpetuall wilder nes, & wil fulfil all my wordes vpon that lon de, which I haue deuysed agaynst it: yee all that is writen in this boke, which Jeremy hath prophesied of all people: so that they also shal be subdued vnto dyuersē naciōs: & greate kynges, for I wil recompense them, accordinge to their dedes & workes of their owne hondes.

For thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken vnto me: Take this wyne cuppe of in dignacion fro my honde, that thou mayest cause all the people (to whom I sende the) to drinke of it: that when they haue dronke thereof, they maye be madd, & out of their wyttes, when the swearde commeth, that I wil sende amonge them. Then toke I the cup pe from the LORDES honde, & made all the people drynke thereof, vnto whom the LOR DE had sent me.

But first the cite of Ierusalem, & all the cities of Iuda, their kinges & prynces: roma ke the desolate, waiste, despysed & cursed, acor dinge as it is come to passe this daye. Yet & Pharaos kinge of Egipte, his seruantes, his prynces & his people altogether one w another and all kinges of the londe of Iuda, all kinges of the Philistynes londe, Ascalon, Gaza, Accaron & the remnaunt of Asdod, the Edomites, the Moabites & the Ammoni tes: all the kinges of Tirus & Sidon: the kin ges of the Isles, that are beyonde the see: De dan, Thema, Buz & the shauen Imaclites: all the kinges of Araby, & (generally) all the

The prophet Jeremy.

kinges that dwell in the deserte: all the kin ges of Simri, all the kinges of Elam, all y kinges of the Medes, all kinges toward the north (whether they be farre or nye) ene ry one with his neighbours: &ee and all the kingdomes that are vpon the whole earth. The kinge of Sesach (sayde he) shal drinke with them also.

And saye thou vnto them: this is the com mandment of the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: drinke and be droncken, spe re, and fall, that ye neuer ryse: and that tho row the swearde, which I wil sende amonge you. But yf they will not receaue the cup pe of thy honde, and drinke it, then tell them: Thus doth the LORDE of hoostes threaten you: drynke it ye shal, and that shortly. For lo, I begynne to plague the cite, that my na me is geuen vnto: thynke ye then, that I will leaue you unpunished? Ye shall not go quyte. For why, I call for a swearde vpo all the inhabitours of the earth, saith the LOR DE of hoostes.

Therefore tell them all these wordes, and saye vnto them: The LORDE shal crie from aboue, and let his voyce be herde from his holy habitation. With a greate noyse shal he crie from his courte regall. He shal gene a greate voyce (like the grape gatherers) and the sounde thereof shalbe herde vnto the en des of the worlde. For the LORDE hath a iudgment to geue vpon all people, and will holde his courte of iustice with all flesh and punyssh the vngodly, saith the LORDE.

For thus sayeth y LORDE of hoostes: Be holde, a miserable plague shal go from one people to another, and a greate stormy wa ter shal arise from all the endes of the earth. And the same daye shal the LORDE himself slaye them, from one ende of the earth to a nother. There shall no more be made for e ny of them, none gathered vp, none buried: but shal lie as dunge vpon the ground.

Mourne (o ye shepherdes) & crie: spuinc le youre selues with affshes, o ye rammes of the flocke: for the tyme of youre slaughter is fulfilled, and ye shal fall like vessels con nyingly made for pleasure.

The shepherdes shal haue no waye to fle, and the rammes of the flocke shal not escape. Then shal the shepherdes crie horri bly, and the rammes of the flocke shal mour ne: for the LORDE shal consume their pastu re, and their best felde shal lie deed because of the horrible wrath of the LORDE. They shal forsake their foldes like as a lyon: for their londes shalbe waiste, because of the wrath of the destroyer, and because of his fearfull indignacion.

The XXVI. Chapter.

In the begynnyng of the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kyng of Iuda, came this worde from the LORDE, sayenge: Thus saith the LOR DE: Stonde in the courte of the LORDES house, and speake vnto all them which (out of the cities of Iuda) came to do worship pe in the LORDES house, all the wordes y I commaunde the to saye. Loke that thou ke pe not one worde backe, yf (perauenture) they will herke, and turne euery man from his wic ked waye: that I maye also repente of the plage, which I haue determed to brynge vpon them, because of their wicked in ven tions.

And after this maner shalt thou speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE: yf ye will not obeye me, to walke in my lawes, which I haue geuen you, and to heare the wordes of my seruantes the prophetes, whom I sent vnto you, rysynge vp tynely, and still sendinge: yf ye will not folowe the (I saye) then will I do to this house, as I dyd vnto Silo, and will make this cite to be abhured of all the people of the earth. And the prestes, the prophetes and all the people herde Jeremy preach these wordes, in the house of the LORDE.

Now when he had spoken out all the wor des, that the LORDE commaunded him to preach vnto all the people, then the prestes, the prophetes and all the people toke holde vpon him, and sayde: thou shalt dye. How darrest thou be so bolde, as to saye in the na me of the LORDE: it shal happen to this hou se as it dyd vnto Silo: and this cite shalbe so waiste, that no man shal dwell therein?

And when all the people were gathered aboute Jeremy in the house of the LORDE, the prynces of Iuda herde of this rumou re, & they came soone out of the kinges pa lace in to the house of the LORDE, and sat them downe before the new dore of the LOR DE. Then spake the prestes and the prophe tes vnto the rulers & to all the people, these wordes: This man is worthy to dye, for he hath preached agaynst this cite, as ye you re selues haue herde with youre eares.

Then sayde Jeremy vnto the rulers and to all the people: The LORDE hath sente me to preach agaynst this house & agaynst this cite all the wordes that ye haue herde. Ther fore amende youre wayes, and youre ad vy sementes, and be obedient vnto the voyce of the LORDE youre God: so shal the LORDE repēt of the plage, yf he had deuysed agaynst you. Now as former: I am in youre hondes, do with me, as ye thinke expedient and good. But this shall ye knowe: yf ye put me to death, ye shal make youre selues, this cite & all the inhabitours there of, gilty of innocent bloude. For this is of a treuth: that the LORDE hath sente me vnto you, to speake all these wordes in youre eares.

Then sayde the rulers and the people vnto the prestes and prophetes: This man maye not be condemned to death, for he hath preached vnto vs in the name of the LORDE our God. The Elders also of the londe stode vp, & sayde thus vnto all the people: Michas the Morascite, which was a prophet vnder Ezechias kinge of Iuda, spake to all the people of Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: Sion shalbe plowed like a felde, Ierusalem shalbe an heape of stones, & the hill of the LORDES house shalbe turned to an hie wode. Byd Ezechias yf kinge of Iuda & the people of Iuda put him to death for this: No verily, but rather feared yf LORDE, & made their prayer vnto him. For the which cause also yf LORDE repented of the plage, yf he had deuysed agaynst them. Shulde we then do soch a shamefull dede agaynst oure selues? There was a prophet also, that preached stiffly in the name of the LORDE, called Urias the sonne of Semeia of Cariathiarim: this man preached also agaynst this cite & agaynst this lode, according to all as Jeremey saith. Now when Joachim the kinge with all the estates & prynces had herd his wordes, the kinge went aboute to slaye him. When Urias perceaued that, he was afrayed, & fled, & departed in to Egipte.

Then Joachim the kinge sent seruantes into the lode of Egipte, namely: Elnatha the sonne of Achbor, & certayne men with him in to Egipte, which fetched Urias out of Egipte, & brought him vnto kinge Joachim that slewe him with the swerde, & cast his deed body into yf comō peoples graue. But Ahicam the sonne of Saphan helped Jeremey, that he came not in to the hondes of the people to be slayne.

The XXVII. Chapter.

In the begynnyng of the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kynge of Iuda, came this worde vnto Jeremey from the LORDE, which spake thus vnto me: Make the bondes & chaynes, and put them aboute thy neck, & sende the to the kinge of Edom, the kinge of Moab, the kinge of Ammon, the kinge of Tyrus, & to the kinge of Sidon: & that by the messengers, which shal come to Ierusalem vnto Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and byd them saye vnto their masters: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel, speake thus vnto yo<sup>r</sup> masters: I am he that made the earth, the men & yf catell that are vpon the grounde, with my greates power & outstretched arme, & haue geuen it vnto whom it pleased me. And now will I deliuer all these londes in to the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruant. The bestes also of the felde shal I geue him to do him seruice. And all people shal serue him, & his sonne, and his childe children, vntil the tyme of the samel: & he come also: & many people & great kinges shal serue him.

Moreover, that people & kingdome which wil not serue Nabuchodonosor, and that wil not put their neckes vnder yf yock of the kinge of Babilon: the same people will I visit with swerde, with hunger, with pestilence, vntill I haue consumed them in his hondes, saith the LORDE. And therfore, folow me youre prophetes, soyth sayers, expounders of dreames, charmers & witches, which saye to you: ye shal not serue the kinge of Babilon. For they preach you lies, to bunge you farre from youre londe, & that I might call you out, & destroye you. But the people that put their neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, & serue him, those I will remayne still in their owne lode (saith the LORDE) & they shal occupie it, & dwell therein.

All these thinges tolde I Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, and sayde: Put youre neck vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and serue him & his people, that ye maye lyue. Why wilt thou and thy people perish with the swerde, with hunger, with pestilence like as the LORDE hath deuysed for all people, that wil not serue the kinge of Babilon? Therfore geue no eare vnto those prophetes (that tell you: Ye shal not serue the kinge of Babilon) for they preach you lies, nether beue I sent them, saith the LORDE: how be it they are bolde, falsly for to prophete in my name: that I might yf sooner dryue you out, & that ye might perish with yo<sup>r</sup> preachers.

I spake to the prestes also and to all the people: Thus saith the LORDE: Heare me the wordes of those prophetes, that preach vnto you, & saye: Beholde, the vessels of the LORDES house shal shortly be brought hither agayne from Babilon: For they prophete lies vnto you. Heare them not, but saye to the kinge of Babilon, yf yemaye lyue. Wherefore will ye make this cite to be destroyed? But yf they be true prophetes in very dede, and yf the worde of the LORDE be commytred vnto them, then let them praye the LORDE of hostes, that the remnaunt of the ornaments (which are in the house of the LORDE, and remayne yet in the house of the kinge of Iuda and at Ierusalem) be not caried to Babilon also. For thus hath the LORDE of hostes spoken concernynge the pylers, the laver, the seate and the residue of the ornaments that yet remayne in this cite, which Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon toke not, when he caried awaye Jechonias the sonne of Joachim kinge of Iuda, with all the power of Iuda and Ierusalem, from Ierusalem vnto Babilon, captyue.

Yee thus hath the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel spoken, as touchynge the residue of the ornaments of the LORDES house, of the kinge of Iudaes house, and of Ierusalem: They shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there they shall remayne, vntil I viset them, saith the LORDE. Then wil I bunge them hither agayne. And this was done in the same yere: & in the begynnyng of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

In the fourth yere of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, in the fifth Moneth, It happened, that Hananias yf sonne of Assur the prophet of Gabon, spake to me in the house of the LORDE, in the presence of the prestes & of all the people, & sayde: Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: I haue broke the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and after two yere wil I bunge agayne in to this place, all the ornaments of the LORDES house, yf Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon caried awaye from this place vnto Babilon. Yee I wil bunge agayne Jechonias the sonne of Joachim the kinge of Iuda himself, with all the prisoners of Iuda, (yf are caried vnto Babilon) & in to this place, saith yf LORDE, for I wil breake yf yock of the kinge of Babilon.

Then the prophet Jeremey gaue answere vnto that prophet Hananias, before the prestes & before all the people that were present in the house of the LORDE. And the prophet Jeremey sayde: Amen, yf the LORDE doth so, & graunte the thinge, which thou hast propheted: that he maye bunge agayne all the ornaments of the LORDES house, & restore all the prisoners from Babilon in to this place. Neuertheles, percer thou also, what I will saye, that thou & all the people maye heare: The prophetes that were before vs in tymes past, which propheted of warre, or trouble, or pestilence, ether of peace, vpon many nations & greates kingdomes, were proued by this (yf God had sende them in very dede) when the thinge came to passe, which that prophet tolde before.

And Hananias the prophet toke the chayne from the prophet Jeremias neck, & brake it: & with that sayde Hananias, that all the people might heare: Thus hath the LORDE spoken: Euen so will I breake the yock of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, from the neck of all nations, yee & that within this two yere. And so the prophet Jeremey wente his waye. After now that Hananias the prophet had taken the chayne from the prophet Jeremias neck, and broken it: The worde of the LORDE came vnto the prophet Jeremey sayenge: Go, and tell Hananias these wordes: Thus saith the LORDE: Thou hast broken the chayne of wode, but in steade of wode, thou shalt make chaynes of yron. For thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God of Israel: I wil put a yock of yron vpon the neck of all this people, that they maye serue Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, yee & so shal they do. And I wil geue him yf bestes in the felde. Then sayde the prophet Jeremey vnto yf prophet Hananias: Heare me (I praye the) Hananias: The LORDE hath not sent the, but thou bringest this people in to a fals beleue. And therfore thus saith yf LORDE: beholde, I wil sende the out of the lode, & within a yere thou shalt die, because thou hast falsly spoke agaynst the LORDE. So Hananias the prophet died the same yere in the seventh Moneth.

The XXIX. Chapter.

This is the Copie of the lettre, yf Jeremey the prophet sent from Ierusalem vnto the prisoners: the Senatours, prestes, prophetes, & all the people, whom Nabuchodonosor had led vnto Babilon: after yf tyme yf kinge Jechonias & his Queene, his chambelaines, the prynces of Iuda & Ierusalem & the wittners of Ierusalem were departed thither. Which lettre, Elasa yf sonne of Saphar & Gamaria yf sonne of Belchia dyd beare, whō Sedechias the kinge of Iuda sent vnto Babilon to Nabuchodonosor yf kinge of Babilon: these were yf wordes of Jeremias the letter: Thus hath yf LORDE of hostes yf God of Israel spoke, vnto all the prisoners, yf were led frō Ierusalem vnto Babilon: I wil geue you houses to dwell therein: I will place you

Ye shal crie vnto me, ye shal go z call vpon me, z I shal heare you. Ye shal seke me, z fynde me: yee, yf so be that ye seke me with youre whole herte, I will be founde of you (saith the LORDE) and will delyuer you out of prison, z gather you together agayne out of all places, where in I haue scatred you, saith the LORDE: and wil bringe you agayne to the same place, from whence I caused you be caried awaye captyue.

But where as ye saye, that God hath ray sed you vp prophetes at Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE spoken (concernynge the finger that sytteth in the stole of Dauid, and all y<sup>e</sup> people that dwell in this cite, youre bre thien that are not gone with you into cap tynye.) Thus (I saye) speaketh the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil sende a swearde, hunger z pestilence vpon them, z wil make them like vntymely fyges, that maye not be eate for bytternes. And I wil persecute them with the swearde, with hunger z death.

I will delyuer them vp to be vered of all Kingdomes, to be cursed, abhorred, laughed to scoone, z put to confucion of all the peo ple, amonge whom I haue scatred them: z that because they haue not bene obedient vnto my commaundementes, (saith the LOR DE) which I sent vnto them by my seruau ntes the prophetes. I stode vpearly, and sent vnto them, but they wolde not heare, saith the LORDE. Heare therfore the worde of the LORDE, all ye presoners, whom I sent from Ierusalem vnto Babilon: Thus hath the LOR

DE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, of Achab y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Colaias, z of Sebedias the sonne of Maasia, which prophetic lie vnto you in my name: Beholde, I wil dely uer them in to the honde of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, that he maye slay them before youre eyes. And all y<sup>e</sup> presoners of Iuda that are in Babilon, shal take vpon them this terme of cursinge, and saye: Cursed be he that do vnto the, as he dyd vnto Sebedias z Achab, whom the kinge of Babilon rosted in the fyre, because they synned shamefully in Israel.

For they haue not onely defiled their ney bours wyues, but also preached lyenge wo des in my name, which I haue not comma nded them. This I testifie, z assure, saith the LORDE. But as for Semeia the Nehelamite, thou shalt speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Because thou hast sealed lettres vnder thy name, vnto all the people that is at Jeru salem, z to Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest, yee and sent them to all the prests where in thou wytest thus vnto him: The LORDE hath ordered the to be prest in stede of Joiada the prest, that thou shouldest be the chiefe in the house of the LORDE above all prophetes, z preachers, z that thou mightest put them in prison, or in y<sup>e</sup> stockes, how hap peneth it then, that thou hast not reprimand Jeremy of Anathot, which neuer leaue the his propheticenge. And beside all this, he hath sent vs worde vnto Babilon, and tolde vs planely, that oure captynte shal longe endure: that we shulde buylde vs houses to dwell therein, z to plante vs gardens, that we might enioye the frutes thereof. Which lettre Sophonias the prest dyd rede, and let Jeremy the prophet heare it.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Sende word to all them that be in captynte, on this maner: Thus hath the LORDE spoken concernynge Semeia y<sup>e</sup> Nehelamite: Because that Semeia hath propheticd vnto you without my com myssion, z brought you in to a false hope, therfore thus the LORDE doth certifie you: Beholde, I wil vyset Semeia the Nehelamite, z his seide: so that none of his shall remayne amonge this people, z none of them shall see the good, y<sup>e</sup> I will do for this people, saith the LORDE. For he hath preached falsely of the LORDE.

The XXX. Capter.
These are the wordes, that the LORDE shewed vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE God of Israel: Wryte vp diligently all the wordes, that I haue spoken vnto the, in a booke. For lo, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I will bringe agayne the presoners of my people of Israel and Iuda, saith the LORDE: For I will restore them vnto the londe, that I gaue to their fathers, and they shall haue it in possession.

Agayne, these wordes spaketh the LORDE, concernynge Israel and Iuda: Thus saith the LORDE: We heare a terrible crie, feare and disquiernes. For what els doth this signifie, that I se? Namely, that all stronge men smyte, euery man his honde vpon his loynes, as a woman in the payne of hir tra uayle. Who ener sawe a man trauayle with childe? Enquere therafter, z se. Xce all their faces are maruelous pale.

Alas for this daye, which is so dredefull, that none maye belickened vnto it: and alas for the tyme of Jacobs trouble, from the which he shall yet be delyuered. For in that daye, saith the LORDE, I will take his yock from of thy neck, z breafe thy bondes. They shall nomore serue straunge goddes vnder him, but they shall do seruyce vnto God the LORDE, and to Dauid their kinge, whom I will rayse vp vnto them. And as for the, o my seruauit Jacob, feare not (saith y<sup>e</sup> LOR DE) and be not afayed, o Israel. For lo, I will helpe the also from farre, z thy seide from the londe of their captynte.

And Jacob shall turne agayne, he shal be in rest, and haue a prosperous life, and no man shall make him afayed. For I am with the, to helpe the, saith the LORDE. And though I shal destroye all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred the, yet will I not destroye the, but correcte the, and that with discrecion. For I knowe, that thou art in no wise without faute. Therfore thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE: I am sory for thy hurte and woundes. There is no man to meble with thy cause, or to bynde vp thy woundes: theremaye no man helpe the.

All thy louers haue forgotten the, and care nothinge for the. For I haue geuen the a cruell stroke, and chastened the roughly: and that for the multitude of thy mysdedes, for thy synnes haue had the ouer hande. Why makest thou mone for thy harme? In my self haue pite of thy sorowe, but for the multitu de of thy mysdedes and synnes, I haue do nethis vnto the.

And therfore all they that deuoure the, shal be deuoured, and all thine enemies shal be led in to captynte. All they that make the waist, shalbe waisted themselues: and all those that robbe the, will I make also to be robbed. For I will geue the thy health agayne, and make thy woundes whole, saith the LORDE: because they reuyled the, as one cast awaye vnd despised, o Sion.

For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will set vp Jacobs tentes agayne, and defende his dwellinge place. The cite shalbe buyl ded in hir olde estate, and the houses shal ha ue their right foundacion. And out of them shal go thankesgeuyng, and the voyce of ioye.

I will multiplie them, and they shall not diminish: I shall endue them with honoure, and no man shall subdue them. Their chil dren shalbe as a fore tyme, and their congre gacion shal continue in my sight. And all tho se that vexed them, will I viset.

A caprayne also shall come of them, and a prynce shall sprynge out from the myddest of them: him will I chalenge to myself, and he shall come vnto me. For what is he, that geueth ouer his herte, to come vnto me? saith the LORDE. Ye shalbe my people also, and I wilbe youre God. Beholde, on the other syde shal the wrath of the LORDE breafe out as a stormy water, as a mightie whylle wynde: and shal fall vpon the heades of the vngodly.

The terrible displeasure of the LORDE shall not leaue of, vntill he haue done, z per formed: the intent of his herte, which in the latter dayes ye shal vnderstonde. At the same tyme (saith the LORDE) shal I be the God of all the generacions of Israel, z they shalbe my people.

The XXXI. Chapter.

Thus saith the LORDE: The people of Israel which escaped in y<sup>e</sup> wil der nes from the swearde, founde grace to come in to their rest. Euen so shal the LOR DE now also appeare vnto me from farre, and saye: I loue the with an euerlastinge loue, therfore do I spiede my mercy before the. I will repaie the agayne (o thou daughter of Israel) that thou mayest be fast and sure. Thou shalt take thy tabrettes agayne, z go forth with them, that lede the daunce.

Thou shalt plante vynes agayne vpon y<sup>e</sup> hilles of Samaria, and the grape gatherers shal plante, and synge.

And when it is tyme, the watchmen vpon themoun: of Ephraim shal crie: Arise, let vs go vp vnto Sion to oure LORDE God.

for thus saith the LORD: Reioyce with gladnes because of Jacob, crie vnto the heade of the Gentiles: speake out, synge, and saye: The LORD shall deliuer his people, the remnant of Israel, make them whole.

B Beholde, I will bringe them agayne from out of the north lode, and gather them from the endes of the worlde, with the blynde and lame that are amonge them, with the women that be greete with childe, and soch as be also deliuered: and the company of them that come agayne, shal be greete.

They departed from hence in heynes, but with ioye will I bringe them hither agayne. I will lede them by the ryuers of water in a straight waye, where they shall not stumbe: for I will be Israels father, and Ephraim shalbe my firstborne.

Hear the worde of the LORD (o ye Gentiles) preach in the Iles, that lie farre off, and saye: he that hath scatred Israel, shall gather him together agayne, and shall kepe him as a shepherde doth his flocke. For the LORD shall redeme Jacob, and ryd him from the honde of the violent. And they shal come, & reioyce vpon the hill of Sion, & shall haue plenteousnes of goodes, which the LORD shall geue them: namely, wheate, wyne, oyle, yonge shepe and calues. And their conscience shalbe as a well watered garden, for they shall nomore be hongrie.

C Then shal the mayde reioyce in the daunce, yee both yonge and olde folkes. For I will turne their sorow in to gladnesse, and will comforte them, and make them ioyfull, euen from their hertes. I will poure plenteousnes vpon the hertes of the prestes, and my people shalbe satisfied with good thinges, saith the LORD.

Thus saith the LORD: The voyce of heynes, wepyng and lamentacion came vp in to heauen: euen of Rachel mournynge for hir children, and wolde not be comforted, because they were awaye.

But now saith the LORD: leaue of from wepyng and crienge, witholdethyne eyes from teares, for thy labour shalbe rewarded, saith the LORD. And they shall come agayne out of the londe of their enemies: yee euenthy posterite shall haue consolacion in this (saith the LORD) that thy children shall come agayne in to their owne londe.

Moreover I herde Ephraim, (that was led awaye captyue) complayne on this manner: O LORD, thou hast correcte me, and thy chastenynge haue I receaved, as an vn-tamed calfe. Conuertethou me, and I shalbe conuerted, for thou art my LORD God. Yee as soone as thou turnest me, I shall forsake my self: and when I vnderstande, I shall synne vpon my thee. For verely I haue comitted shamefull thinges: O let my youth beare this reprove and confucion.

Vpon this complayne, I thought thus by myself: is not Ephraim my deare sonne? Is he not the childe, with whom I haue had all myrth and pastyme? For sence the tyme that I first comoned with him, I haue him euer in remembraunce: therfore my very herte dryueth me vnto him: gladly and lowngly will I haue mercy vpon him, saith the LORD. Get the watchmen, prouyde teachers for the: set thine herte vpon the right waie, that thou shuldest walke, and turne agayne: (othou doughter of Israel,) turne agayne to these cities of thyne. How longe wilt thou go astraie, othou shrieking doughter? For the LORD will worke a new thyng vpon earth: A woman shall compasse a man.

For thus saith the LORD of hostes the God of Israel: It will cometherto, that when I haue brought Iuda out of captiuite, these wordes shalbe herde in y londe and in his cities: The LORD, which is the fayre brydegrome of rightuousnesse, make the frutefull, othou holy hill: And there shall dwell Iuda and all hir cities, the shepherdes and hussbonde men: For I shall fede the hongrie soule, and refresh all faynte hertes. When I herde this, I came agayne to myself, and mused, like as I had bene waked out of a swete slepe.

Beholde (saith the LORD) the dayes come, that I will sowe the house of Israel and the house of Iuda, with men and with cattell. Yee it shall cometherto, that like as I haue gone aboute in tymes past to reter them out, to scatre them, to breake them downe, to destroye them and chaste them: Euen so will I also go diligently aboute, to buylde them vp agayne, and to plante them, saith the LORD.

Then shall it no more be sayde: y fathers haue eaten a sower grape, and the childrens teth are set on edge: for every one shal bye for his owne mysdede, so that who so eateth a sower grape, his teth shalbe set on edge.

Beholde, the dayes come (saith the LORD) y I will make a new couenant with y house of Israel & with y house of Iuda: after the couenant that I made with their fathers, when I toke them by the hande, & led them out of the londe of Egypt: which couenant they brake, wherfore I punished them sore, saith the LORD: But this shal be the couenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those dayes, saith the LORD: I will plante my lawe in the inward partes of them, and write it in their hertes, and wilbe their God, and they shalbe my people.

And from thence forth shall no man teach his neyghboure or his brother, and saye: knowe the LORD: But they shall all knowe me, from the lowest vnto the hiest, saith the LORD. For I will forgene their mysdedes, and wil neuer remembre their synnes eny more. Thus saith the LORD which gaue the sonne to be a light for the daye, and the Moone and starres to shyne in the night: which moueth the see, so that the floudes therof were scarce: his name is the LORD of hostes. Like as this ordinaunce shal neuer be taken out of my sight, saith the LORD: So shal the sede of Israel neuer cease, but all waye be a peop'e before me.

Moreover, thus saith the LORD: like as the heauen aboue can not be measured, and as the foundations of the earth beneth maye not be sought out: So will I also not cast out the whole sede of Israel, for that they haue commytted, saith the LORD. Beholde, the dayes come saith the LORD, y the cite of y lorde shalbe enlarged from the towre of Hananeel, vnto y gate of the corner wall. From thence shal the right measure be taken before her vnto the hill toppe of Gareb, and shal come aboute Gaatha, and the whole valley of the deed carcasses, and of the ashes, & all Seremoth, vnto the broke of Cedron: and from thence vnto the corner of the horsgate toward y east, wher as the Sanctuary of the LORD also shal be set. And when it is now buylde, & set vp of this fashion it shal neuer be broken, ner cast downe eny more.

The XXXII. Chapter.

These wordes spaketh the LORD vnto Jeremy, in the tenth yeare of Sedechias kinge of Iuda, which was y fouith yeare of Nabuchodonosor, whattyme as the kinge of Babilons hoste layed sege vnto Ierusalem. But Jeremy the prophet laye bounde in y courte of the prison, which was in the kinge of Iudaes house: where Sedechias the kinge of Iuda caused him to be layed, because he had prophecied of this manner: Thus saith the LORD: Beholde, I will deliuer this cite in to the bondes of the kinge of Babilon, which shal take it. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, he shal not be able to escape the Caldees, but surely he shall come in to the bondes of the kinge of Babilon: which shal speake with him mouth to mouth, and one of them shal loke another in the face. And Sedechias shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there shal he be, vntill the tyme that I vyset him, saith the LORD. But yf thou takest in hode to fight agaynst the Caldees, thou shalt not prosper.

And Jeremy sayde: Thus hath the LORD spoken vnto me: Beholde, Hananeel the sonne of Shallum thine Vncles sonne shall come vnto the, and requyre the to redeme y londe, that lieth in Anathot vnto thy self: for by reason of kynred it is thy parte to redeme it, and to bye it out.

And so Hananeel myne Vncles sonne came to me in the courte of the prison, (acordinge to the worde of the LORD,) and sayde vnto me: Bye my londe (I praye the) that lieth in Anathot, in the countre of Ben Jamin: for by heretage thou hast right to lose it out for thy self, therfore redeme it. Then I preceaued, that this was the commandement of the LORD, and so I lowsed the londe from Hananeel of Anathot, myne Vncles sonne, and weyed him therethe moneye: euen seven sycles, and ten syluer pens.

I caused him also to make me a writinge, and to seale it, and called recorde there by, and weyed him there the money vpon the waighes. So I toke the euydence with the copie (when it was orderly sealed and red ouer) and I gaue the euydence vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia in the sight of Hananeel my cosen, and in the presence of the witnesses, that be named in the euydence, and before all the Jewes that were therby in the courte of the prison.

I charged Baruch also before them, sayinge: The LORD of hostes the God of Israel commandeth the, to take this sealed euydence with the copie, and to laye it in an erthen vessell, that it maye longe continue.

For the LORD of hostes the God of Israel hath determed, that houses, feldes and vynyardes shalbe possessed agayne in this londe.

Now when I had deliuered the euydence vnto Baruch y sonne of Nerias, I besought the LORD, sayinge: O LORD God, It is thou that hast made heauen and earth with thy greates power and his arme, and there is nothinge to harde for y. Thou shewest mercy vpon thousandes, thou recompencest the wickednes of the fathers, in to the besome of the children that come after them.

Thou art the greates and mightie God, whose name is the LORDE of hostes: greates in counsell, and infinite in thought: Thine eyes loke vpon all the wayes of mens children, to rewarde euery one after his waye, and accordinge to the frutes of his inuencions: Thou hast done greates tokens and wonders in the londe of Egypte (as we se this daye) vpon the people of Israel and vpon these men: to make thy name greates, as it is come to passe this daye: Thou hast brought thy people of Israel out of the londe of Egypte, with tokens, with wonders, with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme and with greates terriblenes: and hast geuen them this londe, like as thou haddest promysed vnto their fathers: Namely, that thou woldest geue them a lode, that floweth with mylke and honye.

Now when they came therin, and possessed it, they folowed not thy voyce, and walked not in thy lawe: but all that thou commaundedest them to do, that haue they not done, and therfore come all these plagis vpon them.

Beholde, there are bulwarkes made now agaynst the cite, to take it: and it shalbe wonne of the Caldees that besege it, with swerde, with hunger and death, and loke what thou hast spoken, that same shal come vpon them.

For lo, all thinges are present vnto the: Yet sayest thou vnto me (O LORDE God) and commaundest me, that I shall loose a pece of londe vnto my self, and take witnessetherto: and yet in the meane season the cite is deliuered in to the power of the Caldees.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, I am the LORDE God of all flesh, Is there eny thinge then to harde for me? Therfore thus sayde the LORDE: beholde, I shal deliuer this cite in to the power of the Caldees, and in to the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, they shal take it in: For the Caldees shal come, and wyne this cite, and set fyre vpon it, and burne it: with the gorgeous houses, in whose parlours they haue made sacrifice vnto Baal, and poured drynke offerings vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath.

For seinge the children of Israel and the children of Iuda haue wrought wickednes before me euer from their youth vp, what haue they els done, but prouoked me with the workes of their owne hondes: saith the LORDE.

O, what hath this cite bene els, but a prouokinge of my wrath, euer sence the daye that I buylded it, vnto this houre: Wherein I cast it out of my sight, be cause of the greates blasphemies of the childre of Israel and Iuda, which they haue done to prouoke me: yee they, their kinges, their princes, their prestes, their prophetes, whole Iuda, and all the citsyns of Ierusalem.

When I stode vpearly, and taught them and instructed them, they turned their backs to me, and not their faces. They wolde not heare, to be reformed and correct. They haue set their goddes in y house, that is halowed vnto my name, to defyle it. They haue buylded his places for Baal in the valley of the children of Ennon, to vowe their sonnes and daughters vnto Moloch: which I neuer commaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought, to make Iuda synne with soch abhominacion.

Morouer thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken, concerninge this cite, which (as ye your selues confesse) shalbe deliuered in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, when it is wonne with the swerde, with hunger and with pestilence. Beholde, I will gather them together from all londes, wherein I haue scatred them in my wrath, in my sorrowfull and greates displeasure: and will bringe them agayne vnto this place, wherethey shal dwell safely. And they shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God.

And I will geue them one herte and one waye, that they maye feare me all the daies of their life, that they and their children after them maye prospere. And I will set vp an euerslastinge couenaunt with them, Namely: that I will neuer cease to do them good, and that I will put my feare in their hertes, so that they shal not runne awaye frome.

Yee I will haue a lust and pleasure to do them good, and faithfully to plante them in this londe, with my whole herte, and with all my soule.

For thus saith the LORDE: like as I haue brought all this greates plage vpon this people: so will I also bringe vpon them all the good, that I haue promysed them. And men shal haue their possessions in this londe, wherof ye saye now, that it shal nether be inhabited of people ner of catell, but be deliuered in to the hondes of the Caldees: yee londe shalbe bought for money, and eueryde made ther vpon and sealed before witnesses in the countre of Ben Jamin, and rounde aboute Ierusalem: in the cities of Iuda, in the cities that are vpo the mountaynes, and in them that lie beneth, yee and in the cities that are in the deserte. For I wil bringe their presoners hither agayne, saith the LORDE.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

When the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremij on this maner, whē he was yet bounde in the countre of the preson: Thus saith the LORDE, which fulfilleth the thinge that he speaketh the LORDE which perfourmeth the thinge that he taketh in honde: euen he, whose name is the LORDE: Thou hast cried vnto me, and I haue herdethe: I haue shewed greates and hierthings, which were vnkowne vnto you.

Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE God of Israel, concerninge the houses of this cite, and the houses of the kinges of Iuda: that they shalbe broken thorow the ordinaunce and wepens, when the Caldees come to be segethem: and they shalbe fylled with the deed carcases of men, whom I will slaye in my wrath and displeasure: whē I turne my face from this cite, because of all hir wickednes. Beholde, (saith the LORDE) I will heale their woundes, and make them whole: I will open them the treasure of peace and trerth.

And I will retorne the captiuyte of Iuda and Israel: and will set them vp agayne, as they were afore. From all mysdedes (wher in they haue offended agaynst me) I will clese them: And all their blasphemies which they haue done agaynst me, when they regarded me not, I will forgene them.

And this shal get me a name, a prayse and honoure, amonge all people of the earth, which shal heare all the good, that I will shewe vnto them: Yee they shalbe as frayd and astonnied at all the good dedes and benesites, that I will do for them. Morouer, thus saith the LORDE: In this place, wherof ye saye that it shalbe a wil-ernes, wher in nether people ner catell shal dwell: In like maner in the cities of Iuda and without Ierusalem (which also shalbe so voyde, that nether people ner catell shal dwell there) shal the voyce of gladnesse be herde agayne.

ne, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the bryde, the voyce of them that shal synge: (Prayse the LORDE of hostes, for he is louyng, and his mercy endureth for euer) and the voyce of them that shal offre vp gistes in the house of the LORDE. For I will restore the captiuyte of this londe, as it was afore, saith the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes. It shal come yet therto, that in this londe, which is voyde from men and catell, and in all the cities of the londe, there shal be set vp shepherdes cotages: in the cities vpon the mountaynes, and in the cities that lie vpon the playne, and in the deserte.

In the londe of Ben Jamin, in the felde of Ierusalem, and in the cities of Iuda shal the shepe be nombred agayne, vnder the honde of him, that telleth them, saith the LORDE. Beholde, the tyme commeth (saith the LORDE) that I wil performe that good thinge, which I haue promysed vnto the house of Israel and to the house of Iuda. In those daies and at the same tyme, I will bringe forth vnto Dauid, the braunch of rightuousnes, and he shal do equite and rightuousnesse in the londe. In the se daies shal Iuda be helped, and Ierusalem shal dwell safe, and he that shal call her is euen God oure rightuous maker. For thus the LORDE promyseth: Dauid shal neuer want one, to syt vpon the stole of the house of Israel: nether shal the prestes and Levites want one to offre all waye before me, burnt offerings, to kyndle the meat offerings, and to prepare the sacrifices.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremij after this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: Maye the couenaunt which I haue made with daye and night, be broken, that there shulde not be daye and night in due season: Then maye my couenaunt also be broken, which I made with Dauid my seruauant, and so he not to haue a sonne to reigne in his Trone. So shal also the prestes and Levites neuer sayle, but serue me. For like as the starres of heauen maye not be nombred, nether the sonde of the see measured: so will I multiplie the sede of Dauid my seruauant, and of the Levites my ministers.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came to Jeremij, sayenge: Considrest thou not what this people speaketh? Two kynnedes (saye they) had the LORDE chosen, and those same two hath he cast awaye. For so farre is my people come, y they haue no hope to come to gether eny more, and to be one people agayne. Therfore thus saith the LORD: As I haue made no couenaunt with daye & night, and geue no statute vnto heauen and earth: then will I also cast awaye the sede of Dauid my seruauit: so that I wil take no prynce out of his sede, to rule the posterite of Abrahā, Isaac and Jacob. But yet I will turne agayne their captiuite, and be mercifull vnto them.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

These are the wordes which the LORD spake vnto Jeremy, what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, & all his hoostes (out of all the kingdome yf were vnder his power) and all his people, fought agaynst Jerusalem and all the cities therof. Thus saith the LORD God of Israel: Go, & speake to Sedechias the kinge of Iuda, & tell him: The LORD sendeth this worde: Beholde, I will deliuer this cite in to the hōde of the kinge of Babilon, he shal burne it, and thou shalt not escape his bondes, but shalt be led awaye prisoner, and deliuered into his power. Thou shalt loke the kinge of Babilon in the face, and he shal speake with the mouth to mouth, and then shalt thou go to Babilon. Yet heare the worde of the LORD, o Sedechias thou kinge of Iuda: Thus saith the LORD vnto the: Thou shalt not be slayne with the swerde, but shalt die in peace. Like as yf fore fathers, the kinges, thy progenitours were brente: so shalt thou be brente also, & in the mournynge they shal saye: oh lord. For thus haue I determed, saith the LORD.

Then spake Jeremy the prophet all these wordes vnto Sedechias kinge of Iuda in Jerusalem: what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste besieged Jerusalem, and the remnant of the cities: Namely, Lachis & Azekah, which yet remayned of the stronge defended cities of Iuda.

These are the wordes that the LORD spake vnto Jeremy the prophet, when Sedechias was agreed with all the people at Jerusalem, that there shulde be proclaimed a libertie: so that every man shulde let fre go his seruauit and handmayde, Hebrew & Hebrewesse, & no Iewe to holde his brother as a bondeman. Now as they had consented, even so they were obedient, & let them go fre. But afterwarde they repented, & toke agayne the seruantes and handmaydens, wherin they had letten go fre, and so made them bondes agayne.

For the which cause the worde of the LORD came vnto Jeremy from the LORD himself, sayenge: Thus saith the LORD God of Israel: I made a couenaunt with your fathers, when I brought them out of Egypte, (that they shulde no more be bondmen,) sayenge: When seven yeares are out, every man shal let go fre his bought seruauit an Hebrew, yf he haue serued him sixe yeares. But yf fathers obeyed me not & hearkened not vnto me. As for you, ye were now turned, & dyd right before me, in yf ye proclaimed, every mā to let his neighbour go fre, & in yf ye made a couenaunt before me, in the temple that beareth my name: But yet ye haue turned your selues agayne, and blasphemed my name: In this, yf every man hath requyred his seruauit and handmayden agayne, whom ye had letten go quyte and fre, and compelled them to serue you agayne, and to be your bondmen. And therefore thus saith the LORD: Ye haue not obeyed me, every man to proclame fredome vnto his brother and neighbour: wherfore, I will call you vnto a fre dome, saith the LORD: euen vnto the swerde, to the pestilence, and to hunger, and will make you to be plagued in all the kyngdomes of the earth. Yet those men that haue broken my couenaunt, and not kepte the wordes of the apoyntment, which they made before me: when they hewed the calfe in two, & when there wente thorow the two halfes therof: The princes of Iuda, the princes of Jerusalem, the gelded men, the prestes and all the people of the londe (which were thorow the two sydes of the calfe.) Those men wil I geue in to the power of their enemies, and in to the bondes of them that folowe vpon thei lyues.

And their deed bodies shal be meate for the foules of the ayre, and bestes of the felde. As for Sedechias the kinge of Iuda & his princes, I will deliuer them in to the power of their enemies, and of them that be sye to slaye them, and in to the hōde of the kyng of Babilons hooste, which now is departed from you: But thorow my commaundement (saith the LORD) they shal come agayne before this cite, they shal fight agaynst it, wyne it, and burne it. Moreover I will laye the cities of Iuda so wast, that no man shal dwell therein.

The XXXV. Chapter.

The wordes which the LORD spake vnto Jeremy, (in the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda) these: Go vnto yf house of the Rechabites, & call them out, & bunge the to yf house of the LORD in to some commodious place, and geue them wyne to drynke. Then toke I Jasias the sonne of Jeremy, the sonne of Zababania, and his brethren and all his sonnes, and the whole hōsholde off the Rechabites: and brought them to the house off the LORD, in to the closet of the children off Hanan the sonne off Igdaia the man off God: which was by the closet off the princes, that is aboue the closet of Maasia the sonne of Sellum, which is the chefe off the tresury. And before the sonnes of the kynred of the Rechabites, I set pottes full of wyne, and cuppes, and sayde vnto them: drynke wyne. But they sayde: we drynke no wyne, for Jonadab the sonne of Rechab oure father commaunded vs, sayenge: Ye and your sonnes shall neuer drynke wyne, buylde no houses, so we no sede, plante no vynes, yet ye shall haue no vynyardes: but for all your tyme ye shall dwell in tentes, yf ye maye lyue longe in the lode, wherin ye be strangers. Thus haue we obeyed the commaundment of Jonadab yf sonne of Rechab oure father, in all yf he hath charged vs, and so we drynke no wyne all oure lyue longe: we, oure wyues, & sonnes & oure daughters. Neither buylde we eny house to dwell therein, we haue also amonge vs nether vynyardes, ner come lode to dwel: but we dwell in tentes, we ok eye, & do accordinge vnto all, that Jonadab oure father commaunded vs.

But now yf Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon came vp in to the lode, we sayde: come, let vs go to Jerusalem, yf we maye escape the hooste of the Caldees ad the Assirians: & so we dwell now at Jerusalem. Then came yf worde of the LORD vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Thus saith the LORD of hoostes the God of Israel: Go & tell whole Iuda & all the inhabitours of Jerusalem: Wyll ye not be reformed, to obeye my wordes? saith the LORD. The wordes which Jonadab the sonne off Rechab commaunded his sonnes, yf they shulde drynke no wyne, are fast & surely kepte: for vnto this daye they drynke no wyne: but obeye their fathers commaundement. But as for me, I haue stode vp early, I haue spokē vnto you, & geuen you earnest warnynge: & yet haue ye not bene of edict vnto me. Yet I haue sent my seruantes, all the prophetes vnto you, I rose vp early, & sent you worde, sayenge: Turne you, every man from his wicked waye: amede yo lyues, & go not after strange goddes, to worshippē the: yf ye maye continue in the lode, which I haue geuen vnto you and your fathers, but ye wolde nether heare me, ner folowe me.

The childre of Jonadab Rachabs sonne haue steadfastly kepte their fathers commaundement, yf he gaue them, but this people is not obedient vnto me. And therefore thus saith the LORD of hoostes yf God of Israel: Beholde, I wil bunge vps Iuda & vps enyone yf dwelleth in Jerusalem, all the trouble yf I haue deuysed agaynst the. For I haue spokē vnto the, but they wolde not folowe: I haue called vnto them, neuertheles they wolde geue me no answer. Jeremy also spake vnto the hōsholde off the Rechabites: Thus saith the LORD of hoostes the God of Israel: For so moch as ye haue obeyed yf commaundment of Jonadab yo father, & kepte all his preceptes, & done accordinge vnto all yf he hath bydden you: Therfore thus saith the LORD of hoostes the God of Israel: Jonadab the sonne of Rechab shal not saye, but haue one out of his stocke, to stode allwaye before me. The XXXVI. Chap.

In the fourth yeare of Joachim the sonne of Josias kyng of Iuda, came yf worde of the LORD vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Take a booke, & write therein all yf wordes, yf I haue spokē to the, to Israel, to Iuda & to all the people, fro the tyme yf I begane for to speake vnto the (in yf reigne of Josias) vnto this daye. That when the house of Iuda heareth of the plage, which I haue deuysed for the, they maye peradventure turne, every man fro his wicked waye, that I maye for geue their offences and synnes.

Then dyd Jeremy call Baruch the sonne of Nerias, & Baruch wrote in the booke at yf mouth of Jeremy, all the wordes of the LORD, which he had spoken vnto him. And Jeremy commaunded Baruch sayenge: I am in prison, so that I maye not come in to the house of yf LORD: therefore go thou thither, & rede the booke, that thou hast writte at my mouth: Namely, the wordes off the LORD, & rede the in the LORDS house vpon the fasting daye: that the people, whole Iuda, & all they that come out of the cities, maye heare. Peradventure they will praye mekely before the face of the LORD, and turne, every one from his wicked waye. For greate is the wraich and displeasure, that the LORD hath taken agaynst this people.

So Baruch the sonne of Nerias dyd, accordinge vnto all that Jeremy the prophet commaunded him, readinge the wordes off the LORD out off the booke in the LORDS house. And this was done in the fyfth yeare off Joachim yf sonne of Josias kinge of Iuda, in

Jer. 3. 2 the ix. moneth when it was commaunded, that all the people of Jerusalem shulde fast before the LORDE, and they also that were come from the cities of Juda vnto Jerusalem.

Jer. 25. d Then red Baruch the wordes of Jeremy out of the boke within the house of the LORDE, out of y<sup>e</sup> treasury of Gamarias the sonne off Saphan the scribe, which is besyde the hyer losse off the new dore of the LORDES house: that all y<sup>e</sup> people might heare. Now whē Micheas the sonne off Gamarias the sonne of Saphan had herde all the wordes of the LORDE out of y<sup>e</sup> boke, he wēte downe to the kynges palace in to y<sup>e</sup> scribes chābre for there all y<sup>e</sup> prynces were set: Elisama the scribe, Dalias the sonne of Semei, Elnathā the sonne off Achbor, Gamaria the sonne of Saphan, Sedechias the sonne of Zananias, with all the prynces. And Micheas tolde them all the wordes, y<sup>e</sup> he herde Baruch rede out of the boke before the people.

Then all the prynces sent Jehudi y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Nathamias the sonne of Salamia the sonne of Chusi, vnto Baruch, sayenge: Take in thine honde the boke, wherout thou hast red before all the people, and come. So Baruch the sonne of Nerias toke y<sup>e</sup> boke in his honde, and came vnto them. And they sayde vnto him: Sit downe, and rede the boke, y<sup>e</sup> we may heare also. So Baruch red, y<sup>e</sup> they might heare. Now when they had herde all the wordes, they were abashed one vpon another, and sayde vnto Baruch: We wil certifie the kyng of all these wordes. And they examined Baruch, sayenge: Tell vs, how dost thou wyte all these wordes out off his mouth? Then Baruch answered them: He spake all these wordes vnto me with his mouth, and I alone was with him, and wrote them in the boke.

Then sayde the prynces vnto Baruch: Go thy waye, and hyde the with Jeremy, so that no man knowe where ye be. And they went in to the kyng to the courte. But they kepte the boke in the chābre off Elisama the scribe, ad tolde the kyng all the wordes, that he might heare. So the kyng sent Jehudi to fetch him y<sup>e</sup> boke, which he brought out off Elisama y<sup>e</sup> scribes chābre. And Jehudi red it, that the kyng and all the prynces, which were aboute him, might heare. Now the kyng sat in the wynter house, for it was in the ix. Moneth, and there was a good fyre before him. And whē Jehudi had red thre or foure leaues therof, he cut the boke in peces with a peme knyfe, and cast it in to the fyre vpon the herth, vntill the boke was all brente in the fyre vpon the herth.

Net no man was abashed therof, or reme his clothes: nether the kyng himselfe, ner his seruantes, though they herde all these wordes. Neuertheles Elnathan, Dalias ad Gamarias, besoughte the kyng, that he wolde not burne the boke: notwithstandinge y<sup>e</sup> kyng wolde not heare them, but commaunded Jeramyhel the sonne off Amalech, Sarias the sonne of Esriel and Selamia y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Abdiel, to laye bondes vpon Baruch the scribe, and vpon Jeremy the prophet: but the LORDE kepte them out of sight. After now that the kyng had brente the boke, ad y<sup>e</sup> sermons which Baruch wrote at y<sup>e</sup> mouth off Jeremy: The worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremy sayenge: Take another boke, and write in it all the forsayde sermons, that were writen in the first boke, which Joachim the kyng off Juda hath biente.

And tell Joachim the kyng off Juda, Thus saith the LORDE: thou hast biente y<sup>e</sup> boke, and thoughtest within thy self: Why hast thou writen therein, that the kyng off Babilon shal come, z make this lode wast: so that he shal make both people and catel to be out of it? Therfore thus the LORDE saith, of Joachim the kyng off Juda: There shal none of his generacion sit vpon the trone of David. His dced corse shal be cast out, that the heat off the daye, and the frost off the night maye come vpon him: And I will vyset the wickednes of him, of his sede, and of his seruantes. Moreover all the well that I haue promised the (though they herde me not) will I bunge vpon them, vpon y<sup>e</sup> inhabitants of Jerusalem, and vpon all Juda. Then toke Jeremy another boke, and gaue it Baruch the scribe the sonne of Nerias, which wrote therein out of the mouth off Jeremy: all the sermons that were in the first boke, which Joachim the kyng off Juda dyd burne. And there were added vnto them many mo sermons, then before.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

Sedechias y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Josias (which was made kyng thorow Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon) reigned in the londe of Juda, in the steade off Joachias the sonne of Joachim. But nether he, ner his seruantes, ner the people in the lode wolde obeye the wordes of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, which he spake by the prophet Jeremy. Neuertheles Sedechias the kyng sent Juchal the sonne of Selamia and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the prest to the prophet Jeremy, se nyge: O praye thou vnto the LORDE oure God for vs. Now Jeremy walked sie amon gethe people at that tyme, and was not put in prision as yet. Pharaos hooste also was come out of Egipte: which when the Caldees that beseged Jerusalem, perceaued, they departed from thence.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremy the prophet, sayenge: Thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God of Israel, This answere shal ye geue to the kyng of Juda, that sent you vnto me for counsell: Beholde, Pharaos hooste which is come forth to helpe you, shal returne to Egipte in to his owne londe: But the Caldees shal come agayne, z fight agaynst this cite, wyne it, and set fyre vpon it. For thus saith the LORDE: disceane not y<sup>e</sup> owne myndes, thynke ynge on this maner: Tush, the Caldees go now their waye frem vs: No, they shal not go their waye. For though ye had slayne the whole hooste off the Caldees, that besege you, and enery one of the slayne laye in his tent, yet shulde they stonde vp, and set fyre vpon this cite. Now whē the hooste of the Caldees was broke vp from Jerusalem for feare of the Egiptians armye, Jeremy went out of Jerusalem toward the lode of Ben Jamin, to do certayne busynesse there amon y<sup>e</sup> people. And whē he came vnder Ben Jamins porte, there was a porter called Jerias the sonne of Selamia y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Zananias, which fell vpon him z toke him, sayenge: y<sup>e</sup> mynde is to rume to the Caldees. Then sayde Jeremy: It is not so, I go not to the Caldees. Neuertheles Jerias wolde not beleue him, but brought Jeremy boūde before the prynces. Wherfore the prynces were angrie with Jeremy, causinge him to be beaten, z to be layed in prision in the house of Jonathas the scribe. For he was the ruler of the prision. Thus was Jeremy put in to the dongeon z prision, and so laye there a longe tyme. Then Sedechias the kyng sent for him, z called him, z axed him quietly in his owne house, sayenge: thinkest thou this busynes (that now is in honde) cometh off the LORDE? Jeremy answered: yee y<sup>e</sup> it doth: z thou (sayde he) shalt be deliuered in to the kyng of Babilons power.

Moreover, Jeremy sayde vnto kyng Sedechias: What haue I offended agaynst y<sup>e</sup>, agaynst thy seruantes, or agaynst this people, that ye haue caused me be put in prision? Where are youre prophetes, which haue prophesied vnto you and sayde, that y<sup>e</sup> kyng of Babilon shulde not come agaynst you z this lode? And therfore heare now, o my lord the kyng: let my prayer be accepte before the, z sende me nomore in to y<sup>e</sup> house of Jonathas the scribe, that I dye not there. Then Sedechias the kyng commaunded to put Jeremy in the fore entrie off the prision, and daily to the geuen him a cake of bried, and els no dighte meate, vntill all the bried in the cite was eaten vp. Thus Jeremy remayned in y<sup>e</sup> fore entrie off the prision.

The XXXVIII. Chapter.

Saphatias the sonne off Mathā, Gedolias the sonne of Pashur, Juchal the sonne of Selamia, z Pashur the sonne of Malchias perceaued the wordes, y<sup>e</sup> Jeremy had spokē vnto all the people, namely on this maner: Thus saith the LORDE: Who so remayneth in this cite, shal perish, ether with the swearde, with hunger or with pestilence: But who so falleth vnto the Caldees, shal escape, wyngynge his soule for a pray, z shal lyue. For thus saith the LORDE: This cite (no doute) must be deliuered in to y<sup>e</sup> power of the kyng of Babilon, z he also shal wyne it. The sayde the prynces vnto y<sup>e</sup> kyng: Syr, roe besech you let this man be put to death, for thus he discourageth the hōdes of the souldyers y<sup>e</sup> be in this cite, z the hōdes of all the people, whē he speaketh soch wordes vnto the. This mā verely labourereth not for peace of y<sup>e</sup> people, but mischefe. Sedechias the kyng answered and sayde: lo, he is in y<sup>e</sup> hōdes, for y<sup>e</sup> kyng maye denye you nothinge. Then toke they Jeremy, and cast him in to the dongeon off Malchias the sonne off Amalech, that dwelt in the fore entrie off the prision. And they let downe Jeremy wth ceares in to a dongeon, where there was no water, but myre. So Jeremy stak fast in the myre. Now when Abdemelech the Moorian beyng a chamberlayne in the kynges courte, vnderstode, that they had cast Jeremy in to the dongeon: he went out off the kynges house, and spake to the kyng (which the sat vnder the porte off Ben Jamin) these wordes: My lord the kyng, where as these men medle with Jeremy the prophet, they do him wronge: Namely, in that they haue put him in prision, there to dye of hunger, for there is no more bried in the cite. The kyng commaunded Abdemelech the Moorian, and sayde: Take frem hēce xxx. men whom thou wilt, z drawe vp Jeremy the prophet out of the dongeon, before he dye. So Abdemelech toke the men wth him, z went to y<sup>e</sup> house of Amalech, z there vnder an almyer he gat older ragges z wome cloutes, z let the downe by a coarde, in to the dongeon to Jeremy.

The prophet Jeremy.

And Abdemelech the Moian sayde vnto the prophet Jeremy: O put these ragges and cloutes vnder thine arme holes, betwixte the and the coardes: ad Jeremy dyd so. So they drewe vp Jeremy with coardes and toke him out of the dongeon, and here mayned in the fore entrie of the prison. The Sedechias the kynge sent and caused Jeremy the prophet be called vnto him, in to the thirde entrie, that was by the house off the LORDE. And the kynge sayde vnto Jeremy: I wil are the somwhat, but hyde nothinge frome. The Jeremy answerde Sedechias: As I be playne vnto the, thou wilt cause me suffre death: yf I geue the counsell, thou wilt not folowe me. So the kynge swore an oath secretly vnto Jeremy, sayenge: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, that made vs these soules, I will not slaye the, ner geue the in to the hōdes of them, that seke after thy life.

Then sayde Jeremy vnto Sedechias: Thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: As case be, that thou wilt go forth vnto the kynge off Babilons prynces, thou shalt saue thy life, and this cite shall not be brēt, yee both thou and thy housholde shall escape with youre lyues. But yff thou wilt not go forth to the kynge off Babilons prynces, then shalt this cite be deliuered in to the hondes of the Caldees which shall set fyre vpon it, and thou shalt not be able to escape them. And Sedechias sayde vnto Jeremy: I am afrayde for the Jewes, that are fled vnto the Caldees, lest I come in their hōdes, and so they to haue me in derision.

But Jeremy answerde: No, they shal not betraye the: O herken vnto the voyce off the LORDE (I beseeke y<sup>e</sup>) which I speake vnto the, so shalt thou be well, and saue thy life. But yf thou wilt not go forth, the LORDE hath tolde me this planely: Beholde, all the women that are left in the kynge of Judas house, shal go out to the kynge of Babilons prynces. For they thynke, yf thou art disceained: and that y<sup>e</sup> men in whom thou didest put thy trust, haue gotten the vnder, and set thy feet fast in the myre, and gone their waye from the. Therefore all thy wyues with their children shall fle vnto the Caldees, and thou shalt not escape their hondes, but shalt be y<sup>e</sup> kynge of Babilons prisoner, and this cite shall be brent. Then sayde Sedechias vnto Jeremy: loke y<sup>e</sup> no body knowe off these wordes, and thou shalt not dye. But yf the prynces perceane, that I haue talked with the, and come vnto the, sayenge: O speake, what sayde the kynge to the: hyde it not from vs, and we wil not put the to death. Tell vs (we praye the) what sayde y<sup>e</sup> kynge to the. Set thou geue them this answer: I haue humbly besought the kynge, that he will let me lye no more in Jonathas house, that I dye not there: Then came all the princes vnto Jeremy, and axed him, And he tolde them, after the maner as the kynge bad him. Then they belid their peace, for they perceaued nothinge. So Jeremy abode still in the fore entrie off the prison, vntill the daye that Jerusalem was wonne.

The xxxix. Chapter.

Now when the cite off Jerusalem was taken (for in the ix. yeare of Sedechias kynge of Juda in the tenth Moneth, came Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon and all his hooste, and beseged Jerusalem. And in the xi. yeare of Sedechias in the fourth Moneth y<sup>e</sup> ix. daye off y<sup>e</sup> Moneth, he brake into the cite). Then all the kynge of Babilons prynces came in, and sat the downe vnder the poire: Nergall, Sarez, Samgarnebo, Sarschim, Rabsaris, Nergal, Sarez, Rabmag, with all the other prynces of the kynge of Babilon. And when Sedechias the kynge of Juda with his sondyres sawe them, they fled, and departed out off the cite by night thorow the kynges garde, and thorow the poire that is betwene the two walles, and so they wente towarde the wilderness.

But the Caldees hooste folowed fast after them, and toke Sedechias in the felde of Jericho, and brought him prisoner to Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon vnto Reblatha, that lieth in the londe off Hemath where he gaue iugment vpon him. So the kynge of Babilon caused the children of Sedechias and all the nobles off Juda be slayne, before his face at Reblatha. And made Sedechias eyes be put out, and bounde him with chaynes, and sent him to Babilon.

Morouer, the Caldees brēt vp the kynges palace, with y<sup>e</sup> other houses of the people, and brake downe the walles off Jerusalem. As for the remnaunt of the people that were in the cite, and soch as were come to helpe them (what so euer was left of the come for te Nabuzaradan the chiefe captayne caried them to Babilon. But Nabuzaradan the chiefe captayne let the rascall people (and those that had nothinge) dwell still in the lōde off Juda, and gaue them vynyardes and cornfeldes at the sametyme. Nabuchodonosor al so the kynge of Babilon gaue Nabuzaradan the chiefe captayne a charge, cōcernyng y<sup>e</sup> remy, sayenge: take and cherish him, and make moch off him: se thou do him no harme, but intreate him after his owne desyre.

So Nabuzaradan y<sup>e</sup> chiefe captayne, Nabuzaradan the chiefe chamberlayne, Nergalsarez the treasurer and all the kynge of Babilons lordes, sent for Jeremy, and caused him be set out off the fore entrie off the prison, and committed him vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicam the sonne of Saphan: that he shulde carie him home, and so he dwelt amonge the people. Now whyle Jeremy laye yet bounde in the fore entrie off the prison, y<sup>e</sup> woide off the LORDE came vnto him sayenge: Go, and tell Abdemelech the Moian: Thus saith the LORDE off hoostes y<sup>e</sup> God off Israel: Beholde, the cruell and sharpe plage that I haue denyed for this cite, will I bringe vpon them, that thou shalt se it: but I wil deliuer the (sayeth the LORDE) and thou shalt not come in the hondes off thosemen, whom thou fearest. For doubtles I will saue the, so that thou shalt not perish with the swerde: but thy life shalbe saued, and that because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the LORDE.

The xl. Chap.

This is the maner, how the LORDE intreated Jeremy, when Nabuzaradan the chiefe captayne had let him go free from Rama, whither as he had led him bounde, amonge all the prisoners, that were caried from Jerusalem and Juda vnto Babilon. The chiefe captayne called for Jeremy, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE thy God spake mightely before off the mysery vpon this place: Now the LORDE hath sent it, and persourmed it, as he had promised: For ye haue synned agaynst the LORDE, and haue not bene obedient vnto his voyce, therfore commeth this plage vpon you. Beholde, I loose the bondes from thy hōdes this daye: yf thou wilt now go with me vnto Babilon, vpon the: For I will se to the, and prouyde for the: But yf thou wilt not go with me to Babilon, then remayne here. Beholde, all the londe is at thy will: loke where thou thinkest conueniēt and good for the to abyde, the dwell. If thou canst not be content to dwell alone, then remayne wth Godolias the sonne off Ahicam the sonne of Saphan, whom the kynge of Babilon hath made gouernoure out y<sup>e</sup> cities of Juda, and dwell wth him amonge the people, or remayne, where so euer it please thy. So the chiefe captayne gaue him his expenses wth a rewarde, and let him go. Then wente Jeremy vnto Godolias y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Ahicam to Masphat, and dwelt there wth him amonge gethe people that were left in the londe.

The xli. Chap.

aboute the kyng, & ten men that were sworne with him: vnto Godolias the sonne off Abicam to Masphat, and eate there together. And Ismael y sonne of Nathanas w<sup>t</sup> those ten men that were sworne to him, starte vp, and smote Godolias the sonne of Abicam the sonne of Saphan w<sup>t</sup> the swearde, & slewe hym, whom the kyng off Babilon had made gouernoure off the londe. Ismael also slewe all the Jewes that were with Godolias at Masphat, and all the Caldees that he founde there waitynge vpon him.

The nexte daye after that he had slayne Godolias (the matter was yet vntowne) there came certayne men from Sichem, fro Silo and Samaria, to the nombre off lxxx. which had shauen their beerdes, rent their clothes, & were all heuye, bringinge meat offringes and incense in their hondes, to offere it in the house off the LORDE. And Ismael the sonne of Nathanas went forth off Masphat wepinge, to meete them. Now whē he met them, he sayde: Go youre waye to Godolias the sonne of Abicam. And when they came in the myddest off the cite, Ismael the sonne off Nathanas (with them that were sworne vnto him) slewe them, euē at the myddest off the pyt. Amonge these lxxx. mē there were ten, y sayde vnto Ismael: Oh slaye vs not, for we haue yet a greate treasure in the felde, off wheate, barley, oyle and hony. So he spared thē, and slewe them not with their brethren. Now the pyt wherin Ismael dyd cast the deed bodies off the mē (whom he slewe because off Godolias) had kynged. <sup>2. Re. 15.</sup> As caused to be made, for feare off Baasā the kyng off Israel, and the same pit dyd Ismael fyll with slayne men. As for the remnant off thē people, the kynges daughters and all the people that were yet left at Masphat, vpon whom Nabusaradan the chiefe Captayne had made Godolias the sonne off Abicam gouernoure: Ismael the sonne off Nathanas caried them awaye presoners towarde the Ammonites. But when Johanna the sonne off Carea and all they which had bene captaynes ouer the kynges hooste with him, herde off all the wickednes that Ismael the sonne off Nathanas had done: they toke their companyons, and wente out for to fight with Ismael the sōne off Nathanas, and founde him by the waters off Rabim in Gabaon. Now when all the people, whom Ismael led captiue, sawe Johanna y sonne off Carea and all the other captaynes off the hooste, they were glad. So all the people that Ismael had caried awaye fro Mas-phat, were brought agayne.

And whē they returned, they came to Johanna the sonne off Carea. But Ismael the sonne off Nathanas fled from Johanna w<sup>t</sup> eight off his sworne companyons, & went to the Ammonites. Then Johanna the sonne off Carea and all the captaynes off the hooste that were w<sup>t</sup> him, toke the remnant off the people, whom Ismael the sonne off Nathanas had led awaye (When he had slayne Godolias the sonne off Abicā) whom they also had rescued from hym: fightinge men, women & children, and gelded men, whom they brought agayne from Gabaon: and wente from thence, and sat them downe at Beth Chimham, which lieth besyde Bethleē, that they might go in to Egipte for feare off the Caldees: off whom they were afrayed, because that Ismael the sonne off Nathanas had slayne Godolias Abicams sonne, whom the kyng off Babilon had made gouernoure in the londe.

The XLII. Chapter.

So all the rulers, and Johanna the sonne off Carea, Jesanias the sonne off Osias came with all the people fro the leest vnto the most, & sayde vnto Jeremij the prophet: O heare oure petitiō, that thou mayest praye for vs vnto the LORDE y God, and for the remnant, wherof there be very few left off many, as thou seist vs: that the LORDE thy God maye shewe vs a waye to go in, & tell vs, what we shulde do. Then Jeremij the prophete sayde vnto them: I haue herde you. Beholde, I will praye vnto your LORDE, as ye haue requyred me: and lette what answer the LORDE geueth you, I shall certifie you theroff, and kepe nothinge backe fro you. And they sayde vnto Jeremij: The LORDE off treuth & faithfulness be our recorde, that we wil do all, that the LORDE thy God commaundeth vs, whether it be good or euell. We will hearken vnto the voyce off oure LORDE God, to whom we sende thee: that we maye prospere, when we haue folowed the voyce off the LORDE oure God.

And after ten dayes came the worde off the LORDE vnto Jeremij. Then called he Johanna the sonne off Carea, and all the captaynes off the people that were with him: & all the people from the leest to the most, & sayde vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God off Israel vnto whom ye sent me, to saye forth youre prayers before him: If ye wil dwell in this londe, I shall burye you, & not breake you downe: I shall plante you, & not rote you out: for I am pacified, as ye nyng the trouble that I haue done to you. Feare not the kyng off Babilon, off whom ye stonde in awe: O be not afrayed off him, saith the LORDE: for I will be with you, to helpe you, and deliuer you from his honde. I will pardon you, I wil haue mercy vpon you, and bryng you agayne in to youre owne londe.

Nevertheless, yf ye purpose not to dwell in this londe, ner to folowe the voyce off the LORDE your God: but will saye thus: we will not dwell here, but go in to Egipte: where we shall nether se warre, heare the noyse off batell, ner suffre hunger, there will we dwell. Wherfore heare now the worde off the LORDE, o ye remnant off Juda. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes the God off Israel: If ye be whole purposed to go in to Egipte, ad to be there as strangers: the swearde that ye feare, shall ouertake you in Egipte: and the hunger wheroff ye be here afrayed, shall hange vpon you in to Egipte, and there ye shall dye. For all they, that off set purpose vnder take to go in to Egipte, thereto ease them selues off their mysery, shall perish with the swearde, with hunger and pestilence: not one off them shall remayne, there shal none escape the plague, that I wil bryng vpon them.

For thus saith the LORDE off hostes the God off Israel: like as my wraich and indignacion is come vpon the inhabitours off Ierusalem, so shall my displeasure go forth vpon you also, yf ye go in to Egipte: For there ye shal be reuyled, abhoired, brought to shame and confucion: and as for this place, ye shall neuer se it more. The LORDE forbiddeth you (o ye remnant off Juda) that ye shall not go in to Egipte. And forget not that I haue warned you earnestly this daye els shal ye begyle youre selues. For ye sent me vnto the LORDE your God, and sayde: O praye thou the LORDE oure God for vs: and lette what answer the LORDE oure God geueth the, that bringe vs agayne, ad we shall do thereafter. Now haue I shewed, and declared vnto you the voyce off the LORDE your God, for the which cause he hath sent me to you. If ye will not folowe it, be sure, yf ye shall perishe with the swearde, with hunger & pestilence: euē in the same place, where youre lust was to go, and dwell.

The XLIII. Chapter.

Now when Jeremij had ended all y wordes off y LORDE God vnto y people, (for their sakes to whom God had sent him) Asarias the sonne off Osias, & Johanna y sonne off Carea, with all the proude personnes, sayde vnto Jeremij: Thou lyeist, the LORDE oure God hath not sent y to speake vnto vs, that we shulde not go in to Egipte, and dwell there: But Baruch the sonne off Nerias prouoketh the agaynst vs, that he might bryng vs in to the captivitye off the Caldees: that they might slaye vs, and carie vs awaye presoners vnto Babilon.

So Johanna the sonne off Carea, and all the captaynes off the hooste, and all the people folowed not the commaundement off the LORDE: Namely, to dwell in the londe off Juda: But Johanna the sonne off Carea & all the captaynes off the hooste, caried awaye all the remnant in Juda, that were come together agayne from the Zeythen (amonge whom they had bene scattered) to dwell in the londe off Juda: Men, women, childre, the kynges daughters: all those that Nabusaradan the chiefe captayne had left with Godolias the sonne off Abicam. They caried awaye also the prophet Jeremij, Baruch the sonne off Nerias, and so came in to Egipte: for they were not obedient vnto the commaundement off God. Thus came they to Taphnis.

And in Taphnis the worde off the LORDE happened vnto Jeremij, sayenge: Take greate stones in thine hōde, and hyde them in the brick wall, vnder the dore off Pharaos house in Taphnis, that all the men off Juda maye se, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE off hostes the God off Israel: Beholde, I will sende and call for Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilon my seruant, and will set his seate vpon these stones that I haue hyd, and he shall spiede his tente ouer them.

And when he cometh, he shal smyte the lōde off Egipte with slaughter, with prisonment and with the swearde. He shall set fyre vpon the temples off the Egiptians goddes, and burne them vp, & take them selues presoners. Moreover he shall araye himselfe w<sup>t</sup> the lōde off Egipte, like as a shepherde putteth on his core, and shall departe his waye from thence in peace. The pilers also off the temple off the Sonne that is in Egipte, shal he breake in peces, and burne the temples off the Egiptians goddes.

The LXIII. Chapter.

This is the wordy was shewed to Jeremij concerninge all y Jewes, which dwelt in Egipte: at Magdal, at Taphnis.

The prophet Jeremy.

The xliii. Chap.

phus, at Memphis, & in the lande of patres. Thus saith the LORD of hostes the God of Israel: Ye haue sene all y<sup>e</sup> misery, y<sup>e</sup>
I haue brought vpon Jerusalem, and vpon all the cities of Juda: so that this daye they are desolate, and no man dwelling therein: & y<sup>e</sup> because of the greates blasphemies, which they committed, to prouoke me vnto anger:
In that they wente backe to do sacrifice ad worshipe vnto straunge goddes: whom nether they, ner ye, ner yo<sup>r</sup> fathers haue know-ne. How be it, I sent vnto them my seruantes all the prophetes: I rose vp early, I sent vnto them, and gaue them warninge: O do no such abhominable thinges, & thinges that I hate. But they wolde not folowe ner herke, to turne from their wickednes, and to do no more sacrifice vnto straunge goddes.

Wherefore my indignacion & wrath was kindled, and it brente vnto the cities of Juda, the feldes with the fire of Jerusalem: so that they were made waste and desolate, as it is come to passe this daye. Now therfore thus saith the LORD of hostes the God of Israel: How happeneth it, that ye do so greates euell vnto youre owne soules, thus to destroye the men and women, childre and babes of Juda: so that none of you is left, because ye prouoke me vnto wrath with the workes of youre owne hondes: wher ye offre vnto straunge goddes in the lande off Egip-te, where as ye be gone to dwell: That ye might utterly perishe, and that ye might be reuyled and shamfully intreated of all nations. Or haue ye now forgotten the wickednes off yo<sup>r</sup> forefathers, the wickednes off y<sup>e</sup> kynge of Juda and their wyues, y<sup>e</sup> wickednes that ye youre selues ad youre wyues haue done in the lande off Juda, in the cite and in the lande off Jerusalem?

Yet are ye not sorry this daye, ye feare not,
neither walke ye in my lawe and in my commaundementes, that I haue geue vnto you and youre forefathers.

Therefore thus saith the LORD of hostes the God off Israel: I am stedfastly ad-vysed and determed, to punyssh you, and to rote out all Juda. As for the remnant off Juda that purposly wente in to Egip-te, the re to ease them off their misery: I will take them, and they shall all be destroyed. In y<sup>e</sup> lande off Egip-
te shall they perishe, beyng consumed with the swerde and with hon-ger. For from y<sup>e</sup> leest vnto y<sup>e</sup> most, they shall perishe with the swerde and with hunger.
Moreover they shall be reuyled, abhored, shamed, and confounded. For I will viset them that dwell in Egip-te, as I haue visited Jerusalem: with the swerde, with hunger and with pestilence: So that none off the remnant off Juda, which are gone to dwell in Egip-

te, shall be left to come agayne in to y<sup>e</sup> lande off Juda: all though they thynke to come thither agayne, and to dwell there. For none shall come agayne, but such as are fled awaye.

Then all the men which knewe that their wyues had offred vnto straunge goddes, & a greates sorte off wyues that stode there, yee and all the people that dwelt there in Egip-te in the cite of Patures, answered Jeremy, & sayde: As for the wordes that thou hast spoken vnto vs in the name of the LORD, we will in no wyse heare them: but what so ever geeth out of oure owne mouth, that wil we do: We will do sacrifice, and offre oblacions vnto the Quene off heauen: like as we and yo<sup>r</sup> forefathers, oure kynge and oure heade haue done in the cities off Juda, and in the streets and feldes of Jerusalem. For then had we plenteousnesse off vytales, then we were in prosperite, and no myffortune came vpon vs.

But sens we left of, to offre, and to do sacifice vnto the Quene off heauen, we haue had scarcenes of all thinges, and perishe wth the swerde and hunger. Last of all, when we womē did sacrifice and offred vnto the Quene off heauen, did we make her cakes ad peure vnto her drinke offerings, to do her sauour without oure husbandes wylls?

Then sayde Jeremy vnto all the people, to the men, to the women and to all the fol-ke, which had geuen him that answer: Dyd not the LORD remembre the sacrifices that ye, yo<sup>r</sup> forefathers, youre kiges & rulers (w<sup>ch</sup> all the people) haue offred in the cities off Juda, in the streets and lande off Jerusalem?
and hath he not considered this in his myn-de? In so moch, that the LORD might no longer suffre the wickednes off youre inventions, and the abhominable thinges which ye dyd: Is not youre lande desolate & voyde, yee and abhored, so that no man dwelleth therein any more, as it is come to passe
this daye?

Dyd not all this happen vnto you, because ye made such sacrifice, and synned agaynst the LORD? Ye haue not folowed his voyce, to walke in his lawe, in his ordinaunces and statutes.

See this is the cause, that all myffor-tune happened vnto you, as it is come to passe
this daye.

The prophet Jeremy.

The xlii. Chap. & xliii.

Moreover, Jeremy spake vnto all the people and to all the women: Heare the worde off the LORD all Juda, ye that be in the lande off Egip-
te: Thus saith the LORD off hostes the God off Israel: Ye and you re wyues haue spoken with youre owne mouth, the thinge that ye haue fulfilled in dede.

Yet thus haue ye sayde: We will not fayle, but do the thinge that pleaseth vs: we wil do sacrifice and poure out drynt off ringes to the Quene off heauen. Purposly haue ye set vp youre owne good meanynges, & hastely haue ye fulfilled youre owne inten-te. And therfore, heare the worde of the LORD all Juda, ye that dwell in the lande off Egip-
te.

Beholde, I haue sworne by my greates name (saith the LORD) that my name shall not berehearsed thoro we ny mans mouth of Juda, in all the lande off Egip-te: to saye: The LORD God lyueth, for I wil watch, to pla-ge them, and not for their wealth. And all the men off Juda that be in the lande off Egip-te, shall perishe with the swerde and with ho-ger, vntill they be utterly destroyed.

Nevertheless, those that fled awaye for y<sup>e</sup>
swerde, shall come agayne in to the lande off Juda (but there shall be very fewe of them)
And all the remnant off Juda, that are gone in to Egip-
te, there to dwell, shall knowe, whose wordes shall be founde true: theirs or myne. Take this for a token, that I wil vi-set you in this place (saith the LORD) and that ye maye knowe, how that I (without doute) wil perfourne my purpose vpon you, (to punyssh you. Beholde (saith the LORD)
I wil deliuer Pharaos Ophraim kynge off Egip-
te in to the hondes of his enemies, y<sup>e</sup> se-te after his life: euen as I gaue Sedechias the kynge off Juda in to the hondes of Na-buchodonosor kige off Babilo, which sought after his life.

The XLV. Chapter.

These are the wordes off Jeremy the prophet spake vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias, after that he had written these Sermons into a booke at the mouth off Jeremy. In the fourth yeare off Joachim the sonne off Josias kynge off Juda.

Thus saith the LORD God off Israel vnto the O Baruch: In so moch as thou thoughtest thus (when thou wast writinge) Wo is me, the LORD hath geuen me payne for my trouble: I haue weered my self wth sighinge, and shall I synde no rest: Therfo-retell him (O Jeremy) y<sup>e</sup> the LORD saith thus: Beholde, The thige that I haue buyl-ded, wil I breake downe agayne, and rote out the thinge, that I haue planted, yee this whole lande. And sekest thou yet promocion? Loken for it, and desyre it not. For I will bringe a miserable plage vps all flesch, saith the LORD. But thy life will I geue the for a pray, where so ever thou goest.

The XLVI. Chapter.

These are the wordes off the LORD to the prophet Jeremy, which he spake vnto the Gentiles. These wor-des folowinge preached he to the Egipcians concernyng the hoost off Pharaos Necho kynge off Egip-te, when he was in Charca-mis besyde the water off Euphrates: what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Ba-bilon slewe him, In the fourth yeare off Jeachim the sonne off Josias kynge off Juda.

Ye make redy buckler and shyld, ye go forth to fight: See harnessse youre horses, & set youre selues vpon them: Ye set youre salletes fast on, ye bringe forth speares, ye scoure youre swerdes, & put on youre brest plates.

But alas, how happeneth it, that I se you so afrayed: why shriek ye backe: where fore are youre worthies slayne? Yet they runne so fast awaye, that none off them loketh behynde him. Fearfulnesse is fallen vpon euerychone off them, saith the LORD.
The lightest off fote shall not fle awaye,
and the worthies shall not escape.

Towarde the north by the water off Euphrates they shall stumbe and fall. But what is he this, that swelleth vp, as it were a floude, roaringe & raginge like the streames off water: It is Egip-te that ryseth vp
like the floude, and casteth out the waters with so greates noyse.

For they saye: We will go vp, and will couer the earth: we wil destroye y<sup>e</sup> cities, with them that dwell therein. Get you to house backe, roll forth y<sup>e</sup> Charettes, come forth ye worthies: ye Moians, ye Libeans with youre bucklers, ye Libeans with youre bowes: So shall this daye be vnto the LORD God off hostes, a daye off vengeance, that he maye avenge him off his enemies. The swerde shall denoure, it shall be satisfied and bated in their bloude: For the LORD God off hostes shall haue a slayne offeringe towarde the North, by the water off Euphrates. Go vp (O Galaad) & bringe triacle vnto the dought-er off Egip-
te.

But in payne shalt thou go to surgery, for thy wounde shall not be stopped. The heithen shall heare off thy shame, and the londe shall be full of thy confucion: for one stronge man shall stumbe vpon another, how then shulde they not fall both together?

C These are the wordes that the LORDE spake to the prophet Jeremij, concerninge y<sup>e</sup> hoost of Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babylon, which was to destroye the londe off Egypte: Preach out thorow the londe of Egypte, and cause it be proclaimed at Migdal, Memphis and Taphnis, and saye: Stonde still, make the redie, for the swearde shall consume the rounde aboute.

How happeneth it that thy mightie workes are fallen? why stodeth they not fast? Euen because the LORDE thrust them downe. The slaughter was greates, for one fell euer still vpon another. One cried vpon another: Vp, let vs go agayne to oure owne people, and to oure owne naturall countre, from the swearde of oure enemye.

C Crie euen there: O Pharaos kynge of Egypte, the tyme will bringe sedicion. As truly as I lyue (saith the kynge, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes) it shall come as y<sup>e</sup> mount of Thabor, and as Libanus yf it stoode in the see. O thou doughter of Egypte, make redy thy geer to flyt. For Memphis shall be voyde and desolate, so that noma shall dwell therein. The londe of Egypte is like a goodly fayre calfe, but one shall come out of the north to dryue her forwarde. Hir wagi-ed souldyers that be with her, are like fat calves.

They also shall fle away together, and not abyde: for the daye off their slaughter and the tyme of their visitacion shall come vpon them.

The crie off their enemies shall make a noyse, as the blast of a trompet. For they shall entre in with their hooste, and come wares, as it were hewers downe of wood. And they shall cut downe hir wood (saith the LORDE) with out eny discrecion. For they shall be mo in nobie then the greshoppers, so that no man shall be able to tell the. The doughter of Egypte shall be confounded, when she shall be deliuered in to the hondes off the people off the north.

E Moreover thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde I will vyset that restless people off Alexandria, Pharaos and Egypte, yee both their goddes and their kynges: euen Pharaos, and all them y<sup>e</sup> litten vnto him. Yee I will deliuer them in to the hondes off those, that sette after their lyues: Namely, in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babylon, and in to the power off his seruantes. And after all these thinges, it shall be inhabited as afore tyme, saith the LORDE.

But be not thou afrayed (o my seruant Jacob) feare not thou, o Israel. For lo, I wil helpe the from farre, and thy sede from the londe of thy captiuite. Jacob also shall come agayne, and be in rest: he shall be rich, and no man shall do him harme. Fearethou not (o Jacob my seruant) saith the LORDE, for I am with the: and will destroye all nacions, amonge whom I haue scatred the. Neuertheles I will not consume the, but chasten the and correcte the: yee and that with discrecion: nether wil I spare the, as one that were faultlesse.

The XLVII. Chapter.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremij the prophet agaynst the Phylistines, before that Pharaos smote the cite off Gaza. Thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, there shall waters arise out off the north: and shall growe to a greates floude, runnyng euer and couerynge the londe, the cities and them that dwell therein.

And the men shall crie, and all they that dwell in the londe, shall mourne at the noyse and stampynge off their stronge barbed horses, at the shakynge off their charrettes, and at the remblinge off the wheles. The fathers shall not loke to their children, so feable and weery shall their hondes be: at the same tyme, when he shall be there, to destroye the whole londe off the phylistines. He shall make waist both Tirus, Sidon and all other that are sworne vnto them.

For the LORDE will destroye all Palestina, and the other Iles, that be denyed fro the countre. Baldnesse is come vpon Gaza, Ascalon with hir other valleys shall kepe hir peace.

How longe wilt thou slaye, O thou swearde off the LORDE? Turne agayne in to y<sup>e</sup> sheeth, reste, and leaue off. But how can it cease, when the LORDE himself hath gyven it a charge agaynst Ascalon, and raysed it vp agaynst the cities off the see coast?

The XLVIII. Chapter.

waist, brought to confucion and taken. Yee y<sup>e</sup> stronge cite off Cariatharim shall be brought to shame, and afrayed: Moab shall nomore be had in honoure: Wicked counsell shall be taken vpon Hesbon. Come (shall they saye) let vs rote them out, that they maye be nomore amonge the nombre of the Gentiles, yet that they maye nomore be thought vpon: Thus the swearde shall persecute y<sup>e</sup>. A voyce shall crie from Horonaim: With greates waistinge and destruction, is Moab made desolate.

And this cite shall be herde in all hir cities. As the goinge vp vnto Luhith there shall arise a lamentacion: and dyene towarde Horonaim, there shall be herde a cruell and a deedly crie: Get you awaye, saue youre lyues & be like vnto the heeth in y<sup>e</sup> wilderness.

For, because thou hast trusted in thy stronge holdes and treasure, thou shalt be taken. Chamos with his prestes and prynces shall go awaye in to captiuite.

B The destroyer shall come vpon all cities, none shall escape. The valleys shall be destroyed, and the feldees shall be layed waist: like as the LORDE hath determed.

Make a token vnto Moab, that she get hir awaye speedely: for hir cities shall be made so desolate, that no man shall dwell therein. Cursed be he that doth the worke of the LORDE negligently, and cursed be he that kepeth backe his swearde from sheddynge off bloude.

Moab hath euer bene rich and carlesse from hir youth vp. She hath sytten and take hir ease with hir treasure. She was neuer yet put out off one vessell in to another (y<sup>e</sup> is) she neuer wente awaye in to captiuite, therefore hir caist remayneth, and hir sauoure is not yet chaunged.

But lo, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I shall sende hir trussers to trusse her vp, to prepare and season hir vessels: yee hir tankerdes rattell, and shate to & fro. And Moab shall be ashamed off Chamos, like as Israel was ashamed off Bethel, wherein she put hir trust.

C Wherefore do yethinke thus: we are mightie, and stronge men off warre: Moab shall be destroyed, and hir cities brente vp: hir chosen yongemen shall be slayne, saith the kynge, whose name is the LORDE off hoostes. The destruction off Moab cometh on a pace, and hir fall is at hande.

All hir neighbours shall mourne for her, and all they that knowe hir name, shall saye: O how happeneth it, that the stronge staff and the goodly rod is thus broken? And thou doughter Dibon, come downe from thy glory, and syt in pouerte. For he that destroyeth Moab, shall come vp to the also, and breake downe thy stronge holdes.

And thou that dwellest in Aroer, get the to y<sup>e</sup> strete, & loke aboute the: are they that are fled and escaped, and saye: what thynge is happened? O Moab is confounded and ouercome.

Mourne and crie, tell it out at Arnon, that Moab is destroyed. And misery shall come vpon the playne londe: Namely, vpon holon, and Jaza: vpon Mephat and Dibon, vpon Nebo and the house of Diplathaim, vpon Cariatharim and Bethgannul, vpon Bethniaon and Carioth, vpon Bosra and all the cities in the lode off Moab, whether they lye farre or neare.

D The home of Moab shall be smytte downe, & hir arme broken, saith the LORDE. Make hir drunken (for she magnified hir self aboue the LORDE) that men maye clappe the: it honde at hir vomyte, and that she also maye be laughed to scorne. O Israeli, shalt thou not laugh him to scorne, when he is taken amonge heenes? Yee because off thy wordes that thou hast spoken agaynst him, thou shalt be dryuen awaye. Yee Moabites shall leaue the cities, and dwell in rockes off stone, and become like dones, that make theire nestes in holes.

As for Moabs pryde, we haue herde off it, she is very hie mynded. I knowe hir stoutnesse, hir boostinge, hir arrogancy and the pryde off hir stomack, saith the LORDE. For hir furiosnes maye nether vpholde her wth strength, ner dede. Therefore shall there mourninge be made for Moab, and eueryma shall crie for Moabs sake: a lamentacion shall be made, to the men that stonde vpon the wall. So will I y<sup>e</sup> mourne for the also (o Jazer) and for the, O thou vynyarde off Sybma.

Thy wyne bratches shall come ouer y<sup>e</sup> see, and the branches off Jazer but vnto the see: the destroyer shall breake in to thy harvest and grape gatheringe. Myrrh and cheare shall be taken awaye from the tymbre felde, and from the whole londe off Moab.

There shall be no swete wyne in the presse, the treader shall haue no stomacke to crie, yee there shall be none to crie vnto him: which afore tyme were herde from Hesbon to Eleale and Joaz, which lifed vp their voyce from Zoar vnto Horonaim, that bullock off the yeare olde. The waters also off Memrim shall be dried vp.

The xlix. Chap.

Moreover I will make Moab cease (saith the LORDE) from the offerings and censings that she hath made unto her goddesses in her places. Wherefore my heart mourneth for Moab, like a crowne playenge an heuy songe: and for the mens sake off the bricke wall my heart mourneth also, even as a pyper, that pipeth a dolefull songe: for they shall be very fewe, and destroyed.

All heades shall be shaven, and all beards clipped off: all bondes bounde, and all loynes gyrded aboute with sack cloth. Upon all the house toppes and stretes off Moab, there shall be mourning: For I will breake Moab like an vnprofitable vessel saith the LORDE. How fearfull is she: How mourneth she: How doth Moab hang downe her heade, and is ashamed: Thus shall Moab be a laughing stocke, and had in derision off all them, that be rounde aboute her.

For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, the enemye shall come flyenge as an Aegle, and spiede his wynges upon Moab. They shall clymme ouer the walles, and wyne the stronge holdes. Then the mighty mens hertes in Moab, shall be like the herte off a woman travelinge with childe.

And Moab shall be made so desolate, that she shall no more be a people, because she hath set up her selfe agaynst the LORDE. Feare, pyt, and shere shall come vpon the (o Moab) saith the LORDE. Who so escapeth the feare, shall fall in the pyt: and who so getteth out off the pyt, shall be taken in the snare.

For I will bringe a yere off visitacion vpon Moab, saith the LORDE. They that are able to fle, shall stonde vnder the shadowe off Zefebon. For there shall go a fyre out off Zefebon, and a flame from Sion, and shall burne vpon that proude people off Moab, both before and behynde.

Wo be vnto the (o Moab) for thou people off Chamos shalt perish: Yee thy sonnes and daughters shall be led awaye captiue. Yet at the last will I bringe Moab out off captiuite agayne, saith the LORDE. Thus farre off the plage off Moab.

The XLIX. Chapter.

Concerninge the Ammonites, thus saith the LORDE: Hath Israel no children, or is he without an heyer? Why hath your kynge then taken Gad in: wherefore doth his people dwell in his cities? Beholde therefore, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that I will bringe a noyse off warre into Rabath off the Ammonites. Labell shall be desolate, and her cities burnt up: and the Israelites shall be lordes ouer those, that had the in possession afore, saith the LORDE. Zefebon shall mourne, for it shall be roted out off the grounde, saith the LORDE. The cities off Rabath shall crye out, and gyde them selues with sack cloth: they shall mourne, and runne aboute the walles for their kynge shall be led awaye prisoner yee his preestes and prynces with him.

Wherefore trustest thou in the water fumes, that flowe to and fro, o thou feare doughter: and thy nestest thou art so safe (by reason off thy treasure) that no man shall come to thee?

Beholde, I will bringe a feare vpon the, saith the LORDE God off hostes, from all those that be aboute thee: so that yee shall be scattered every man from another, and no man shall gather them together agayne, that be fled. But after that, I will bringe the Ammonites also out off captiuite agayne.

Vpon the Edomites hath the LORDE off hostes spoken on this maner: Is there no more wysdome in Theman? Is there no more good counsell amonge his people? Is their wysdome then turned clene to naught? Get you hence, turne youre backs, and pe downe into the depe, o ye cities syns off Dedan.

For I will bringe destruction vpon Esau, yee and the daye off his visitacion. If the grape gatherers came vpon the, shulde they not leaue some grapes? If the nigherobers came vpon the, shulde they not take somuch, as they thought were ynough?

But I will make Esau bare, and discover his secretes, so that he shall not be able to hyde them. His sede shall be waisted awaye, yee his brethren and his neighbours, and he himself shall not be left behinde.

Thou shalt leane thy fatherlesse children behinde the, and I will kepe them and thy widowes shall take their comfort in me. For thus hath the LORDE spoken: Beholde, they that men thought were vnmete to drinke of the cuppe, have dronken with the first: and thy nestest thou then to be free?

No, no thou shalt nether be quyte nor free, but thou must drynke also: For why, I haue sware by my self (saith the LORDE) that Dofra shall become a wyldernes, an open shame, a laughing stocke and cursyng: and her cities shall be a continuall deserte.

The prophet Jeremij.

The l. Chap. Fo. xlii.

For I am perfectly in soured of the LORDE, that he hath sent a message all ready vnto the Zethen. Gather you together, and go forth agaynst them: make you ready to the battayle, for lo: I will make the but small amonge the Zethen, and litle regarded amonge men.

Thy hie stomacke and thy pryde of thy herte haue disceined y, because thou wilt dwell in the holes of stony rockes, and haue the hie mountaynes in possession. Nevertheless though thy nest were as hie as the Aegles, yet wil I cast the downe, saith the LORDE. Moreover Idumea shall be a wilderness: who so goeth by it, shall be abashed, and won dre at all his miserable plagues. Like as Sedom, Gomor and the cities that laye there aboute, were turned vpon the downe (saith the LORDE) so shall no body dwell in Idumea, and no man shall haue his habitacion there. Beholde, like as the Lyon cometh vp from the pleasant medowes of Jordane vnto y grene pastures off Etha, so wil I dryue him, and make him runne agaynst her. But who is the yonge man that I will ordenetherto? Who is like, vnto me? What is he that will stryue with me? What shepherd maye stonde in my hondes?

Therefore heare the counsell of the LORDE, that he hath taken vpon Idumea: and his purpose, that he hath deuysed vpon the cities syns of Theman: The leest of the flocke shall reare them in peces, and loke what sayre theynge they haue, they shall make it waiste, and them selues also. At the noyse of their fall y earth shall quake, the crye of their voyce shall be heard vnto the reed see. Beholde, y enemye shall come and fle vpon hither, like as it were an Aegle, and spiede his wynges vpon Dofra. Then shall the hertes of the worthies in Edom be as the herte of a woman travelinge of childe. Vpon Damascus, Zemar and Arphad shall come confusion, for they shall heare euell tydings: they shall be tossed to and fro like the see that can not stonde still. Damascus shall be sore a frayde, and shall fle, tremblinge shall come vpon her. Sorowe and payne shall ouer take her as a woman travelinge of childe. But how shulde so worshipfull and glorious a cite be forsaken? Heare therefore: her yonge men shall fall in the stretes, and all her men of warre shall be taken awaye in that tyme, saith the LORDE of hostes. I will kindle a fyre in the walles of Damascus, which shall consume the palace of Benadad. As for Cedar and the kyngdome of Basa, whom Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babylon smote downe, the LORDE hath spoken thus vpon them: Arise, and get you vnto Cedar, and destroye the people of the easte. Their tentes and their flockes shall they take awaye, yee their hanginges and their vessel. Their Camels also shall they carie awaye with them. They shall come aboute them on euery syde with a fearfull crye.

Ye, get you soone awaye, crepe in to cannes, that ye maye dwell there: o ye inhabitants of Basa, saith the LORDE: for Nabuchodonosor y kyng of Babylon hath holden a counsell concernyng you, and concluded his deuysed agaynst you. Arise, and get you vpon agaynst yonder rich and carelesse people (saith the LORDE) which haue nether gates nor doore barres, and that dwell not together. Their Camels shall be stollen, and the dionnes of their catell dryuen awaye.

Moreover, these that be shaven wil I scatter towarde all the wyndes, and bringe them to destruction: yee and that thow their owne familiers, saith the LORDE. Basa also shall be a dwellinge for Dragons, and an euell lastyng wilderness: so that no body shall dwell there, and no man shall haue there his habitacion.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE spake to the prophet Jeremij concernyng Elam, in the begynnyng of the reigne of Sedechias kyng of Iuda. Thus saith the LORDE of hostes: Beholde, I wil breake the bowe of Elam, and take awaye their strength: and vpon Elam I wil bringe the foure wyndes from y foure quarters of heauen, and wil scatter them agaynst the same foure wyndes. And there shall be no people, but some of Elam shall fle vnto them.

For I wil cause Elam be a frayde of their enemies, and of them that seke their lyues: and wil bringe vpon them the indignacion of my wrath, saith the LORDE. And I wil persecute them with the swearde so longe til I haue brought them to naught. I wil set my stole in Elam, I wil destroye both the kyng and y prynces from thence, saith the LORDE. But in processe of tyme, I wil bringe Elam out off captiuite agayne, saith the LORDE.

The l. Chapter.

The wordes y the LORDE spake vnto the prophet Jeremij, concernyng Babylon, and the londe of the Caldees: Preach amonge the Gentiles, let your voyce be heard, make a toke: crye out, kepe no silence, but saye: Babylon shall be wonne, Bel shall be confounded, and Merodach shall be overcome.

The prophet Jeremyn.

Yet their goddes shal be brought to shame, and their ymages shal stonde in feare. For out of the north there shal come a people agaynst her, which shal make hir longe so waiste, that no body shal dwell therein: neither man nor beast, for they shall fle and departe from thence. In those dayes & at that tyme (saith the LORD) the childre of Israel shall come, they & the childre of Juda, wepinge & makinge haist, & shal sette the LORD their God. They shall are the way to Sion, they shall they to: & their faces, & come, and hange vpon the, in a couenaunt that neuer shal be broken.

My people hath bene a lost flocke, my shepherdes haue disceined them, & haue made them go astraye vpon the hilles. They haue gone from the mountayne to the litle hill, & forgotten their folde. All they y came vpon them, haue deuoured the: & their enemies sayde: We haue made no faute agaynst them, for they haue displeased the LORD, yee euen the LORD which is the bewtie of their righteousness, & y defended their fathers. Yet shal ye fle from Babilon, & departe out of y longe of the Caldees, and ye shall be as the rammes that go before the flocke. For lo, I will wake vp an hoost of people from y northen longe, & bryng them vpon Babilon: these shal laye sege to it, & wyne it: Their arrows shal not mysse, like as a conynge archer shureth not wronge. And the Caldees shal be spoyled, & all they that spoyl them, shal be satisfied, saith the LORD: because ye were so chearfull & glad, to treade downe myne heretage, & fulfilled youre pleasures, as the calves in the grasse: and triumphed ouer them like the bulles, when ye had gotten the victory. Your mothers shal be sore confounded, and they that bare you, shal come to shame. She shall be the leest set by amonge the nations, vyode, waiste, & dried vp. No man shal be able to dwell there, for the feare of y LORD, but she shal be whole desolate. All they that go by Babilon, shall stonde still, & be abashed, & shal wondre at all hir plagues.

Go forth in yo' araye agaynst Babilon rounde aboute, all y that can handle bowes: shute as her, spare no arrows, for she hath synned agaynst the LORD. Crie out: vpon her, vpon her, agaynst her rounde aboute: she shal yelde herselfe, her foundacions shal fall, & hir walles shal come downe, for it shal be the vengeance of the LORD. See vengeance shal be taken of her, & as she hath done, so shal she be dealt withall. They shal rote out the sower from Babilon, & him y handleth the sickle in harvest. For feare of the sword of the enemy, every man shall get him to his owne people, & every man shall fle to his owne longe. Israel is a scatred flocke, the Lyons haue dispersed them. First the kinge of the Assirians deuoured them, last of all this Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon hath brused all their bones.

Therefore thus saith the LORD of hostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will visite the kinge of Babilon & his kingdome, as I haue visited the kinge of the Assirians: and will bryng Israel agayne to his pleasant pasture, that he maye fede vpon Chamel & Basan, and be satisfied vpon the mount of Ephraim & Galaad. In those dayes and at the same tyme (saith the LORD) yf the offence of Israel be sought for, there shal none be founde: yf men enquire for the synne of Juda, there shal be none: for I will be mercifull vnto them, whom I suffre to remayne oner.

Go downe (o thou avenger) into the enemies longe, & visite them that dwell therein: downe with them, and smyte them vpon the backes, saith the LORD: do accordinge to all, that I haue commaunded the. There is gone aboute the longe a crie of a slaughter & greate murther, namely on this manner: How happeneth it, that the hammer of the whole worlde is thus broken & brused in sonder: How chaunceth it, that Babilon is become a wilderness amonge the heithen on this manner: I myself haue layed wayte for the, & thou art taken: vnawarres art thou trapped & snared: for why, thou hast provoked y LORD vnto anger: The LORD hath opened his house of ordinaunce, & brought forth the weapons of his wrath. For the thinge that is done in the longe of the Caldees, it is the LORD of hostes worke.

These thinges shal come vpon her at the last, they shal breake into hir prieny chabres, they shal leaue her as bare as stones, that be layed together vpon heapes. They shal so destroye her, y nothinge shal be left. They shal slaye all hir mightie souldyers, and put them to death. Wo be vnto the, for the daye & tyme of their visitacion is at hande. Me thinke I heare already a crie, of them that be fled & escaped out of the longe of Babilon, which shewe in Sion the vengeance of the LORD oure God, the vengeance of his temple: See a voyce of them, that crie agaynst Babilon: Call vp all the archers agaynst Babilon, pytch youre tentes rounde aboute her, that none escape. Recompence her, as she hath deserved: and accordinge as she hath done, so deale with her agayne: for she hath set vp her self agaynst the LORD, agaynst y holy one of Israel. Therefore shal hir yongemen fall downe in the stretes, & all hir men of warre shal be roted out in y daye, saith the LORD. Beholde, I speake vnto the (o thou proude) saith the LORD God of hostes: for thy daye shal come, enē the tyme of y visitacion. And the proude shal stonble & fall, & no man shal helpe him vp. I wil burne vp his cities with fyre, & it shal consume all that is rounde aboute him.

Thus saith the LORD of hostes: The childre of Israel & Juda suffre violence together. All they that haue them in captiuitie, kepe them fast, & wil not let them go: but their avenger & redemer is mightie, whose name is the LORD of hostes: he shal manteyne their cause, he shal make the longe shakke, & iudge them that dwell therein, one with another. The swearde shal come vpon the Caldees (saith the LORD) vpon them that dwell in Babilon, vpon their prynces, & vpon their wyse men: The swearde vpon their soych sayers, (as for those, they shal become foolles.) The swearde vpon their worthies, so that they shal stonde in feare: The swearde vpon their horsmen and charrettes, & vpon all the comon people that dwell vnder the: so that they all shal become like women: The swearde vpon their treasure, so that it shal be stolen awaye: The swearde vpon their waters, so that they shal be dried vp: For the longe worshippeth ymages, & delyteth in straunge wondrefull thinges. Therefore shal wilde bestes, Apes & Estriches dwell therein: for there shal neuer man dwell there, neither shal eny man haue his habitacion there for evermore. Like as God destroyed Sodom & Gomorre, with the cities that laye there aboute, saith the LORD: So shal no man dwell there also, neither shal eny mā haue there his habitacion. Beholde, there shal come a people from the north, with a greate bonde of men, & many kinges shal stonde vp from the endes of the earth: They beare bowes & buclers, cruell are they & vnmmercifull.

Their voyce roareth like the raginge see, they ryde vpon horses, & come weapened to fight agaynst the: O Babilon. As soone as the kinge of Babilon heareth tell of them, his bondes shal wawe feable: Sorrowe and heynnes shal come vpon him, as a woman trauelinge with childe. Beholde, like as the Lyon cometh vp from the pleasant medowes of Jordane vnto the grene pastures of Echan, so wil I dryue the forth, and make them runne agaynst her. But whom shal I chose out, & ordene to soch thinge: For who is like me, or who wil stryue with me: or what shepherde maye stonde agaynst me: Therefore heare the counsel that the LORD hath genen vpon Babilon, and the deuyc that he hath taken vpon the longe of the Caldees. The leest amonge the people shal teare them in peces, & loke what pleasaunt thinge they haue: they shal laye it waiste. The noyse at y wyynyng of Babilon shal shakke the earth, & the crie shal be herde amonge the Gētiles.

The li. Chapter.
Thus hath the LORD sayde: Beholde, I will rayse vp a perious wynde agaynst Babilon & hir citezens, y bearcenell will agaynst me. I wil sende also in to Babilō sanners, to sanne her out, & to destroye hir longe: for in the daye of hir trouble they shal be aboute her on euery syde. Moreover, the LORD hath sayde vnto the bowe men, & to them y clynne ouer the walles in best places: Ye shal not spare hir yongemen, kyll downe all hir hoost. Thus the slayne shal fall downe in the longe of the Caldees, and the wounded in the stretes. As for Israel & Juda, they shal not be forsake of their God, of the LORD of hostes, of the holy one of Israel: no, though they haue fylled all their longe full of synne. Fle awaye from Babilon, euery man saue his life. Let no man holde his tunge to hir wickednes, for the tyme of the LORDS vengeance is come, yee he shal rewarde her agayne. Babilon hath bene in the LORDS honde a golden cuppe, y maketh all londes droncken. Of hir wyne haue all people droncken, therefore are they out of their wittes. But sodenly is Babilon fallen, and destroyed. Mourne for her, bryng plasters for hir woundes, yf she maye peradventure be healed agayne. We wolde haue made Babilon whele (saye they) but she is not reconered. Therefore wil we let her alone, & go euery mā into his owne countre. For hir iudgmeēt is come in to heauen, & is gone vp to the cloudes. And therefore come on, we will shewe Sion the worke of the LORD oure God.

Make sharpe the arrows, and fyll the quyners: for the LORD shal rayse vp the spiete of the kynge of the Medes, which hath already a desyre to destroye Babilon. This shal be the vengeance of the LORDS, and the vengeance of his temple.

Set vp tokens vpon the walles of Babilon, make youre watch stronge, set yo' watch men in araye, yee holde prieny watches: & yet for all that shall the LORDE go forth with the deuycce, which he hath taken vpon them that dwell in Babilon.

O thou that dwellest by the greates waters, o thou that hast so greates treasure and riches, thyne ende is come: & the rekyng of thy wynnynge. The LORDE of hoostes hath sworne by himself, that he wil ouerwhelme the with men like greshoppers in nombre, which with a corage shall crie Alarum Alarum agaynst the. Yee euen the LORDE of hoostes, that with his power made the earth, with his wysdome prepayed y rounde wolde, & with his discrecion spred out the heauens. As soone as he letteth his voyce be herde, the waters in the ayre were scarce: he draweth vp the cloudes from the endes of the earth. he turneth y lightenynge to rayne, he bringeth the wyndes out of their secrete places. By the reason of wysdome, all men are become fooles. Confounded be all the casters of ymages: for y thinge that they make, is but disceate, & hath no breath. Vayne is it, & worthy to be laughed at: & in the tyme of visitacion it shal perish.

D Neuertheles, the porcion of Jacob is none such: but he that made all thinges, whose name is the LORDE of hoostes, he is the rede of his enheritaunce. Thou breakest my weapens of warre, & yet thorow the I haue scatred the nacions & kyngdomes: Thorow the haue I scatred horse & horseman, yee the charettes, & soch as sat vpon them: Thorow the I haue scatred man & woman, olde and yonge, bacheler & mayden. Thorow the I haue scatred the shepherde & his flocke, the husbandman & his catell, the prynces & the rulers. Therefore wil I rewarde the cite of Babilon & all hir citsyns the Caldees, with all the euell which they haue done vnto Sion: Yee that ye youre selues shall se it, saith the LORDE. Beholde, I come vpon the (thou noy some hill) saith the LORDE, thou that destroyest all londes. I wil stretch out my honde ouer the, & cast the downe from the stony rockes: & wil make the a brenthe hill, so that ne ther corner stones, ner pinnacles, ner foundation stones shal be taken eny more out of the but waist & desolate shalt thou lie foreuer more, saith the LORDE.

E Set vp a toke in the londe: blowe the trompettes amonge the heithen, prouoke the nacions agaynst her, call the kyngdomes, of Ararat, Memi & Ascanes agaynst her: nombre out Taphsar agaynst her, bringe as greates a sorte of horses agaynst her, as yf they were greshoppers. Prepare agaynst them y people of the Medes & their kynges, prynces & all their chese rulers, yee and the whole londe that is vnder them.

The londe also shal shake & be a frayd, when the deuycce of the LORDE shal come forth agaynst Babilon: to make the londe of Babilon so waist, that no man shal dwell eny moretherin. The Worthies of Babilon shal leaue the batell, & kepe them selues in stronge holdes, their strength hath fayled them, they shal be like women. Their dwelling places shal be brient vp, their barres shal be broken. One pursuauant shal mete another, yee one poste shal come by another, to bringe the kyng of Babilon tydinges: that his citie is taken in on euery syde, the foordes occupied, the fennes brient vp, and the souldyers sore afrayed.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: The doughter of Babilon hath bene in hir tyme like as a thresshyng floore, but shortly shal hir haruest come. Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon hath deuoured and destroyed me, he hath made me an emptie vessell. he swallowed me vp like a Dragon, and fylled his bely with my delicacies: he hath cast me out, he hath taken my staffe awaye, & the thinge that was left me hath he caried vnto Babilon, saith the doughter, that dwelleth in Sion: Yee & my bloude also, vnto the Caldees, saith Jerusalem. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I wil defende thy cause, & avenge the: I will drynke vp hir see, & drye vp hir water sprynges.

Babilon shal become an heape of stones, a dwelling place for dragons, a fearfulnes & wondring, because no man dwelleth there. They shall roare together like Lyons, & as the yong Lyons when they be angrie, so shal they bede them selues. In their heate I shal set drynke before the, & they shal be drynke for ioie: Then shal they slepe an euerlastinge slepe, & neuer wake, saith the LORDE. I shal carie them downe to be slayne like shepe, like wethers & gootes. O, how was Salsah wonne: O, how was the glory of y whole londe taken: how happeneth it, that Babilon is so wondred at amonge the heithen. The see is rysen ouer Babilon, & hath covered her with his greates waves. Hir cities are layed waist, the londe lieth vnburied, & voyde: it is a londe, where no man dwelleth, & where no man transeleth thorow. Moreover, I wil vyset Bel at Babilon: & the thinge that he hath swallowed vp, that same shal I plete out of his mouth. The Gentiles also shal runne nomore vnto him, yee and the walles of Babilon shal fall.

O my people, come out of Babilon, that eny man maye saue his life, from the fearful wrath of the LORDE. Be not saynte herde, & feare not at euery rumoure that shal be herde in the londe: for euery yeare bringeth new tydinges, yee straunge wickednes and lordshipe. And lo, the tyme cometh that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilon, and the whole londe shal be confounded, yee and hir slayne shal lie in the myddest of her. heauen and earth with all that is therein, shal reioyce ouer Babilon, when the destroyers shal come vpon her from the north, saith y LORDE.

Like as Babilon hath beaten downe and slayne many out of Israel, so shal there fall many, and be slayne in all hir kyngdome. Ye that haue escaped the swearde, haist you, sto denot still, remembre the LORDE as farre off: and thinke vpon Jerusalem, for we were ashamed to heare the blasphemies: oure faces were covered with shame, because the straunge aleantes came in to the Sanctuary of the LORDE. Wherefore beholde saith the LORDE: the tyme cometh, that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilon, and thorow the whole lode they shal mourne and fall. Though Babilon clymmed vp in to heauē, and kepte her power an hie: yet shal I sende her destroyers saith the LORDE.

A piteous crie shal be herde from Babilon, and a greates misery from the londe of the Caldees: when the LORDE destroyeth them, and when he dryueth out the hie stomack & proude boostinge, where with they haue bene as furious, as the waves of greates water floudes, and made greates crakes with their wordes. For the destroyers shal come vpon her (euen vpon Babilon) which shal take hir worthies, and brake their bowes: for God is disposed to avenge him self vpon them, & sufficiently to recompence the. Yee (saith the LORDE) I will make their prynces, their wyse men, their chese rulers & all their worthies, drynke: so that they shal slepe an euerlastinge slepe, and neuer wake: Thus saith the kyng, whose name is y LORDE of hoostes.

Moreover, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: The thicke wall of Babilon shal be broken, and hir proude gates shal be brient vp. And the thinge that the Gentiles and the people haue wrought with greates tranayle and labour, shal come to naught, and be consumed in the fyre.

The liij. Chap. Fo. xlvij.

This is the charge that Jeremij gaue vnto Sarias the sonne of Nerias, the sonne of Naasia, when he wente towarde Babilon with Sedechias the kyng of Iuda, in the fourth yeare of his reigne. Now this Sarias was a peaceable pryncce. Jeremij wrote in a booke, all the misery that shulde come vpon Babilon, yee and all these sermons that be written agaynst Babilon, and gaue Sarias this charge: When thou comest vnto Babilon, se that thou rede all these wordes, and saye: O LORDE, thou art determed to rote out this place, so that nether people ner catell shal dwell there eny more, but to lie waist for ener: and when thou hast redde out the booke, bynde a stone to it, and cast it in the myddest of Euphrates, and saye: Euen thus shal Babilon syncke, & be thrust downe with the burthen of trouble, that I will bringe vpon her: so that she shal neuer come vp agayne. Thus farre are y preachinges of Jeremij.

The liij. Chap.

Sedechias was xxi. yeare olde, when he was made kyng, & he reigned xj. yeare in Jerusalem. His mothers name was Hamithal, Jeremies doughter of Lobna. he lyued wickedly before the LORDE euen as Joachim dyd. Wherefore the LORDE was angrie at Jerusalem & Iuda, so longe till he had cast the out of his presence. And Sedechias fel from the kyng of Babilon. But in y ij. yeare of his raigne, In the tenth Moneth, the tenth daye of the Moneth it happened, that Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon with all his hooste came before Jerusalem, & beseged it, & made them bulworkes rounde aboute it. And this beseginge of the cite endured vnto the xj. yeare of kyng Sedechias.

And in the fourth Moneth, the ix. daye of the Moneth, there was so greates hunger in the cite: that there were no more vitayles for the people of the londe. So all the souldyers brake awaye, and fled out of the cite by night, thorow the waye of the porte betwene the two walles by the kynges garden. Now y Caldees had compassed the cite rounde aboute, yet wente these men their waye towarde the wilbernesse.

And so the Caldees folowed vpon them, and toke Sedechias the kyng in the felde of Jericho, when his hoost was runne from him. So they caried the kyng awaye prisoner to Reblatha, vnto the kyng of Babilon in the londe of Hemath, where he gaue iudgment vpon him.

The kyng of Babilon also caused Sedechias sonnes be slayne before his face, yee z put all the prynces of Iuda to death at Reblatha. Moreover he put out the eyes of Sedechias, caused him be bounde with cheynes, to be caried vnto Babilon: z let him lie in prison, till he dyed.

Now y<sup>e</sup> tenth daye of the fyfth Moneth in the xij<sup>e</sup> yere of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, Nabusaradan the chiefe captaeyne and the kynge of Babilons seruantes came vnto Jerusalem, z brent vp the house of the LORDE. He brent vp also the kynges palace, all the houses z all the gorgeous buyldinges in Ierusalem. And the whole hoost of the Caldees y<sup>e</sup> were with the chiefe captaeyne, brake downe all the walles of Jerusalem rounde aboute.

C As for the poore people z soch folke as yet was left in the cite, which also were fallen to the kynge of Babilon, yee z what people as yet remayned: Nabusaradan the chiefe captaeyne caried them awaye prisoners. But y<sup>e</sup> poore people of the countre, dyd Nabusaradan the chiefe captaeyne leaue in the londe, to occupie the vynyardes z felde. The Caldees also brake the brasen pilers, that were in the house of the LORDE, yee the seate and the brasen lauer that was in the house of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE: z caried all the metall of them vnto Babilon. They toke awaye also the Cauldrons, shouels, flesh hokes, sprinklers, spones z all the brasen vessell that was occupide in the seruyce: with the basens, colepannes, sprinklers, portes, candilstickes, spones, and cuppes: wherof some were of golde, and some of syluer.

The chiefe captaeyne toke also the two pilers, the lauer, the xij<sup>e</sup> brasen bullockes y<sup>e</sup> stode vnder y<sup>e</sup> seate, which kynge Salomon made in the house of the LORDE: z all the vessell conteyned so moch metall, that it might not be weyed. For euery piler was xviij<sup>e</sup> cubites hie, z the rope that went aboute it, was xij<sup>e</sup> cubites, z foure fingers thicke and rounde: Now vpon the rope were brasen knoppes, z euery knoppe was fyne cubites hie: z vpon the knoppes were whopes, z pomgranates rounde aboute of clene brasen.

After this maner were both the pilers fashioned with the pomgranates, wherof there were an hundred and xviij<sup>e</sup>, which han ged vpon the whoopes rounde aboute. The chiefe captaeyne also toke Sarias y<sup>e</sup> hie priest z Sophonias that was chiefe next him, and the thre keepers of the treasury. He toke also of the cite a chamberlayne which was a captaeyne of the souldyers, z seven men that were the kynges seruantes, which were founde in the cite: z Sepher a captaeyne that was to muster the men of warre: with xij<sup>e</sup> men of the countre that were taken in the cite. These Nabusaradan the chiefe captaeyne caried them to the kynge of Babilon vnto Reblatha: and the kynge of Babilon caused them to be put to death at Reblatha in the londe of Remath. And thus Iuda was lede awaye captyue, out of his owne londe.

In the senenth yere of his reigne, he caried awaye of y<sup>e</sup> Jewes, thre thousande and twenty. In the xviij<sup>e</sup> yere Nabuchodonosor caried awaye from Jerusalem eight hundredth z xxxij<sup>e</sup> personnes. In the xxij<sup>e</sup> yere of Nabuchodonosor Nabusaradan the chiefe captaeyne, toke awaye seven hundredth Jewes prisoners. The whole summe of all the prisoners, is foure thousande and hundredth.

In the xxxvij<sup>e</sup> yere after that Joachim the kynge of Iuda was caried awaye in the xxv<sup>e</sup> daye of the xij<sup>e</sup> Moneth, Evilmerodach kynge of Babilon (the same yere y<sup>e</sup> he reigned) gaue Joachim the kynge of Iuda his pardon, and let him out of prison, and set him on his throne: And set his throne about the trones of the other kynges that were with him in Babilon. He chaunged also the docthes of his prison, yee and he att with him all his lifelonge. And he had a cōtinuall luyngge geuen him of the kynge of Babilon, euery daye a certayne thinge allowed him, all the dayes of his life, vntill he dyed.

The ende of the prophet Jeremey.

The Lamentacions of Jeremey.

And it came to passe after Ierusalem was brought into captiuyte, and Ierusalem destroyed: that Jeremey the prophet sat wepinge, mournynge and makinge his mone in Jerusalem: so that wth an heuy herte he sighed, z sobbed, sayenge:

The first Chapter.

Las, how sitteth the cite so desolate, y<sup>e</sup> some tyme was full of people: how is she become like a wedowe, which was the lady of all nacions: how is she brought vnder tribute, that ruled all londes? She wepeth sore in the night, so that y<sup>e</sup> teares runne downe hir chekes: for amonge all hir louers, there is none, that geueth her any comforte: yee hir nexte frendes abhorre her, z are become hir enemies.

Iuda is taken prisoner, because she was defyled: z for seruyngge so many straunge goddes, she dwelleth now amonge the heithen. She fyndeth no rest, all they that persecuted her, toke her, and so she dwelleth amonge hir enemies.

The stretes of Sion mourne, because no man cometh more to the solompne feastes: All hir gates are desolate, hir priestes make lamentacion, hir maydens are carefull, and she herself is in greate heuynesse.

Hir enemies are fallen vpon hir heade, z haue put her to shame: because the LORDE hath chastened her for hir greate wickednes: hir children are ledde awaye captyue before their enemye.

All the beutie of the doughter of Sion is awaye, hir prynces are become like withers, that fynde no pasture. They are drye awaye before their enemye, so that they haue no more power.

Now doth Jerusalem remembre the tyme of hir misery z disobedience, yee the ioye z pleasure y<sup>e</sup> she hath had in tymes past: seynge hir people is brought downe thorow the power of their enemye, z there is no man for to helpe her: hir enemies stode lookinge at her and laugh hir Sabbath dayes to scorne.

Ierusalem synned euery more z more, therefore is she come in decaye. All they that had her in honoure, despise her: for they haue sene hir fylchynesse. Yee she sigheth, and is a shamed of herselfe.

Hir slaytes are defyled, she remembred not what wolde folowe: therefore is hir fall so greate, and there is no mā to comforte her. LORDE, cōsidre my trouble, for myne enemye hath the vpper honde.

The enemye hath put his honde to all the precious thinges that she had, yee euen before hir eyes came the heithen in and out of the Sanctuary: whom thou (nevertheles) hast forbydden to come within thy congregation.

All hir people seke their bried with heuynesse, z loke what precious thinge euery man hath, that geueth he for meate, to saue his life. Considre (LORDE) and se, how vyle I am become.

O ye all that go fore by, beholde and se, yf there be any sorowe like vnto myne, wherewith the LORDE hath troubled me, in the daye of his fearefull wrath.

From aboue hath he sent downe a fyre, in to my bones and chastened me: he hath layed a net for my fete, and throwne me wyde open: he hath made me desolate, so that I must euer be mournynge.

The y<sup>e</sup> of my transgression is come at the last, with his honde hath he taken it vp, and put it aboute my neck. My strength is gone: the LORDE hath deliuered me into those hondes, wherout I can not quyte myselfe.

The LORDE hath destroyed all the mightie men, that were in me. He hath proclaimed a feast, to slaughter all my best me. The LORDE hath troden downe the doughter of Iuda, like as it were in a wyne presse.

Therefore do I wepe, and myne eyes gush out of water: for the cōforter that shulde quyen me, is farre frome. My children are dryen awaye, for why? the enemye hath gotten the ouer honde.

Sion casteth out hir hōdes, and there is no man to comforte her. The LORDE hath layed the enemies rounde aboute Iacob, and Jerusalem is as it were a menstruous womā, in the myddest of them.

The LORDE is righteous, for I haue prouoked his countenance vnto anger. O take hede all ye people, and considre my heuynesse: My maydens and my yonge men are led awaye in to captiuyte.

I called for my louers (but they begyled me): for my prestes and councelers, but they perished: euen while they sought for meate, to saue their lyues.

Considre (LORDE) how I am troubled, my wombe is disquieted, my herte turneth aboute in me, and I am full of heuynesse. The swearde harteth me without, and within I am like vnto death.

W They heare my mournynge, but there is none that wil comforte me. All myne enemies haue herde of my trouble, and are glad therof, because thou hast done it. But thou shalt brynge forth the tyme, when they also shal be like vnto me.

N From the shall come all their aduersite: thou shalt plucke them awaye, euē as thou hast plucked me, because of all my wickednesse. For my sorow is very greate, and my herte is heuy.

The II. Chapter.

W Las, how hath y<sup>e</sup> LORDE darkened the doughter of Sion so sore in his wrath? As for the honoure of Israel, he hath casten it downe from heauen: how happeneth it, that he remembered not his owne forefole, when he was angrie?

ren. 4 b
Par. 19. a
Isa. 58. a

The LORDE hath cast downe all the glory of Jacob without eny fauoure: All the stronge places of the doughter Iuda hath he broken in his wrath, & thowne them downe to the grounde: hir kyngdome & hir prynces hath he suspended.

In the wrath of his indignacion he hath broken all the home of Israel: he hath with drawe his right honde from the enemye: yee a flame of fyre is kyndled in Jacob, & hath consumed vp all rounde aboute.

He hath bent his bowe like an enemye, he hath fastened his right honde as an aduersary: and enery thinge that was pleasaunt to se, he hath smytten it downe. He hath poured out his wrath like a fyre, in to the tabernacle of the doughter Sion.

The LORDE is become, like as it were an enemye, he hath cast downe Israel & all his places: yee all his stronge holdes hath he destroyed, and fylled the doughter of Iuda wth much sorow and heynesse.

His tabernacle (which was like a garden of pleasure) hath he destroyed: hir hie solepne feastes hath he put downe. The LORDE hath brought it so to passe, that the hie solempne feastes and Sabbathes in Sion, are ciene forgotte. In his heuy displeasure hath he made the kyng & prestes to be despised.

Isa. 7. b

The LORDE hath forsaken his owne altar, & is wroth with his owne Sanctuary, & hath geuen the walles of their towres in to the hondes of the enemye. Their enemies made a noyse in the house of the LORDE, as it had bene in a solempne feast daye.

The LORDE thought to breake downe the walles of the doughter Sion, he spied out his lyne, & drewe not in his honde, till he had destroyed them. Therefore mourne the turrets and the broken walles together.

His portes are casten downe to the grounde, hir barres are broken & smytten in sonden: hir kyng & prynces are caried awaye to the Gētiles. They haue nether lawe ner prophetes, ner yet eny vision from the LORDE.

The Senatours of the doughter Sion sit vpon the grounde in sylence, they haue strewed ashes vpon their heades, and gydded them selues with sackcloth. The maydens of Ierusalem hange downe their heades to the grounde.

Myne eyes begynne to sayle methowm wepinge, my body is disquieted, my leueris poured vpon the earth, for the greate hurt of my people, seyng the children and babes dyd sweare in the stretes of the cite.

Euen when they spake to their mothers: where is meate and drynke? for whyle they so sayde, they fell downe in the stretes of the cite, like as they had bene wounded, and so medyed in their mothers bosome.

What shal I saye of the (O thou doughter Ierusalem) to whom shal I like the? To whom shal I compare the (O thou doughter Sion) to comforte the withall? Thy herte is like a mayne see, who maye heale the?

Thy prophetes haue looked out vayne & shalish thinges for the, they haue not shewed the of thy wickednesse, to kepe the from captiuite: but haue ouerladen the, and thowm falsedescattered the abroad.

All they that go by the, clappe their hondes at the: hissinge and wagginge their heades vpon the doughter Ierusalem, and saye: is this the cite that men call so sayre, wherein the whole londe reioyseth?

All thine enemies gape vpon the, whisperinge and bytinge their teth, sayenge: let us denecure, for the tyme that we looked for, is come: we haue founde and sene it.

The LORDE hath fulfilled the thinge that he was purposed to do: and performed that he had denyed longe agoo: he hath destroyed, and not spared. He hath caused the enemye aduersary to tryumphe ouer the, and led vp the home of thine enemye.

Let thine herte crie vnto the LORDE, O thou cite of the doughter Sion: let thy turrets rüne downe like a ryuer daye & night: let not the aple of thine eye leaue of.

Stonde vp, and make thy prayer in the first watch of the night, poure out thine heart like water before the LORDE: lift vp thine hondes, for the lyues of thy yonge children: that dye of hunger in the stretes.

Behold (O LORDE) & conside, why hast thou gathered me vp so clene? Shal the women then eate their owne frute, euen children of a spanne longe? Shal the prestes and prophetes be slayne thus in the Sanctuary of the LORDE?

Yonge & olde lye behinde the stretes vpon the grounde, my maydens & yonge men are slayne with the swearde: whom thou in the daye of thy wrothfull indignacion hast put to death: yee euen thou hast put them to death, & not spared them.

My neighbours that are rounde aboute me, hast thou called, as it were to a feast daye: so that in the daye of the LORDES wrath none escaped, nether was eny left behinde. Those that I had brought vp & nourished, hath myne enemy destroyed.

The III. Chapter.

Anthe mā, that (thow the rodd of his wrath) haue experiece of misery. He drewe me forth, and led me: yee in to darcknesse, but not in to light.

Agaynst me only he turneth his honde, & layerth it euer vpon me.

My flesh & my skynne hath he made olde, and my bones hath he brussed.

He hath buylded rounde aboute me, & closed me in with gall and trauayle.

He hath set me in darcknesse, as they that be deed for euer.

He hath so hedged me in, that I can not get out, & hath layed heuy lynces vpon me.

Though I crie & call piteously, yet heareth he not my prayer.

He hath stopped vp my wayes with four squared stones, & made my pathes croked.

He layeth waite for me like a Bere, and as a lyon in a hole.

He hath marred my wayes, and broke me in peces, he hath layed me waist altogethe.

He hath bent his bowe, and made me as it were a marck to shute at.

The arrowes of his quyuer hath he shot, euen in to my reynes.

Iam laughed to scoine of all my people, they make songes vpon me all y<sup>e</sup> daye longe.

He hath fylled me with bytternesse, & geuen me wth wound to drynke.

He hath smytten my teth in peces, & rolled me in the dust.

He hath put my soule out of rest, I forget all good thinges.

I thought in my self: I am vndone, there is no hope forme in the LORDE.

Remembre yet my misery and my trouble, the wound and the gall.

Yeethou shalt remembre them, for my soule melteth awaye in me.

Whyle I considre these thinges in my hert, I get a hope agayne.

Namely, that the mercies of the LORDE are not clene gone, & that his lounge kyndnesse ceaseth not.

His faithfulness is greate, and renueth it self as the moynge.

The LORDE is my porcion (saith my soule) therefore wil I hope in him.

O how good is the LORDE vnto the, that put their trust in him, and to the soule that seeketh after him?

O how good is it with stilnesse to waite and carie, for the health of the LORDE?

O how good is it for a man, to take the yock vpon him from his youth vp?

He sitteth alone, he holdeth him still, and dwelleth quietly by him self.

He layeth his face vpon the earth, yf (per case) there happen to be eny hope.

He offreth his cheke to the smyter, he will be content with reproues.

For the LORDE wil not forsake for euer.

But though he do cast of, yet (acordinge to y<sup>e</sup> multitude of his mercies) he receaueth to grace agayne.

For he doth not plage, & cast out the children of men from his herte.

To treade all the presoners of the earth vnder his fete.

To iudge the iudgment of man before the most highest.

To condemne a man in his cause: The LORDE hath no pleasure in soch thinges.

What is he then that saith: there shulde somthinge be done without the LORDES commandement?

Out of the mouth of the most highest goeth not euell and good.

Wherfore them murmureth the luyng man: let him murmoure at his owne synne.

Let vs loke well vpon oure owne waies, & remembre oure selues, and turne agayne to y<sup>e</sup> LORDE.

Let vs lift vp oure hertes with oure hondes vnto the LORDE, that is in heauen.

We haue bene dyssemblers & haue offended, wilt thou therefore not be intreated?

Thou hast couered vs in thy wrath, & persecuted vs, thou hast slayne vs without eny fauoure.

Thou hast hyd thy self in a cloude, that oure prayer shulde not go thorow.

Thou hast made vs outcastes, and to be despysed amonge the heithen.

The Lamentacions of Jeremy. The iiii. Chap.

y All oure enemies gape vpon vs.
 y Feare and snare is come vpon vs, yee despise and destruccion.
 y Whole ryuers of water gush out of my ne eyes, for the greate hurte of my people.
 y Myne eyes runne, and can not ceasse, for there is no rest.
 y O LORDE, when wilt thou loke downe fro heauen, and conside?
 y Myne eye breaketh my herte, because of all the daughters of my cite.
 y Myne enemies hunted me out sharply like a byrde, yee and that with out a cause.
 y They haue put downe my life into a pitte, and layed a stone vpon me.
 y They poured water vpon my heade, then thought I now am I done.
 y I called vpon thy name (O LORDE) out of the depe pitte.
 y Thou hast herde my voyce, z hast not turned away thine eares fro my sighinge and crienge.
 y Thou hast enclined y self vnto me, when I called vpon the, z hast sayde: feare not.
 y Thou (O LORDE) hast mayntened the cause of my soule, and hast redeemed my life.
 y O LORDE, thou hast sene my blasphemers, take thou my cause vpon the.
 y Thou hast well consided how they go aboute to do me harme, z that all their counsels are agaynst me.
 y Thou hast herde their despytefull wordes (O LORDE) yee and all their ymaginations agaynst me.
 y The lippes of myne enemies, z their denyces that they take agaynst me, all the daye longe.
 y Thou seist also their sittinge downe and their rysinge vp, they make their songes of nothinge but of me.
 y Rewarde them (O LORDE) accordinge to the workes of their bondes.
 y Genethem y thinge, that their owne herte is afrayed of: euen thy curse.
 y Persecute them, (O LORDE) with thy indignacion, z rote them out from vnder the heauen. y The III. Chapter.
 y How is the golde become so dymme? How is the goodly coloure of it so sore chaunged? and the stones of y Sanctuary thus scatred in the corner of euery strete?
 y The children of Sion that were all waye in honoure, z clothed with y most precious golde: how are they now become like the erthen vessels which be made with the potters honde?

The Lamyes gene their yonge ones suck, w bare brestes: but the daughter of my people is cruel, and dwelleth in the wyldernes like the Estriches.
 The tonges of the suckinge children, do not y rose of their mouthes for very thurst. The yonge children are bled, but there is no man, that geneth it them.
 They that were wonte to saye delicately, perishe in the stretes: they that afore were brought vp in purple, make now moche of donge.
 The synne of the daughter of my people is become greater, then y wickednesse of Sodom, that sodely was destroyed, and not taken with bondes.
 Hir abshayners (or Lazarees) were better then y snowe or mylke: their coloure was fresh read as the Corall, their beutie like the Saphyre.
 But now their faces are very black: I knowe, that thou shuldest not knowe them in the stretes. Their skynne cleueth to their bones, Ie is wythered, and become like a drye stock.
 They that be slayne with the swearde, are happier, then such as dye of hunger, and perishe awaye famishinge for the futes of the felde.
 The womē (which of nature are pitifull) haue sodden their owne children with their bondes: that they might be their meate, in y miserable destruccion of the daughter of my people.
 The LORDE hath perfourmed his heuy wrath: he hath poured out the furiousnes of his displeasure. He hath kindled a fyre in Sion, which hath consumed the foundations therof.
 Neither the kinges of the earth, ner all y inhabitours of the worlde, wolde haue believed, that the enemye z aduersary shulde haue come in at the gates of the cite of Ierusalem.
 Which neuertheles is come to passe for y synnes of hir prophetes, and for the wickednes of hir prestes, that haue shed innocentes bloude within her.
 So that these blinde men were stumblinge in the stretes, and stayned them selues w bloude, which els wolde touche no bloody cloth.
 But they cried vnto euery mā: fle the waye, awaye, get you hēce, touch it not. (sayde they) ye must be brent, ye must dwell amonge the Gentiles, z byde no longer here.
 The countenance of the LORDE hath banyshe them, z shal neuer loke more vpon them: for they them selues nether regarded the prestes, nor pitied their elders.

 Wherfore yet oure eyes sayle vs, whyle we loke for vayne helpe: seynge we be euer waitynge vpon a people, that can do vs no good.
 They laye so sharpe waite for vs, that we cannot go safe vpon the stretes: for oure ende is come, oure dayes are fulfilled, oure ende is here.
 Oure persecuters are swifter then the Eagles of the ayre: they folowed vpon vs ouer the mountaynes, and layed wait for vs in y wilderness.
 The very breth of oure mouth: euen the anoynted LORDE himself shalbe take in our resynnes, of whom we saye: Vnder his shadowe we shalbe preserued amonge the heithen.
 And thou (O daughter Edom) that dweldest in the londe of hus, be glad and reioyce: for the cuppe shal come vnto the also, which whē thou suppest of, thou shalt be droncke.
 Thy synne is wel punished (O thou daughter Sion) he shall not suffice the to be caried awaye any more. But thy wickednesse (O daughter Edom) shall be vyset, and forthy synnes sake, he shal lede the into captiuyte.
 The V. Chapter.
 C All to remembraunce (O LORDE) what we haue suffred, cōsidre and se oure cōfucion. Oure inheritaunce is turned to the straungers, z oure houses to the aleaunties. We are become carefull and fatherlesse, and oure mothers are as the wydowes. We are sayne to drynke oure owne water for moneye, and oure owne wod must we bye with moneye. Oure neckes are vnder persecucion, we are weery, and haue no rest.
 Afore tyme we yelded oure selues to the Egipcians, and now to the Assirians, only that we might haue bried ynough. Oure fathers (which now are gone) haue synned, z we must beare their wickednesse. Seruauntes haue the rule of vs, and no man deliuereth vs out of their hōdes. We must get o lyryng with the parrell of oure lynes, because of the dronch of the wilderness.
 Oure skynne is as it had bene brent in an oven, for very sore hunger. The wyues are rashed in Sion, z the maydens in the cities of Iuda. The prynces are hanged vp with the honde of the enemies, they haue not spared the olde sage men, they haue taken yonge mens lynes from them, and the boyes are hanged vp vpon trees. The elders syt no more vnder the gates, and the yonge men vñe no more playenge of Musick. The ioye of oure herte is gone, oure mery quere is turned in to mourninge. The garlande of oure heade is fallen: alas, that euer we synned so sore.

 Therfore oure hert is full of heynesse, z oure eyes dymme: because of y hill of Sion that is destroyed, In so moch, that the fores runne vpon it. But thou (O LORDE) that remainest for euermore, and thy seate wolde with out ende: Wherfore wilt thou still forget vs, and forsake vs so longe? O LORDE: Turne thou vs vnto the, z so shal we be turned. Remme o daies as in olde tyme, for thou hast now banished vs longe ynough, and bene sore displeased at vs.

- Chap. V. He conforteth them, and sheweth the vocation of the heithen.
- Chap. VI. A copie of the epistole, that Jeremy sent to the Jewes, which were led awaye prisoners vnto Babilon.

These are the wordes of the booke, that Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia, the sonne of Sedechias, the sonne of Sedei, the sonne of Helchia, wrote at Babilon in the fift yere the seuenth daye of the moneth: what tyme as the Caldees wanne Ierusalem and brent it.

The prophet Baruch.

The first Chapter.

And Baruch dyd rede the wordes of this boke, that Jehonias the sonne of Joachim kynge of Juda might heare: and in the presence of all the people, that were come to heare the boke: yee and be fore all the noble kinges sommes, before y lordes of the counsell and elders: and before the whole people, from y lowest vnto the hiest: before all them that dwelt at Babilon, by y water of Sodi. Which when they herde it, wepte, fasted, and prayed before the LORDE.

B They made a colleccion also of money, accordinge to euery mans power, and sent it to Jerusalem vnto Joachim the sonne of Helchia the sonne of Salon prest, with y other prestes: and to all the people which were w him at Jerusalem, what tyme as they had gotten the ornamentes of the temple of y LORDE (that were taken awaye out of the temple) that they might bringe them agayne in to the londe of Juda, the x. daye of the moneth Siban: namely, syluer vessel, (which Sedechias the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda had made.) After that Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon had take Jehonias, with all his prynces, lordes, and all the people, and led them captyue from Jerusalem vnto Babilon.

C And they sayde: Beholde, we haue sent you money, to bye you burnt offerynges and incense withall: make you unleuened bred, z offre for synne vpon the aulter of the LORDE oure God. And praye for the prosperite of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and of Balthasar his sonne: y their dayes maye be vpon earth, as the dayes of heauen: that God also maye geue vs strength, and lighten oure eyes: that we maye lyue vnder the defence of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and vnder the proteccion of Balthasar his sonne: that we maye longe do them seruyce, and synde fauoure in their sight. Praye for vs also vnto the LORDE oure God, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and vnto this daye is not his wrath turned yet awaye from vs. And se that ye rede this boke (which we haue sent vnto you to be rehearsed in the temple of the LORDE) vpon the hye dayes, and at tyme conuenient.

D Thus shal ye saye: The LORDE o God is righteous, but we are worthy of cofusion z shame: like as it is come to passe this daye, vnto all Juda, z to euery one y dwelleth at Jerusalem: to o kinges, prynces, prestes, p-phetes z to oure fathers. We haue synned before the LORDE oure God, we haue not put oure trust in him, ner geuen him credence: we haue not obeyed him, we haue not hearkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in the commaundementes that he gaue vs. Sens the daye that he brought oure forefathers out of the londe of Egypte vnto this present daye, we haue bene euer a my beleuyng and an vnfaithful people vnto y LORDE oure God: destroyenge oure selues utterly, and shrenkinge backe, that we shulde not heare his voyce.

Wherfore there are come vpon vs greates plagues z dyuerse curses, like as the LORDE deuysed by Moyses his seruante: which brought oure forefathers out of the londe of Egypte, to geue vs a lode, that floweth with mycke and hony, like as it is to se this daye. Nevertheless, we haue not hearkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, accordinge to all the wordes of the prophetes, whom he sent vnto vs and to oure rulers: but euery man followed his owne mynde and wicked ymaginacion: to offre vnto straunge goddes, and to be enel in the sight of the LORDE oure God.

The II. Chapter.

In the which cause the LORDE oure God hath perfourmed his deuyce, wherof he certified vs, and oure hea des that ruled in Jerusalem: yee and oure kyn ges, oure prynces, with all Israel and Juda. And soch plagues hath y lord brought vpon vs, as neuer came to passe vnder the heau: like as it is fulfilled in Jerusalem, accordinge as it is written in the lawe of Moyses: that a man shulde eate y flesh of his owne sonne, z the flesh of his owne doughter. Moreover, he hath deluyered them in to the bondes of all the kinges, y are rounde aboute vs (to be confounded and desolate) z scatred the abrode in all londes z nacions. Thus are we broughte beth z not aboue, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE o God, z not bene obedient vnto his voyce. Therefore y LORDE o God is righteous, z we with o fathers (as reason is) are brought to ope shame, as it is to se this daye. And as for these plagues y are come vpon vs already, y LORDE had denyced the for yet wolde we not praye vnto y LORDE oure God, y we might euery ma turne fro his vngodly wayes. So y LORDE hath caused soch plagues to come vpon vs, for he is righteous in all his workes, which he hath commaunded vs: which we also haue not done, ner hearkened vnto his voyce, for to walke in y comma dementes of y LORDE, y he had geue vnto vs

The prophet Baruch.

And now o LORDE God of Israel, thou hast brought thy people out of the londe of Egypte with a mightie honde, with tokens and wodres, with thy greates power ad outstretched arme: and hast gotten thy selff a name, as it is come to passe this daye: O LORDE oure God, we haue synned, we haue done wickedly, we haue behaued oure selues vngodly in all thy righteousnes. Turne thy wrath fro vs (we beseeke the) for we are but a few left amonge the heithen, where thou hast scatred vs. Heare o prayers (o LORDE) z oure peticions, bringe vs out of captiuitie, for thine owne sake: get vs fauoure in the sight of the, which haue led vs awaye: y all lodes maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE oure God, and that Israel and his generacion calleth vpon thy name.

O LORDE, loke downe fro thy holy house vpon vs: enclyne thine eare, z heare vs. For the deed, y be gone downe to their graues, z whose soules are out of their bedies, ascribe vnto the LORDE nether prayse ner rightuous makinge: but the soule that is vexed for the multitude of hir synnes, which goeth on heuely and weakly, whose eyes begynne to fayle: yee soch a soule as crybeth prayse and rightuousnesse vnto the LORDE. O LORDE, we poure out oure prayers before the, and requyre mercy in thy sight, O LORDE oure God: not for eny godlynesse off oure forefathers, but because thou hast sent out thy wrath z indignacion vpon vs: accordinge as thou dydest threaten vs, by thy seruantes the prophetes, sayenge:

Thus sayeth the LORDE: Bowe downe youre sholders and neckes, and serue the kynge of Babilon, so shal ye remayne still in the londe, that I gaue vnto youre fathers. Off ye will not do this, ner heare the voyce of y LORDE youre God, to serue the kynge of Babilon: I shall destroye you in the cities of Juda, within Jerusalem and without. I will also take from you the voyce off mynith and the voyce of ioye, the voyce of the brydegrome and the voyce of the bryde, ad there shal no man dwell more in the londe. But they wolde not hearken vnto thy voyce, to do the kynge of Babilon seruyce: and therfore hast thou perfourmed the wordes, that thou spakest by thy seruantes the prophetes: namely, that the bones of oure kynges and the bones of oure fathers shulde be traslated out of their place.

And lo, now are they layde out in the heau: of y Sonne, z in the celde of y night, ad ded in greates mysery: w hunger, w swear-

de, w pestilence z are clene cast forth. As for the temple wher in thy name was called vpon thou hast layde it waiste, as it is to se this daye: z y for the wickednes of the house of Israel z the house of Juda. O LORDE o God, thou hast intreated vs after all thy goodnes z accordinge to all y greates louinge mercy of thine, like as thou spakest by thy seruante Moyses, in the daye when thou didest comaunde him, to wyte thy lawe before the children of Israel, sayenge: If ye will not hearken vnto my voyce, the shal this greates multitude be turned in to a very smal people, for I wil scatre the abrode. Not withstandinge I am sure, that this folke will not heare me: for it is an hardnecked people. But in y lode of their captiuitie, they shal remembre them selues, z lerne to knowe, y I am the LORDE their God: when I geue the an herte to vnderstande, z eares to heare. Then shal they prayse me in the lode of their captiuitie, z thynke vpon my name. Then shal they turne them fro their harde backes, z from their vngodlynes: Then shal they remembre the thynges, y happened vnto their forefathers, which synned agaynst me. So will I bringe them agayne in to the londe, which I promised w an oath vnto their fathers: Abraham, Isaac z Jacob: z they shal be lordes of it, yee I wil increace the, and not minyssh the. And I wil make another couenaunt with them: soch one as shal endure for euer: namely, y I will be their God, and they shal be my people: and I wil no more dryue my people the children off Israel, out of the londe y I haue geue the.

The III. Chapter.

And now o LORDE allmightie, thou God of Israel: o soule y is in trouble, z o spiete y is vexed, crieth vnto the: heare vs (o LORDE) z haue pite vpon vs, for thou art a mercifull God: be gracious vnto vs, for we haue synned before y. Then endurest for euer, shulde we the utterly perishe: O LORDE almighty, thou God of Israel: heare now y prayer of y deed Israelites z of the ir childre, which haue synned before y, z not hearkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE their God, for the which cause these plagues hange now vpon vs. O LORDE, remembre not y wickednes of o forefathers, but thinke vpon thy power z name now at this tyme: for thou art y LORDE o God, z y (o LORDE) wil we prayse. For thou hast put y feare i o hartes, to y intet y we shulde call vpon y name, z prayse y in oure captiuitie: and y we might turne from the wickednesse of oure forefathers, y synned before the.

The prophet Baruch.

The iij. Chap.

B Beholde, we are yet this daye in oure captiuite, where as thou hast scatred vs, to be an abhominacion, curse, and synne: like as it hath happened vnto oure fathers also, because of all their wickednesse and departynge from the.

Psal. 78. a

O Israel, heare the commaundementes of life: pondre them well with thine eares, that thou mayest lerne wysdome. But how happeneth it Israel, that thou art in thine enemies lode: thou art waken olde in a straunge countre, and defyled with the deed. Why art thou become like them, that go downe to their graues? Ene because thou hast forsaken the well of wysdome. For yf thou haddest walked in the waye of God, truly thou shuldest haue remayned still safe i thine owne londe.

Psal. 118. b

O lerne then where discrecion is, where vertu is, where vnderstodunge is: that thou mayest knowe also fro whence cometh longe life, a necessary lyuynge, the light of the eyes, and quyetnes. Who ener founde out hir place: or who came ener in to hir treasures?

C Where are y prynces of the heithen become, and soch as ruled the bestes vpon the earth? They that had their pastyme with the foules of the ayre, they that hooded vp syluer and golde (wherin men trust so moch) and made no ende of their gatheringe: What is worth of them, that coyned siluer, and were so carefull, and coude not brynge their workes to passe: They be roted out, and gone downe to hell, and other men are come vp in their steade: Yongemen haue sene light, and dwelt vpon earth: but the waye of reformation haue they not knowne, ner vnderfonde the pathes therof: nether haue their children receaued it, yee right farre is it fro the. It hath not bene herde of in the lode of Canaan, nether hath it bene sene at Theman.

D The Agarenes sought after wysdome, but that which is earthly, like as the marchauntes of the lode do. They of Theman are conynge also, and they labour for wysdome, and vnderstodunge: but y waye of true wysdome they knowe not, nether do they thynke vpon the pathes therof. O Israel, how greate is the house of God: and how large is the place of his possession? Greate is he, and hath none ende: hye and vnmeasurable. What is become of those famousse gyauntes, that were so greate of bodyes, and so worthy men of warre: Those had not the LORDE chosen, nether haue they founde the waye of reformation, therfore were they destroyed: and for so moch as they had no wisdome, they perished because of their foolishnesse.

Who hath gone vp in to heauen, to take wysdome there, and brought her downe fro the cloudes? Who hath gone ouer the see to fynde her, and hath chosen her aboue golde, and brought her hither? No man knoweth the wayes of wysdome, nether is there eny y can seke out hir pathes. But he that woteth all thynges, knoweth her, and he hath founde her out with his foreknowledge. This same is he which prepared the earth at the begynnyng, and fylled it with all maner of foules and bestes. When he sendeth out the light, it goeth: and when he calleth it agayne, it obeyeth him with feare. The starres kepe their watch, and geue their light, yee and y gladly. When he calleth them, they saye: here we be. And so with chearfulness they shewe light vnto him, y made the. This is oure God, ad there shall none other be compared vnto him: It is he, y hath founde out all wysdome, and hath geuen her vnto Jacob his seruaunt, and to Israel his beloued. Afterwarde dyd he shewe himself vpon earth, and dwelt among men.

The III. Chapter.

This is the boke off the commaundementes of God, and the lawe y endeth for ever. All they y kepe it, shall come to life: but soch as forsake it, shall come to death. Turne the o Jacob, and take holde of it: walke by this waye, thou shalt see his brightness and shyne. Geue not thine honour to another, and thy worshippe to a straunge people. O Israel, how happie are we, seige that God hath shewed vs soch thynges as are pleasur vnto him: He of good cheare, hath geuen people of God, o thou awnciet Israel. Now are ye solde amonge the heithen, howbeit not for youre vtter destruction: but because ye prouoked God the LORDE to wrath and displeasure, therfore were ye deliuered vnto youre enemies: For ye displeased the euerlastinge God that made you, offeringe vnto deuils and not God. We haue forgott him that brought you vp, ad youre nurses haue ye greued, o Jerusalem.

When she sawe that the wrath off God was commynge vpon you: she sayde: Shall o ye that dwell aboute Sion, for God hath brought me into greates heynnesse: ad why? I se the captiuite of my people, of my sonnes and daughters, which the euerlastinge God will brynge vpon them. With ioye dyd I nourish them, but now must I leaue them with wepyng and sorow.

The prophet Baruch.

Chap. v. Fo. liij.

Let no man reioyce ouer me wyddowe ad forsaken: which for the synnes off my children, am desolate of euery man. For why, they departed from the lawe of God: they wolde not knowe his rightuousnes, ner walke in the waye off his commaundementes: and as for the pathes off the treuth and godlynesse, they had no lust to go in them.

O ye dwellers aboute Sion: come, and let vs call to remembraunce the captiuite, that the euerlastinge God hath brought vpon my sonnes and my daughters. He hath brought a people vpon them from farre, an vncharitable people, and of a straunge langage: which nether regarde the olde, ner pyte the yonge.

These haue caried awaye the deare beloued of my wyddowes, leauynge me alone, both desolate and childlesse. But alas, what can I helpe you? Now he y hath brought these plagis vpon you, deliuer you also fro the bondes of youre enemies.

Go youre waye (O my children) go youre waye: for I am desolate and forsaken. I haue put off the clothinge of peace, and put vpon me the sackcloth off prayer, and for my ryme I will call vpon the most hyest. Be off good cheare, o my children: crie vnto the LORDE, and he shall deliuer you from the power of the prynces, youre enemies.

For verely, I haue euer a good hope off youre prosperous health: yee a very gladnesse is come vpon me from the holy one, because of the mercy that ye shall haue off oure euerlastinge Sanioure.

With mournynge and wepyng dyd I leaue you go from me, but with ioye and perpetuall gladnesse, shall the LORDE brynge you agayne vnto me. Like as the neyghbours of Sion sawe youre captiuite from God, Ene so shall they also se shortly youre health in God, which shall come on you with greates honoure and euerlastinge worshippe.

O my children, suffre pacietyly the wrath that shall come vpon you, For the enemy hath persecuted the, but shortly thou shalt se his destruction, and shalt treade vpon his necke. My derlynges haue gone rough hard wayes, for they are led awaye as a flocke that is scatred abroad with the enemies.

But be of good cōforte (o my children) and crie vnto the LORDE: For he that led you awaye, hath you yet in remembraunce: and like as ye haue bene mynded to swarne from yo God, so shall ye now endenoure youre selues, and to turne agayne, and to seke him.

For he that hath brought these plagis vpon you, shall brynge you euerlastinge ioye agayne with youre health. Take a good herte vnto the, o Jerusalem: for he which gaue y that name, exorteth the so to do.

The wicked doers that now put the to trouble, shall perishe: and soch as haue reioysed at thy fall, shall be punysshed. The cities whom thy children serue, and that haue caried awaye thy sonnes, shall be correcte. For like as they be now glad of y decaye, so shall they mourne in their owne destruction. The ioye off their multitude shall be taken awaye, ad their cheare shall be turned to sorowe. For a fyre shall fall vpon them from the euerlastinge God, longe to endure: and it shall be inhabited of deuils for a greates season.

The V. Chapter.

Jerusalem, loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde the ioye, that cometh vnto the from God. For lo, thy sonnes, (whom thou hast forsake, and that were scatred abroad) come gathered together from the east and west, reioysinge in the worde of the holy one, vnto the honoure off God.

Put off thine mournynge clothes (o Jerusalem) and thy sorow, and decke the with the worshippe and honoure, that cometh vnto the from God, with euerlastinge glory. God shall put the cloake off rightuousnesse vpon the, and set a crowne off euerlastinge worshippe vpon thine heade: for vpon the will God declare his brightness, that is vnder the heauen: Yee an euerlastinge name shall be geuen the of God, with peace of rightuousnesse, and y honoure of Gods feare.

Arise o Jerusalem, stande vpon hye: loke aboute the towarde the east, and beholde thy children gathered from the east vnto the west: which reioyce in the holy worde, haunynge God in remembraunce. They departed from the on fote, and were led awaye of their enemies: but now shall the LORDE bringe them caried with honoure, as children off y kyngdome. For God is purposed to brynge downe all stoute mountaynes, yee and all hye rockes, to fylle the valleys, and so to make them euen with the ground: y Israel maye be diligit to lyue vnto y honoure of God. The woddes, and all pleasur trees shall ouershadowe Israel, at the commaundement of God. For hyther shall God brynge Israel with ioyfull myrth, and in the light of his magesty: with the mercy and rightuousnesse, that cometh of himself.

A copie off the epistle, that Jeremy the prophet did sende vnto the Jewes, which were led awaye prisoners by the kynge of Babilō. Wherin he certifieth them of the thinge, that was comaunded him of God.

The VI. Chapter.

BEcause of the synnes that ye have done agaynst God, ye shall be led awaye captyue vnto Babilon, even off Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon.
So when ye be come in to Babilon, ye shall remayne there many yeaeres, and for a longe season: namely, viij. generacions: & after that wil I bringe you awaye peaceably from the ce. Now shal ye se in Babilō, goddes of golde, of syluer, of wodd and of stone: borne vpon mens shulders, to cast out a fearfulness before the heithen. But loke that ye do not as the other: be not ye afraied, and let not the feare of them overcome you.

Therefore, when ye se the multitude of people worshippinge them behinde & before, sa-ye ye in youre hertes: O LORDE, it is thou, that oughtest only to be worshipped: My-ne angel also shal be with you, and I myself wil care for youre soules. As for the rymbre of those goddes, y carpenter hath polished them: yee gylted be they, & layed over with syluer, yet are they but vayne thinges, & can not speake. Like as a wench y loneth peramours is trynly deckt, euen so are these made & hanged w golde. Crownes of golde ve-rely haue their goddes vpon their heades:
so the prestes them selues take the golde and syluer from them, & put it to their owne vses:
yee they geue of the same vnto harlottes, ad trymme their whores withall: Agayne, they take it from the whores, and decke their god-des therewith. Yet can not these goddes deli-uer them selues from rust and mothes. Whe they haue conered them with clothynge off purple, they wyper their faces for the dust of the temple, wherof their is moch amōge thē.
One hath a sceptre in his honde, as though he were iudge of the countre: yet can he not slaye soch as offende him. Another hath a swearde or an axe in his honde, for all that, is he nether able to defende him selfe from batayll, ner fro murderers.

By this ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: therefore se y ye nether wor-shipe them, ner feare them. For like as a vessel y a man vseth, is nothinge worth when it is broken, euen so is it with their goddes.
When they be set vp in the temple, their eyes be full of dust, thorow the fete of those that come in. And like as y doores are shut in de aboute vpo him, y hath offende the king: Was it were a deed body kepte bede the graue: Euen so the prestes kepte the doores with barres and lockes, lest their god-des be spoyled with robbers. They set vpo dels before thē (yee verely and y many) wher of they can not se one, but euen as blockes stonde they in the temple. It is sayde, y the serpentes and womes, which come off the earth, gnawe out their hertes, eatinge them & their clothes also, and yet they fele it not.

Their faces are blacke, thorow the smote y is in the temple. The oules, swalowes & by-des sle vpon them, yee and the catteres run ouer their heades.

By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therfore feare them not. The golde that they haue, is to make them beutifull: for all that, excepte some body dight off their rust, they wil geue no shyne: and when they were cast into a fourme, they felt it not. They are bought for money, and haue no breth off life within them. They must be borne vpon mens shulders, as those that haue no feet:
wher by they declare vnto men, that they be nothyng worth. Confounded be they then, that worshipe them. For yf they fall fro grounde, they can not ryse vpagayne off the selues: Yet though one helpe them vp and set them right, yet are they not able to stan-de alone: but must haue proppes set vnder them, like deed men. As for the thinge that offred vnto them, their prestes sell it, ad ab-se it: yee the prestes wyues take therof, but vnto the sicke and poore they geue nothinge of it, the women with childe & the mestrulaye hondes of their offerynges. By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therfore be not ye afraide of them. From wher ce cōmeth it thē, that they be called goddes?
The women syt before the goddes of syluer, golde and wodge, and the prestes syt in their temples, hauynge open clothes, whose bedes and beerdes are shauen, and haue noth-ge vpon their heades: roaringe and cryynge vpon their goddes, as men do at the fete, when one is deed.

The prestes also take awaye the garmentes of the ymages, and decke their wyues & da-dren withall. Whether it be good or euill y enyman do vnto them, they are not able to recompence it: they can nether set vp a kyng, ner put him downe. In like maner they maye nether geue riches, ner rewardes euill.
Though a man make a vowe vnto them, ad kepe it not, they wil not requyre it. They can not restore a blynde mā to his sight, ner helpe any mā at his nede. They cā shewe no mercy to the wyddowe, ner do good to y father-les. Their goddes of wodd, stone, golde & syluer, are but euen as other stones, y be hewe of y mountayne. They y worshipe thē, shal be confounded. How shulde they then be taken for goddes? yee how darre men call thē god-des? And though the caldees worshiped thē not, hearinge y they were but domme & coude not speake: Yet they them selues offre vito Del, and wolde sayne haue him to speake:

as who saye, they coude fele, y maye not moue. But when these mē come to vnderstōd inge, they shal forsake them, for their goddes haue no felinge. A greatesoite off women gyded with coardes, syt in the stretes, & burne olyue beries. Now yf one off them be conveyed awaye, & lye w any soch as come by:
she casteth hir neghburesse in the teth, because she was not so worthely reputed, ner hir coode broken. What so euer is done for them, it is but in vayne ad lost: How maye it thē be thought or sayde, y they are goddes?
Carpenters & goldsmithes make thē, nether be they eny other thinge, but euen what the woke men wil make of them. Yee the gold-smithes them selues that make thē, are of no longe cōtynuaunce: How shulde then the thiges that are made of them, be goddes? Vayne therfore are the thinges (yee very shame is it) that they leaue behinde thē for their posterite. For as soone as there cōmeth eny warre or plage vpon thē, then the prestes ymagyn, wher they maye hyde thē selues with thē.
How can men thynke then, that they be god-des, which nether maye defende them selues from warre, ner deliuer thē fro mysfortune?
For seynge they be but of wodd, of stone, of syluer and of golde: all people & kynges shal knowe hereafter, that they be but vayne thin-ges: yee it shal be openly declared, that they be no goddes: but euen the very workes off mēs hōdes, & that God hath nothinge to do with thē. They can set no kyng in the londe ner geue rayne vnto men. They can geue no sentence of a matter, nether defende the lon-de fro wronge: For they are not able to do so moch as a crowe, that flyeth betwixt heuen and earth.

Wher there happeneth a fyre into the house of those goddes of wodge, of syluer and of golde, the prestes wil escape & saue thē selues, but the goddes burne as the balkes therin.
They can not withstōde eny kyng or batell:
how maye it then be thought or graunted, that they be goddes? Moreover, these god-des of wodge, of stone, of golde & syluer maye nether defende thē selues from theues ner robbers: yee y very wicked are stronger thē they. These strype them out off their ap-parell, that they be clothed withall, these rate their golde & syluer fro thē, and so get thē awaye: yet cā they not helpe thē selues. Therfore it is moch better for a man, to be a kyng so to shewe his power: or els a profitable vessel in a house, wherin he y oweth it, might haue pleasure: yee or to be a doze in a house, to kepe soch thinges safe as be therin: thē to be soch a vayne god. The Sōne, the Mōne & all the starres when they geue their shyne & light, are obedient, & do men good: When the lightenyng glisteth, all is cleare: The wynde bloweth in euery countre, & whē God cōmaundeth the cloude to go rounde aboute the whole worlde, they do as they are byd-den: when the fyre is sent downe fro aboue & cōmaunded, it burneth vpon hilles ad woddess:

But as for those goddes, they are not like one off these thynges, nether in beuty ner strēth. Wherfore mē shulde not thynke, ner saye that they be goddes, seynge they cā nether geue sentence in iudgment, ner do men good. For so moch now as ye are sure, that they be no goddes, then feare them not: For they can nether speake euell ner good of kynges. They cā shewe no tokens in heauē for y heithen, nether shyne as the Sōne, ner geue light as the Mōne: yee y vnreasonable beas-tes are better then they: for they can get thē vnder the rose, and do them selues good: So can ye be certified by no maner off meanes, that they be goddes: therfore feare thē not.
For like as a frayboggarde in a garden off Cucumbers kepeth nothinge, euen so are the ir goddes of wodge, of syluer & golde: and like as a whyte thorne in an orcharde, that euery byrde sytteth vpon: yee like as a deed body that is cast in the darcke, Euen so is it with those goddes of wodge, syluer and golde.
By the purple and scarlet which they haue vpon thē, ad soone saydeth awaye, ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: yee they them selues shal be cōsumed at the last, which shal be a greates cōfucion of the londe. Blessed is the godly man, y hath no ymages & worship-perth none, for he shal be farre from re-
prose.

The prophet Ezechiel.

The first Chapter.

I chaſſed, in the xxx. yeare the fifth daye off the fourth Moneth, that I was amonge the prisoners by the ryuer off Cobar: where the heauens opened, and I ſawe a viſion of God. Now the fifth daye off the Moneth made out the fyfth yeare off kynge Iochims captiuyte. At the ſame tyme came y worde off the LORDE vnto Ezechiel the ſonne off Buzi preſt, in the londe off the Caldees by the water of Cobar, where the honde off the LORDE came vpo him. And I loked: and beholde, a ſtomy wynde came out off the north with a greate cloude full of fyre, which wth his gliſtre lightened all rounde aboute.

And in y myddest off the fyre it was all cleare, and as it were the liſneſſe of foure beaſtes, which were faſhioned like a man: ſaynge, that euery one had foure faces and foure wynges.

Their legges were ſtraight, but their fetters were like bullockes fetters, and they gliſtered, as it had bene ſayre ſcoured metall. Under their wynges vpon all the foure corners, they had mens hondes. Their faces and the ir wynges were towarde the foure corners: yet were the wynges ſo, that one euer touched another. When they wente, they turned them not aboute: but ech one wente ſtraight forwarde.

Vpon the rightſide off theſe foure, their faces were like the face off a man and the face off a Lyon: But vpon the leftſide, they had the face off an oxe and the face off an Aegle.

Their faces alſo and their wynges were ſpied out aboue: ſo that two wynges off one touched euer two wynges off another, and with the other two they couered their bodie. Euery one when it wente, it wente ſtraight forwarde.

Where as the ſpirc led them, thither they wente, and turned not aboute in their goynge.

The firſt. Chap. Fo. lv.

The faſhion and countenance of the beaſtes was like hote coales off fyre, euen as though burnynge cresshettes had bene amonge the beaſtes: and the fyre gaue a gliſtre, and out off the fyre there wente lighteninge. Whe y beaſtes were forwarde and backwarde, one wolde haue thought it had lightened. Now whe I had well conſidered the beaſtes, I ſawe a worke off wheles vpon the earth with foure faces alſo like the beaſtes.

The faſhion and worke of the wheles was like theſe. The foure wheles were ioyned and made (to loke vpon) as it had bene one whele in another. When one wente forwarde, they wente all foure, and turned the not aboute i their goynge. They were large, greete and horrible to loke vpon.

Their bodie were full off eyes rounde aboute them all foure. Whe the beaſtes wente, the wheles wente alſo with them: And when the beaſtes liſt them ſelues vp from y earth, the wheles were liſt vp alſo. Whyther ſo euer the ſpirc wente, thither wente they alſo, and y wheles were liſt vp and folowed the, for y ſpirc of life was in the wheles. When y beaſtes were forth, ſtoode ſtill, or liſt them ſelues vp from the earth: then the wheles alſo wente, ſtoode ſtill, and were liſt vp, for y bieth off life was in the wheles.

Above ouer y heades of the beaſtes there was a firmament, which was faſhioned as it had bene off the moſt pure Chriſtall, and that was ſpied out aboue vpon their heades: vnder the ſame firmament were their wynges layed abroad, one towarde another, and two wynges couered the body of euery beaſt. And when they wente forth, I herde the noyſe off their wynges, like the noyſe off greete waters, as it had bene the voyce off the greete God, and a ruſſhing together as it were off an hoost off men. And when they ſtoode ſtill, they let downe their wynges. Now when they ſtoode ſtill, and had letten downe their wynges, it thondred in the firmament, that was aboue their heades.

Above the firmament that was ouer their heades, there was the faſhion off a ſeate, as it had bene made off Saphir. Vpon the ſeate there ſat one like a man. I behelde him, and he was like a cleare light, as it had bene all off fyre with in from his loynes vwarde.

And beneth when I loked vpon him vnder y loynes, me thought he was like a ſhyninge fyre, that geueth light on euery ſyde. And the ſhyne and gliſtre y lightened rounde

The prophet Ezechiel.

de aboute, was like a raynbowe, which in a raynie daye appeareth in the cloudes. Eue so was the similitude, wherein the glory off the LORDE appeared. Whe I sawe it, I fell vpon my face, and hertened vnto the voyce off him, that spake.

The II. Chapter.

I Then sayde he vnto me: Stonde vp vpon thy fete (O thou sonne of ma) and I will talke with the. And as he was commonyng with me, the spiete came into me, and set me vp vpon my fete: so that I marked the thinge, that he sayde vnto me. And he sayde: Beholde, thou sonne off man: I will sende the to the children off Israel, to those runnagates and obstinate people: for they haue take parte agaynst me, and are runne awaye fro me: both they, and their foresathers, vnto this daye.

Yee I will sende y vnto a people y haue rough vysages and stiff stomackes: vnto whom thou shalt saye on this maner: This the LORDE God himself hath spoken, y whether they be obedient or no (for it is a frauwarde hounsholde, they maye knowe yet that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

B Therefore (thou sonne off man) feare the not, nether be afrayed off their wordes: for they shall rebell agaynst the, and despise y. Yee thou shalt dwell amonge scorpions: but feare not their wordes, be not abashed at their lokes, for it is a frauwarde hounsholde.

Se that thou speake my wordes vnto them, whether they be obedient or not, for they are obstinate. Therefore (thou sonne of man) obeye then all thinges, that I saye vnto y, and benet thou stiffnecked, like as they are a stiffnecked hounsholde. Open thy mouth, and eate that I geue the.

So as I was lokyng vp, beholde, there was sent vnto me an hande, wherein was a closed boke: and the hande opened it before me, and it was written within and without, full off carefull mourninges: alas, and wo.

The III. Chapter.

I Then sayde he vnto me: thou sonne of ma, eate that, what so euer it be: Yee eate that closed boke, and go thy waye, and speake vnto the children off Israel. So I opened my mouth, and he gaue me the boke for to eate, and sayde vnto me:

The iiij. Chap.

Thou sonne of man, thy bely shall eate, and thy bowels shall be fylled with y boke, that I geue the. Then dyd I eate the boke, and it was in my mouth sweter then hony.

And he sayde vnto me: thou sonne of ma, get the soone vnto the house off Israel, shewe the y wordes, that I comaunde the: for I sende the not to a people that hath a straunge, vntowne or harde speache, but vnto the house off Israel: Not to many nations, which haue diuerse speaches and harde languages, whose wordes thou understoddest not: Neuertheles, yf I sent the to those people, they wolde folowe the: But the house off Israel wil not folowe y, for they wil not folowe me: Yee all the house off Israel haue stiff foreheades and harde hertes. Beholde therfore, I will make thy face preuayle agaynst their faces, and harden thy foreheade agaynst their foreheades: so that thy foreheade shall be harder then an Adamar of stym stone: that thou mayest feare them y lesse, and be lesse afrayed off them, for they are a frauwarde hounsholde.

He sayde morouer vnto me: thou sonne off man, take diligent hede with thine eares, to y wordes that I speake vnto the, sit ten them in thine herte: and go to the prisoners off thy people, speake vnto them, and saye on this maner:

Thus the LORDE God hath spoke: Whether ye heare, or heare not. With that, the spiete toke me vp. And I herde the noyse of a greete russhinge and remouyng off the most blissed glory off the LORDE out off his place.

I herde also the noyse off the wynges off the beestes, that russhed one agaynst another, yee and the ratyng off the wheles, that were by them, which russhinge z noyse was very greate.

Now when the spiete toke me vp, and caried me awaye, I wente with an heauy and a soroufull mynde, but the honde off y LORDE comforted me right soone.

And so in the begynnyng off the moneth Abib, I came to the prisoners, that dwelt by the water off Cobar, and remained in that place, where they were: and so continued I amonge them seven dayes, beinge very sory.

And when the seven dayes were expyred, the LORDE sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, I haue made the a watch man vnto the house off Israel: therfore take good hede to the wordes, and geue them warninge at my commaundement.

The prophet Ezechiel.

I saye vnto the, concernyng the vngodly ma, that (without doute) he must dye, and thou genest him not warnyng, ner speakest vnto him, that he maye turne from his euill waye, and so to lyue: Then shall the same vngodly man dye in his owne vnrightnes: but his bloude will I requyre off thine honde. Neuertheles, yf thou gene warnyng vnto the wicked, and he yet forsaeketh not his vngodlynnes: then shall he dye in his owne wickednesse, but thou hast discharged thy soule.

Now yf a righteous ma go fro his rightnesse, and do the thinge that is euill: I will laye a stumblinge blocke before him, and he shall dye, because thou hast not given him warnyng: Yee dye shall he in his owne synne, so that the vertue, which he did before, shall not be thought vpon: but his bloude will I requyre off thine honde.

Neuertheles, yf thou exhortest the righteous, that he synne not, and so y righteous donot synne: Then shall he lyue, because he hath receaved thy warnyng, and thou hast discharged thy soule. And there came the ho of the LORDE vpon me, and he sayde vnto me: Stonde vp, and go in to the felde, y I maye there talke with the.

D So when I had rysen vp, and gone forth into the felde: Beholde, the glory off the LORDE stode there, like as I sawe it afore, by the water off Cobar.

Then fell I downe vpon my face, and y spiete came in to me, which set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde thus vnto me: Go thy waye, and sparte thy selff in thine house.

Beholde (O thou sonne off man) there shall chaynes be brought for the, to bynde the w' all, so that thou shalt not escape out off the. And I will make thy tunge cleue so the rofe off thy mouth, that thou shalt bedomme, and not be as a chider with them: for it is an obstinate hounsholde.

But when I speake vnto the, then open thy mouth, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: who so heareth, let him heare: who so will not, let him leaue: for it is a frauwarde hounsholde.

The IIII. Chapter.

I Thou sonne off man: take a tyle stone, and laye it before the, and descrybe vpon it the cite off Jerusalem: how it is beseged, how bulworkes and stronge ditches are grauen on euery syde off it: besyde also tentes, and an hoost off men

The iiij. Chap. Ho. lvi.

rounde aboute it.

Morouer, take an yron panne, and set it betwixte the z y cite in steade off an yron wall. Then set thy face toward it, besege it, and laye ordinance agaynst it, to wyne it. This shall be a token vnto the house off Israel. But thou shalt slepe vpon thy left syde, and laye the synne of the house off Israel vpon the.

Certayne dayes apoynted, thou shalt slepe vpon that syde, and beare their synnes. Neuertheles I will apoynte the a tyme (to put off their synnes) and the nombre off the daies: The hundredth z xc. dayes must thou beare the wickednesse off the house off Israel. When thou hast fulfilled these dayes, lye downe agayne, and slepe vpon thy right syde xl. dayes, and beare the synnes off the house off Iuda.

A daye for a yeare, a daye (I saye) for a yeare, will I euer laye vpon the. Therefore set now thy face agaynst that beseged Jerusalem, and discover thine arme, that thou mayest prophete agaynst it.

Beholde, I will laye chaynes vpon the, that thou shalt not turne the from one syde to another, till thou hast ended the dayes off thy sege.

Wherefore, take vnto the wheate, barley beanes, growell seede, milium and fitches: and put these together in a vessell, and make the loaves of bred therof, acordinge to the nombre off the dayes that thou must lye vpon y syde: that thou mayest haue bred to eate, for the hundredth and xc. dayes.

And the meate that thou eatest, shall haue a certayne waight apoynted: Namely, twentie sydes euery daye. This apoynted meate shalt thou eate daylie, from the begynnyng to the ende.

Thou shalt dryncke also a certayne measure off water: Namely, the sixte parte of an hin shalt thou dryncke daylie from the begynnyng to the ende. Barly cakes shalt thou eate, yet shalt thou first strake the ouer with mas donge, y they maye seite. And with that, sayde the LORDE: Euen thus shall the children off Israel eate their defyled bred in the myddest off the Gentiles, amonge whom I will scatere them.

Then sayde I: Oh LORDE God, Beholde, my soule was yet neuer stayned: for fro my youth vp vnto this houre, I dyd neuer eate of a deed carcase, or of that which was slayne of wilde beestes, nether came there euer eny vnclene flesh in my mouth.

Where vnto he answered me, and sayde:

Att ij

The prophet Ezechiel.

Well than, I will graunte the to take cowes donge, for the donge off a man, and to strake the bried ouer with all, before the.
And he sayde vnto me: Beholde thou son ne off man, I will mynyshe all the prouys-on of bried in Jerusalem, so that they shall weye their bried, and eate it with scarcenesse.
But as for water, they shall haue a very litle measure theroff, to drynke. And when they haue nomore bried ner water, one shal be destroyed with another, and famish awaye for their wickednesse.

The V. Chapter.

A Kethe then a sharpe knyfe (O thou sonne of man) namely, a rasoure. Take that, and shauethe hayre off thy heade and beard: Then take the scoales and the waight, and deuyde the hayre a sunder.
And burnethe thirde partetherof in the fy-re in the myddest off the cite, and cut the other thirde parte in peces with a knyfe. As for the thirde parte that remayneth, cast it in the wynde, and then shewe the bare kny-fe.

Yet afterwarde take a litle off the same, z bynde it in they cotelappe. Then take a curtesy of it, and cast it in the myddest off y fyre, and burne it in the fyre. Out of the same fyre shall there go a flame, vpon the whole house of Israel.

B Moreover, thus sayde the LORDE God:
This same is Jerusalem. I set her in the middest of the heithen and nacions, that are rounde aboute her, but she hath despised my iudgements more then y Gentiles the selues, and broken my commaundementes more then the nacions, that lye rounde aboute her: For they haue cast out myne ordinaunces, and not walked in my lawes. Therefore, thus sa-ieth the LORDE God: For so moch as ye w-your wickednesse farre exceede the heithen, that dwell rounde aboute you: (For ye haue not walked in my lawes, nether haue ye kepte myne ordinaunces) Therefore thus saith y LORDE God:

I will also come vpon the, for in the myd-dest of the will I syt in iudgement, in the sight of the heithen, and will handle the of soch a fashion, as I neuer dyd before, and as I neuer wil do from that tyme forth, and that because of all thy abhominacions. For in the the fathers shal be sayne to eate their owne sonnes, and the sonnes their owne fathers.
Soch a courte will I kepe in the, and the wholeremnant will I scatere in to all the wyndes.

The vi. Chap.

Wherefore, as truly as I lye (saith the LORDE God) seynge thou hast defyled my Sanctuary, with all maner off abhomin-acions and with all thy shamefull offences:
For this cause will I also destroye the. My-ne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the.

One thirde parte within the, shall die of the pestilence and of hunger: Another thir-de parte shall be slayne downe rounde aboute the, with the swearde: The other thirde parte that remayneth, will I scatere abroad towards all the wyndes, and drawe out the swearde after them. Thus wil I performe my indignacion and set my wiath agaynst them, and ease my self. So that when I haue fulfilled myne anger agaynst them, they shall knowe, that I am the LORDE, which wa feruent gelousy haue spoken it.

Moreover I will make the waiste and abhorred, before all the heithen that dwell aboute the, and in the sight off all them, that go by the: so that when I punyssh the in my wiath, in myne anger, and with the plague off my whote displeasure: thou shalt be a very abhominacion, shame, a gasinge and wondring stocke, amonge the heithen that lye aboute the.

Euē I the LORDE haue spoken it, and it shall come to passe, when I shal amon-ge them the perlous darteres of hōger, which shal be but death: Yet therfore shall I spare them, because I will destroye you. I will increase hunger, and mynyshe all the prouysion off bried amonge you.

Plagues and mysery will I sende you, ye and wilde beestes also to destroye you. Pest-lence and bloudsheddinge shall come vpon you, and the swearde wil I bringe ouer you.
Euē I the LORDE, haue sayde it.

The VI. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came v-to me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, turne thy face to the mountaynes of Israel, that thou mayest prophecye vnto them, and saye: Heare the worde of the LOR-DE God, o ye mountaynes off Israel: The hath the LORDE God spoken to the mount-nes, hilles, valleys and dales:

Beholde, I will brynge a swearde ouer you, and destroye youre hie places: I wil cast downe youre alters, and breake dow-ne youre temples. Your slayne men wil
I laye before youre goddes, and the dead carcasses off the children off Israel wil
I cast before their ymages, youre bones wil

The prophet Ezechiel.

I strowe rounde aboute youre alters, and dwellinge places.

The cities shalbe desolate, y hillchapels layed waiste: youre alters destroyed, z broken: youre goddes cast downe, and taken awaye, yē tēpels layde eane with the groude, your owne workes clene roted out. Your slayne men shall lie amonge you, that ye maye lerne to knowe, how y I am the LORDE.
Those y amōge you haue escaped the swear-de, will I leaue amonge the Gentiles, for I will scatere you amonge the nacions. And they that escape from you, shall thinke vpon me amonge the heithen, where they shalbe in captiuyte.

As for that whoush and vnfaithfull her-te of theirs, wherewith they runne awaye fro me, I will breake it: yee z put out those eyes off theirs, that committe fornicacion with their Idols.

Then shall they be ashamed, and displeased with their selues, for the wickednesse ad abhominacions, which they haue done: and shal lerne to knowe, how that it is not in vāy-ne, that I the LORDE spake, to bringe soch mysery vpon them.

The LORDE sayde moreover vnto me:
Gatherethine hondes together, and stampe with thy fete, and saye: Wo worth all the ab-hominacions and wickednesse of the house of Israel, for because of the, they shal perissh with the swearde, with hōger and with pestilence. Who so is farre of, shall dye off the pestilence: he that is nye at hande, shall perish with the swearde: and y other that are beseged, shall dye of hunger.

Thus wil I satisfie my wrothfull displeasure vpon them. And so shall ye lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē youre slay-nemen lye amōge youre goddes, and aboute youre alters: vpon all hie hilles and top-pes off mountaynes, amōge all grenetrees, amonge all thicke okes: euē in the places,
where they dyd sacrifice to all their Idols.
I will stretch myne hōnde out vpon them, z will make the londe waiste: So that it shall lye desolate and voyde, from the wildernesse off Deblat forth, thorow all their habitacions: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The VII. Chapter.

The worde off the LORDE came v-
to me, on this maner: The I call, O thou sonne off man. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the londe off Israel:
The ende commeth, yee verely the ende commeth vpon: all the foure corners off the earch.

But now shall the ende come vpon the:
for I will sende my wiath vpo the, and wil punyssh the: accordinge to thy wayes, and re-warde the after all thy abhominacions. My-ne eye shall not ouersee the, nether will I spare the: but rewarde the, accordinge to thy waies, and declare thy abhominacions.
Then shall ye knowe, that I am the LOR-
DE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, one mysery and plague shall come after another: the ende is here. The ende (I saye) that waiteth for the, is come already, y<sup>e</sup> houre is come agaynst the, that dwellest in the londe.

The tyme is at honde, the daye of sedicio is hard by, z no glad tidings vpo the most taynes. Therefore, I will shortly poure out my sore displeasure ouer the, and fulfill my wiath vpon the. I will iudge the after thy waies, and recompence the all thy abhominacions.

Myne eye shal not ouersee the, nether wil
I spare the: but rewarde the after thy wai-es, and shewe thy abhominacions: to lerne you for to knowe, how y I am the LORDE, y<sup>e</sup> smyteth. Beholde, the daye is here, the daye is come. the houre is runne out, the rodde flouisseth, wylfulnesse waret grene, malicious violence is growne vp, and the vngodly warent to a staff. Yet shall there no com-playnte be made for them, ner for the trouble that shall come of these thinges.

The tyme cometh, the daye draweth nye:
Who so byeth, let him not reioyce: he that sellereth, let him not be sorry: for why, Trouble shall come in the myddest off all rest: so that the seller shall not come agayne to the byer, for nether off them both shall lye. For the vision shal come so greatly ouer all, y it shal not be hyndered: To mā also w<sup>h</sup> his wickednesse shall be able to saue his owne life.

The trumpettes shall ye blowe, and make you all ready, but no man shall go to the batell, for I am wroth with all the whole multitude.

The swearde shalbe without, pestilence and hunger within: so that who so is in the felde, shalbe slayne with the swearde: and he that is in the cite, shall perissh with hunger and pestilence.

And soch as escape and fle from amonge them, shal be vpon the hilles, like as the doues in the felde: euery one shalbe afrayed, because off his owne wickednesse.

The prophet Ezechiel.

Esa. 13. e

All bondes shalbe letten downe, and all knees shalbe weake as the water: they shall gyde them selues with sack cloth, feare shall fall vpon them. Their faces shall be confounded, and their heades balde: their syluer shall lye in the stretes, and their golde shalbe despised: Yee their syluer and golde maye not deluyner them, in the daye of the fearfull wraoth of the LORDE.

Soph. 1. c
Ecc. 3. b

D They shall not satisfie their hongrie soules, nether fyll their emptie belies therewith: For it is become their owne decaye thorow their wickednesse: because they made therof, not only costly Jeweles for their pompe and pryde, but also abhominable ymages and Idols. For this cause will I make them to be abhorred. Moreover, I will geue it into y<sup>e</sup> handes off the straungers to be spoyled: and to y<sup>e</sup> wicked, for to be robbed, and they shall destroye it.

Osee. 2. a

My face wil I turne from the, my Treasury shall be defyled: for the theues shall go in to it, and suspende it. I wil make clene rydaunse, for thelonde is whole defyled with vnrighuous iudgment of innocent bloude, and the cite is full off abhominacions.

Eze. 9. a

Wherefore, I will bringe the most cruell tyrantes from amonge the heithen, to take their houses in possession. I will make the pompe off the proude to cease, and they shall take in their Sanctuary. When this trouble cometh, they shall seeke peace, but they shall haue none. One myschefe and sorowe shall folowe another, and one rumoure shall come after another: Then shall they seeke visions in wayne at their prophetes. The lawe shall be gone from the priestes, and wysdome from the elders. The kynge shall mourne, the princes shalbe clothed with heynesse, and y<sup>e</sup> hōdes off the people in thelonde shall tremble for feare. I will do vnto them after their owne waies, and accordinge to their owne iudgements will I iudge them: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The VIII. Chapter.

Eze. 3. b
11. d

It happened, that in the sixte yere, the fift daye of the sixte Moneth I sat in my house, and the LORDES off the counsell off Iuda with me: and the honde off the LORDE God fell euen there vpon me.

And as I looked vp, I sawe as it were a licknesse off fyre from his loynes downwarde, and from his loynes vwarde it shyned maruelous cleare.

The viij. Chap.

This synilitude stretched out an honde, and toke me by the hayre lockes off my heade, and the spirete lift me vp betwixte heauen and earth: and God brought me in a vision to Jerusalem, in to the courte off the inwarde porte that lieth towarde the north: there stode an ymage, with whom he that hath all thinges in his power, was very much.

And beholde, the glory off the God off Israel was in the same place: enas I had sene it afore in the felde. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, lift vp thine eyes, and loke towarde the north. Then lift I vp myne eyes towarde the north, and beholde: Besyde the porte northwarde, there was an alter made vnto the ymage off puuocation in the very entrynge in.

And he sayde furthermore vnto me: Thou sonne off man, seist thou what the se do? Seist thou the greates abhominacions that the house off Israel commyete in this place: which ought not to be done in my sanctuary?

But turne the aboute, and thou shalt see yet greater abhominacions. And with that brought he me to the courte gate: and when I looked, beholde, there was an hole in the wall.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, digge thorow the wall. And when I dygged thorow the wall, beholde, there was a dore. And he sayde vnto me: go thy way in, and loke what wicked abhominacions they do there.

So I wente in, and sawe: and beholde, there were all maner ymages off womes and beastes, all Idols and abhominacions off y<sup>e</sup> house off Israel paynted euerychone rounde aboute the wall.

There stode also before the ymages lordes of the counsell off the house off Israel: and in the myddest off them stode Iasaias the some off Saphan: And euery one off them had a censure in his honde, and out off the incense, there wente a smoke, as it had bene a cloude.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, hast thou sene what the Senatours off the house off Israel do secretly, euery one in his chambier? For they saye: Tush, the LORDE seeth vs not, the LORDE regardeth not the worlde. And he sayde vnto me: Turne the yet agayne, and thou shalt see the greates abhominacions that they do.

And with that, he brought me to the dore off the porte off the LORDES house, towarde the north. And beholde, there sat women mournynge for Thamuz. Then sayde he vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne off man? Turne y<sup>e</sup> aboute, and thou shalt see yet greater abhominacions. And so he brought me in to the inwarde courte off the LORDES house: and beholde, at the porte of the LORDES house, betwixte the fore entrie and the aulter, there were fyue and twenty men, that turned their backs vpon the Temple of the LORDE, and their faces towarde the east, and they worshipped the Sonne.

And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne off man? Thinketh the house off Israel, that it is but a trifle, to do these abhominacions here? Shulde they fyll thelonde full of wickednesse, and vndertake to prouoke me vnto anger? Yee and purposely to cast vpon their noses vpon me? Therefore wil I also do some thinge in my wrothfull displeasure, so that myne eye shall not ouersee them, nether wil I spare them. Yee and though they crye in myne eares with loude voyce, yet wil I not heare them.

The IX. Chapter.

I cried also with a loude voyce in myne eares, sayenge: Come here ye rulers of the cite, euery man with his weaponed honde to the slaughter. Then came there sifemen out of the strete of the vpper porte towarde the north, and euery man a wapen in his honde to the slaughter. There was one amongst them, that had on him a lymnyng rayment, and a wyters yncke horn by his syde.

These wente in, and stode beside the brazen aulter: for the glory of the LORDE was gone awaye from the Cherub, and was come downe to the threshold of the house, and he called the mā, that had the lymnyng rayment vpon him, and the wyters yncke horn by his syde, and the LORDE sayde vnto him: Go thy waye thorow the cite of Jerusalem, and set this marke n<sup>e</sup> thou vpon the foreheades of them, that mourne, and are sory for all the abhominacions, that be done therein. And to the other, he sayde that I might heare: Go ye after him thorow the cite, slaye, ouersee none, spare none: Kyll, and destroye both elde men and yonge, maydens, children, and wyues.

But as for those, that haue this marke n<sup>e</sup> thou vpon them: se that ye touch them not, and begynne at my Sanctuary. Then they beganne at the elders, which were in the Temple, for he had sayde vnto them: When ye haue defyled the Temple, and fylled the courte with the slayne, then go youre waye forth. So they wete out and slewe downe thorow y<sup>e</sup> cite. Now when they had done y<sup>e</sup> slaughter, and I yet escaped: I fell downe vpon my face, and cried, sayenge: O LORDE, wilt thou then destroye all the residue of Israel, in thy fore displeasure, that thou hast poured vpon Jerusalem?

Then sayde he vnto me: The wickednesse of the house off Israel and Iuda is very greateso that the lode is full of bloude, and y<sup>e</sup> cite full of vnfaithfulnesse: For they saye: Tush, y<sup>e</sup> LORDE regardeth not the earth, he seyth vs not. Therefore wil I vpon them, myne eye shall not ouersee them, nether wil I spare them, but wil recompence their wickednesse vpon their heades.

And beholde, the mā that had the lymnyng rayment vpon him, and the wyters, yncke horn by his syde: tolde all the matter how it happened, and sayde: LORDE, as thou hast commaunded me, so haue I done.

The X. Chapter.

As I looked, beholde, in the firma ment: that was aboute the Cherubins there appeared the synilitude of a stole of Saphir vpon them: Then sayde he that sat therein, to him that had the lymnyng rayment vpon him: Crepe in betwene the wheles that are vnder the Cherubins, and take thine honde full of hote coales out from betwene the Cherubins, and cast them ouer the cite. And he crept in, that I might see.

Eze. 9. a

Now the Cherubins stode vpon the right syde of the house, when the man wete in, and the cloude fylled the ynnner courte. But the glory of the LORDE remoued from the Cherubins, and came vpon the threshold of the house: so that the Temple was full of cloude, and the courte was full of the shyne of the LORDES glory. Yee and the founde of the Cherubins wynges was herde in to the forecourte, like as it had bene the voyce of the almightie God, when he speaketh. Now when he had bydden the man y<sup>e</sup> was clothed in lymnyng, to go and take the hote coales from the myddest off y<sup>e</sup> wheles, which were vnder the Cherubins: he wente and stode besyde the wheles. Then the one Cherub reached forth this honde from vnder the Cherubins, vnto y<sup>e</sup> fyre that was betwene the Cherubins, and toke therof, and gaue it vnto him (that had on the lymnyng rayment) in his honde: which toke it, and wente out. And vnder the wynges of y<sup>e</sup> Cherubins, there appeared the licknes of a mā hōte: I sawe also foure wheles besyde the Cherubins.

rubins, so that by every Cherub there stode a whele. And the wheles were (to loke vpon) after y<sup>e</sup> fashion of y<sup>e</sup> precious stone of Tharsis: Yet (vnto the sight) were they fashioned like, as yf one whele had bene in another.

When they wente forth, they were all iiii together, not turnynge aboute in their goinge: But wherethe first wente, thither wente they after also, so that they turned not aboute in their goinge. Their whole bodies, their backes, their hodes & wynges, yee & the wheles also, were all full of eyes rounde aboute them all foure. And I herde him call y<sup>e</sup> wheles, Galgal (that is) a rounde boull. Every one of them had foure faces: so that the one face was the face of a Cherub, the seconde of a man, the thirde of a lyon, the fourth of an Aegle, & they were lifted vp aboue. This is the best, that I sawe at the water of Cobar. Now when the Cherubins wente, the wheles wente with them: & when the Cherubins shoke their wynges to lift them selues upwarde, the wheles remayned not behynde, but were with them also. Shortly, when they stode, these stode also: And when they were lift vp, y<sup>e</sup> wheles were lift vp also with the, for the spire of life was in the wheles.

Then the glory of the LORDE was lift vp from the threshold of the temple, and remayned vpon the Cherubins: And the Cherubins flactred with their wynges, and lift the selues vp from the earth: so that I sawe when they went, and the wheles with them. And they stode at the east syde of the porte that is in the house of the LORDE. So the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. This is the best that I sawe vnder the God of Israel, by the water of Cobar. And I perceaued, that it was the Cherubins. Every one had foure faces, & every one foure wynges, & vnder their wynges, as it were mens hondes. Now the figure of their faces was, even as I had senethem, by the water of Cobar, & so was the countenance of the: Every one in his goinge wente straight forward.

The XI. Chapter.

Worner, the spire of the LORDE lift me vp, & brought me vnto y<sup>e</sup> east porte of the LORDES house. And beholde, there were xiiij men vnder the dore: amonge whom I sawe Jaasaniah the sonne of Asur, & Pheltias the sonne of Banias, the rulers of the people. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou sonne of man: These men ymagin myschefe, and a wicked counsell take they in this cite, sayenge: Tush, there is no destruction at honde, let vs buylde houses:

This Jerusalem is the cauldron, & we be the flesh. Therefore shalt thou prophesie vnto them, yee prophesie shalt thou vnto them, O sonne of man. And with that, fell the spire of the LORDE vpon me, and sayde vnto me: Speake, thus saith the LORDE: On this manner haue yee spokē (O ye house of Israel) and I knowe the ymaginacions of youre hertes. Many one haue ye murthered in this cite, & filled the stretes full of the slayne.

Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: The slayne men that ye haue layed on the grounde in this cite, are the flesh, & this cite is the cauldron: But I wil bunge you out of it: ye haue drawe out y<sup>e</sup> swearde, enso wil I also bunge a swearde ouer you, saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God. I wil dryue you out of this cite and delyuer you in to youre enemies honde, & wil condemne you. Ye shal be slayned in all the coastes of Israel, I wil be avenged of you: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. This cite shal not be youre cauldron, nether shal ye be the flesh therein: but in the coastes of Israel wil I punyssh you, that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: in whose commaundementes ye haue not walked, ner kepte his lawes: but haue done after the customes of the heithen, that lie rounde aboute you.

Now when I preached, Pheltias the sonne of Banias dyed. Then fell I downe vpon my face, & cried with a loude voyce: O LORDE God, wilt thou then vterly destroye all the remnant in Israel: And so the worde of the LORDE came to me on this manner: Thou sonne of man: Thy brethren, thy kynnsfolke, & y<sup>e</sup> whole house of Juda, which dwell at Jerusalem, saye: They be gone farre from the LORDE, but the londe is geuen vs in possession. Therefore tell them, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil sende you farre of amonge the Gentiles, & scatere you amonge the nations, & I wil halowe you but a litle, in the londes where ye shall come. Tell them also, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil gather you agayne out of the nations, & bunge you from the countrees where ye be scatred, & will geue you the londe of Israel agayne: & thither shal ye come. And as for all impedimentes, & all youre abhominacions: I will take them awaye.

And I wil geue you one herte, & wil plant a new spire within y<sup>e</sup> bowels. That y<sup>e</sup> ny herte wil I take out of youre body, & geue you a fleshy herte: that ye maye walke in my commaundementes, and kepe myne ordinances, & do them: that ye maye be my people, and I youre God. But loke whose hertes are disposed to folowe their abhominacions and wicked lyuynge: Those mens deces wil I bringe vpon their owne heades, saith the LORDE God. After this dyd the Cherubins lift vp their wynges, and the wheles wente with them, and the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. So the glory of the LORDE wente vp from the myddest of the cite, & stode vpon the mount of the cite towarde the east. But the wynde toke me vp, & in a vision (which came by the spire of God) it brought me agayne in to Caldea amonge the prisoners. Then the vision that I had seene, vanysht awaye fro me. So I spake vnto the prisoners, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had shewed me.

The XII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, thou dwellest in the myddest of a frauwerde householde: which haue eyes to se, & yet se not: eares haue they to heare, and yet heare they not, for they are an obstinate householde. Therefore (O thou sonne of man) make thy geredy to flit, and go forth by fayre daye light, y<sup>e</sup> they maye se. Yee en in their sight shalt thou go from thy place to another place: yf peradventure they wil confidie, y<sup>e</sup> they be an vobedient householde. Thy gere that thou hast made redy to flit withall, shalt thou beare out by fayre daye light, that they maye se: & thou y<sup>e</sup> self shalt go forth also at euē in their sight, as a man doth whē he fliteth.

Dyggethore the wall, that they maye se, and beare thow it the same thinge, that thou tokest vp in their sight. As for thy self, thou shalt go forth in the darcke. Syde thy face that thou se not y<sup>e</sup> earth, for I haue made the a shewtoke vnto the house of Israel. Now as y<sup>e</sup> LORDE commaunded me, so I dyd: y<sup>e</sup> gered that I had made redy, brought I out by daye. At euē I brake downe an hole thow the wall with my honde: & when it was darcke, I toke the gere vpon my shulders, and bare them out in their sight.

And in the mornynge, came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, yf Israel, y<sup>e</sup> frauwerde householde are the, and saye: what dost thou there? Then tell them: Thus saith the LORDE God: This punysshment toucheth the chiefe rulers at Jerusalem, and all the house of Israel, that dwell amonge them: Tell them: I am youre shewtoke: like as I haue done, so shal it happen vnto you: Flyt shal ye also, and go into captivitye. The chiefe that is amonge you, shall lade his shulders in the darcke, and get him awaye. He shal breake downe the wall, to carie staff there thowow: he shal couer his face, that he se not the grounde, with his eyes.

My lyne will I spiede out vpon him, and catch him in my net, and carie him to Babilon, in the lode of the Caldees: which he shal not se, & yet shal he dyethere. As for all his helpers, and all his hooftes that be aboute him: I will scatere them towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out a swearde after them. So when I haue scatred them amonge the heithen, and strowed them in the londes: they shal knowe, that I am y<sup>e</sup> LORDE. But, I will leane a litle nombre of them, from the swearde, hunger & pestilence: to tell all their abhominacions amonge the heithen, where they come: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Moreover, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man: with a fearfull treblinge shalt thou eate thy bred, with carefulnesse & sorowe shalt thou drynke thy water. And vnto the people of the londe, speake thou on this manner: Thus saith the LORDE God, to them that dwell in Jerusalem, and to the londe of Israel: Ye shall eate youre bred with sorowe, and drynke your water with heynesse: Yee the londe with the fulnesse therof shal be layde waiste, for y<sup>e</sup> wickednesse of them that dwell therein. And the cities that now be well occupied, shal be voyde, and the londe desolate: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Yet came the worde of the LORDE vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, what manner of byworde is that, which ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: Tush, seynge that the daies are so slacke in commynge, all the visios are of none effecte: Tell them therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: I wil make that byworde ceasse, so that it shal nomore be comonly used in Israel.

But saye this vnto them: The daies are at honde, that euery thinge which hath bene prophecied, shal be fulfilled. There shall no vision be in wayne, nether eny prophecie fayle amonge the children of Israel: For is it I the LORDE, that speake it: and what so euer I y<sup>e</sup> LORDE speake, it shal be performed, and not be slacke in commynge.

Yee euē in youre dayes (O ye frauwerde householde) wil I deuise some thinge, & bringe it to passe, saith the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man: The house of Israel saye in this maner: Tush, as for the vision that he hath sene, it will be many a daye or it come to passe: Is it farre of yet, the thinge that he prophecieth. Therfore saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORD God: All my wordes shal nomore be slacke: Loke what I speake, that same shal come to passe, saith the LORD.

The XIII. Chapter.

A The worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, Speake prophecie agaynst these prophetes, that preach in Israel: & sayest thou vnto them that prophecie out of their owne herres: Heare the worde of the LORD, thus saith the LORD God: Wo be vnto those felish prophetes, that folowe their owne spieite, and speake, where they se nothinge. O Israel, thy prophetes are like the fores vpon the drie felde: For they stonde not in the gappes, nether make they an hedge for the house of Israel, that me might abyde the parell in the daye of the LORD. Vayne thinges they se, & tell lies, to mayntene their preachinges withall. The LORD (saye they) hath spokē it, when in very dede the LORD hath not sent them. Vayne visions haue ye sene, & spokē false propheties. when ye saye: the LORD hath spoken it, where as I neuer sayde it.

B Therfore, thus saith the LORD God: Be cause youre wordes be vayne, & ye seke out lies: Beholde, I wil vpon you, saith the LORD. Myne hondes shal come vpon the prophetes, that loke out vayne thinges, and preach lies: they shal not be in the counsell of my people, ner witten in the boke of the house of Israel, nether shal they come in the londe of Israel: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORD God. And that for this cause: they haue disceined my people, & tolde them of peace, where no peace was. One setteth vp a wall, & they dawbe it with lowse claye. Therfore tell them which dawbe it with vntempered morter, that it shall fall. For there shal come a greate shur of rayne, greate stones shall fall vpon it, & a fore skyme of wynde shal breake it, so shal y wall come downe. Shal it not then be sayde vnto you: where is now the morter, that ye dawbed it withall? Therfore thus saith the LORD God: I will breake out in my wrothfull displeasure with a stormy wynde, so that in myne anger there shal come a mightie shur of rayne, & hale stones in my wroth, to destroye withall.

As for y wall, that ye haue dawbed with vntempered morter, I wil breake it downe, & make it eanen with the grounde: so that the foundation therof shal remoue, & it shall fall. yee & ye youre selues shall perishe in the midst therof: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORD. Thus wil I perfourme my wroth vpon this wall, & vpon them that haue dawbed it with vntempered morter, & the dawbers are awaye. These are the prophetes of Israel, which prophecie vnto the cite of Jerusalem, & loke out visions of peace for them, where as no peace is, saith the LORD God. Wherfore (othou sonne of man) set thy face agaynst the doughters of y people, which prophecie out of their owne herres: & speake thou prophecie agaynst them: saye: Thus saith the LORD God: Wo be vnto you, that sowe pilowes vnder all ameholes, and bolsters vnder the heades both of yonge and olde, to catch soules withall. For when ye haue gotten the soules of my people in youre captiuyte, ye promysse them life, and dishonoure me to my people, for am hand full of barly, & for a peece of bred: when ye kyll the soules of them that dye not, & put myse life to them, that lyne not: Thus ye do semble with my people, y beleue y lies.

Wherfore thus saith the LORD God: Beholde, I wil also vpo the pilowes, wher with ye catch the soules in flyenge: the wil I take from youre armes, & let the soules go, that ye catch in flyenge. Your bolsters also wil I teare in peces, & delyuer my people out of youre hondes: so that they shal come nomore in youre hōdes to be spoyled, & ye shal knowe, that I am the LORD. Seinge y with youre lyes ye discomforte the herte of the rightuous, whom I haue not discomforted: Agayne: For so moch as ye corage the herte of the wicked, so that he maye not turne from his wicked waye, & lyne: therfore shall ye spie out nomore vanyte, ner prophecie vnto re owne gessinges: for I wil delyuer my people out of youre hondes, that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORD.

The XIII. Chapter.

There resorted vnto me certayne of y elders of Israel, & sat downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORD vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, these men beare their Idols in their herres, & go purposely vpon the stomblinge block of their owne wickednesse: how darre they then go counsell at me? Therfore speake vnto them, & saye: thus saith the LORD God: Every man of the house of Israel that beareth his Idols in his herte, purposynge to stumple in his owne wickednesse, and cometh to a prophet, to enquire eny thinge at me by him: vnto that man wil I the LORD myselfe gene answere, accordinge to the multitude of his Idols: that the house of Israel maye be sinners in their owne herres, because they be cleane gone from me, for their Idols sakes.

Wherfore, tell the house of Israel: thus saith the LORD God: Be conuerted, forsake youre Idols, and turne youre faces from all y abominacions. For enery man (wher he be of the house of Israel, or a straunger, that sogeourneth in Israel) which departeth from me, and carieth Idols in his herte, purposinge to go still stomblinge in his owne wickednesse, and cometh to a prophet, for to aske counsell at me thowow him: vnto y man wil I the LORD gene answere, by myne owne selfe.

I wil set my face agaynst that man, and wil make him to be an example for other, yee and a comon byworde: and wil rote him out of my people, that he maye knowe, how y I am the LORD. And yf that prophet be disceined, when he telleth him a worde: then I the LORD myselfe haue disceined that prophet, and wil stretch forth myne honde vpon him, to rote him out of my people of Israel: and they both shall be punished for their wickednesse.

Accordinge to y synne of him that ageth, shal the synne of the prophet be: that y house of Israel be led nomore fro methowerroure, and be nomore desyled in their wickednesse: but that they maye be my people, and I their God, saith the LORD God. And the worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, when the londe synneth agaynst me, and goeth forth in wickednesse: I will stretch out myne hōde vpon it, and destroye all the prouision of their bred, and sende derth vpon them, to destroye man & best in the londe. And though Noe, Daniel and Job these thre men were amonge them, yet shal they in their rightuousnesse delyuer but their owne soules, saith the LORD God.

As I bringe noysome beestes in to the londe, to waite it vp, and it be so desolate, that no man maye go therein for beestes: yf these thre men also were in the londe, as truly as I lyne (saith the LORD God) they shal saue nether sonnes ner doughters, but be only delyuered them selues: and as for the londe, it shal be waiste.

O, yf I bringe a swearde in to the londe, and charge it to go thowow the londe: so that I slaye downe man and best in it, and yf these thre men were therein: As truly as I lyne (saith the LORD God) they shal delyuer nether sonnes ner doughters, but only be saued them selues.

As I sende a pestilence in to the londe, and poure out my soie indignacion vpon it in bloude, so that I rote out of it both man and best, and yf Noe, Daniel and Job were therein: As truly as I lyne (saith the LORD God) they shal delyuer nether sonnes ner doughters, but saue their owne soules in their rightuousnesse.

Moreover, thus saith the LORD God: Though I sende my foure trubulous plagues vpon Jerusalem: the swearde, hunger, perlonous beestes and pestilence, to destroye man and best out of it: yet shal there a remmaunt be saued therein, which shal bringe forth their sonnes and doughters. Beholde, they shal come forth vnto you, and ye shal se their waye, and what they take in honde, & ye shal be comforted, as touchinge all the plagues that I haue brought vpon Jerusalem.

They shal comforte you, when ye set their waye and workes: and ye shal knowe, how y it is not without a cause, that I haue done so agaynst Jerusalem, as I dyd, saith the LORD God.

The XV. Chapter.

The worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: What cometh of the vyne amonge all other trees? and of the wyne stocke, amonge all other tymbre of the groaue? Do me take wodd of it, to make eny worke withall? Or maye there a nale be made of it, to hange eny thinge vpon? Beholde, it is cast in the fyre to be brent, the fyre consumeth both the endes of it, the myddest is brent to asshes. Is it mete then for eny worke? No.

Seinge then, that it was mete for no worke, beinge whole: moch lesse maye there eny thinge be made of it, when the fyre hath consumed and brent it. And therfore thus saith the LORD God: Like as I cast the vyne in to the fyre for to be brent, as other trees of the wodd: Euen so wil I do with them that dwell in Jerusalem, and set my face agaynst them: they shal go out from the fyre, and yet the fyre shal consume them. Then shal ye knowe, that I am the LORD, when I set my face agaynst them, and make the londe waiste: because they haue so sore offended, saith the LORD God.

The XVI. Chapter.

A Sayne, the worde of LORDE spake vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, shewe the cite of Jerusalem their abominacions, and saye thus saith the LORDE God vnto Jerusalem: Thy progeny and tymed came out of the londe of Canaan, thy father was an Amouite, thy mother a Cethite. In y daye of thy byrth when thou wast borne, y stringe of thy navel was not cut of: thou wast not barked in water to make the clene: Thou wast nether rubbed w salt, ner swedled in cloutes: No man regarded the so moch, as to do eny of these thinges for y, or to shewe the soch sauoure, but thou wast vtterly cast out vpon y felde, yee despised wast thou in the daye of thy byrth.

Then came I by the, and sawe the troden downe in thine owne bloude, z sayde vnto the: thou shalt be pouged from thine owne bloude, fro thine owne bloude (I saye) shalt thou be clensed. So I planted the, as the blossome of thy felde: thou art growen vp, z warre greate: thou hast gotten a maruelous pleasaunt bennie, thy brestes are come vp, thy hayre is goodly growen, where as thou wast naked and bare afore.

Now when I wente by y, z loked vpon the: beholde, thy tyme was come, yee enē the tyme to wowe the. Then spied I my clothes ouer the, to couer thy dishonestie: Yee I made an ooth vnto the, z married my self with the (saith the LORDE God) z so thou becamest myne owne. Then washed I the with water, z pouged thy blonde from the. I anoynted the with oyle, I ganethe chaunge of raymentes, I made the shues of Tarus lether: I gynthed y aboute w white sylcke, I clothed the with kerchues, I decked the w costly apparell, I put rynges vpon thy fyngers: a chayne aboute thy necke, spages vpo thy foreheade, eare rynges vpon thyne eares, z set a beutifull crowne vpon thine heade. Thus wast thou decked with syluer z golde, z thy rayment was of fyne white sylke, of nedle worke z of dyuerse colours.

Thou didest eate nothyng but symnels, honny z oyle: maruelous goodly wast thou z beutifull, yee euen a very Quene wast thou: In so moch, that thy beuty was spoken of amonge the heithen, for thou wast excellēt in my beuty, which I put vpo the, saith the LORDE God. But thou hast put confidēce in thine owne beuty, z played the harlot, when thou haddest gotten the a name. Thou hast committed whordome, with all that wente by the, z hast fulfilled their desyres: Yee thou hast taken thy garmētes of dyuerse colours, z decked thine alters therewith, where thou mightest fulfill thine whordome, of soch a fashion, as neuer was done, ner shal be. The goodly ornamētes z Jewels which I gaue the of myne owne golde and syluer, hast thou take, z made the mēs ymagē of of, and committed whordome withall.

Thy garmētes of dyuerse colours hast thou taken, and decked them therewith: my oyle z incense hast thou set before them, my meate which I gaue the, as symnels, oyle z honny: (to fede the withall) that hast thou set before them, for a swete sauoure. And thou came also to passe, saith the LORDE God. Thou hast take thine owne sonnes z daughters, whom thou haddest begotten vnto me, and these hast thou offred vp vnto them, to be their meate. Is this but a small whoremie of thine (thinkest thou) that thou slayest my children, and geuest them ouer to be eaten vnto them? And yet in all thy abominacions and whordome, thou hast not remembred the dayes of thy youth, how naked and bare thou wast at that tyme, z trodden downe in thine owne bloude. After all these thy wickednesses (wo wo vnto the, saith y LORDE) thou hast buylded thy stewes and bodel houses in every place: yee at the heades of every strete hast thou buylded the an altar. Thou hast made thy beuty to be abhorrēd: thou hast layed out thy legges to every one that came by, and multiplied thine whordome. Thou hast committed fornicacion with the Egipcians thy neighbours, which haue moch flesh: z thus hast thou used thine whordome, to anger me.

Beholde, I will stretch out myne hand ouer the, and wil mynish thy stoare of food, and deliuer the ouer in to the willes of the philistynes thine enemies, which are ashamed of thy abhominable waye. Thou hast played the whore also with the Assirians, which might not satisfie the: Yee thou hast played the harlot, z not had ynough. Thou hast thou still committed thy fornicacion from the londe of Canaan vnto the Caldees, and yet thy lust not satisfied. How shulde I cumide thine herte (saith the LORDE God) seinge thou doest all these thinges, thou precious whore: buyldinge thy stewes at the heade of every strete, and thy bodel houses in all places? Thou hast not bene as an other whore, y maketh booste of hir wynnynge: but as a wife y breaketh wedlocke, z maketh other in steade of hir husbode. Giftes are geuen to all other whores, but thou geuest rewardes vnto alle thy louers: z offrest them giftes, to come vnto the out of all places, z to committe fornicacion with the. It is come to passe with the in thy whordomes, contrary to the vse of other women: yee the hath no soch fornicacion bene committed after the, seinge that thou profrest giftes vnto other, z no reward is geuen the: this is a contrary thinge. Therfore heare the worde of the LORDE, o thou harlot: Thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast spent thy moneye, z discovered thy shame, thou wilt thou whordome with all thy louers, and with all the Jools of thy abominacions in the bloude of thy children, whom thou hast gotten them: Beholde therfore, I wil gather together all thy louers, vnto whom thou hast made thy self comon: yee z all them whom thou fauourest, and every one that thou hast: and will discover thy shame before the, that they all maye se thy fylchines.

Moreouer, I wil iudge the as a breake of wedlocke and a murthurer, and recompence the thine owne blonde in wrauth and gelousy. I wil geue the ouer into their power, that shal breake downe thy stewes, and destroye thy bodel houses: they shal stripe the out of thy clothes, all thy sayre z beutifull Jewels shal they take from the, and solet the syt naked z bare: Yee they shal bringe the comon people vpon the, which shal stone the, z slaye the downe with their sweardes. They shall burne vp thy houses, and punyssh the in the sight of many womē. Thus wil I makethy whordome to cease, so that thou shalt geue out no more rewardes.

Shulde I make my wrauth to be still, take my gelousy from the, be content, and nomore to be displeased: seinge thou remembrest not the dayes of thy youth, but hast prouoked me to wrauth in all these thinges? Beholde therfore, I wil bringe thine owne wayes vpon thine heade, saith the LORDE God: how be it, I neuer oyd vnto the, according to thy wickednesse and all thy abominacions. Beholde, all they y vse comon prouerbes, shall vse this prouerbe also agaynst the: Soch a mother, soch a daughter.

Thou art euē thy mothers owne daughter, that hath cast of hir housbonde and hir children: Yee thou art the sister of thy sisters, which forsoketh their husbodes and heir children. Your mother is a Cethite, and your father an Amouite. Thine eldest sister is Samaria, she and hir daughters that dwel vpo thy left honde.

But thy yongest sister that dwelleth on y right hōde, is Sodoma and hir daughters.

Yet hast thou not walked after their wayes, ner done after their abhominacions: But in all thy wayes thou hast bene more corrupte then they.

As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: Sodoma thy sister with hir daughters, hath not done so euē, as thou and thy daughters. Beholde, the symnes of thy sister Sodoma werethese: pryde, fulnesse of meate, abundaunce and Joilnesse: these thinges had she and hir daughters. Besydes that, they reached not their honde to the poore and neddy, but were proude, and dyd abhominable thinges before me: therfore I toke them awaye, when I had sene it. Neither hath Samaria done half of thy symnes, yee thou hast exceded them in wickednesse: In so moch that in comparison of all the abhominacions which thou hast done, thou hast made thy sisters good women. Therfore beare thine owne shame, thou that in synne hast overcome thy sisters: seinge thou hast done so abhominably, that they were better then thou. Be ashamed therfore (I saye) and beare thine owne confucion, thou that makest thy sisters good women.

As for their captiuite, namely the captiuite of Sodoma and hir daughters: the captiuite of Samaria and hir daughters: I wil bringe them agayne, so will I also bringe agayne thy captiuite amonge them: that thou mayest take thine owne confucion vpon the, and be ashamed of all that thou hast done, and to comforte them.

Thus thy sisters (namely) Sodoma and hir daughters: Samaria and hir daughters with y self z thy daughters, shalbe brought agayne to youre olde estate. Whe thou wast in thy pryde, and before thy wickednesse came to light: thou woldest not heare speake of thy sister Sodoma, vntill the tyme that the Sirians with all their townes, and the philistynes with all that lye rounde aboute them, brought the to shame and confucion: that thou mightest beare thine owne fylchines and abhominacion, saith the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: I shulde (by right) deale with the, as thou hast done. Thou hast despysed the ooth, and broken the couenante. Neuertheles, I wil remembre the couenante, that I made with the in thy youth, in so moch that it shalbe an enerlastinge couenante: So that thou also remembre thy wayes, and be ashamed of the: then shalt thou receaue of me thy elder and yonger sisters, whom I wil makethy doughters.

ters, and that besyde thy couenaunt. And so I wil renue my couenaunt with the, & thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE: that thou mayest thinke vpon it, be ashamed, and excuse thine owne confucion nomore: when I haue forgiven the, all that thou hast done, saith the LORDE God.

The xvii. Chapter.

cc. 24. 5
an. 7. a

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: put forth a darcke speakinge and a parable, vnto the house of Israel, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: There came a greete Aegle with greete wynges, yee w<sup>m</sup> mightie longe wynges, and full of fethers of dyuerse colours, vpon the mount of Libanus, and toke a braunch from a Cedre tre, and brake of the toppe of his twygge, and caried it into the londe of Canaan, and set it in a cite of marchauntes. He toke also a braunch of the londe, and planted it in a fructefull ground, he brought it vnto greete waters, & set it as a will ye tre therby. Then dyd it growe, and was a greete wyne stocke, but lowe by the ground: thus there came of it a vyne, and it brought forth blossomes, & spied out braunches.

But there was another Aegle, a greete one, which had greete wynges and many fethers: and beholde, y<sup>e</sup> rotes of this vyne had an hūger after him, and spied out his braunches towarde him, to water his frutes: Nevertheless it was plated vpon a good ground besyde greete waters: so that (by reason) it shulde haue brought out braunches and frute, and haue bene a goodly vyne. Speake thou therfore, thus saith the LORDE God: Shal this vyne prosper? shal not his rotes be plucked out, his frute broken of, his grene braunches wythered and fade awaye? yee without ether stronge arme or many people, shal it be plucked vp by the rotes. Beholde, it was planted: shal it prosper therfore? Shal it not be dryed vp and withered, yee euen in the shutting out of his blossomes, as soone as y<sup>e</sup> east wynde bloweth?

Moreover, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Speake to that frauwarde housholde: knowe ye not, what these thinges do signifie? Tell them: Beholde, the Kinge of Babilon came to Jerusalem, and toke the Kinge & his prynces, and ledde them to Babilon.

He toke of the Kinges seide, and made a couenaunt with him, and toke an oath of him: The prynces of the londe toke he with him also, that the londe might be holden in subieccion, and not to rebelle, but kepe the couenaunt, and fulfill it. But he fell from him: sent his Embassicars into Egypte, that he might haue horses & moch people. Shulde that prosper? Shulde he be kepte safe, that doth soch thinges? Or shulde he escape, that breaketh his couenaunt?

As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God: He shal dye at Babilon, in y<sup>e</sup> place where the Kinge dwelleth, that made him Kinge whose oath he hath despised, and whose couenaunt he hat broken. Neither shall pharao with his greete hoost and multitude of people, maynteyne him in the warre: when they cast vp ditches, and set vp bulwarkes to destroye moch people. For seinge he hath despised the oath, and broken the couenaunt (whereas he yet gaue his honde therupon) and done all these thinges, he shal not escape.

Therefore thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will bringe myne oath that he hath despised, and my couenaunt that he hath broken, vpon his owne heade. I wil cast my net aboute him, and catch him in my yarne. To Babilon will I carry him, there will I punyssh him, because of the greete offence that he made me. As for those y<sup>e</sup> fle from him out of y<sup>e</sup> hoost, they shal be slayne with the sword. The residue shal be scattered towarde all the wyndes: and ye shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I will also take a braunch from an hie Cedre tre, and will sette it, and take the vppermost twygge, that yet is but tendre, and plante it vpon an hie hill: Namely, vpon the hie hill of Sion will I plante it: that it maye bringe forth twygges, and geue frute, and be a greete Cedre tre: so that all maner of foules maye byde in it, and make their nestes vnder the shadowe of his braunches.

And all the trees of the felde shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue brought downe the hie tre, and set the lowe tre vpon it: I haue dryed vp the grene tre, and made the drye tre to flourish: Euen I the LORDE y<sup>e</sup> spake it, haue also brought it to passe.

The xviii. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: what meane ye by this comon prouerbe, that ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: The fathers haue eaten soure grapes, and the childrens teeth are set on edge? As truly as I lyue, saith the LORDE God, ye shal vse this byword nomore in Israel.

Beholde, all soules are myne. Like as the father is myne, so is y<sup>e</sup> sonne myne also. The soule that synneth, shal dye. As a man be godly, and do the thinge that is equall & right, (he eateth not vpon the hilles: he listeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he medleth wth no menstruous woman: he greueth no body: he geueth his dette his pledge agayne: he taketh none other mans good by violence: he parteth his mere with the hongrie: he clotheh the naked: he lendeth nothinge vpon vsury: he taketh nothinge ouer: he withdraueth his honde from doinge wronge: he had lech faithfully betwixte man & man: he walbeth in my commaundementes, & kepeth my lawes, & performeth the faithfully: ) This is a righteous mā, he shal surely lyue, saith the LORDE God.

As he now get a sonne, that is a murthurer, a shedder of bloude: yf he do one of these thinges (though he do not all) he eateth vpon the hilles: he defyleth his neighbours wife: he greueth the poore and neddy: he robbeth and spoyleth: he geueth not the dette his pledge agayne: he listeth vp his eyes vnto Idols, & medleth with abhominable thinges: he lendeth vpon vsury, and taketh more ouer. Shal this man lyue? He shal not lyue. Seinge he hath done all these abhominacions, he shal dye: his bloude shal be vpon him.

Now yf this man get a sonne also, that seith all this fathers synnes, which he hath done: and feareth, nether doth soch like: Namely, he eateth not vpon the mountaynes: he listeth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neighbours wife: he vereth no man: he kepeth no mans pledge: he nether spoyleth, ner robbeth eny man: he dealeth his meate with the hungrie: he clotheh the naked: he oppreseth not the poore: he receaueth no vsury, ner eny thinge ouer: he kepeth my lawes, and walketh in my commaundementes: This man shal not dye in his fathers synne, but shal lyue without fayle. As for his father: because he oppresed and spoyled his brother, and dyd wyckedly amonge his people: lo, he is deed in his owne synne. And yet saye ye: Wherefore shal he not this sonne beare his fathers synne? Therefore: because the sonne hath done equy and right, hath kepte all my commaundementes, and done them: therefore, shal he lyue in dede.

The same soule y<sup>e</sup> synneth, shal dye. The sonne shal not beare the fathers offence, nenether shal the father beare the sonnes offence. The rightuousnes of the rightuous shal be vpon himself, and the wickednes of the wicked shal be vpon him self also. But yf y<sup>e</sup> vngodly will turne awaye, from all his synnes that he hath done, and kepe all my commaundementes, and do the thinge y<sup>e</sup> is equall & right: doubtles he shal lyue, and not dye. As for all his synnes that he dyd before, they shal not be thought vpon: but in his rightuousnes that he hath done, he shal lyue. For haue I eny pleasure in the death of a synner, saith the LORDE God: but rather that he conuerte, and lyue?

Agayne: yf the rightuous turne awaye from his rightuousnes, and do iniquyte, accordinge to all the abhominacions, that y<sup>e</sup> wicked mā doth: shal he lyue? All the rightuousnes that he hath done, shal not be thought vpon: but in the fauour that he hath offended withall, and in the synne that he hath done, he shal dye.

And yet ye saye: Tush, the waye of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE is not indifferēt. Heare therfore ye house of Israel: Is not my waye right? Or, are not youre wayes rather wicked? When a rightuous mā turneth awaye from his rightuousnesse, and medleth with vngodlynes: he must dye therin: Yee for the vnrighuousnes that he hath done, must he dye. Agayne: when the wicked man turneth awaye from his wickednesse, that he hath done, and doth the thinge which is equall and right: he shal saue his soule alyue. For in so moch as he remembreth himself, and turneth him from all the vngodlynes, that he hath vsed, he shal lyue, and not dye.

And yet saith the house of Israel: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not equall. Are my wayes vnrigh, o ye house of Israel: Are not youre wayes rather vnequall? As for me, I wil indge every man, accordinge to his wayes, O ye house of Israel, saith the LORDE God. Wherefore, be conuerted, and turne you clene from all youre wickednesse, so shal there no synne do you harme. Cast awaye fro you all youre vngodlynesse, that ye haue done: make you new hertes and a new spere. Wherefore wil ye dye, O ye house of Israel: seynge I haue no pleasure in y<sup>e</sup> death of him that dyeth, saith the LORDE God. Turne you then, and ye shal lyue.

whelpes: One of hir whelpes she brought vp, & it became a Lyon: it lerned to spoyle, and to deuoure folke. The Zeithen herde of him, & toke him in their nettes, & brought him in chaynes vnto the londe of Egipte.

Now when the damme sawe, that all hir hope & comfort was awaye, she toke another of hir whelpes, and made a Lyon of him: which wente amonge the Lyons, & became a fearce Lyon: lerned to spoyle and to deuoure folke: he destroyed their palaces, and made their cities waiste: In so moch that the whole londe and euery thinge therin, were utterly desolate, thow the very voyce of his roaringe.

Then came the Zeithen together on euery syde out of all countrees agaynst him, layed their nettes for him, and toke him in their pytte. So they bounde him with chaynes, and brought him to the kinge of Babylon: which put him in prison, that his voyce shulde nomore be herde vpon the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy mother, she is like a vyne in thy bloude, planted by the water syde: hir fentes and braunches are growen out of many waters: hir stalkes were so stronge, that men might haue made staves therof for officers: she grew so hie in hir stalkes.

So when men sawe that she exceded of heith and multitude of hir braunches, she was roted out in displeasure, and cast downe to the ground. The East wynde dried vp hir frute, hir stronge stalkes were broken of, withered and brent in the fyre. But now she is planted in the wilderness, in a drye and thurstie ground. And there is a fyre gone out of hir stalkes, which hath bit vp hir braunches and hir frute: so that she hath no mo stronge stalkes, to be staves for officers. This is a piteous and miserable thinge.

The XX. Chapter.

In the xxij. yere the x. daye of the vii. Moneth, it happened, that certayne of the elders of Israel came vnto me for to a counsell at the LORDE, and sat them downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Speake to the elders of Israel, and saye vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Are ye come hither to aye enythinge at me? As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE,) I will geue you no answer. Wilt thou not reprove them (thou sonne of man) wilt thou not reprove them? Shewethem the abominacions of their forefathers, & tell the: Thus saith the LORDE God: In the daye when I chose Israel, and lift vp myne honde

The xx. Chap.

vpon the sede of the house of Jacob, & shewed my self vnto them in the londe of Egipte: yee when I lifte vp myne honde ouer the, and sayde: I am the LORDE your God, & uen in the daye that I lift vp myne honde ouer them, to bringe them out of the londe of Egipte: in to a londe that I had promysed for them, which floweth with mylke and hony, and is a pleasaunt lode amonge all other. Then sayde I vnto them: Cast awaye euery man the abominacions that he hath before him, and desyle not youre selues with the Idols of Egipte, for I am the LORDE your God.

But they rebelled agaynst me, and wolde not folowe me: to cast awaye euery man the abominacions of his eyes, and to forsake the Idols of Egipte. Then I made them poure my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them: yee euen in the myddest of the londe of Egipte. But I wolde not do it, for my names sake: that it shulde not be vnhalowed before the Zeithen, amonge whom they dwelt, and amonge whom I shewed my self vnto them, that I wolde bringe them out of the londe of Egipte. Now when I had caried them out of the londe of Egipte, and brought them into the wilderness: I gaue them my commaundementes, & shewed the my lawes: which who so kepeth shal lyue in them. I gaue them also my holy dayes, to be a token betwixte me and them, and therby to knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haloweth them. And yet the house of Israel rebelled agaynst me in the wilderness, they wolde not walke in my commaundementes, they haue cast awaye my lawes: (which who so kepeth shulde lyue in them,) and my Sabbath daies haue they greatly vnhalowed.

Then I made me to poure out my indignacion vpon them, & to consume them in the wilderness. Yet I wolde not do it, for my names sake: lest it shulde be dishonoured before the Zeithen, from the which I had caried them awaye. But I swore vnto them in the wilderness, that I wolde not bringe them into the londe, which I gaue them: a londe that floweth with mylke & hony, & is a pleasure of all londes: & y because they refused my lawes, & walked not in my commaundementes, but had vnhalowed my Sabbathes, for their herte was gone after their Idols. Nevertheless myne eye spared the, so y I wolde not utterly slaye the, & consume the in the wilderness. Moreover, I sayde vnto their sonnes in the wilderness: walke not in the statutes of your forefathers, kepe not their ordinaunces, and desyle not youre selues with their Idols, for I am the LORDE your God. But walke in my statutes, kepe my lawes & do them, halowe my Sabbathes: for they are a token betwixte me & you, that ye maye knowe, how y I am the LORDE. Notwithstondinge, their sonnes rebelled agaynst me also: they walked not in my statutes, they kepte not my lawes to fulfill them: which he that doth shal lyue in them: neither halowed they my Sabbath dayes. Then I made me agayne to poure out my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them in the wilderness. Nevertheless I with drewe my honde for my names sake, lest it shulde be vnhalowed amonge the Zeithen, before whom I had brought them forth. I lift vp myne honde ouer them also in the wilderness, that I wolde scatere them amonge the nacions, & strowe them amonge the nacions: because they had not kepte my lawes, but cast asyde my commaundementes, vnhalowed my Sabbathes, and lift vp their eyes to their fathers Idols. Wherefore I gaue them also commaundementes not good, & lawes thow the which they shulde not lyue, & I vnhalowed them in their owne gistes: (when I appoynted for my self all their first borne) to make them desolate: that they might knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Therefore (O thou sonne of man) tell the house of Israel, thus saith the LORDE God: Besyde all this, youre forefathers haue yet blasphemed me more, and greatly offended agaynst me: For after I had brought them in to the londe, y I promysed to geue them, when they sawe euery hie hill & all the thickettes: they made there their offrings, and prouoked me with their oblacions, makinge swete sauours there, & poured out their drinke offerings. Then I axed them: what haue ye to do with all, that ye go thither? And therefore is it called the hie place vnto this daye. Wherefore, speake vnto the house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: Ye are euen as vnclene as youre forefathers, & committe whoredome also with their abominacions. In all youre Idols, where vnto ye bringe youre oblacions, & to whose honoure ye burne youre children: ye desyle youre selues, euen vnto this daye: how darre ye the come, and are eny question at me? O ye householde of Israel: As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) ye get no answer of me: & as for the thinge that ye go aboute, it shal not come to passe, where as ye saye: we wil be as the Zei then, & do as other people in the londe, woe & stone wil we worshipec.

As truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE God) I myself, wil rule you with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme, and with indignacion poured out ouer you: & wil bringe you out of the nacions and londes, wherein ye are scatred: and gather you together with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme & w indignacion poured out vpon you: & wil bringe you into the wilderness of the people, & there I will reason with you face to face. Like as I punished your forefathers in the wilderness, so wil I punish you also, saith the LORDE God. I wil bringe you vnder my iurisdiction, and vnder the bonde of the couenaunt. The forsakers also and the transgressours wil I take from amonge you, & bringe them out of the londe of youre habitation: as for the londe of Israel, they shall not come in it: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Go now then (saith the LORDE God) ye house of Israel, cast awaye, and destroye euery man his Idols: then shal ye heare me, and nomore blasfeme my holy name with youre offrynges and Idols. But vpon my holy hill, eue vpon the hie hill of Israel shal all the house of Israel and all that is in the londe, worshipec me: and in the same place will I saoure them, and there will I requyre youre heauy offrings, and the firstlinges of youre oblacions, with all youre holy thinges.

I wil accepte youre swete sauoure, when I bringe you from the nacions, and gather you together out of the londes, wherein ye be scatred: that I maye be halowed in you before the Zeithen, and that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brought you in to the londe of Israel: yee in to the same lode, that I swore to geue vnto youre forefathers. There shal ye call to remembrance youre owne wayes and all youre ymaginations, wherein ye haue bene desyled: and ye shal be displeased with youre owne selues, for all youre wickednes, that ye haue done. And ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: when I create you after my name, not after your wicked wayes, nor accordinge to your corrupte workes: o ye house of Israel, saith the LORDE.

Moreover, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face toward the south, & speake to the south wynde, and saye to the wodde toward the south: I create the worde of the LORDE, thus saith the LORD God: Beholde, I will kindle a fyre in the, & shal consume the grene trees wth the drye. No man shal be able to quench his flame, but all that loketh from the south to the north, shal be brennt therin: & all flesh shal se, that I the LORD haue kyndled it, so that no man maye quench it. Then sayde J: O LORD, they wil saye of me: Tush, they are but fables, that he telleth.

The XXI. Chapter.

A The worde of the LORD came to me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, speake agaynst the Sanctuary, & prophesie agaynst the londe of Israel, say to the lode of Israel: Thus saith the LORD God: Beholde, I wil vpon the, & wil drawe my swearde out of y<sup>r</sup> sheeth, & rote out of y<sup>r</sup> both the righteous & the wicked. Seinge then that I will rote out of the both the righteous & wicked, therfore shal my swearde go out of his sheeth, agaynst all flesh from the north to the south: that all flesh maye knowe, how that I the LORD haue drawn my swearde out of the sheeth, & it shal not be put in agayne.

Mourne therefore (o thou sonne of man) y<sup>r</sup> thy loynes crack withall, yee mourne bytterly for them: And yf they saye, wherfore mournest thou? Then tell them: for the tydings that cometh, at the which all hertes shal melt, all hondes shal be letten downe, all stomackes shal fayme, and all knees shall waxe feble. Beholde, it cometh & shal be fulfilled, saith the LORD God.

B Agayne, the worde of the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophesie, and speake: Thus saith the LORD God: speake, the swearde is sharpened & wel scoured. Sharpened is it for the slaughter, & secured y<sup>f</sup> it maye be bright. O, the destroyenge staff of my some, shal bringe downe all wodde. He hath put his swearde to y<sup>r</sup> dightinge, y<sup>f</sup> good holde maye be take of it. This swearde is sharpened & dight, y<sup>f</sup> it maye be gotten in to the honde of the manslayer.

Crie (o thou sonne of man) and howle, for this swearde shal smyte my people, & all the rulers in Israel, which with my people shal be slayne downe to the grounde thorow this swearde. Smyte thou vpon thy thee, for, wherfore shulde not the plage & staff of indyement come? Prophecy thou sonne of man, & smyte thine hondes together, make the swearde two edged, yee make it thre edged, y<sup>f</sup> manslayers swearde, that swearde of the greateslaughterer, which shal smyte them, even in their prey chambers: to make them as a shed & sayn te at the hertes, & in all gates to make some of them fall. O how bright and sharpe is, how wel dight & mere for y<sup>r</sup> slaughter: Gethe to some place alone, ether vpon the right honde or on the lefte, whither so ever thy face turneth. I wil smyte my hondes together also, and satisfie my wrothfull indignacion: Euen I the LORD haue sayde it.

The worde of the LORD came yet vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, make the two sretes, that the swearde of y<sup>r</sup> kinge of Babilon maye come. Both these sretes shal go out of one londe. He shal set him vp a place, at the heade of the srete shal he chose him out a corner. Make y<sup>r</sup> a srete, that the swearde maye come toward Rabath of the Ammonites, and to the stronge cite of Jerusalem. For the kinge of Babilon shal stonde in the turnyng of the waye, at the heade of the two sretes: to axe counsell at the soythsayers, casting the lottes with his arrowes, to axe counsell at the Idols, and to loke in the lyner. But the soythsayenge shal poynte to the right syde vpon Jerusalem, that he maye set men of warre, to smyte it with a greates noyse, to crie out Alarum, to set batellrammes agaynst the gates, to grane vpon dyches, & to make bulwoikes.

Nevertheless, as for y<sup>r</sup> soythsayenge, they shal holde it but for vanite, euen as though a iest were tolde them: Yee and they themselves remembre their wickednesse, so that by right they must be take and wome. Therfore saith the LORD God: For so moch as ye youre selues shewe youre effence, and haue opened youre wickednesse, so that in all youre woikes men maye se ye ure synnes: yet in so moch (I saye) that ye youre selues haue made mencion thereof, ye shal be taken by violence.

O thou shameful wicked gyde of Israel, whose daye is come: euen the tyme that wickednesse shal haue an ende: Thus saith the LORD God: take awaye the myre, and put of the crowne, and so is it awaye: the humble is exalted, and the proude brought lowe. Punysh, punysh, yee punysh them wil I, and destroye them: and that shal not be fulfilled, vntill he come, to whom the indyement belongeth, and to whom I haue geue it. And thou (o sonne of man) prophecy, & speake: Thus saith the LORD God to the children of Ammon, & to their blasphemy, speake then: The swearde, the swearde, is drawn forth alreedy to the slaughter, & secured that it glisteth (because thou hast loked the empties, & prophesied lies) y<sup>f</sup> it maye come vpon thy necke, like as vpon the other vngodly, which be slayne: whose daye came, when their wickednesse was full.

Though it were put vpon agayne into the sheath, yet will I punysh the, in the londe wherethou wast nourished & borne, and pouremy indignacion vpon the, and will blowe vpon the in the fyre of my wroth, and deliuer the vnto cruell people, which are lerned to destroye. Thou shalt fede the fyre, and y<sup>r</sup> bloude shal be shed in the londe, that thou mayest be put out of remembraunce. Euen I the LORD haue spoken it.

The XXII. Chapter.

W Quer, the worde of y<sup>r</sup> LORD came vnto me, & sayde: Thou sonne of man, wilt thou not reprove this bloudthirstie cite? Shewe the their abhominacions, & tell them: Thus saith the LORD God: O thou cite, y<sup>f</sup> shedddest bloude in y<sup>r</sup> myddest of the, y<sup>f</sup> thy tyme maye come also: and makest the Idols to defyle the withall. Thou hast made thy self guilty, in y<sup>r</sup> bloude y<sup>f</sup> thou hast shed: & defyled y<sup>r</sup> y<sup>r</sup> Idols, which thou hast made. Thou hast caused thy daies to drawe nye, & made the tyme of thy yeares to come. Therfore will I make y<sup>r</sup> to be confounded amonge the heithen, & to be despised in all the lodes, whether they be nye or farre fro the: they shal laugh y<sup>r</sup> to scorne, thou y<sup>f</sup> hast gotten the so foule a name, & art full of myschefe. Beholde, the rulers of Israel haue brought every man his power, to shed bloude in the. In the haue they despised father & mother, in the haue they oppressed the straunger, in the haue they vered the wyddore & the fatherlesse. Thou hast despised my Sanctuary, and vnhalowed my Sabbath. Murthers are there in the, that shed bloude, & eate vpon the hilles, and in the they vse unhappynesse.

In y<sup>r</sup> haue they discovered their fathers shame, in the haue they vered women in the it selfnesse. Every man hath dealt shamefully with his negheurs wife, & abheminably defyled his daughter in lawe. In the hath every man forced his owne sister, euen his fathers daughter: yee giftes haue bene receaued in the, to shed bloude. Thou hast taken vsury & encreace, thou hast oppressed thy negheours by extorcion, and forgotten me, saith the LORD God. Beholde, I haue smyten my hondes vpon thy couetousnesse, that thou hast used, and vpon the bloude which hath bene shed in the. Is thy herte able to endure it, or maye thy hondes defende them selues, in the tyme that I shal bringe vpon the: Euen I the LORD that speake it, will bringe it also to passe.

I will scatere the amonge the heithen, & strowe the aboute in the lodes, and wil cause thy fylthynesse to cease out off the: yee and I will haue the in possession in the sight of the heithen, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORD.

And the worde off the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, the house of Israel is turned to drosse. All they that shulde be lasse, tynne, y<sup>r</sup> & leade, are in the fyre become drosse. Therfore, thus saith the LORD God: For so moch as ye all are turned in to drosse, beholde: I will bringe you together vnto Jerusalem, like as syluer, bras-se, yron, tynne and leade are put together in the fornace, and the fyre blowen there vnder to melt them: Euen so will I gather you, put you in together, and melt you in my wroth, and indignacion. I will bringe you together, and kyndle the fyre of my cruell displeasure vnder you, that ye maye be melted therein.

Like as the syluer is melted in the fyre, so shall ye also be melted therein: that ye maye knowe, how that I the LORD haue poured my wroth vpon you.

And the worde off the LORD came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, tell her: Thou art an vnclene londe, which is not rayned vpon in the daye off the cruell wroth: thy prophetes that are in the, are sworn together to denoure soules, like as a roaringe Lyon, that lyueth by his pray. They receaue riches and good, and make many wyddowes in y<sup>r</sup>. Thy presies breake my lawe, and defyle my Sanctuary. They put no dyfference betwene the holy and unholy, nether discern betwene the clene and vnclene: they turne their eyes fro my Sabbathes, and I am vnhalowed amonge them.

Thy rulers in the are like ranshynges volues, to shed bloude, and to destroye soules, for their owne covetous lucre. As for thy prophetes, they dawbe with vntempered claye, they se vanities: and prophesie lies vnto them, sayenge: the LORD God sayeth so, where as the LORD hath not spoken. The people in the londe vse wicked erroris and robbery. They vered the poore and needy: and oppresse the straunger agaynst right. And I sought in the londe for a man, that wolde make vpon the hedge, and set him self in the gappe before me in the lodes behalfe, y<sup>f</sup> I shulde not vterly destroye it: but I coude fynde none. Therfore wil I pou re out my cruell displeasure vpon them, and burne them in the fyre of my wrath: the ir owne wayes will I recompence vpon the-ir heades, saith the LORDE God.

The XXIII. Chapter.

The worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, there were two womē, that had one mother: These (when they were yonge) beganne to playe the harlottes in Egypte. There were their brestes brussed, and the pappes off their maydenheade destroyed. The eldest off them was called Oola, and hir yongest sister Ooliba. These two were myne, and bare sonnes and daughters. Their names were, Samaria, and that was Oola: and Jerusalem, that was Ooliba. As for Oola, she beganne to go a whoynge, when I had take her to me. She was set on fyre vpon hir louers the Assirians, which had to do with her: euen the prynces and lordes, that were deckt in costly arayes: sayre yongemen, lusty ryders of horses.

Thus thorow hir whordome, she clenved vnto all the yongemen off Assiria: yee she was made vpon them, and defyled herself with all their Idols. Nether ceased she fro the fornicaciō, that she vsed with the Egyptians: for in hir youth they laye wth her, they brussed the brestes off hir maydenheade, and poured their wordome vpon her. Wherfore, I deliuered her in to y<sup>e</sup> hōdes off hir louers, euen the Assirians, whom she soloued. The se discovered hir shame, toke hir sonnes and daughters, and slewe her with the swearde: An euell name gat she off all people, ad they punyshed her.

Hir sister Ooliba sawe this, ad destroyed herself wth inordinate loue, more then she, z exceeded hir sister in whordome: she loued y<sup>e</sup> Assirians (which also laye wth her) namely, the prynces z greute lordes, that were clothed wth all maner of gorgeous apparell, all lusty hoysmen and sayre yonge personnes. Then I sawe, that they both were defyled a like. But she increased still in whordome: for when she sawe men paynted vpon the wall, the ymages off the Caldees set forth with fresh colours, with sayre gyrdles aboute them, and goodly bonettes vpon their heades, loyng all like prynces (after y<sup>e</sup> maner off the Babilonians and Caldees in their owne londe, where they be borne) Immediatly, as soone as she sawe them, she brent in loue vpon them, and sent messangers for them in to the londe off the Caldees.

Now when the Babilonians came to her, they laye with her, and defyled her with the ir whordome, and so was she polluted with them. And when hir lust was abated from them, hir whordome and shame was discovered z sene: then my herte forsoke her, like as my herte was gone from hir sister also. Neuertheles she vsed hir whordome euen the longer the more, and remembred the dayes off hir youth, wherin she had played the harlot in the londe off Egypte: she brent in lust vpon them, whose flesh was like y<sup>e</sup> flesh off Asses, and their seide like the seide off horses. Thus thou hast renued the fylchynesse off thy youth, when thy louers brussed y<sup>e</sup> pappes, and marred thy brestes in Egypte.

Therfore (o Ooliba) thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God, I will rayse vpon thy louers (with whom thou hast satisfied thy lust) agaynst the, and gather them together rounde aboute the: Namely, the Babilonians, and all the Caldees: Pecod, Schoa and Coa, with all the Assirians: all yonge and sayre louers: prynces and lordes, knyghtes and gentlemen, which be all good hoysmen: These shall come vpon the with horses, charettes, z a grete multitude off people: which shall be harnessed aboute the on euery syde, wth brestplates, sheldes and helmettes. I will punysh y<sup>e</sup> before them, yee they the selues shall punysh the, accordinge to their owne iudgment. I will put my gelousy vpon the, so that they shall deale cruelly with the. They shall cut off thy nose and thine eares, and the remnant shall fall thorow the swearde. They shall carry awaye thy sonnes and daughters, z the residue shall be brent in the fyre. Thy shall stripe the out off thy clothes, z carry thy costly Jewels awaye with them.

Thus will I make an ende off thy fylchynesse z whordome, which thou hast brought out off the lōde off Egypte: so that thou shalt turne thine eyes nomore after them, z cast thy mynde nomore vpon Egypte. For thus saith the LORDE: Beholde, I will dayner y<sup>e</sup> in to the hōdes off them, whom thou hatest: yee euen in to the hondes off them, with whom thou hast fulfilled thy lust, which shall deale cruelly with y<sup>e</sup>: All thy laboure shall they take with them, and leaue the naked and bere, and thus the shame off thy filchy whordome shall come to light. All these thinges shall happen vnto the, because off thy whordome, which thou hast vsed amonge the Gentiles, with whose Idols thou hast defyled y<sup>e</sup> self. Thou hast walked in the waye off thy sister, therfore will I geue the hir cuppe in thy hand.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou shalt drynke off thy sisters cuppe, how depe z farre so euer it be to the botome. Thou shalt be laughed to scorne, and had as greatly in derision, as is possible. Thou shalt be full off diandennes and sorowe, for the cuppe off y<sup>e</sup> sister Samaria is a cuppe off destruccion z waistinge: the same shalt thou drynke, and suppe it out eue to y<sup>e</sup> diegges, yee thou shalt eate vpon the broken peces off it, and so teare thine owne brestes: for euen I haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

Therfore thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: For so much as thou hast forgottē me, z cast me asyde, so beare now thine owne fylchynesse z whordome. The LORDE sayde morouer vnto me, Thou sonne of mā, wilt thou not reprove Oola z Ooliba: Shewethē their abhominaciōs: namely, y<sup>e</sup> they haue brotē their weblocke, z stayned their hōdes wth blonde: yee euen wth their Idols haue they committed aduontry, z offred them their owne children (to be deuoured) whō they had borne vnto me. Yee z this haue they done vnto me also: they haue defyled my Sanctuary in that same daye, z haue vnhalowed my Sabbath. For when they had slayned their childrē for their Idols, they came the same daye in to my Sanctuary, to defyle it. So, this haue they done in my house. Besyde all this, thou hast sent y<sup>e</sup> messangers for men out off farre countrees: and whē they came, thou hast bathed, trymmed and set forth thy self off the best fashion: thou sattest vpon a goodly bed, z a table spied before the: wher vpon thou hast set myne incense and myne oyle.

Then was there greute cheare wth her, z the men y<sup>e</sup> were sent fro farre countrees ouer the deserte: vnto these they gaue bracelettes vpon their hondes, z set glorious crownes vpon their heades. Then thought I: no doubt, these wil vse their harlotry also wth y<sup>e</sup> older whoie. And they wente in to her, as vnto a comon harlot: Euen so wente they also to Oola z Ooliba, those filchy women.

O ye all that loue vertue and rightuousnes, indgethē, punysh them: as aduoutrers and murderers ought to be indged and punyshed. For they are breakers off weblocke, and the blonde is in their hondes. Wherfore thus saith the LORDE God: bringe a greute multitude off people vpon them, and make them bescattered and spoiled: these shall stone them, and gore them with their swearde. They shall slaye their sonnes and daughters and burne vpon their houses with fyre.

Thus will I destroye all such fylchynesse out off the londe: that all women may lerne, not to do after youre vncleynesse. And so they shall laye youre fylchynesse vpon youre owne selues, and ye shall be punyshed for the synnes, that ye haue committed with youre Idols: z ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The XXIII. Chapter.

In the ix. yeare, in the x. Moneth, the x. daye off the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off mā, wyte vpon the name off this daye, yee eue y<sup>e</sup> houre off this present daye: when the kynge off Babilon set himself agaynst Jerusalem. Shewe y<sup>e</sup> obstinate householde a parable, z speake vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE God: Get the a pot, set it on, z poure water in to it: put all the peces together in it, all the good peces: the loyne and the shulder, z fyll it with the best bones. Take one off the best shepe, z an heape off bones withall: let it boyle well, z let the bones seyth well therein.

With that, sayde the LORDE God on this maner: Wo be vnto the bloody cite off y<sup>e</sup> pot, wher vpon the rustynesse hageth, and is not yet scoured awaye. Take out the peces that are in it, one after another: there nede no lottes be cast: therfore, for the blonde is yet in it vpon a playne drye stone hath she poured it, and not vpon the grounde, that it might be couered with dust. And therfore haue I letten her poure hir blonde vpon a playne drye stony rocke, because it shulde not be hid, and that I might bringe my wrothfull indignacion and vengeance vpon her.

Wherfore, thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: O, wo be vnto that blonde hurstie cite, for whō I wil prepare a heape off wodde: beare thou y<sup>e</sup> bones together, kyndle thou the fyre, seeth the flesh, let all be well soddē, that the bones maye be sucked out. Morouer, set the pot emptye vpon the coales, that it maye be warme and the metall hore: that the fylch and rustynesse maye be consumed. But it will not go off, there is so much off it: the rustynesse must be brent out. Thy fylchynesse is abhominable, for I wolde hane clensted the, but thou woldest not be clensted. Thou canst not be pouged from thine vncleynesse, till I haue pouged my wrothfull indignacion vpon the. Euen I the LORDE haue so deuysed: yee it is come therto allredy, that I will do it. I will not go backe, I will not spare, I will not be intreated: but accordinge to thy wayes ad ymaginations, thou shalt be punyshed, saith the LORDE God.

C And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, beholde, I will take awaye the pleasure off thine eyes wth a plague: yet shalt thou nether mourne ner wepe, ner water thy chekes therfore: thou mayest mourne by thy selff alone, but vse no deadly lamentacion. Holde on thy bonet, and put on thy shues vpon thy fete, corner not thy face, and eate no mourners bried. So I spake vnto the people by tymes in the moynynge, and at euen my wyse dyed: then vpon the nexte morow, I dyd as I was commaunded. And y<sup>e</sup> people sayde vnto me: wilt thou not tell vs, what that signifieth, which thou doest? I answered them, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Tell the house of Israel, thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: beholde, I wil suspende my Sanctuary: euē the glory of youre power, the pleasure of y<sup>e</sup> eyes, and the thinge that yeloue: youre sonnes and daughters whom ye haue left, shal fall thorow the swerde.

D Like as I haue done, so shall ye do also: Ye shal not hyde youre faces, ye shal eate no mourners bried: youre bonettes shal ye haue vpon youre heades, 7 shues vpon youre fete. Ye shal nether mourne ner wepe, but in youre symes ye shal be sorowfull, and one repēte with another. Thus Ezechiel is youre shew tokē. For loke as he hath done, so (when this commeth) ye shall do also: that ye maye lerne to knowe, that I am y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God. But beholde, O thou sonne of man: In the daye when I take from them their power, their ioye and honoure, the lust off their eyes, the burthe of their bodies: namely, their sonnes and daughters: The shall there one escape, and come vnto the, for to shewe the. In that daye shal y<sup>e</sup> mouth be opened to him, which is escaped, that thou mayest speake, and be no more domme: Yee and thou shalt be their shew tokē, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst y<sup>e</sup> Ammonites, prophesy vpon them, and saye vnto the Ammonites: heare the worde off the LORDE God, Thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as thou speakest ouer my Sanctuary: A ha, I trow it be now suspended: and ouer the londe of Israel, I trow it be now desolate: yee ad ouer the house of Iuda, I trow they be now led awaye prisoners: Beholde, I will deliuer y<sup>e</sup> to the people of the east, y<sup>e</sup> they maye haue the in possession: these shal set their castels and houses in the. They shall eate thy frute, and drynke vp thy mylke. As for Rabath, I wil make of it a stall for camels, and of Ammon a shepesholde: and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: In so moch as thou hast clapped with thine handes, and stamped with thy fete, yee reioysed in thine herte ouer the londe of Israel with despyte: beholde, I wil stretch out myne hande ouer the also, and deliuer the, to be spoiled off the heithen, and rote the out from amonge the people, and cause the be destroyed out off all londes: yee I will make the be layed waiste, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: For so moch as Moab and Seir do saye: As for the house off Iuda, it is but like as all other Gentiles be: Therfore beholde, I will make the cities off Moab weapenlesse, and take awaye the strength: their cities and chiefe coastes off their londe, which are the pleasures off the countre: As namely, Beresimoth, Baalmea and Cariathaim: these will I open vnto the off the east, y<sup>e</sup> they maye fall vpon the Ammonites: and will geue it them in possession: so that the Ammonites shal no more be had in remembraunce amonge the heithen. Euen thus will I punyssh Moab also, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Morouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Because that Edom hath avenged 7 cast himself vpon the house off Iuda, therfore thus saith the LORDE: I will reach out myne honde vpon Edom, and take awaye man and beast out off it. From Theman vnto Dedan wil I make it desolate, they shal be slayne with the swearde. Thorow my people of Israel, wil I avenge me agayne vpon Edom: they shal haue him, acordinge to my wrath and indignaciō, so that they shal knowe my vengeance, saith the LORDE God.

Thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: For so moch as the Philistynes haue done this: namely, taken vengeance with despitefull stomackes, and off an olde euell will set them selues to destroye: Therfore thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil stretch out myne hande ouer the Philistynes, and destroye the destroyer, and cause all the remnaunt off the se coast to perishe. A greate vengeance will I take vpon them, and punyssh them cruelly: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE, which haue avenged me off them.

The XXVI. Chapter.

22 It happened, that in the xi. yeare, the first daye off the Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, Because that Tyre hath spoken vpon Jerusalem: A ha, now I trow the portes of the people be broken, and she turned vnto me, for I haue destroyed my bely full. Yee therfore saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: Beholde O Tyre, I will vpo the, I wil bringe a greate multitude off people agaynst y<sup>e</sup>, like as whē the see aryseth with his waves: These shal breake the walles off Tyre, and cast downe hir towres: I wil scrape the grounde from her, and make her a bare stone: yee as the dryenge place, where the fyshers hang vpon their nettes by the see syde. Euen I haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God. The Gentiles shal spoyle her: hir daughters vpon the felde shal perishe with the swearde, y<sup>e</sup> they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will bringe hither Nabuchodonosor (which is the kynge off Babilon 7 a kynge off kynges) from the North, vpo Tyre, with horses, charrettes, horsmen and with a greate multitude of people. Thy daughters that are in the londe, shal he slaye with y<sup>e</sup> swearde: But agaynst y<sup>e</sup>, he shall make bullworthes 7 graue vpon dyches aboute the: 7 lift vp his shylde agaynst y<sup>e</sup>. His slynges 7 batelrāmes shal he prepare for thy walles, 7 wth his weapons breake downe thy towres. The dust off his horses shal couer y<sup>e</sup>, they shal be so many: y<sup>e</sup> walles shal shake at the noyse off y<sup>e</sup> horsemen, charrettes 7 wheles: when he cometh to thy portes, as men do into an open cite. With the hofes off his horse fete, shal he treade downe all thy stretes.

He shal slaye thy people wth the swearde, 7 breake downe the pilers off thy strength. They shal waiste awaye thy riches, 7 spoyle y<sup>e</sup> marchaundise. Thy walles shal they breake downe, 7 destroye thy houses off pleasure. Thy stones, thy tymbre 7 foundacions, shal they cast in the water. Thus wil I bringe the melody of thy songes, 7 the voyce off thy mynstrelsy to an ende, so that they shal no more be herde. I wil make a bare stone off the, yee a dryenge place for nettes, and shalt neuer be buydded agayne: For euē I y<sup>e</sup> LORDE haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God: thus saith the LORDE God spoken concernynge Tyre: The Iles shal be moued at the noyse off thy fall, 7 at the crie off the slayne, y<sup>e</sup> shal be murthered in the. All kynges off the see shal come downe from their seates regall: they shal laye awaye their robes, and put off their costly clothinge: Yee with trembling shal they be clothed, they shal sit vpo the grounde: they shal be afayed at thy sodane fall, and be abashed at the.

They shal mourne for the, and saye vnto the: O thou noble cite, y<sup>e</sup> hast bene so greatly occupied off olde, thou that hast bene the strongest vpon the see wth thine inhabitours off whom all men stode in feare: How art thou now so utterly destroyed? Now at the tyme off thy fall the inhabitours off the Iles, yee and the Iles them selues shal stonde in feare at thine ende. For thus saith the LORDE God: when I make the a desolate cite (as other cities be, that no man dwell in) and when I bringe the depe vpon the, y<sup>e</sup> greate waters maye couer the: Then will I cast the downe vnto them, that descende in to y<sup>e</sup> pytte: vnto a people that hath bene longe deed, and set the in a londe y<sup>e</sup> is beneth, like the olde wyldernes, with them which go downe to their graues, so y<sup>e</sup> no mā shal dwell more in the. And I wil make the to be no more in hono<sup>r</sup>, in the lōde off the luyng. I wil make an ende off the, ad thou shalt be gone.

Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou not be founde for euermore, saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God.

The XXVII. Chapter.

28.
The worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou soiane off mā, make a lamentable copla: ynto vpon Tyre, 7 saye vnto Tyre, which is a porte off the see, y<sup>e</sup> occupieth with moch people: and many Iles: thus speaketh y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: O Tyre thou hast sayde: what, I am a noble cite, thy borders are in the myddest off the see, and thy buylders haue made the marvelous goodly. All y<sup>e</sup> tables haue they made off Cipie trees off the mount Senir. Fro Libanus haue they take Cedre trees, to make the mastes: 7 the Ores off Basan to make the rowers.

Thy boordes haue they made off yuery, 7 off costly wod out off the Ile off Cethim. Thy sale was off whyte small nedle worke out off the londe off Egipre, to haue vpo thy mast: 7 thy hanginges off yalow sylcke 7 purple, out off y<sup>e</sup> Iles off Elisa. They off Sidō 7 Arvad were thy maryners, 7 the wysest in Tyre were thy shypmasters. The eldest and wysest at Gebal were they, that mented 7 stopped thy shippes.

All shippes off the see with their shipme occupied their marchaundies in the. The Perses, Lydians and Lybians were in thyne hoost, and helped the to fight: these hang vpon their shildes 7 helmettes with the, these set forth thy beury.

They off Arnad were with thine hoost roude aboute thy walles, & were thy watchmen vpon thy towres: these hanged vp the ir shildes roude aboute thy walles, and made the marnelous goodly. Tharsis occupi-de with the in all maner of wares, in syluer, yiron, tyme and lead, and made thy market grete. Janan, Tubal and Mesch were thy marchautes, which brought the men, & ornamentes off metall for thy occupyenge.
They off the house of Thogarma brought vnto the at the tyme off thy Martre, hoise, hoisemen and mules. They off Dedan were thy marchautes: and many other Iles that occupied with the, brought the wethers, elephant bones and paycockes for a present.
The Sirians occupied with the, because of thy dyuerse workes, and increased thy marchaundies, with Smaragdes, with scarlet, with needle worke, w<sup>h</sup> whyte lyminge cloth,
with sylke and with Chustall.

Juda and the londe off Israel occupide with the, and brought vnto thy markettes, wheate, balme, hony, oyle, & triacle. Damascus also used marchaundies with the, in the best wyne and whyte well: because thy occupienge was so grete, and thy wares so many. Dan, Janan, and Meusal haue brought vnto thy markettes, yronredy made, with Casia and Calamus, acordinge to thyne occupienge. Dedan occupied with the, in fayre tapestry worke and quysshyns. Arabia & all the princes off Cedar haue occupied w<sup>h</sup>
the, in shepe, wethers and goates.

The marchautes off Seba and Rema haue occupied also with the, in all costly spices, in all precious stones and golde, which they brought vnto thy markettes. Zaran, Chene and Eden, the marchautes off Saba, Assiria and Chelmad, were all doers with y<sup>e</sup> and occupied with the: In costly rayment, off yalow sylke and needle worke, (very precious, & therefore pacte & boude together w<sup>h</sup> roapes) Yee and in Cedre wodde, at the tyme off y<sup>e</sup> marcheres. The shippes off Tharsis were the chiefe off thy occupyenge.

Thus thou art full, and in grete woishipe, euen in the myddest off the see. Thy maryners were euer brynginge vnto the out of many waters. But y<sup>e</sup> easte wynde shal ouer-beare the in to the myddest off the see: so y<sup>e</sup> thy wares, thy marchaundies, thy ryches, thy maryners, thy shipmasters, thy helpers, thy occupiers (that brought the thinges necessary) the men off warre that are in the: yee and all thy comons shal perishe in the myddest off the see, in the daye off thy fall. The suburbes shall shake at the loude crie off thy shippmen. All whirry men, and all maryners vpo the see, shall leape out of their bo-tes, and set them selues vpon the lode. They shal lift vp their voyce because off the, and make a lamentable crye. They shall cast dust vpon their heades, ad lye downe in the ashes. They shal shawe them selues, & put sacke cloth vpon them for thy sake.

They shall mourne for the with herfull sorrow, and heuy lamentacion, yee their children also shall wepe for the: Alas, what can hath so bene destroyed in the see, as Tyre is?
Whenthy wares & marchaundies came fro the sees, thou gauest all people ynough. The kynges off the earth hast thou made rich, thorow the multitude off thy wares and occupienge: But now art thou cast downe in to the depe of the see, all thy resorte of people is perished with the. All they that dwell in the Iles are abashed at the, and alle the kynges are afrayed, yee their faces haue cha-unged coloure. The marchautes of the na-cions wondre at the, In that thou art so dene brought to naught, & comest nomore vp.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, tell the prynce of Tyre: Thus saith the LORDE God: because thou hast a proude hert and hast sayde: I am a God, I haue my setein the myddest off the see like a god: where as thou art but a man & not God, & yet stondest in thine owne conceite, that thou art God: Beholde, thou thyntest thy selfe wyser then Daniel, that there is no secretes hyd from y<sup>e</sup>. With thy wysdome & thy vnderstan-dinge, thou hast gotten the grete welthynges, se, and gathered treasure of syluer & golde.
With thy grete wysdome and occupyenge, hast thou increased thy power, and because of thy grete riches thy hert is proude.

Therefore thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: So so moch as thou hast lift vp thine herte, as though thou werst God: beholde, I wil bryn-ge enemies vpon the, euen the tyrantes of the heithen: these shal drawe out their sweades vpon thy benty and wysdome, and shall defyle thy glory. They shal cast the downe to the pytte, so that thou shalt dye in the middest off the see, as they that beslayne. Let y<sup>e</sup> yff thou wilt saye then (before the that slaye y<sup>e</sup>) I am God: where as thou art but a man, and not God, in the bondes of them that slaye the. Dye shalt thou, euen as the vncircumcised in the hodes of y<sup>e</sup> enemies: for I myself haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God.

Moreover, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, make a lamentable complaynte ouer the kyng of Tyre, & tell him: Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou art a seale of a licknesse, full off wysdome & excellent beuty. Thou hast bene in y<sup>e</sup> pleasur gardē off God: thou art decte with all maner of precious stones: with Ruby, Topas, Chustall, Jacyncte, Onyx, Jas-pis, Saphir, Smaragde, Carbūcle, & golde.
Thy benty & y<sup>e</sup> holes y<sup>e</sup> be in y<sup>e</sup> were set forth in the daye of y<sup>e</sup> creacion. Thou art a sayre Cherub, stretched wyde out for to cover.

I haue set the vpon the holy mount off
God, there hast thou bene, and walked amoge the sayre glisteringe stones. From the tyme of thy creacion thou hast bene right excellent, yll wickednesse was founde in the.

Because off thy grete marchaundise, thy hert is full off wickednesse, & thou hast offended. Therefore wil I cast the from the mount off God, (O thou coueringe Cherub) and destroye the amoге the glisteringe stones. Thy hert was proude in y<sup>e</sup> sayre beuty, & thorow thy benty thou hast destroyed thy wysdome.
I wil cast y<sup>e</sup> downe to the grounde, & y<sup>e</sup> in y<sup>e</sup> sight off kynges. Thou hast defyled thy Sactuary, w<sup>h</sup> the grete wickednesse off thy on-rightuous occupyenge. I wil brynge a fyre from the myddest off the, to consume the: ad wil makethe to ashes, in the sight off all the y<sup>e</sup> loke vpon the. All they that haue bene acquainted with the amonge the heithen, shal be abashed at the: seinge thou art so clene brought to naught, and comest no more vp.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face
agaynst Sids, prophecie vpo it, and speake.
Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde o Sidon, I wil vpo the, & get me honoure in the:
that it maye be knowne, how that I am y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, when I punyssh her, & get me honoure in her. For I wil sende pestilence & bloud sheddinge in to hir stretes, so y<sup>e</sup> those which be slayne with the swerde, shal lye rounde aboute in the myddest off her: & they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. She shal no more be a prickinge thorne, & an hurtinge briere vnto the house off Israel, ner vnto the that lye rounde aboute her and hate her: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saith the LORDE God: when I gather the housholde off Israel together agayne, from the nacions amonge whom they be scattered: then shal I be sanctified in the, in y<sup>e</sup> sight off the Gentiles: & they shal dwell in the lode, y<sup>e</sup> I gaue to my seruauit Jacob. They shal dwell safely therein, buylde houses, and plante & nyardes: Yee safely shal they dwell therin, when I haue punysshed all those, that despyse them rounde aboute: and then shal they knowe, y<sup>e</sup> I am the LORDE their God.

The XXIX. Chapter.

In the x. yeare, vpon the xxi. daye off the x. Moneth, the worde of the LOR-DE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off man, set now thy face agaynst Pharao the kyng off Egypte, prophecie agaynst him and agaynst the whole lode off Egypte:
Speake, and tell him, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, o Pharao thou kyng off Egip-te, I wil vpo the, thou grete whallfyshe, y<sup>e</sup> lyest in y<sup>e</sup> waters: Thou y<sup>e</sup> sayest: the water is myne, I haue made it myself. I wil put an hoke in thy chawes, & hāge all the fish in thy waters vpo thy scales: after y<sup>e</sup> I wil drawe the out of thy waters, yee & all the fish of y<sup>e</sup> waters that hange vpon thy scales.

I wil cast the out vpon the dry lode with the fish off thy waters, so that thou shalt lye vpon the felde. Thou shalt not be gathered ner taken vp, but shalt be meate for the beestes of the felde, & for the foules off the ayre:
that all they which dwell in Egypte, maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: because thou hast bene a staff of reede to the house off Israel. When they toke holde off y<sup>e</sup> w<sup>h</sup> their hode thou brakest and prydest them on euery sy-de: and yff they leaned vpo the, thou brakest, ad hurtdest the reynes of their backes. Therfore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: beholde, I wil brynge a swearde vpon the, and rote out of the both man and beast. Yee the londe off Egypte shalbe desolate and waiste, & they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: Because he sayde: the water is mine, I myself haue made it. Beholde therefore, I wil vpon the, & vpon thy waters: I wil make the londe off Egypte waiste and desolate, from the towre off Syenes vnto the borders of the Moiras londe: so that in xl. yeares there shall no fore off man walke there, nether fore off ca-tell go there, nether shal it be inhabited. I wil make the londe off Egypte to be desolate amonge other waiste countrees, and her cities to lye voyde xl. yeares, amonge other voyde cities: And I wil scatre the Egipcians amonge the heithen and nacions.

Agayne, thus sayeth the LORDE God:
When the xl. yeares are expyred, I wil gather the Egipcians together agayne, out off the nacions, amonge who they were scatred, and wil brynge the presoners off Egypte agayne in to the londe off pathures their owne name.

tyne countre, that they maye be there a lowly small kyngdome: yee they shal be the smallest amonge other kyngdomes, lest they exalte them selues aboue the heithen: for I will somynish them, that they shall nomore rule the heithen. They shall nomore be an hope vnto the house off Israel, nether prouoke the enymore to wickednesse, to cause them turne backe, and to folowe them: ad they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE God.

C In the xxvij. yere, the first daye of the first Moneth, came y<sup>e</sup> worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilon hath made his hoost, with greate tranayle and labour to come before Tyre: that every heade maye be balde, and every shulder bare. Yet hath Tyre geuen nether him ner his hoost any rewarde, for y<sup>e</sup> greate tranayle y<sup>e</sup> he hath taken there. Therefore thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: beholde I will gene the lode of Egypte vnto Nabuchodonosor the kyng off Babilon, y<sup>e</sup> he maye take awaye all hir substance, to be his robberies, ad spoyle hir spoyle, to paye his hoost their wagies withall. I wil gene him the londe of Egypte for his labour, that he toke for me before Tyre. At the same tyme wil I cause the home off the house off Israel to growe forth, z open thymouth agayne amonge them: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The XXX. Chapter.

A Eze. 29.
31. 32. W Orner, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophecy z speake: thus saith the LORDE God: Mourne, wo worth this daye, for the daye is here, the daye of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE is come: the darcke daye of y<sup>e</sup> heithen the houre is at hande, the swearde cometh vpon Egypte. When the wounded men fall downe in Egypte, when hir people are taken awaye, and when hir foundacions are destroyed: the Morians londe shal be afayed, yee the Morians londe, Lybia z Lydia, all their comon people, z Chub, z all y<sup>e</sup> be confederate vnto the, shal fall wth the thorow y<sup>e</sup> swearde.

Thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE: The maynteyners of the lode off Egypte shal fall, the pryde of hir power shal come downe: eue vnto the tower off Syenes shal they be slayne downe wth the swearde, saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: amonge other desolate countrees they shal be made desolate, z amonge other waist cities they shal be waisted. And they shal knowe, y<sup>e</sup> I am y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, when I kyndle a fyre in Egypte, z when all hir helpers are destroyed.

At that tyme, shal there messaugers go forth frome in shippes, to make y<sup>e</sup> carelesse Morians afayed: and so we shal come vpon them in the daye of Egypte, for doubtles it shal come. Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil make an ende of the people of Egypte thorow the honde off Nabuchodonosor kyng of Babilon. He and his people with him, yee and the cruell tyrauntes of the heithen shal be brought to destroye the londe. They shal drave out their swearde vpon Egypte and fill the londe full of slaynemen. I wil drye vpon their floudes of water, ad sell the lode into the hondes of wicked people. The lode and all y<sup>e</sup> is therein, wil I destroye thorow the enemies. Eue I the LORDE haue sayde.

And thus saith the LORDE God: I wil destroye the Idols, and brynge the ymages of Noph to an ende. There shal nomore be a pryncce of Egypte, and a fearfulnesse wil I sende into the Egipcians londe. As for Pachures, I wil make it desolate, ad kyndle a fyre in Zoan. Alexandria wil I punyssh, z pere my wroth full indignacion vpon Sin, which is the strength of Egypte. All the sustanmes of Alexandria wil I destroye, and kyndle a fyre in Egypte.

Sin shal be in greate heynesse, Alexandria shal be roted out, and Neph shal haue daylie sorowe. The best men off Helicopolis z Bubasto shal be slayne with the swearde, ad caried awaye captiue. At Taphnis the daye shal be darcke, when I breake there the scepter of the londe of Egypte, and when y<sup>e</sup> pompe of hir power shal haue an ende. A clonde shal couer her, and hir daughters shal be led awaye into captiuite. Thus wil I punyssh Egypte, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

It happened in the xi. yere, vpon the seuenth daye of y<sup>e</sup> first Moneth, y<sup>e</sup> the LORDE's worde came vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man, I wil breake y<sup>e</sup> arme of Pharaos kyng of Egypte: and lo, it shal not be boude vnto be healed, nether shal any playfyr be layed vpon it, for to ease it, or to make it so stronge, as to holde a swearde. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, I wil vpon Pharaos y<sup>e</sup> kyng of Egypte, z brysse his stronge arme (yet is it but a broken one) z wil smyte the swearde out of his honde.

As for the Egipcians, I wil scatere them amonge the heithen, z strowe the in the londes aboute. Agayne I wil strengthen y<sup>e</sup> arme of the kyng of Babilon, z gene him my swearde in his hode: but I wil breake Pharaos arme, so y<sup>e</sup> he shal holde it before him pitifully, like a wounded man.

For I will stabliss the kyng of Babilon's arme, z the armes of Pharaos shal fall downe: that it maye be knowne, that I am the LORDE, which gene the kyng off Babilon my swearde in his hode, that he maye drave it out vpon the londe of Egypte: and that when I scatere the Egipcians amonge the Gentiles, and strowe them in y<sup>e</sup> lodes aboute, they maye knowe, y<sup>e</sup> I am the LORDE.

The XXXI. Chapter.

A Orner, it happened in the xi. yere y<sup>e</sup> first daye of the thirde Moneth, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, speake vnto Pharaos the kyng of Egypte, ad to all his people: Whom art thou like in y<sup>e</sup> greatnesse? Beholde, Assur was like a Cedre tre vpon the mount of Libanus, with sayre braunches: so thick, that he gaue shadowes, and shot out very hye. His toppes reached vnto the cloudes. The waters made him greate, and the depe set him vpon an hye. Rounde aboute the rotes of him ranethere floudes of water, he sent out his litle ryuers vnto all the trees of the felde. Therefore was he hyer than all the trees of the felde, and thorow y<sup>e</sup> multitude of waters that he sent fro him, he opytained many and longe braunches. All foules of the ayre made their nestes in his braunches, vnder his bowes qedried all the beastes of y<sup>e</sup> felde, z vnder his shadow dwelt all people. Sayre and beutifull was he in his greatnesse, and in the length of his braunches, for his rote stode besyde greate waters: no Cedre tre might hyde him. In the pleasant garden of God, there was no fyre tre like his braunches, the playne trees were not like y<sup>e</sup> bowes of him. All the trees in the garden off God might not be copared vnto him in his beuty: so sayre and goodly had I made him with the multitude of his braunches: In so much, y<sup>e</sup> all the trees in the pleasant garde of God, had envye at hi. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: For so much as he hath lift vpon himself so hye, z stretched his toppes in to the cloudes, z seinge his hert is proude in his highnesse: I wil deliuer him in to y<sup>e</sup> hondes of y<sup>e</sup> mightiest amonge y<sup>e</sup> heithen, which shal rote him out. Accordyng to his wickednes wil I cast him awaye, the enemies shal destroye him, z the mighty men of the heithen shal so scatere him, that his braunches shal lye vpon all mountaynes z in all valleys: his bowes shal be broken downe to the grounde thorow out the londe. Then all the people of the londe shal go from his shadowe, and forsake him. When he is falle, all y<sup>e</sup> foules of y<sup>e</sup>

ayre shal sit vpon him, and all wilde beestes of the felde shal go aboute amonge his braunches: so that from hence forth, no tre in the water shal attayne to his hyenesse, nor reach his toppes vnto the cloudes, nether shall any tre off the water stonde so hye, as he hath done. For vnto death shal they all be deliuered vnder the earth, and go downe to y<sup>e</sup> graue, like other men.

Moreover, thus saith the LORDE God: C In the daye when he goeth downe to the graue, I wil cause a lamentacion to be made. I wil couer the depe vpon him, I wil staunch his floudes, and the greate waters shal be restrayned. I shall cause Libanus to be sorowfull for his sake, and all the trees off the felde shal be smytte. I wil make the heithen shate at the sounde of his fall, when I cast him downe to hell, with them y<sup>e</sup> descende in to the pytte. All the trees off Eden, wth all the chosen and best trees of Libanus, yee and all they that are planted vpon the waters, shal mourne with him also in the lower habitacions: for they shal go downe to hell wth him, vnto the that be slayne with the swearde, which dwelt afore vnder the shadow off his arme amonge the heithen. To whom shalt thou be lickened, that art so glorious z greate, amonge the trees off Eden? Yet art thou cast downe vnder y<sup>e</sup> earth (amonge the trees off Eden) where thou must lye amonge the vncircumcised, with them that be slayne wth the swearde. Euen thus is it with Pharaos z all his people, saith the LORDE God.

The XXXII. Chapter.

A In the xij. yere, the first daye of the xij. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take vp a lamentacion vpon Pharaos the kyng of Egypte, z saye vnto him: Thou art reputed as a Lyon of the heithen, z as a whalfish in the see. Thou castest y<sup>e</sup> waters aboute the, thou troublest the waters wth thy fete, and stampest in their floudes. Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil spiede my net ouer y<sup>e</sup>, namely, a greate multitude of people: these shal drye the into my yarne, for I will cast the vpon the lode, and let the lye vpon the felde, that all the foules of the ayre maye sit vpon the: I wil gene all the beastes of the felde ynough off the. Thy flesh wil I cast vpon the hilles, and fill the valleys with thy hyenesse. I wil water the londe with the abundaunce off thy bloude euen to the mountaynes, z y<sup>e</sup> valleys shal be full off the.

When thou art put out, I will cover the heauen, and make his starres dymme. I will

I wil trouble the hertes off many people, when I bringe thy destruccions amonge the heithen and countrees, whom thou knowest not. Yee I will make many people with their kynges so afrayed thorow y<sup>e</sup>, that their hayre shal stonde vp, whē I shake my swearde at their faces. Sodenly shal they be astonnyed, euery man in him self, at y<sup>e</sup> daye of thy fall.

C For thus saith the LORDE God: the kyng of Babilons swerde shal come vpon y<sup>e</sup>, with y<sup>e</sup> swerdes of the worthies will I smyte downe thy people. All they that be mightie amonge the Gētiles, shal waiste the proude pompe of Egipte, and bringe downe all hir people. All the catell also of Egipte wil I destroye, that they shal come nare vnto the waters: so that nether mā nor beast shall claue, shal sterethem any more. Then wil I make their waters cleare, and cause their floudes to runne like oyle, saith the LORDE God: when I make the londe of Egipte desolate, and when y<sup>e</sup> countre with all that is therein, shal be layde waste: and whē I smyte all the which dwell in it, that they maye knowe, that I am the LORDE. This is the mournyng, that the daughters off the heithen shall make: Yee a sorow and lamentaciō shal they take vp, vpon Egipte and all hir people, saith the LORDE God.

D In the xij. yere, the xv. daye of the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man. Take vp a lamentacion vpon the people of Egipte, and cast them downe, yee ad the mightie people of the heithen also, even with the that dwell beneath: and with them that go downe in to the graue. Downe (how saye so ever thou be) and laye the with the vncircumcised. Amonge those that be slayne with the swearde, shal they lye. The swearde is geuen alre dy he shal be diuyned forth and all his people. The mightie worthies and his helpers, y<sup>e</sup> be gone downe and lye with the vncircumcised and with them that be slayne with y<sup>e</sup> swearde: shal speake to him out of the hell.

Assur is there also with his company, ad their graues rounde aboute, which were slayne ad fell all with the swearde, whose graues lye besyde him in the lowe pytte. His cōmōs are buried rounde aboute his graue: all together wounded and slayne with the swearde, which men afore tyme brought feare into y<sup>e</sup> londe off the lynyng.

There is Elam also with all his people, and their graues rounde aboute: which all beyng wounded and slayne with the swearde, are gone downe vncircumcised vnder the earth, which neuertheles som tyme brought feare in to the londe off the lynyng: for the which they beare their shame, with the other that be gone downe to y<sup>e</sup> graue.

Their buryall is geuen them and all their people, amonge them that be slayne. Their graues are rounde aboute all them, which be vncircumcised, and with them that be slayn thorow the swearde: for seynge that in tymes past they made the londe off the lynyng a frayd, they must now beare their owne shame, with them that go downe to the pytte, and lye amonge them, that be slayne.

There is Mesch also and Tubal, and their people, and their graues rounde aboute. These all are amonge the vncircumcised, and them that be slayne with the swearde, because afore tyme they made the londe off the lynyng a frayd.

Shaldest thou then lye also amonge y<sup>e</sup> worthies, and vncircumcised Gētiues? which wth their weapens are gone downe to hel: whose swerdes are layed vnder their heades, whose wickednesse is vpon their bones: because that as worthies, they haue brought feare in to y<sup>e</sup> lōde of y<sup>e</sup> lynyng: Yee amonge the vncircumcised shalt thou be destroyed, and slepe with them, that perished thorow the swearde.

There is the lōde off E dom with hir kynges and prynces also, which wth their strenght are layed by them that were slayne with the swearde, yee amonge the vncircumcised, and them which are gone downe in to the pytte. Moreover, there be all the prynces of the north, with all the Sidonians, which are gone downe to the slayne.

With their feare and strenght they are come to confucion, and lye there vncircumcised, amonge those that be slayne with the swearde: and beare their owne shame, with them that be gone downe to y<sup>e</sup> pytte. Now when pharao seyth this, he shal be comforted ouer all his people, that is slayne with the swearde: both pharao and all his host, saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God. For I haue geue my feare in the lōde of the lynyng. But pharao and all his people shal lye amonge the vncircumcised, and amonge them that be slayne with the swearde, saith the LORDE God.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

A Gayne, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, speake to the childre of thy people, and tell them: When I sende a swearde vpon a londe, yf the people off the londe take a man off their countre, and set him to be their watchman: yf same man (whā he seyth the swearde come vpon the londe) shall blowe the trompet, and warne the people.

Yf a man now heare the noyse off the trompet, he wil not be warned, and the swearde come ad take him awaye: his bloude shal be vpon his owne heade: for he herde the soude off the trompet, and wolde not take hede, therefore his bloude be vpon him. But yf he will receaue warnyng, he shal saue his life. Agayne, yf the watchman se the sweerde come, and shewe it not with the trompet, so yf the people is not warned: yf the swearde comethen, and take eny man from amonge the: the same shal be taken awaye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre off the watchmans honde.

B And now (O thou sonne of man) I haue made the a watchman vnto the house of Israel: that where as thou hearest eny thinge out of my mouth, thou mayest warne them on my behalfe. Yf I saye vnto the wicked: thou wicked, thou shalt surely dye: and thou geuest him not warnyng, that he maye be warre off his vngodly waye: then shall the wicked dye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre of thy honde. Neuertheles yf thou warne the wicked off his waye, to turne from it, where as he yet wil not be turned from it: then shal he dye because off his synne, but thou hast deliuered thy soule.

Therefore (O thou sonne off man) speake vnto the house off Israel, ye saye thus: Our offences and synnes lye vpon vs, and we be corrupte in them: how shulde we then be restored vnto life? Tell them: As truly as I lye (saith the LORDE God) I haue no pleasure in the death off the wicked, but moche rather that the wicked turne from his waye and lye. Turne you, turne you from y<sup>e</sup> vngodly wayes, o ye off the house off Israel. Oh, wherfore will ye dye?

C Thou sonne off man, tell the childre off thy people: The rightuousnes of the rightuous shal not saue him, whan so ever he turneth awaye vnfaihtfully: Agayne, the wickednesse of the wicked shal not hurte him, whan so ever he conuerteth from his vngodlynesse.

And yf rightuousnesse of the rightuous shal not saue his life, when so euer he synneth. Yf I saye vnto the rightuous, that he shall surely lye, and so he trust to his owne rightuousnesse, and do synne: then shall his rightuousnesse be nomore thought vpon, but in the wickednesse that he hath done, he shall dye.

Agayne, yf I saye to the wicked: thou shalt surely dye: and so he turne fro his synnes, and do the thinge that is lausfull and right: In so moche that the same wicked mā geueth the pledge agayne, restoreth that he had taken awaye by robbery, walketh in the cōmandementes off life, and doth no wroge:

Then shall he surely lye, and not dye. Yee the synnes that he had done, shal neuer be thought vpon: For in so moche as he doth now the thyng that is lausfull and right, he shall lye. And yet the childre off thy people saye: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not right, where as their owne waye is rather vnrigh.

D When the rightuous, turneth from his rightuousnesse, and doeth the thyng that is wicked, he shall dye therfore. But yf the wicked turne from his wickednesse, doinge the thinge that is lausfull and right, he shall lye therfore. Yee ye saye: he waye of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE is not equall. O ye house of Israel, I wil iudge euery one of you after his wayes.

In the xij. yere, the v. daye of the Moneth of oure captyuyte, it happened, that one which was fled out of Jerusalem, came vnto me, and sayde: y<sup>e</sup> cite is destroyed. Now the honde off the LORDE had bene vpon me the eueryng, afore this man (which was escaped) came vnto me, and had opened my mouth, vntyll the mornynge that he came to me: Yee he opened my mouth, so yf I was nomore domme. Then came the worde off y<sup>e</sup> LORDE vnto me, and sayde: Thou sonne off man, these that dwell in the waisted londe off Israel, saye: Abraham was but one man, ad he had the londe in possessiō: now are we many, and the londe is geuen vs to possesse also. And therfore tell them: Thus saith the LORDE: In the bloude haue ye eaten, your eyes haue ye lift vp to Idols, and haue shed bloude: shal ye then haue the londe in possession?

Ye leane vpon youre swerdes, ye worke abhominacions, euery one defyleth his neighbours wife: and shal ye then possesse the londe? Saye thou these wordes vnto the: Thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lye, all ye that dwell in this wilbernesse, shall be slayne wth the swearde: what so is vpon the

And as a balet y<sup>e</sup> hath a siuere tune, and is pleasaut to synge, so shalt thou be vnto them: thy wordes shal they heare, but they will not do thereafter. The XXXIII. Chapter.

Unto the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off mā, prophesye agaynst the shepherdes of Israel, prophesye, and speake vnto them: Thus saith the LORDE God: Wo be vnto the shepherdes off Israel, that fede them selues. Shulde not the shepherdes fede y<sup>e</sup> flockes?

Eze. 33. a
1e. 14. b
23. a

Ye haue eaten vp the fatte, ye haue clothed you with the woll: the best fedde haue ye slayne, but y<sup>e</sup> flocke haue ye not noursed: The weake haue ye not holden vp, the sicke haue ye not healed: the broken haue ye not bounde together, the outcastes haue ye not brought agayne: y<sup>e</sup> lost haue ye not sought, but churlishly and cruelly haue ye ruled the. Thus are they scatred here and there without a shepherde: yee all the beastes off the felde deuoure them, and they go astraye.

uc. 4. b

1. Pe. 3. a

My shepe go wandringe vpon all mountaynes and vpon euery hye hill, yee they be scatred abrode in all felde, and there is no man, that careth for them, or seketh after them.

B Therefore o ye shepherdes, heare the worde off the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, for so moch as my shepe are rabbed, and deuoured off all the wyld beestes off the felde, hauyng no shepherde: and seynge that my shepherdes take no regarde off my shepe, but fede them selues only, and not my shepe: Therfore heareth worde off the LORDE, o ye shepherdes: Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Beholde, I myself will vpon the shepherdes, and requyre my shepe from their hondes, and make the cawse from fedynge of my shepe: yee the shepherdes shall fede them selues nemoie: For I will deliuer my shepe out off their mouthes so that they shall not deuoure them after this.

For thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I will loke to my shepe myself, and sette them. Like as a shepherde amonge the flocke seketh after the shepe that are scatred abrode, even so will I seke after my shepe, and gather them together out off all places, where they haue bene scatred in the cloudy and darcke daye. I will bringe them out from all people, and gather them together out off all londes. I will bringe the in to their owne londe, and fede them vpon the mountaynes off Israel, by the ryuers, and in all the places of the countre. I will fede them in right good pastures, and vpon the hie mountaynes off Israel shall there foldes be. There shal they lye in a good folde, and in a fat pasture shall they fede: euen vpon the mountaynes off Israel.

I will fede my shepe myself, and bringe them to their rest, sayeth the LORDE God. Soch as be lost, will I seke: soch as go astraye, wil I bringe agayne: soch as be wounded, will I bynde vp: soch as be weake, will I make stronge: soch as be fat and well lykynge, those will I preserue, and fedethem with y<sup>e</sup> thinge that is lausfull. And as for you, (o my shepe) sayeth the LORDE God: I will put a difference amonge the shepe, amonge the wethers and the goates. Was it not ynough for you, to eat vp the good pasture, but ye must treade downe the residue of youre pasture w<sup>ith</sup> youre fete also? Was it not ynough for you to drynke cleare water, but ye must trouble the residue also with youre fete?

Thus my shepe must be fayne to eat y<sup>e</sup> thinge, that ye haue troden downe with youre fete, and to drynke it, that ye with youre fete haue defyled.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God vnto them: Beholde, I will seuer the fat shepe from the leane: for so moch as ye haue shot the weake shepe ap<sup>er</sup> y<sup>e</sup> sydes and shulders, and runne vpon them with youre homes, so longe till ye haue utterly scatred them abrode. I wil helpe my shepe, so y<sup>e</sup> they shal nomore be spoyled: yee I wil discerne one shepe from another. I wil rayse vp vnto them one only shepherde: euen my seruant Dauid, he shal fede the, and he shal be their shepherde. The LORDE wil be their God, and my seruant Dauid shal be their prince: Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Moreover, I wil make a couenaint of peace with them, and dryue all euell beastes out off the londe: so that they maye dwell safely in the wilderness, and slepe in the woddes. Good fortune and prosperite wil I geue them, and vnto all that be rounde aboute my hill. A prosperous shower and rayne wil I sende them in due season, that the trees in the wode maye bringe forth their frutes, and y<sup>e</sup> ground be hie in increase. They shal be safe in their londe, and shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue broke their yocke, and deliuered them out off the hondes of those, that helde them in subieccion.

They shal nomore be spoyled of the Zeythen, ner deuoured with the beastes of the lōde: but safely shal they dwell, and no man shal fraye them. I wil set vp an excellēt plāte for them, so y<sup>e</sup> they shal suffre no more hunger in the londe, nether beare the reprofe of y<sup>e</sup> Zeythen any more. Thus shal they vnderstonde, that I the LORDE their God am w<sup>ith</sup> them, and y<sup>e</sup> they (euen the house of Israel) are my people, saith the LORDE God. Ye men are my flocke, ye are the shepe of my pasture: and I am youre God, saith the LORDE God.

The XXXV. Chapter.

Ouer, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face toward the mount Seir, prophesye vpon it, and saye vnto it: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, (o thou mount Seir) I will vpon the, I will reach out myne hōde ouer the, yee waiste and desolate wil I make the. Thy cities wil I breake downe, and thou shalt lye voyde: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. For so moch as thou bearest an olde enemyte agaynst the children of Israel, and with a cruel honde hast made them astrayed, what tyme as they were troubled and pynished for their synne: Therefore, as truly as I lyue (saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God) I wil prepare the vnto bloude, yee bloude shal folowe vpon the: seinge thou layest waite for bloude, therefore shall bloude persecute the. Thus wil I make the mount Seir desolate and waiste, and bringe to passe, that there shall no man go thither, ner come from thence. His mountaynes wil I fyll w<sup>ith</sup> his slayne men: thy hilles, dales and valleys shall ye fyll of them, that are slayne with y<sup>e</sup> swerde. I wil make the a perpetuall wilderness, so that no man shal dwell in thy cities: y<sup>e</sup> ye maye knowe, how y<sup>e</sup> I am the LORDE.

And because thou hast sayde: what, both these nations and both these londes must be myne, and I wil haue them in possession, where as the LORDE was there. Therefore, thus saith the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will hōde the accordinge to thy wrath and gelousy, like as thou hast dealt cruelly with them: that I maye be knowne amonge them, how I haue pynished the. Yee and that thou also mayest be sure, that I the LORDE haue herde all thy despyreful wordes, which thou hast spokē agaynst the mountaynes of Israel, sayenge: Lo, they are made waiste, and genen vnto deuoure.

Exo. 25. c

Thus with youre mouthes ye haue made youre boost agaynst me, yee and multiplied youre proude wordes agaynst me, which I haue herde altogether. Where vnto, thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: when the whole worlde is in wealth, then wil I make the waiste. And like as thou (o mount Seir) wast glad, because the heretage of the house of Israel was destroyed: euen so wil I do vnto the also, that thou and whole Edom shall be destroyed, and knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Eze. 25. c

The XXXVI. Chapter.

Thou sonne of man, prophesye vpon the mountaynes of Israel, and speake: Thus saith the LORDE God: Because ye<sup>r</sup> enemy hath sayde vpon you: A ha, y<sup>e</sup> hie euerlastynge places are now become ours: prophesye therfore, and speake: thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: Seinge ye be waisted and trode downe on euery syde, and become a possession vnto y<sup>e</sup> residue of y<sup>e</sup> Gētilles, which haue brought you in to mēs mouthes, and vnto an euil name amonge y<sup>e</sup> people: Therefore, heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God vnto the mountaynes and hilles, valleys and dales, to the voyde wildernesses and desolate cities, which are spoyled, and had in derision on euery syde, amonge the residue of the Zeythen: Yee euen thus saith the LORDE God: In the fyre of my gelousy haue I taken a deuoyce, agaynst the residue of the Gētilles, and agaynst all Edom: which haue taken in my lōde vnto the selues for a possession: which also reioysed fro their whole herte w<sup>ith</sup> a despyreful stomacke, to waiste it, and to spoyle it.

Eze. 6. c

Eze. 35.

B prophesytherfore vpon the londe of Israel, speake vnto y mountaynes and hilles, to valleys and dales, thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, this haue I deuysed in my ge lousy and terrible wraith: For so moch as ye haue suffred reprose of the heithen, therfore thus saith the LORDE God: I haue sworn, that the Gentiles which lye aboute you, shal beare youre confucion them selues. And as for you (o mountaynes of Israel) ye shall shute out youre braunches, and bringe forth youre frute to my people of Israel, for it is harde by, that it wil come.

Beholde, I come vnto you, and vnto you will I turne me, that ye maye be tyllled and sown. I wil sende you moch people, which shalbe all of the house of Israel: the cities shalbe inhabited, and y decayed places shal be repayed againe. I wil piquyde you with moch people and catell, which shal increase z bringe frute. I wil restore yow to youre olde estate, and shewe you more kindnes the ener ye had before: wherby ye shal knowe, y I am the LORDE. Yee people wil I sende vnto you (o my folke of Israel) which shal haue the in possession, and thou shalt be their inheritaunce, so that thou shalt nomore be without them. Agayne, thus saith the LORDE God: For so moch as they saye vnto you: thou art an eater vp of men, and a waister of thy people: therfore thou shalt eate no more, nether destroye thy people enymore, saith the LORDE God. And I wil not suffre the, for to heare thine owne confucion amonge the Gentiles from henceforth. Thou shalt not beare the reprose of the nations, ner cast out thine owne people enymore, saith the LORDE God.

Moreover, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne of ma, when the house of Israel dwelt vpon their owne grounde, they defyled them selues with their owne wayes z ymaginacions: so that in my sight their waye was like the vncleanness of a menstruous woman. Wherfore I poured my wrothfull displeasure vpon them, because of the bloude that they had shed in the londe, z because of their Idols, wherwith they had defyled them selues. I scared them also amonge the heithen, so that they were strowed aboute in the lodes. Accordinge to their wayes z after their owne inuencions, so dyd I punyssh them.

D Now when they were gone vnto the heithen, and come in amonge them, they dishonoured my holy name: so that it was sayde of them: Are these the people of God, z must go out of their owne londe: Then spake I my holy name, which y house of Israel had dishonoured amonge the Gentiles, to whom they came. Therfore tell y house of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: I do not this for yow sakes (O house of Israel) but for my holy names sake, which ye dishonoured amonge the heithen, when ye came to them. Therfore, I wil halowe my greate name agayne, which amonge the Gentiles is euil spoken of: for ye youre selues haue dishonoured it amonge them. And the Gentiles shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I am honoured in you before their eyes, saith y LORDE God.

As for you, I wil take you from amonge the heithen, and gather you together out of all countrees, and bringe you agayne into youre owne londe. Then will I poure cleare water vpon you, z ye shalbe cleane: yee from all youre vncleynesse and from all yow Idols shal I cleanse you. A new herte also wil I geue you, and a new sprete wil I put in to you: As for that stony herte, I will take it out of youre body, and geue you a fleshy herte. I wil geue you my sprete amonge you, and cause you to walke in my commaundementes, to kepe my lawes, and to fulfill them.

And so ye shall dwell in the londe, that I gaue to yow forefathers, z ye shal be my people, and I wil be youre God. I wil helpe you out of all youre vncleynesse, I wil call for the come, and wil increase it, and wil let you haue no hunger. I will multiplie the frutes of the trees and y increase of the felde for you, so that ye shal beare no more reprose of hunger amonge the heithen. Then shal ye remember yow owne wicked wayes, and youre ymaginacions, which were not good: so that ye shal take displeasure at youre owne selues, by reason of youre synnes and abhominacions.

But I wil not do this for youre sakes (saith the LORDE God) be ye sure of it. Therfore (o ye house of Israel) be ashamed of your synnes. Moreover, thus saith the LORDE God: what tyme as I shal clese you from all youre offences, then wil I make the cities to be occupied agayne, and wil repaye the places that be decayed. The desolate londe shal be buylded agayne, which afore tyme laye waiste, in the sight of all them, that were by. Then shal it be sayde: This waiste lode is become like a garden of pleasure, and the voyde, desolate and broke downe cities, are now stronge, and sensed agayne. Then the residue of the heithen that lye rounde aboute you, shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which repaye that was broken downe, and plante agayne, that was made waiste. Enen I the LORDE haue spoken it, z wil do it in dede.

Thus saith the LORDE God: I wil yet once be founde agayne of y house of Israel, z do this for them: I shal increase them as a stocke of men. Like as the holy stocke and the stocke of Jerusalem are in the hie solampne feastes: so shal also the wilde waisted cities be filled with flockes of men: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

The honde of the LORDE came vpon me, z caried me out in the sprete of the LORDE, z let me downe in a playne felde, that laye full of bones, z he led me rounde aboute by them: z behelde, the bones that laye vpon the felde, were very many, z marvelous dye also. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man: thinkest thou these benes maye lyue agayne? I answered: O LORDE God, thou knowest. And he sayde vnto me: prophesy thou vpon these bones, z speake vnto them: Ye drye bones, heare the worde of the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE God vnto these bones: Beholde, I will put bieth into you, that ye maye lyue: I wil geue you synowes, z make flesh growe vpon you, z couer you ouer with skynne: z so geue you bieth, that ye maye lyue, and knowe, that I am the LORDE.

So I prophecied, as he had comaunded me. And as I was prophecyinge, there came a noyse and a greatemocion, so that the benes rame euery one to another. Now when I had looked, behelde, they had synowes, and flesh grewe vpon them: and aboute they were couered with skynne, but there was no bieth in them. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man, prophesy thou towarde the wynde: prophesy, and speake to the wynde: Thus saith the LORDE God: Come (o thou ayie) from the foure wyndes, z blowe vpon these slayne, that they maye be restored to life. So I prophecied, as he had comaunded me: Then came the bieth vnto them, and they receaued life, and stode vp vpon their feete, a marvelous greate sort.

Moreover, he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel. Beholde, they saye: our bones are dried vp, our hope is gone, we are cleane cut of. Therfore prophesy thou, z speake vnto them. Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil open youre graues (o my people) z take you out of youre sepulchres, z bringe you into the londe of Israel agayne. So shall ye knowe y I am the LORDE, when I open your graues, z bringe you out of them. My sprete also wil I put in you, z ye shall lyue: I wil set you agayne in youre owne londe, and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue sayde it, and fulfilled it in dede.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take a stick and wyte vpon it: Vnto Juda z to the children of Israel his companions. Then take another stick, and wyte vpon it: Vnto Joseph the stocke of Ephraim, and to all the householde of Israel his companions. And thou take both these together in thine honde, so shal there be one stocke of them. Now yf the childre of thy people saye vnto the: wilt thou nor shewe vs, what thou meanest by these? Then geue them this answer: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil take the stocke of Joseph, which is in the honde of Ephraim, and of the trybes of Israel his felowes, and wil put them to the stocke of Juda, z make them one stocke, and they shal be one in my honde. And the two stickes where vpon thou wytest, shalt thou haue in thine honde, that they maye se, and shalt saye vnto them:

Thus saith the LORDE God: beholde, I wil take awaye the childre of Israel from amonge the heithen, vnto whom they begone, and wil gather them together on euery syde, and bringe them agayne in to their owne londe: yee I wil make one people of the in y londe, vpon the mountaynes of Israel, and they all shal haue but one kinge. They shall nomore be two peoples from henceforth, neither be denyded in to two kingdomes: they shal also defyle the selues nomore with their abhominacions, Idols and all their wickeddoinges. I wil helpe the out of all their dwellinge places, wherin they haue synned: z will so clense them, that they shalbe my people, and I their God.

Dauid my sernaunt shalbe their kinge, z they all shal haue one shepherde only. They shal walke in my lawes, and my commaundementes shal they both kepe z fulfill. They shal dwell in the londe, that I gaue vnto Iacob my sernaunt, where as youre fathers also haue dwelt. Yee cū in the same londe shal they, their children, z their childrens children dwell for euermore: and my sernaunt Dauid shal be their euerlastyng prince. Moreover, I will make a bonde of peace with them, which shal be vnto them an euerlastyng couenant. I wil sattel the also, and multiplie them, my Sanctuary wil I set amonge the for euermore.

My dwellinge shalbe wth them, yee I wil be their God, & they shalbe my people. Thus the heithen also shal knowe, that I the LORDE am y<sup>e</sup> holy maker of Israel: whē my Sanctuary shal be amonge them for ever more.

The XXXVIII. Chapter.

Unto the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face towardes Gog in the londe of Magog, which is the chiefe pryncce at Mesech and Tubal: prophesy agaynst him, and saye: Thus saith the LORDE God: O Gog thou chiefe pryncce of Mesech and Tubal: beholde, I wil vpon the, and wil turne the aboute, and put a bytt in thy charmes: I wil bringe the forth and all thine hoost, both horse & horsmen, which be all weapened of the best fashion: a greate people, that handle alge the speares, shyldes, and swerdes: the Perses, Morians and with them the Lybians, which all beare shyldes and helmettes: Gomer, and all his hoostes: the house of Thogoma out of the north quarters, and all his hoostes, yee and moch people with the.

Therefore prepare the, set thy self in aray with all thy people, that are come vnto the by heapes, and bethou their defence. A few many dayes thou shalt be visited, and in the latter yeares thou shalt come in to the lode, that hath bene destroyed with the swerde, & now is replenished agayne wth dyuerse people vpon the mountaynes of Israel, which haue lōgelyen waist. Yee they be brought out of the nations, & dwell all safe. Thou shalt come vp like a stormy wether, to couer the lode, and as it were a darcke cloude: thou with all thine hoostes, and a greate multitude of people with the.

Morouer, thus saith the LORDE God: At the sametyme shal many thinges come in to thy mynde, so that thou shalt imagyn myschefe, and saye: I wil vp to yonder playne londe, seinge they syt at ease, and dwell so safely (for they dwell all without eny walles, they haue nether barres nor doies) to spoyle them, to robbe the, to laye honde vpon their so wel inhabited wildernesses: agaynst that people, y<sup>e</sup> is gathered together from amonge the heithen, which haue gotten catell and good, and dwell in the myddest of the londe. Then shal Saba and Dedan and the marchantes of Tharsis wth all their Worthies, saye vnto the: Art thou come to robbe? Hast thou gathered thy people together, because thou wilt spoyle: to take syluer and golde: to carry awaye catell and good: and to haue a greate pray?

Therefore, o thou sonne of man, thou shalt prophesy, and saye vnto Gog: Thus saith the LORDE God: In that daye thou shalt knowe, that my people of Israel dwell safely: and shalt come from thy place, out of the north partes: thou and moch people wth the, which ryde vpon horses, wherof there is a greate multitude and an innumerable sort. Yee thou shalt come vpon my people of Israel, as a cloude to couer the lode. This shal come to passe in the latter dayes: I wil bringe the vp in to my londe, that the heithen maye knowe me, when I get me honour vpon the (o Gog) before their eyes.

Thus saith the LORDE God: Thou sonne of man, of whom I haue spoken aforetyme, by my seruantes y<sup>e</sup> prophetes of Israel, which prophesied in those dayes & yeares, that I shulde bringe the vpon them. At the sametyme, when Gog cometh vp in to the londe of Israel (saith the LORDE God) shal my indignaciō go forth in my wrath. For in my gelousy and hote displeasure I haue denysed, that there shalbe a greate trouble in the londe of Israel at that tyme. The very fysshes in the see, the foules of the ayre, the bestes of the felde, and all the men y<sup>e</sup> are vpon the earth, shal tremble for feare of me.

The hilles also shalbe turned vpside downe, the stayres of stone shal fall, and all walles shal syncke to the grunde. I wil call for a swerde vpon them in all my mountaynes, saith the LORDE God: so that euery mans swerde shal be vpon another. With pestilence and bloude wil I punyssh him: stormy rayne and hale stones, fyre and brymstone, wil I cause to rayne vpon him and all his heape, yee and vpon all that greate people that is with him. Thus wil I be magnified, honoured, and knowne amonge the heithen: that they maye be sure, how y<sup>e</sup> I am y<sup>e</sup> LORDE.

The XXXIX. Chapter.

Therfore o thou sonne of man, prophesy agaynst Gog, and speake: Thus saith the LORDE God: Beholde, o Gog: thou chiefe pryncce at Mesech and Tubal, I wil vpon the, and turne the aboute: & carie the forth, & lede y<sup>e</sup> from the north partes, and bringe the vp to the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy bowe, I wil smyte it out of thy left honde, and cast thine arrowes out of thy right honde. Thou with all thine heape, and all the people that is with the, must fall vpon the mountaynes of Israel. Then wil I geue the vnto y<sup>e</sup> foules and wilde bestes of the felde, to be deuoured: there must thou lye vpon the felde: for enē I the LORDE haue spoken it, saith the LORDE God. In to Magog, and amonge those that sit so careless in the Isles: wil I sende a fyre, and they shal knowe, y<sup>e</sup> I am the LORDE. I wil make also the name of my holynesse to be knowne amonge my people of Israel: and I wil not let my holy name be euil spoken of enymore: but the very heithen also shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, the holy one of Israel. Beholde, it cometh, and shalbe fulfilled in dede, saith the LORDE God. This is the daye, wherof I haue spoken: They that dwell in y<sup>e</sup> cities of Israel, shal go forth, and set fyre vpon the weapons, and burne them: shyldes and speres, bowes and arrowes, bylles and clubbes: seven yeares shal they be burnyng the of, so that they shal els bunge no stikes from y<sup>e</sup> felde, nether haue ned to hew downe eny out of the wodde: for they shal haue weapons ynew to burne. They shal robbe those that robbed them, and spoyle those that spoyled them, saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God.

At the sametyme wil I geue vnto Gog, a place to be buried in, in Israel: enē the valley, wher the thow men go from the east to the see warde: Those that trauaile therby, shal abhorre it. There shal Gog and all his people be buried: and it shalbe called the valley of the people of Gog. Seven monethes longe shal the house of Israel be burienge of them, that they maye clense the lode: Yee all the people of the londe shal burie them, O it shalbe a glorious daye, when I get me that honoure, saith the LORDE God. They shal ordeine men also to be deedburiers, euery goyng the thow the lode, and appoynte them certayne places to bury those in, which remaine vpon the felde, that the londe maye be clensed. From ende to ende shal they seke, and that vpon monethes lōge. Now those that go thow the londe, wher they see a mans bone, they shal set vp a token by it, till the deedburiers haue buried it also, in the valley of the people of Gog. And the name of the cite shalbe called Hamona: Thus shal they make the londe clene.

And thou sonne of man thus saith the LORDE God: Speake vnto all the foules and euery hyde, yee and to all the wilde bestes of the felde: heape you together and come, gather your route aboute vps my slaughter, that I haue slayne for you: euē a greate slaughter vpon the mountaynes of Israel: eate flesh, and drynke bloude. Ye shal eate y<sup>e</sup> flesh of the worthies, and drynke the bloude of the prynces of the londe: of the wethers, of the lambes, of the goates, and of the open that be all slayne at Dasan. Eate y<sup>e</sup> fat you: re bely full, and drynke bloude, till ye be dronken of the slaughter, which I haue slayne vnto you. Syl you at my table, with horses & stronge horsmen: with captraynes and all me of warre, saith the LORDE God.

I wil bringe my glory also amonge the Gentiles, that all the heithen maye sempr indgment, that I haue kepte, and my honde: which I haue layed vpon them; that y<sup>e</sup> house of Israel maye knowe, howe that I am y<sup>e</sup> LORDE their God, from that daye forth. And the heithen shal knowe, that where as the house of Israel were led in to captiuyte: it was for their wickednes sake, because they offended me.

For the which cause I hyd my face from them, and deliuered them in to the bondes of their enemies, that they might all be slayne with the swerde. According to their vncleynesse I didon faithfull dealinges, so haue I treated them, and hyd my face from them. Therefore thus saith y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: Now wil I bringe agayne the captiuyes of Jacob, and haue mercy vpon the whole house of Israel, and be gelous for my holy names sake. All their confusion and offence that they haue done agaynst me, shal be taken awaye: and so safely shal they dwell in their londe, that no man shal make them a frayd. And when I haue brought the agayne from amonge the people, when I haue gathered them together out of their enemies londes, and am praysed in them before many heithen: then shall they knowe, that I am the LORDE their God, which suffred them to be led in to captiuyte amonge the heithen, but now haue brought them agayne in to their owne londe, and not left one of them yonder.

After that, wil I hyde my face nemo: re from them, but will poure out my spire vpon the house of Israel, saith the LORDE God.

The xl. Chapter.

In the xxv yeare of oure captiuyte, in the begynnyng of the yeare, the xxv daye of the moneth: that is the xiiij yeare, after that y<sup>e</sup> cite was smytten downe: the same daye came the honde of the LORDE vpon me, and caried me forth: euē in to the londe of Israel brought he me in the visions of God: and set me downe vps a marvelous hie mountayne, wher vpon there was a buyldinge (as it had bene of a cite) toward the north.

Thither he caried me, and beholde, there was a man, whose similitude was like bras, which had a threde of flax in his honde, and a meterodde also. He stode in the dore, & sayde vnto me: marcke well with thine eyes, herken to with thine eares, and fasten in thine hert, what so euer I shal shewe the, for to the intent that they might be shewed the, therfore art thou brought hither. And what soeuer thou seest, thou shalt certifie the house of Israel therof.

Beholde, there was a wall on the outsyde rounde aboute the house: the meterodde that he had in his honde, was six cubites longe & a spanne. So he measured the bredth of the buyldinge, which was a meterodde, and the heyth also a meterodde. Then came he vnto the east dore, and wente vpon the staires, & measured the postes of the dore: the postes were a meterodde thicke. The dore was a meterodde longe, & the postes were a meterodde longe. The chambers were six cubites hye, & the postes of the dore within the house, were a meterodde. He measured also the dore of the ynnmer dore, which conteyned a meterodde. The measured he the entrie of the dore, that conteyned eight cubites, and his pilers two cubites: and this entrie stode inwarde.

The chambers of the dore eastwarde, were thre on euery syde: alike brode and longe. The pilers also that stode of both the sydes, were of one measure. After this, he measured the wydenesse of the dore: which was x cubites, & the heyth of the dore xij cubites. The edge before the chabres was one cubite brode vpon both the sydes, & the chambers six cubites wyde of either syde. He measured yf dore from the rygge of one chabre to another, whose wydenesse was xxv cubites, & one dore stode agaynst another. He made pilers also lx cubites hye, rounde aboute the courte dore. Before the inwarde parte vnto the fore entrie of the ynnmer dore, were fiftie cubites. The chambers and their pilers within, rounde aboute vnto yf dore, had syde wyndowes: So had the fore entries also, whose wyndowes wente rounde aboute within. And vpon the pilers there stode date trees.

Then brought he me in to the fore courte, where as were chabres & paved workes, made in yf fore courte rounde aboute: xxx chabres vpon one paved worke. Now the paved worke was a loge besyde the doies, and that was the lower paved worke. After this, he measured yf bredth from the lower dore, vnto the ynnmer courte of the out syde, which had an hundred cubites vpon the east & the north parte. And the dore in the vttermost courte toward the north, measured he after the length and bredth: his thre chambers also on either syde, with his pilers & fore entries: which had euen the measure of the first dore. His heyth was fiftie cubites, the bredth xx cubites: his wyndowes & porches with his date trees, had euen like measure as the dore toward the east: there where vij steppes to go vp vpon, & their porche before them. Now yf dore of the ynnmer courte stode straight ouer agaynst the dore, that was toward the north east. From one dore to another, he measured an C cubites.

After that, he brought me to the south syde, where there stode a dore toward the south: these pilers and porches he measured, that had the first measure, & with their porches they had wyndowes rounde aboute, like the first wyndowes. The heyth was l cubites, yf bredth xxv, with steppes to go vp vpon: his porche stode before him, with his pilers and date trees on either syde. And the dore of the ynnmer courte stode toward the south, & he measured from one dore to another an C cubites. So he brought me into yf ynnmer courte, thorow the dore of the south syde, which he measured, & it had the measure afore sayde. In like maner, his chambers, pilers and fore entries, had euen the fore sayde measure also. And he had with his porches rounde aboute, wyndowes of l cubites hye, & xx cubites brode. The porches rounde aboute were xxv cubites longe, and v cubites brode: and his porch reached vnto yf vttermost courte: vpon his pilers there were date trees, and vij steppes to go vp vpon.

He brought me also in to the ynnmost courte vpon the east syde, and measured the dore, according to yf measure afore sayde. His chambers, pilers and porches had euen the same measure, as the first had: & with his porches he had wyndowes rounde aboute. The heyth was l cubites, yf bredth xxv cubites: his porches reached vnto the vttermost courte: his pilers also had date trees on either syde, and vij steppes to go vp vpon. And he brought me to the north dore, and measured it, which also had the fore sayde measure. His chambers, pilers and porches had wyndowes rounde aboute: whose heyth was l cubites, and the bredth xxv. His pilers stode toward the vttermost courte, and vpon them both were date trees, and vij steppes to go vp vpon. There stode a chambre also, whose entrance was at the dore pilers, and there the burnt offerings were washed.

In the dore porche, there stode on either syde two tables for the slaughtering: to slay the burnt offerings, synne offerings and trespass offerings ther vpon. And on the outsyde as men go forth to the north dore, there stode two tables. Four stables stode on either syde of the dore, that is vij tables, wher vpon they slaughtered. Four tables were of hewen stone for the burnt offerings, of a cubite and a half longe and brode, and one cubite hye: wher vpon were layed yf vessels and ornaments, which were vsed to, the burnt & slayne offerings, when they were slaughtered. And within there were hokes four synners brode, fastened rounde aboute, to hang the offring flesh. On the outsyde of the ynnmer dore were the synners chambers in the inwarde courte besyde yf north dore, & agaynst the south. There stode one also for the east dore northwarde.

And he sayde vnto me: This chambre on the south syde belongeth to the prestes, & kepe the habitacion: and this toward the north, is the prestes that wayte vpon the altar: which be the sonnes of Sadock, that do seruyce before the LORDE in steade of the children of Levi. So he measured the fore courte, which had in length an C cubites, and as much in bredth by the foure corners. Now the altar stode before the house: And he brought me to the fore entrie of the house, and measured the walles by the entre dore: which were fyue cubites longe on either syde. The thicknesse also of the dore on either syde, was thre cubites. The length of the porche was xx cubites, the bredth xj. cubites, and vpon steppes went men vp to it: by the walles also were pilers, on either syde one.

The xli. Chapter.

After this he brought me to the temple, and measured the postes: which were of both the sydes vj. cubites thicke, according to the wydenesse of the tabernacle. The bredth of yf dore was x. cubites, & the walles of the dore on either syde fyue cubites. He measured the length therof, which conteyned xl. cubites, and the bredth xx. The wente he in, and measured the dore postes, which were two cubites thicke: but the dore itself was six cubites, and the bredth of the dore was vij. cubites. He measured the length and bredth therof, which were euery one xx. cubites, before the temple.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the holiest of all. He measured also the wall of the house, which was six cubites. The chambers yf stode rounde aboute yf house, were euery one foure cubites wyde, and one stode harde vpon another, wherof there were xxxij. And there stode postes beneth by the walles rounde aboute the house, to beare the vp: but in yf wall of yf house they were not fastened. The syde chambers were the hyer the wyder, and had steppes thre row them rounde aboute yf house. Thus was it wyder above, that from the lowest men might go to the hyest & myddle chambers. I sawe also that the house was very hye rounde aboute. The foundation of the syde chambers was a meterodde (that is six cubites) brode. The thicknesse of the syde wall without, conteyned fyue cubites, & so small of the chambers in yf house.

The chambers, was the wyde rounde aboute yf house. The dore was ouer agaynst the outsyde, & was toward the north, yf south: and the thicknesse was v cubites rounde aboute. The dore was lxx cubites wyde: the wall of the buyldinge was v cubites thicke. The dore was lxx cubites wyde, and the length foure score cubites and ten. So he measured the house which was an C. cubites longe, and the separated buyldinge with the wall were an C. cubites longe also. The wydenesse before the house and of it yf was separated toward the east, was an C. cubites.

And he measured the length of the buyldinge before and behinde with the chabres vpon both the sydes: and it conteyned an C. cubites. The ynnmer temple, the porch of the fore courte, yf syde postes, these thre had syde wyndowes, and pilers rounde aboute ouer agaynst the postes, from the grounde vp to the wyndowes: The wyndowes themselves were syled ouer with bordes: & thus was it above the dore, vnto the ynnmost house, and without also: Rec the whole wall on euery syde both within and without was syled ouer w greute bordes. There were Cherubins and date trees made also, so that one date tree stode euery betwixte two Cherubins: One Cherub had two faces, yf face of a man lookinge asyde toward the date tre, and a Lyons face on the other syde. Thus was it made rounde aboute in all the house: Rec the Cherubins and date trees were made from the grounde vp above the dore, and so stode they also vpon the wall of the temple.

The bypostes of the temple were foure squared, and the fashion of the Sanctuary was, euen as it appeared vnto me afore in yf vision. The table was of wodde, thre cubites hie and two cubites longe: his corners, the length and the walles were of wodde. And he sayde vnto me: This is the table, that shal stonde before the LORDE. The temple and the holiest of all had ether of them two dores, and euery dore had two litle wickettes which were folden in one vpon another, on euery syde two. And vpon the dores of the temple there were made Cherubins and date trees, like as vpon the walles: and a greates thicke balke of wodde was before on the out syde of the porche. Vpon both the sydes of the walles of the porche, there were made depe wyndowes and date trees, hauynge beames and balkes, like as the house had.

The XLII. Chapter.

Now carried he me out in to the fore court towards the north, and brought me into the chamber, that stode ouer agaynst the backebuyldinge northwarde, which had the length of an hundred cubites, whose dore turned towards the north. The wydenesse conteyned L. cubites, ouer agaynst the xx. cubites of the ynnemmer court, and agaynst the paved worke that was in the fore court. Besyde all these thre there stode pilers, one ouer agaynst another. And before this chamber there was a walkinge place of x. cubites wyde, and within was a waye of one cubite wyde, and their dores towards the north. Thus the hyest chambers were allwaye narrower then the lowest and myddelmest of the buildinge: for they bare chambre vpon chambre, and stode thre together one vpon another, not hauynge pilers like the fore court: ether fore were they smaller then those beneth and in the myddest, to reken from the grounde vwarde.

The wall without that stode by the chambers towards the vttemost court vpon the fore syde of the chambers, was L. cubites longe: for the length of the vttemost chambers in the fore court was L. cubites also: but the length thereof before the temple was an C. cubites. These chambers had vnder them an inraunce of the east syde, whereby a man might go into them out of the fore court, thorow the thicke wall of the fore court towards the east, right ouer agaynst the separated buyldinge. Before the same buyldinge vpon this syde there were chambers also which had a waye vnto them, like as the chambers on the north syde of the same length and wydenesse.

Their inraunce, fashion and dores were all of the same maner. Yee even like as the other chamber dores were, so were these also of the south syde. And before the waye towards the syngers steppes on the east syde, there stode a dore to go in at. Then sayde he vnto me: The chambers towards the north and the south, which stode before the backebuyldinge: those be holy habitacions, wherein the priestes that do seruyce before the LORDE, must eate the most holy offringes: and there must they laye the most holy offringes, meates, offringes, synneoffringes and trespassoffringes, for it is an holy place. When the priestes cometherin, they shal not go out into the fore court: but (seyng they be holy) they shal leaue the clothes of their ministracion, and put on other garmentes, when they haue any thinge to do with the people.

Now when he had measured all the ynnemmer house, he brought me forth thorow the east porte, and measured the same rounde aboute. He measured the east syde with a meter odde, which rounde aboute conteyned v. C. meter oddes. And the north syde measured he, which conteyned rounde aboute euen so much. The other two sydes also towards the south and the west (which he measured) conteyned ether of them v. C. meter oddes. So he measured all the foure sydes where there wente a wall rounde aboute v. C. meter oddes longe, and as brode also, which separated the holy from the unholy.

The XLIII. Chapter.

When he brought me to the dore, that was in the north wall towards the east. Beholde, there came the glory of the God of Israel from out of the east, whose voyce was like a greates noyse of waters, and the earth was lightened with his glory. His sight tolde vpon was like the first, that I sawe, when I wente in, what tyme as the cite shulde haue bene destroyed: and like the vision that I sawe by the water of Cobar. Then fell I vpon my face, but the glory of the LORDE came in to the house thorow the east dore. So a wyndetoke me vp, and brought me into the ynnemmer court: and beholde, the house was full of the glory of the LORDE.

I herde one speakinge vnto me out of the house, and there stode one by me, that sayde vnto me: O thou sonne of man, this room is my seate, and the place of my foostepes: where as I wil dwell amonge the children of Israel for euermore: so that the house of Israel shal nomore defyle my holy name: neither their kinges, thorow their whoredome, thorow their hie places, and thorow the deed bodies of their kinges: which haue buylded their thresholde in maner harde vpon my thresholde, and their postes almost at my postes: so that there is but a bare wall betwixte me and them.

Thus haue they defyled my holy name with their abhominacions, that they haue comitted. Wherefore I haue destroyed them in my wrath: But now they shal put awaye their whoredome and the deed bodies of their kinges out of my sight, that I maye dwell amonge them for euermore. Therefore (O thou sonne of man) shewe thou the householde of Israel a temple, that they maye be ashamed of their wickednesse, and measure them selues an example therat.

And when they be ashamed of all their workes, then shewe them the fourme and fashion of the temple: the comynge in, the goinge out, all the maner and descripcion thereof, yee all the vses and ordinaunces of it, and they maye kepe and fulfill all the fashions and customes thereof.

This is the descripcion of the house: Above vpon the mount rounde aboute all the corners, it shal be the holiest of all. Beholde, that is the descripcion and fashion of the house. This is the measure of the aulter (after the true cubite, which is a spanne longer then another cubite) his botome in the myddest was a cubite longe and wyde, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute it, was a spanne brode. This is the heighth of the aulter: From the grounde to the lower steppes the length is two cubites, and the bredth one cubite: and from the lower steppes to the higher are foure cubites, and the bredth but one cubite.

The aulter was foure cubites hie, and from the aulter vwarde stode foure homes, and it was xij. cubites longe and xij. cubites brode, vpon the foure corners: the coueringe of the aulter was xiiij. cubites longe and brode vpon the foure corners, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute, had half a cubite: and the botome thereof rounde aboute one cubite: his steppes stode towards the east. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, thus saith the LORDE God: these are the ordinaunces and lawes of the aulter, in the daye when it is made, to offre burnt offringes, and to sprenkle bloude ther vpon. To the priestes, to the Levites that be of the seide of Sabach, and treade before me to do me seruyce, saith the LORDE God: Vnto these geue thou a yonge bullocke, for a synoffringe: and take the bloude of him and sprenkle his foure homes withal, and the foure corners of the aulter coueringe, with the ledge that goeth rounde aboute the re with shalt thou cleanse it, and reconcile it. Thou shalt take the bullocke also of the synoffringe, and burne him in a seuerall place with out the Sanctuary.

The nexte daye, take a goot buck without blemish for a synoffringe, to reconcile the aulter withal: like as it was reconciled with the bullocke. Now when thou hast made it cleane, then offre a yonge bullocke without blemish, and a ramme out of the flocke without blemish also: Offre them before the LORDE, and let the priest cast salt ther vpon, and geue them so vnto the LORDE for a burnt offringe. Euen dayes shalt thou bringe, euery daye a goot bucke. A yonge bullocke and a ramme of the flocke (both without blemish) shalt they offre. Seuen dayes shalt they reconcile and cleanse the aulter, and offre vpon it. When these dayes are expired, then vpon the viij. daye and so forth, the priestes shal offre their burnt offringes and health offringes vpon the aulter: so wil I be mercifull vnto you, saith the LORDE God.

The XLIII. Chapter.

When he brought me agayne to the outward dore of the Sanctuary on the east syde, and that was shut. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: This dore shal be stil shut, and not opened for any man to go thorow it, but only for the LORDE God of Israel: yee he shal go thorow it, els shal it be shut still. The pryncce himself shal comethorow it, that he maye eate bread before the LORDE. At the porche shal he come in, and there shal he go out agayne. Then brought he me to the dore, vpon the north syde of the house. And as I looked aboute me, beholde, the glory of the LORDE fylled the house: and I fell downe vpon my face. So the LORDE spake vnto me: O thou sonne of man, fasten this to thine herte, beholde, and take diligence to do all that I wil saye vnto thee, concerninge all the ordinaunces of the LORDE and all his lawes: ponde well with thine herte the comynge in of the house and the goinge forth of the Sanctuary: and tell that obstinate householde of Israel: Thus saith the LORDE God: O house of Israel, ye haue now done ynough with all youre abhominacions, seyng that ye haue brought in to my Sanctuary strangers, hauynge vncircumcised hertes and flesh, where thorow my Sanctuary is defiled, when ye offre my bread, fat, and bloude.

Thus with all youre abhominacions ye haue broken my couenaunt, and not kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary.

but set keepers of my Sanctuary, euen after your owne mynde. Therfore thus saith the LORD God: Of all the straungers that dwell amonge the childre of Israel, no straunger (whose herte & flesh is not circumcised) shal come within my Sanctuary: Nor the Lewites that be gone backe from me, and haue disceined the people of Israel with errorres, goinge after their Idols: therfore shal they beare their owne wickednes. Shulde they be set and ordered to minstre, vnder the doores of the house of my Sanctuary: and to do seruyce in the house to slaye burnt offerings and sacrifices for y<sup>e</sup> people: to stonde before them, and to serue them: seynge the seruyce that they do them, is before their Idols, and causeth the house of Israel to stumbe thorow wickednesse?

For the which cause I haue plucked out myne honde ouer them (saith the LORD) so that now they must beare their owne iniquyte, and not to come nyeme, to serue me with their priestheade, in my Sanctuary, and most holiest of all: that they maye beare their owne shame and abominacions, which they haue done. Shulde I vse them to be porters of the house, and to all the seruyce y<sup>e</sup> is done therein? But the prestes y<sup>e</sup> Leuites the sonnes of Sadoch, that kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary, when the children of Israel were gone fro me: shal come to me, to do me seruyce, to stonde before me, and to offre me the fat and the bloude, saith the LORD God.

They shal go into my Sanctuary, and treade before my table, to do me seruyce, and to waite vpon myne ordinaunces. Now when they go in at the doores of the ynnmer court, they shal put on lynnynge clothes, so that no woll yne come vpon them: whyle they do seruyce vnder the doores of y<sup>e</sup> ynnmer court, and within. They shal haue sayre lynnynge bonettes vpon their heades, and lynnynge bieches vpon their loynes, which in their labour they shal not put aboute them: And when they go forth to the people in to the outwarde court, they shal put of the clothes, wherin they haue ministred, and laye them in the habitation of the Sanctuary, & put on other apparell, lest they on halowe y<sup>e</sup> people with their clothes.

They shal not shawe their heades, ner norish the bushe of their hayre, but rounde their heades only. All the prestes that go into the ynnmost court, shal drynke no wyne. They shal mary no wydowe, nether one that is put from hir husbonde: but a mayde of the seide of the house of Israel, or a wydowe, that hath had a priest before.

They shal shewe my people the difference betwene the holy and unholy, betwene the cleane and vncleane. If eny discorde arise, they shal discerne it, and geue sentence after my iudgmentes. My solempne feastes, my lawes and ordinaunces shal they kepe, and halowe my Sabbathes. They shal come at no deed persone, to defyle themselves: (excepte it be father or mother, some or daughter, brother or sister that hath had yet no husbonde) in soch they maye be defyled.

And when he is clenfed, there shal be tened vnto him vij dayes: and yf he go into the Sanctuary agayne to do seruyce, he shal bringe a synoffrynge saith the LORD God. They shal haue an heretage, yee I saye: I will be their heretage: els shall ye geue the no possession in Israel, for I am their possessor. The meatoffrynge, synoffrynge & trespassoffrynge shal they eate, and euery dedicatione in Israel, shal be theirs. The firstlinges of all the first frutes, and all frewill offrynges shal be the prestes.

Ye shall geue vnto the priest also the firstlinges of youre dowe, that God maye prosper the resydue. But no deed carion shal the priest eate, ner soch as is deuoured of wilde bestes, foules or catell.

The XLV. Chapter.

When ye denyde the lode by the lode, ye shal put asyde one parte for the LORD, to be holy from other lodes: namely, xxv meter oddes longe, and xiii meter brode. This shal be holy, as wyde as it is rounde aboute. Of this parte there shal be longe vnto the Sanctuary v meter oddes in all the foure corners; and I cubites wyde rounde aboute to the suburbs. And from this measure, namely of xxv meter oddes longe, and xiii meter brode, thou shalt measure, wherin the Sanctuary and the holiest of all maye stonde.

The resydue of that holy ground shal be the prestes, which do seruyce in the Sanctuary of the LORD, and go in before the LORD to serue him, that they maye haue rowme to dwell in.

As for the Sanctuary, it shal stonde for itself: and to the Lewites the serue in that house, there shal be geuen xx habitacions, of the xxv meter length & xiii meter bredth: ye shal geue also vnto the cite a possessiō of v meter oddes brode, & xxv meter longe, besyde the parte of y<sup>e</sup> Sanctuary: that shal be for the whole house of Israel. Vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuarys parte, & by the cite, there shal be geuen vnto the prynce, what so ener lyeth ouer agaynst the cite, as farre as reacheth westwarde and eastwarde: which shal be as longe as one parte, fro y<sup>e</sup> west vnto y<sup>e</sup> east.

This shal be his owne lode in Israel, that my princes be no more chargeable vnto my people. And soch as remayneth yet ouer in the londe, shal be geuen to the house of Israel accordinge to their trybes. Thus saith the LORD God: O ye princes, ye haue now oppressed and destroyed ynough: now leane of, handle now accordinge to the thinge, that is equall and lausfull: and thrust out my people nomore, sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORD God. Ye shal haue a true weight, a true Epha, & a true Bat.

The Epha & the Bat shal be a like. One Bat shal cōteyne y<sup>e</sup> tēth parte of an Homer, and so shal one Epha do: their measure shal be after y<sup>e</sup> Homer. One Sytle maketh xx. Seas. So xx. Sycles, and xxv. & xxv. Sycles make a pounce. This is the heane offrynge, that ye shal geue to be heaved: namely, the xvi. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of wheat: and the xvi. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of barlie. The oyle shal be measured with the Bat: euen the x. parte of one Bat out of a Cor.

Ten Battes make one Homer: for one Homer maketh ten Battes. And one labe from two hundred shepe out of the pasture of Israel, for a meatoffrynge, burnt offrynge and healthoffrynge, to recōcile them, sayeth the LORD God. All the people of the londe shal geue this heane offrynge with a frewill. Agayne, it shal be the prynces parte to offre burnt offrynges, meatoffrynges and drynt offrynges vnto the LORD, in the holy dayes, new Moones, Sabbathes, and in all the hye feastes of the house of Israel. The synoffrynge, meatoffrynge, burnt offrynge & healthoffrynge shal he geue, to recōcile the house of Israel. Thus sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORD God: The first daye of the first moneth thou shalt take a yōge bullocke without blemish, and clense the Sanctuary.

So the priest shal take of the bloude of y<sup>e</sup> synoffrynge, and sprenkle it vpon the postes of the house, and vpon the foure comers of the aluter, with the dore postes of the ynnmer court. And thus shalt thou do also the seventh daye of y<sup>e</sup> moneth (for soch as haue synned of ignorance, or beyng disceined) to reconcile the house withall. Vpon y<sup>e</sup> xiiij. daye of the first moneth ye shal kepe Easter. Seven dayes shal the feast contynue, wherin there shal no sower ner leuēded bred be eate.

Vpon the same daye shal y<sup>e</sup> prynce geue for himself and all the people of the londe, a bullocke for a synoffrynge. And in the feast of the seven dayes he shal offre enery daye a bullocke & a ram, that are without blemish, for a burnt offrynge vnto the LORD: & an he gaoze daylie for a synoffrynge. For the meatoffrynges he shal geue enery an Epha to a bullocke, an Epha to a ram, & an Hin of oyle to an Epha. Vpon y<sup>e</sup> xv. daye of the seventh moneth, he shal kepe the seven dayes holy one after another, eue as the other vij. dayes: with the synoffrynge, burnt offrynge, meatoffrynge, and with the oyle.

The XLVI. Chapter.

Thus sayeth the LORD God: y<sup>e</sup> dore of the ynnmer court toward the east, shal be shut the vij. worke dayes: but in the Sabbath and in the daye of the new Moone, it shal be opened. Then shal the prynce come vnder the dore porche, & stonde still without by the dore cheke. So y<sup>e</sup> prestes shal offre vpon his burnt & healthoffrynges. And he shal worshipec at the dore poste, and go his waye forth agayne: but y<sup>e</sup> dore shal nomore be shut till the euenynge.

On the same maner shal the people of the londe also do their worshipec before the LORD, without this dore vpon the Sabbathes and new Moones. This is now the burnt offrynge, that the prynce shal bringe vnto the LORD vpon the Sabbath: sixe lambes without blemish, & a ram without blemish, and an Epha for a meatoffrynge, with y<sup>e</sup> ram. As for the lambes, he maye geue as many meatoffrynges to them, as he wil, & an Hin of oyle to an Epha. In the daye of the new moneth, it shal be a yōge bullocke without blemish, sixe lambes & a ram also without blemish. With the bullocke he shal geue an Epha, and with the ram an Epha also for a meatoffrynge: but to y<sup>e</sup> lambes, what he maye come by: And enery an Hin of oyle to an Epha. When the prynce cometh, he shal go vnder the dore porche, and euen there departe forth agayne. But when the people of the londe come before the LORD in the hye solempne feast, as many as come in by the north dore to do worshipec, shal go out agayne at the south dore. And they that come in at the south dore, shal go forth agayne at y<sup>e</sup> north dore. There shal none go out at the dore where he came in, but shal go forth right ouer on the other syde, and the prynce shal go in and out amonge them.

Vpon the solempne and hie feaste dayes, this shal be the meatoffrynge: An Epha to a bullock, and an Ephra to a ram: and to the lambs, as many as he wil, but euer an hin of oyle to an Ephra. Now when the pryncce bryngeyth a burnt offeringe or an healt offeringe with a fre wil vnto the LORDE, the east doire shalbe opened vnto him, y he maye do with his burnt & healt offeringes, as he doth vpo the Sabbath: and when he goeth forth, the doire shal be shut after him agayne. He shal daylie brynge vnto the LORDE a lambe of a yeare olde without blemish for a burnt offeringe: this shal he do euery moynynge. And for a meat offeringe he shal geue the sixte parte of an Ephra, & the thirde parte of an hin of oyle (to myngle with the cakes) euery moynynge. Yee this shalbe a daylie meat offeringe vnto the LORDE, for an euerlastinge ordinaunce: & thus shal the lambe, the meat offeringe and oyle be geuen euery moynynge, for a dailie burnt offeringe.

Moreover, thus sayeth the LORDE God: If the pryncce geue a gifte vnto eny of his sonnes, then shall it be his sonnes heretage perpetuall, y he maye possesse it. But yf he wil geue one of his seruantes some of his heretage, it shall be his to the fre yeare, and the to retorne agayne vnto y pryncce: for his heretage shalbe his sonnes only. The pryncce also shal take none of the peoples enheritaunce, ner put the from their possession: but to his owne sonnes shal he geue his possession, that my people be not scatred abiede, but that euery man maye haue his owne.

And he brought me thorow the intrance at the syde of the doire to y habitacion of the Sanctuary, that belongeth to y prestes and stode towarde the north, & beholde, there was a place vpon the west syde, then sayde he vnto me: This is the place, where the prestes shal dight the trespase and synofferynges, & bake y meat offeringes: that they nede not beare the in to the outwarde courte, and so to vnhalowe the people. So he brought me in to the vttemost courte, rounde aboute all the foure corners. Beholde, in enery corner of y fore courte, there was yet a litle courte. Yee in all the foure corners of the courte, there was made a litle courte of xl. cubites longe, and xxx. cubites brode: these foure litle courtes were of one like measure, & there went a rygge wall rounde aboute them all foure, vnder the which there were hartes made rounde aboute. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the Ezechin, where the ministers of the house shal dight the slayne offeringes of the people.

The XLVII. Chapter.

After this he brought me agayne before the doire of the house: & beholde, there gusheth out waters from vnder y postes of the house eastwarde (for the house stode towarde the east) that ranne downe vpo the right syde of the house, which lyeth to the aulter south warde. The carried he me out to the north doire, and brought me forth there rounde aboute by the vttemost doire, y turneth eastwarde. Beholde, there came forth the water vpon the right syde. Now when the man y had the meterodde in his honde wente out vnto the east doire, he measured a M. cubites, & the he brought me thorow y water, eue to the ancles: so he measured yet a thousande, & brought me thorow y water agayne vnto the knees: yet measured he a thousande, and brought me thorow the water vnto the loynes. After this he measured a thousande agayne, then was it such a ryuer, y I might not wade thorow it: The water was so depe, that it was nedefull to haue swymmed, for it might not be waded ouer. And he sayde vnto me: hast thou seen this, o thou sonne of man: and with that, he brought me to the ryuer bank agayne.

Now when I came there, there stode many trees vpon ether syde of the ryuer backe. Then sayde he vnto me: This water that floweth out towarde the east, and runneth downe in to the playne felde, commeth in to the see: and from the see it runneth out, & maketh the waters whole. Yee all that liue and moue, where vnto this ryuer commeth, shal recover. And where this water cometh, there shalbe many fish. For all that cometh to this water, shal be lusty and whole. By this riner shal the fysshers stonde from En gaddi vnto En Eglaim, & there spredde out their nettes: for there shalbe greates heapes of fish, like as in the mayne see. As for his claye and pyttes, they shal not be whole, for why, it shalbe occupide for salt.

By this ryuer vpon both the sydes of the shore, there shall growe all maner of fruitefull trees, whose leaues shal not fall of, neither shal their fruite perishe: but euer berispe at their monethes, for their water runneth out of the Sanctuary. His fruite is good to eate, and his leafe profitable for medycine. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Let this be the border, wherein ye shall denyde the lond vnto the xij. trybes of Israel, with the lyne. Parte it indifferently vnto one as vnto another: of the which lode I swore vnto you before fathers, that it shulde fall to youre enheritaunce.

This is the border of the londe vpon the north syde, from the mayne see, as men go to Zabadah: namely, Hemath, Beratha, Sabatim: from the borders of Damascus and Hemath vnto Hazer Tichon, that lieth vpon the coastes of Hauera. Thus the borders fro the see forth, shalbe Hazer Euan, the border of Damascus the north, and the borders of Hemath: that is the north parte.

The east syde shal ye measure from Hauera and Damascus, from Galead and the londe of Israel by Jordane and so forth, from the see coast, that lieth eastwarde: and this is the east parte.

The south syde is, from Thamar south to the waters of strife vnto Cades, the ryuer, to the mayne see: and that is the south parte.

The west parte: namely the greates see from the borders therof, till a man come vnto Hemath: this is the west parte.

This londe shal ye parte amonge you, accordinge to the trybes of Israel, and denyde it to be an heretage for you, and for the straungers that dwel amoge you, and begette children.

For ye shal take them amonge the childre of Israel, like as though they were of youre owne housholde and countre, and they shal haue heretage with you amonge the childre of Israel.

Like in what trybe the straunger dwel- leth, in the same trybe shal ye geue him his heretage, saith the LORDE God.

The XLVIII. Chapter.

These are y names of the trybes that lye vpon the north syde, by the waye of Hetlon, tyll thou comdest vnto Zemarath and Hazer Euan, the borders of Damascus towarde the north besyde Hemath: Dan shal haue his porcion from the east quarter vnto the west. Vpon the borders of Dan from the east syde vnto the west, shal Aser haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Aser fro the east parte vnto the west, shal Nephthali haue his porcion.

Vpon the borders of Nephthali from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Manasses haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Manasses from the east syde vnto the west, shal Ephraim haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ephraim from the east parte vnto the west, shal Ruben haue his porcion. Vpo the borders of Ruben from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Iuda haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Iuda from the east parte vnto the west, ye shal set a syde one porcion of xxx. M. meteroddes longe and brode (like as another porcion from the east syde vnto the west, wherein the Sanctuary shal stode.

As for the porcion, that ye shal separate out for the LORDE, it shalbe xxx. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Which separated holy porcion shal belonge vnto these: namely to the prestes, towarde the north xxx. M. & towarde the west x. M. brode, towarde the east x. M. brode also, & towarde the south xxx. M. longe, wherein the Sanctuary of the LORDE shal stonde. Yee this same place shal be the prestes, y are of the childre of Sadoch, & haue kepte my holy ordinaunce: which wente not astraye in the erreure of the childre of Israel, like as the Leuites are gone astraye: and this separated pece that they haue of the londe, shalbe the most holy, harde vpon the borders of the Leuites. And nexte vnto the prestes, shal the Leuites haue xxx. M. longe and x. M. brode. This shalbe on euery syde xxx. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Of this porcion they shal sell nothinge, ner make eny permutacion therof, lest the chiefe of the lond fall vnto other, for it is halowed vnto the LORDE.

The other v. M. after the bredth, y lyeth by the xxx. M. shalbe comon: it shal belonge to the cite and to the suburbs for habitacions, and y cite shal stonde in the myddest therof. Let this be the measure: towarde y north parte, v. C. & iiij. M.: towarde the south parte, v. C. & iiij. M.: towarde the east parte, v. C. and iiij. M.: towarde y west parte, v. C. and iiij. M.

The suburbs harde vpon the cite, shall haue towarde the north, L. and ij. C.: towarde the south, L. and two C.: towarde the east, L. and two C.: towarde the west also, L. and two C. As for the residue of the length, that lyeth hard vpon the separated holy ground: namely, x. M. towarde the east and x. M. towarde the west, next vnto the holy porcion: it and the increase therof shal serue for their meate, that laboure in the cite. They shall laboure for the welth of the cite, shall mainteine this also, out of what tribe so euer they be in Israel.

All that is separated of the xxx. M. longe and xxx. M. brode on the foure partes, y shall ye put a syde for the separated porcion of the Sanctuary, & for the possession of y cite. The residue vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuary and possession of the cite, shall belonge to the pryncce, before the place of y xxx. M. vnto the east ende, & before the place of y xxx. M. westwarde, vnto the borders of 3 cite: this shalbe 3 prynces porciō. This shalbe the holy place, and the house of the Sanctuary shal stonde in the myddest. Mor over, from the Levites and the cities possession, 3 lye in the myddest of the prynces parte: loke what remaineth betwixte the border of Juda & the border of Ben Jamin, it shal be the prynces.

Now of the other trybes.

Frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Ben Jamin haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ben Jamin frō the east syde vnto 3 west, shal Symeon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Symeon from the east parte vnto the west, shal Isachar haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Isachar from the east syde vnto the west, shal Sabulon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Sabulon from the east parte vnto the west, shal Gad haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Gad southwarde, the coastes shal reach frō Thamar south vnto the waters of strife to Cades, and to the floude, euen vnto the mayne see.

This is 3 lōde & his porciōs, which ye shal distribute vnto the trybes of Israel, saith 3 LORDE God. Thus wyde shal the cite reach: vpon the north parte vC and iiii M measures. The portes of the cite, shal haue the names of the trybes of Israel. The portes of 3 north syde: One Ruben, another Juda, the thirde Levi.

Vpō 3 east syde, vC & iiii M measures, & 3 thie portes: The one Joseph, another Be Jamin, the thirde Dan. Vpon the south syde vC and iiii M measures, with the thie portes: the one Symeon, another Isachar, the thirde Sabulon. And vpon the west syde vC and iiii M measures, with thie portes also: the one Gad, another Asser, the thirde

Nephthali. Thus shal it haue xviij M measures rounde aboute. And from that tyme forth, 3 name of the cite shal be:
the LORDE is there.

The prophet Daniel.

The first. Chapter.

In the thirde yeare of 3 raigne of Joachim kynge off Juda, came Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon vnto Jerusalem, & beseged it: and the LORDE deliuered Joachim the kynge off Juda in to his hande, with certayne ornamentes of the house off God, which he caried awaye vnto the londe of Sennar, to the house of his god and there broughth them in to his gods treasury. And the kynge spake vnto Asphenes 3 chese chamberlayne, that he shulde brynge him certayne of the children of Israel, that were come of the kynge's sede and of prynces, yōge spryngaldes with out eny blemish but sayne & wel fauored, instructe in all wisdom, conrynge and vnderstōdinge: which were able to stonde in the kynge's palace, to reade, and to lerne for to speake Caldeish.

Vnto these the kynge appoynted a certayne porcion of his owne meate and of the wyne, which he diantke himselff, so to nourish the thie yere: that afterwarde they might stonde before the kynge. Amonge these now were certayne of the children off Juda: namely Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias. Vnto these the chese chamberlayne gaue other names, and called Daniel, Balthasar: Ananias, Sydrac: Misael, Misac: and Azarias, Abdenago. But Daniel was at a poynt w himselff, that he wolde not be defyled thow the kynge's meate, ner 3 wyne which he dyantke. And this he desyred off the chese chamberlayne, lest he shulde defyle himselff. So God gaue Daniel fauoure and grace before 3 chese chamberlayne, that he sayde vnto him: I am afrayed off my lorde the kynge, which hath appoynted you youre meate and drynke: lest he spye youre faces to be worse lykynge then the other spryngaldes of youre age, & so ye shal make me lose my heade vnto 3 kynge.

Then Daniel answered Melassar, whom the chese chamberlayne had set ouer Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias, and sayde: O proue but ten dayes with thy seruantes, and let vs haue potage to eate, and water to drynke: then loke vpon oure faces, and theirs that eate off the kynge's meate. And as thou seyst, so deale with thy seruantes. So he consented to them in this matter, & proued the 10 dayes. And after 3 ten dayes, their faces were better lykynge & fatter, then all the yōge spryngaldes, which ate of the kynge's meate.

The ii. Chap. Ho. lxxvij.

Thus Melassar toke awaye their meate and wyne, and gaue them potage therfore. God gaue now these foure spryngaldes conrynge and lernynge in all scripture and wisdom: but vnto Daniel specially, he gaue vnderstōdinge off all visions and dreames. Now when the tyme was expyied, that the kynge had appoynted to brynge in these yōge spryngaldes vnto him: the chese chamberlayne broughth them before Nabuchodonosor, and the kynge communed with them. But amonge them all were founde none soch as Daniel, Ananias, Misael, and Azarias. Therfore stode they before the kynge, which in all wisdom and matters off vnderstōdinge, that he enquired off them, founde them ten tymes better, the all the soyth sayers and charmers, that were in all his realme. And Daniel abode still, vnto the first yeare of kynge Cyrus.

The II. Chapter

In the secōde yeare off the raigne of Nabuchodonosor, had Nabuchodonosor a dreame, where thow his spiete was vexed, and his slepe brake from him. Then the kynge comaunded to call together all 3 soyth sayers, charmers, witches and Caldees, for to shewe the kynge his dreame. So they came, and stode before the kynge. And the kynge sayde vnto them: I haue dreamed a dreame, & my spiete was so troubled therwith, 3 I haue clene forgotten, what I dreamed. Vpon this, the Caldees answered the kynge in the Syrians speach: O kynge, God saue thy life for ever. Shewe thy seruantes the dreame, and we shal shewe the, what it meaneth. The kynge gaue the Caldees their answer, & sayde: It is gone from me: If ye wil not make me vnderstōde the dreame with the interpretacion theroff, ye shal dye, and youre houses shal be pryed. But yff ye tell me the dreame and the meynynge therof, ye shall haue off me gistes, rewardes and greate honoure: only, shewe me the dreame and the significacion of it. They answered agayne, and sayde: the kynge must shewe his seruantes the dreame, and so shal we declare, what it meaneth.

Then the kynge answerde, sayenge: I perceave off a treuth, that ye do but prologe 3 tyme: for so moch as yese, that the thinge is gone fro me. Therfore, yff ye wil not tell me the dreame, ye shal all haue one iudgment. But ye sayne and dyssemble with vayne wordes, which ye speake before me, to pyn off the tyme. Therfore tell me the dreame, & so shal I knowe, yff ye can shewe me, what it mea-neth. Vpon this, the Caldees gave answer before the kynge, and sayde: there is no man vpon earth, that can tell the thinge, which yf kynge speake of: Yee there is nether kynge prynce ner LORDE, that ever axed soch thinges at a soothsayer, charmer or Caldeer: for it is a very harde matter, that the kynge requyeth. Nether is there eny, that can certifie the kynge theroff, excepte the goddes: whose dwellinge is not amonge the creatures.

C For yf which cause the kynge was wroth with greate indignaciō, and commaunded to destroye all the wyse men at Babilon: and yf proclamacion were forth, that the wyse men shulde be slayne. They sought also to slaye Daniel with his cōpanyons. Then Daniel enquired Arioch the kynge's steward, off the iudgment and sentence, that was gone forth already to kyll soch as were wyse at Babilon. He answered, and sayde vnto Arioch beinge then the kynge's debyte: Why hath the kynge proclaimed so cruell a sentence? So Arioch tolde Daniel the matter. Vpon this, wente Daniel vp, and desyred the kynge, yf he might haue leysoure, to shewe the kynge the interpretation: and then came he home agayne z shewed the thinge vnto Ananias, Misael z Asarias his companys: yf they shulde beseeke the God of heauen for grace in this secrete, that Daniel and his felowes with other soch as were wyse in Babilon, perished not. Then was the mystery shewed vnto Daniel in a visiō by nyght. And Daniel prayesd yf God of heauen, Daniel also cryed loude, and sayde: O that the name of God might be prayesd for ever and ever, for wysdome and strength are his owne: he chaungeth the tymes and ages: he putteth downe kynges, he setteth vp kynges: he geueth wysdome vnto the wyse, and vnderstōdinge to those that vnderstōde he openeth the depe secretēs: he knoweth yf the thyng that lyeth in darcknesse, for the light dwelleth with him. I thanke the, and praysethe (O thou God off my fathers) that thou hast lent me wysdome and strength, z hast shewed me the thinge, that we desyred off the, for thou hast opened the kynge's matter vnto me.

D Vpon this wente Daniel in vnto Arioch, whom the kynge had ordered to destroye the wyse at Babilon: he wente vnto him, and sayde: destroye not soch as are wyse in Babilon, but bringe me in vnto the kynge, and I shal shewe the kynge the interpretation. Then Arioch broughte Daniel into the kynge in all the haist, and sayde vnto him: I haue found be a man amonge the prisoners off Iuda, yf shal shewe the kynge the interpretation. The answered the kynge, and sayde vnto Daniel whose name was Balthasar: Art thou he, yf cast shewe me yf dreame, which I haue sene the interpretation theroff? Daniel answered the kynge to his face, and sayde: As for this secrete, for the which the kynge maketh inquisition: it is nether the wyse, the soicerer, the charmer ner the deuell conturor, that can certifie the kynge off it: Only God in heauen can open secretēs, and he it is, that sheweth the kynge Nabuchodonosor, what is for to come in the latter dayes.

Thy dreame, and that which thou hast sene in thyne heade vpon thy bed, is this: O kynge, thou didest cast in thy mynde, what shulde come hereafter: So he that is the opener off mysteries, telleth the, what is for to come. As for me, this secrete is not shewed me, for eny wysdome that I haue, more then eny other lyuynge: but only that I might shewe the kynge the interpretation, z that he might knowe the thoughtes off his owne herte. Thou kynge sawest, and beholdest: there stode before the a greate ymage, whose figure was maruelous greate, and his visage grymme. The ymage heade was off fyne golde, his brest and armes off syluer, his body ad loynes were off copper, his legges were off yron, his fete were parte off yron, and parte off earth.

This thou sawest, till the tyme that with out eny hondes there was hewen off a stone, which smote the ymage vpon the fete, that were both off yron and earth, and brake the to powder: then was the yron, the earth, the copper, the syluer and golde broken altogether in peces: and became like the chaffe off come, that the wynde bloweth awaye from yf semer floores, that they can no more be sode. But the stone that smote the ymage, became a greate mountayne, which fulfylleth the whole earth: This is the dreame. And now will we shewe before the kynge, what it meaneth.

O kynge, thou art a kynge off kynges: For the God off heauen hath geuen the a kyngdome, ryches, strength and maiesty: z hath deliuered the all thinges, that are amonge yf children off men: the besties off the felde, ad the foules vnder the heauen, and geuen the dominion ouer them all. Thou art that golde heade. After yf there shal aryse another kyngdome, which shal be lesse then thyne. The thyrd kyngdome shal be lyke copper, and haue dominacion in all lōdes. The fourth kyng home shal be as stronge as yron. For like as yron bruffeth and breaketh all thinges: Yee euen as yron beatech euery thinge downe, so shal it beate downe and destroye.

Where as thou sawest the fete and toes, parte of earth and parte off yron: that is a beynded kyngdome, which neuertheles shal haue some off the yron grounde mixte with it, for so much as thou hast sene the yron mixte with the claye.

The toes of the fete that were parte off yron and parte off claye, signifiech: that it shal be a kyngdome partely stronge and partely weake. And where as thou sawest yron myrte with claye: they shal myngle them selues w' yf sede off symple people, z yet not contynue one with another, like as yron wil not be souldered with a potsherde.

In the dayes off these kynges, shal the God of heauen set vp an enerlastinge kyngdome which shal not perish, and his kyngdome shal not be geuen ouer to another people: Yee the same shal breake and destroye all these kyngdomes, but it shal endure for ever.

And where as thou sawest, that without eny hondes there was cut out of the mount a stone, which brake the yron, the copper yf earth, the syluer and golde in peces: by that hath yf greate God shewed the kynge, what wyl come after this. This is a true dreame, and the interpretation off it is sure.

Then the kynge Nabuchodonosor, fell downe vpon his face, and bowed him self vnto Daniel, and commaunded that they shulde offre meat off rynges and swete odoures vnto him.

The kynge answerde Daniel, and sayde: Yee off a treuth, youre God is a God aboue all goddes, a LORDE aboue all kynges, and an opener of secretēs: seynge thou canst discover this mysterie. So the kynge made Daniel a greate man, and gaue him many and greate giftes.

He made him ruler off all the countrees off Babilon, and lorde of all the nobles, that were at Babilon. Now Daniel intreated the kynge for Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, so that he made them rulers ouer all the offyces in the londe off Babilon: but Daniel himself remayned still in the courte by the kynge.

ke. This he made to be set vp in the valley of Duran in the londe of Babilon z sent out to gather together the dukes, lordes z nobles, the iudges and officers, the debites ad shreues, with all the rulers of the londe: yf they might come to the dedicacion of the ymage which Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp. So the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, debytes and shreues with all the rulers of the londe gathered them together, and came vnto the dedicatinge of yf ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp.

Now when they stode before the ymage, which Nabuchodonosor set vp, the bedell cried out w' all his might: O ye people, kynredes and tinges, to you be it sayde: that whē ye heare the noyse off the trompettes, which shal be blowne, w' yf harpes, shawmes, psalteries, Symphonies and all maner off Musick: ye fall downe and worshippe the golden ymage, yf Nabuchodonosor the kynge hath set vp. Who so then falleth not downe and boweth himself, shal euen the same houre be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Therefore, when all the folke herde the noyse off the trompettes that were blowne, with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, Symphonies and all kynde of Melody: the all the people, kynredes and nacions fell downe, and bowed them selues vnto the golden ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp.

Now were there certayne men off the Caldees, that went euen then and accused yf Jewes, and sayde vnto kynge Nabuchodonosor: O kynge, God saue thy lyfe for ever. Thou beyng kynge hast geuen a commaundemēt, that all men when they heare the noyse off the trompettes, harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all the other melodies: shal fall downe and bowe them selues towards the golden ymage: who so the fell not downe and worshipped not, that he shulde be cast in to an hote barnynge ouen. Now are there certayne Jewes, whom thou hast set ouer the offyces of the londe off Babilon: namely, Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago. These men (o kynge) regarde not thy commaundemēt, yee they will not serue thy goddes, ner bowe them selues to the golden ymage, that thou hast set vp.

Then Nabuchodonosor in a cruell wrath and displeasure, commaunded, yf Sydrac, Misac z Abdenago shulde be brought vnto him. So these men were brought before the kynge. Then Nabuchodonosor spake vnto them, and sayde: what o Sydrac Misac and Abdenago, will not ye serue my goddes: nor bowe youre selues to the golden ymage, that I haue set vp: wel, be redy herafter, when ye heare the noyse of the trôpettes, blowne with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all y other melodies: that ye fall downe, and worshippe the ymage which I haue made. But yff ye worshippe it not, ye shal be cast immediatly in to an hore burnynge ouen. Let se, what god is there, y maye deliuer you out of my hondes.

Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago answered the kynge, and sayde: O Nabuchodonosor, we ought not to cōsente vnto y in this matter, for why: oure God whom we serue, is able to kepe vs from the hore burnynge ouen (O kynge) and can right wel deliuer vs out off thy hondes. And though he wil not, yet shalt thou knowe (O kynge) that we will not seruethy goddes, ner doreuerēce to the ymage, which thou hast set vp. Then was Nabuchodonosor full off indignacion, so that y countenance of his face chaunged vps Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago. Therefore he charged and commaunded, that the ouen shulde be made seuen tymes hotter, then it was wote to be: and spake vnto the strongest worthies that were in his hooſte, for to bynde Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, and to cast them in to the hore burnynge ouen.

So these men were bounde in their cotes, hosen, shues with their other garmentes, ad cast in to the hore burnynge ouen: for the kynges commaundement was so strate, and the ouen was exceedynge hore. As for the men that put in Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, the flame off the fyre destroyed them. And these thre men Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago fell downe in y hore burnynge ouen, being fast bounde.

Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge marueled, and stode vp in all haist: he spake vnto his councel and sayde: byd not ye cast these thre men bounde in to the fyre? They answered, and sayde vnto the kynge: Yee O kynge. He answered and sayde: lo, for all that, yet do I se foure men goinge lowse in the myddest off the fyre, and nothynge corrupte: and the fourth is like an angel to loke vpon. Vpon this wote Nabuchodonosor vnto the mouth of the hore burnynge ouen: he speake also, & sayde: O Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, ye seruantes of the hye God: go forth, and come hither. And so Sydrac, Misac, and Abdenago wente out of the fyre. Then the dukes, lordes and nobles, and the kynges counsell came together to se these men, vpon whom the fyre had no maner of power in them: dies: In so moch that the very haye off the heade was not burnt, and their clothes chaunged: Yee there was no smell off fyre vpon them.

Then spake Nabuchodonosor, and sayde: Blessed be the God of Sydrac, Misac & Abdenago: which hath sent his angel, defended his seruantes, that put their trust in him: y haue altered the kynges commaundement, and ioperde their bodies ther vpon: ther then they wolde serue or worshippe any other god, excepte their owne God only. Therefore I wil and commaunde, that all people, kynnedes & tinges, which speake in blasphemy agaynst the God of Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, shal dye, and their houses shal be prysed: Because, there is no God y maye saue, as this. So the kynge promysed Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, in the lende of Babylon.

Nabuchodonosor kynge, vnto all people, kynnedes and tinges that dwell vpon the whole earth: peace be multiplied amōge you. I thought it good to shewe the tokes & maruelous workes, y y hye God hath wrought vpon me. O how greate are his tokes, & how mightie are his wonders: His kyngdome is an enclastynge kyngdome, and his power lasteth for ever and ever.

The iiii. Chapter.

Nabuchodonosor beyng at rest in myne house, ad flourishing in my palace, sawe a dreame, which made me afrayed: ad the thoughtes that I had vpon my bed, with the visions of myne heade, troubled me. Then sent I out a commission, that all they which were of wysdome at Babil shulde be brought before me, to tell me the interpretation of the dreame. So there came the soythfayers, charmers, Caldees and conuincers of deuils: to whom I tolde the dreame, but what it betokened, they coude not shewe me: till at the last, there came one Daniel (otherwys called Balthasar, according to the name of my God) which hath the spire of the holy goddes in him: to whom I tolde the dreame, sayenge: O Balthasar, thou prynt of saythfayers: for so moch as I knowe, that thou hast the spire of the holy goddes, and no secrete is hyd from thee: tel me therefore, what y visio of my dreame I haue sene maye signifie. I sawe a vision in my heade vpon my bed: and beholde, that stode a tre vpon the grounde, which was very hye, greate and mightie: y heyth reached vnto the heaue, and the bredth extended in all the endes of the earth: his leaues were sayre, he had very moch frute, so y every mā had ynough to eate therin.

The bestes of the felde had shadowes vnder it, and the foules off the ayre dwelt in the bowes therof. Shortly, all creatures fed off it. I sawe in my heade a vision vpon my bed: beholde, a watcher (eue an holy angel) came downe from heauen, and cryed mightily, sayenge: Hew downe the tre, brike off his braunches, shake off his leaues, and scatte his frute abroad: that all the bestes maye get them awaye from vnder him, and the foules from his braunches. Neuertheles leaue the grounde of his rote still in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde, with cheynes of yron and stele. With the dew of heauen shal he be wet, and he shal haue his parte in the herbes of the grounde with other wylde bestes.

That mans herte off his shal be taken from him, and a bestes herte shal be geuen him, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him.

This erande of the watcher, is a cōmaundement grounde and sought out in the councel off him, that is most holy: to lerne men for to vnderstonde, that the hyest hath power ouer the kyngdomes off men, ad geueth them, to whom it liketh him, and bryngeth the very outcastes off men ouer them. This is the dreame, y I kynge Nabuchodonosor haue sene.

Therefore o Balthasar, tell thou me what it signifieth: for so moch as all the wyse men off my kyngdome are not able to shewe me, what it meaneth. But thou canst do it, for y spire of the holy Goddes is in the.

Then Daniel (whose name was Balthasar) helde his peace by the space of an houre ad his thoughtes troubled him. So the kynge spake, and sayde: O Balthasar, let nether the dreame ner the interpretation theroff feare the. Balthasar answered, sayenge: O my LORDE, this dreame happen to thyne enemies, and the interpretation to thyne aduersaries. As for the tre that thou sawest which was so greate & mightie, whose heyth reached vnto the heauen, and his bredth in to all the worlde: whose leaues were sayre, ad the frute moch: vnder the which the bestes of the felde had their habitacion, and vpon whose braunches the foules of the ayre dyd syt:

Euen thou (O kynge) art the tre, greate & stronge. Thy greatnesse increaseth, & reacheth vnto the heauen, so doth thy power to the en des of the earth. But where as the kynge sawe a watcher euen an holy angel, that came downe from heauen, and sayde: hew downe the tre, and destroye it: yet leaue the grounde of the rote in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde with cheynes off yron and stele: he shal be wet with the dew off heauen, and his parte shal be with the bestes of the felde, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him: This (O kynge) is y interpretation, yee it is the very deuince of him, y is hyest of all, & it toucheth my LORDE the kynge.

Then shalt be cast out fro men, and thy dwellinge shal be with the bestes of the felde: with grasse shalt thou be fed like an ore. Thou must be wet with the dew of the heauen: yee seuen yeares shal come and go vpon the, till thou knowe, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes of men, & geueth them, to whom he lyst. Moreover, where as it was sayde, that the rote of the tre shulde be belest still in the grounde: it betokeneth, y thy kyngdome shal remayne whole vnto y, after thou hast lerned to knowe, that the power cometh from heauen. Wherefore (O kynge) be cōtēt with my councel, that thou mayest lowse thy synnes with rightuousnesse, ad thyne offences with mercy to poore people: for soch thinges shal prolonge thy peace. All these thynges touch the kynge Nabuchodonosor.

So after xij. monethes, the kynge walked vp and downe in the paalace off the kyngdome off Babilon, and sayde: This is the greate cite off Babilon, which I myself (with my power & strength) haue made a kynges cūrt, for the honoure off my magesty. Whyle these wordes were yet in the kynges mouth, there fel a voyce from heaue, sayenge: O kynge Nabuchodonosor, to the be it spokē: Thy kyngdome shal departe from the, then shalt be cast out of mens comp. my: thy dwellinge shal be with the bestes off the felde, so that thou shalt eate grasse like as an ore, till seuen yeares be come and gone ouer the: euen vntill thou knowest, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes off men, and that he maye geue them, vnto whom it pleaseth him.

The very same houre was this matter fulfilled vps Nabuchodonosor: so that he was cast out off mens cōpany, & ate grasse like an ore. His body was wet with the dew of heauen, till his hayes were as greate as Agles fethers, and his nales like byrdes clawes.

When this tyme was past, I Nabuchodonosor

I magnified and prayesd him that ly ueth for euermore, whose power endureth all waye, and his kyngdome from one generaci on to another: in comparyson off whom, all they that dwell vpon the earth, are to be re puted as nothinge.

He handleth a cordinge to his will, amon ge y powers of heauen & amonge the inha bitours of the earth: and there is none that maye resiste his honde, or saye: what doest thou? At the same tyme was myne vnder standinge geuen me agayne, and I was res tored to the honoure of my kyngdome, to my dignite, and to myne owne shappe agayne. My greatesates and prynces sought vnto me, and I was set in my kyngdome agayne, so that I had yet greater worshippe.

The dyo Nabuchodonosor, loane, mag nific and prayse the kyng of heauen: for all his workes are true, and his wayes right. As for those that go on proudly, he is able to bry nge them downe.

The V. Chapter.

B Althasar the kyng made a grea te bancket to his thousande lordes: withall these thousande he made greate cheare, and when he was dronken w wyne, he commaunded to bryng him y gol den and syluer vessel, which his father Na buchodonosor had taken out of the temple at Jerusalem: that the kyng and his lordes (with his quene and concubynes) might dri nke therout.

So they brought the golden vessel, that was take out of the temple of the LORDS house at Jerusalem. Then the kyng and his lordes with his quene and concubines dron ke out of them. They dronke wyne, and pray sed their Idols of golde, syluer, copper, yron, wodde and stone.

In the very same houre there appeared syngers, as it had bene of a mans honde wry tynge, right ouer agaynst the candellsticke vpon the playne wall in the kynges palace: and the kyng sawe the palme of y honde y wrote. Then chaunged the kyng his counte nance, and his thoughtes troubled him: so that the ioyntes off his body shoke, and his knees smote one agaynst the other. Wherfo re the kyng cryed mightely, that they shul de bryng him the charmers, Caldees and con iurers of deuels.

The kyng spake also to the wyse men of Babilon, and sayde: Who so can redethis wrytynge, and shewe me the playne meanynge theroff: shall be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne off golde abou te his necke, and rule the thirde parte off my kyngdome.

Vpon this, came all the kynges wyse men, but they coude nether rede the wrytynge, ne shewe the kyng what it signified. The kyng the kyng sore afayed, in so mody, that his coloure chaunged, and his lordes were sor vered. So by reason off this matter, y had happened to the kyng & his lordes, the que ne went vp herself in to the bancket house, and spake vnto the kyng, sayenge: O kyng God saue thy life for ever: Let not y thoughtes trouble the, and let not thy countenance be chaunged. For why: there is a man in y kyngdome, that hath the spiete off the holy goddes within him, as it was sene in thy fathers dayes. He hath vnderstandinge as my dome like the goddes. Meet the kyng Nabuchodonosor thy father made this man chiefe of the soothsayers, charmers, Caldees and deuil con iurers: because that such an abun daunt spiete, knowlege & wisdom (to open dreames, to open secretes, and to declar harde dowtes) was founde in him: yee tyme in Daniel, whom the kyng named Balthasar. Let this same Daniel be sente for, and he shall tell, what it meaneth.

Then was Daniel brought before the kyng. So the kyng spake vnto Daniel, and say de: Art thou that Daniel, one off the pris oners of Iuda, whom my father the kyng brought out of Jewry? I haue herde speake of the, that thou hast the spiete of the holy goddes, experience and vnderstandinge, and that there hath bene greates wisdom founde in the. Now haue there bene brought hyme, wise and connyng charmers, to rede this wry tynge, and to shewe me the meanynge ther off: But they coude not tell me, what this matter signified. Then herde I saye, y thou canst expounde darcke thinges, and declare harde dowtes. Well than, yf thou canst rede this wrytynge, and shewe me the meanynge therof: thou shalt be clothed w purple, ha ue a cheyne off golde aboute thy necke, & rule the thirde parte of my kyngdome.

Daniel answered, and sayde before y kyng: As for thy rewardes, kepe them to thy self, or geue y rych giftes to another: yet ne thelesse, I wil rede the wrytynge vnto y kyng, and shewe him the interpretation therof. O kyng, God the hyest gaue vnto Nabuchodonosor thy father, y dignite of a kyng, & worshippe & hono: so y all people, kynges & tynge stode in awe & feare of him, by rea son off the hye estate, that he had lent him. For why: he slewe, whom he wolde: he smote, whom it pleased him. Agayne: whom he wolde, he set vp: and whom he list, he put downe. But because his herre was so prou de, and his stomack set fast vnto wylfulnes se: he was deposed from his kyngly trone, and his mayesty was taken from him. He was shot out from amonge men, his herre was like a beestes herre, and his dwellinge was with the wyld Asses: he was sayne to eate grasse like an oxe, and his body was wet with the dew off the heauen: till he knewe, that the hyest had power vpon the kyngdomes of men, and setteth ouer them, whom he list.

And thou his sonne (o Balthasar) for all this, hast not submitted thine herre, though thou knewest all these thinges: but hast mag nified thy self above the LORDE off hea uen, so that the vessels off his house were brought before the: that thou, and thy lor des, with thy quene and concubynes, mighte drynke wyne therout: And hast prayesd the Idols of syluer and golde, copper and yron, off wodde & stone: As for the God, in who se honde consisteth thy bieth ad all thy way es: thou hast not laued him.

Therfore is the palme off this honde set hither from him, to token vp this wry tynge. And this is the scripture, that is wri ten vp: Mane, Thetel, phares. Now the interpretation off the thynge is this: Ma ne, God hath nombred thy kyngdome, and brought it to an ende: Thetel, Thou art we yed in the balaunce, and art founde to ligh: phares, Thy kyngdome is delt in partes, and geuen to the Medes and Perses.

Then commaunded Balthasar, to cloth Daniel with purple, to hange a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and to make a pro clamacion concernynge him: that he shul de be the ruler off the thirde parte off his kyngdome. The very same night was Bal thasar the kyng off the Caldees slayne, and Darius out of Media toke in the kyngdome, beyng 124. yeare off age.

The VI. Chapter.

I pleased Darius to set ouer his kyng dome an C and xx. lordes, which shul de be in all his kyngdome aboute. Abou the these he set thre prynces (off whom Da niel was one) that the lordes might geue ac comptes vnto them, and the kyng to be vn diseased.

But Daniel exceeded all these prynces ad lordes, for the spiete off God was plenteous in him: so that the kyng was mynded to set him ouer the whole realme. Wherfore the prynces and lordes sought, to pyke out in Daniel some quarel agaynst the kyngdome: yet coude they fynde none occasion ner fau te vpon him. For why: he was so saythful, y there was no blame ner dishonesty founde in him.

Then sayde these men: we will get no qua rell agaynst this Daniel, excepte it be in the lawe off his God. Vpon this, wente the prin ces and lordes together vnto the kyng, and sayde thus vnto him: kyng Darius, God sa ure thy life for ever.

All the great estates off the realme: as y prynces, dukes, senatours and iudges, are de termed to put out a commaundement off y kyng, and to make a sure statute: name ly, that who so desyret eny peticion, ether of eny god or man (with in this xxx. dayes) ex cepte it be only off the, O kyng: the same person maye be cast into the Lyons denne. Wherfore, o kyng, confirme thou this statu te, and make a wrytynge: that the thynge which the Medes and Perses haue ordered be not altered ner broken.

So Darius made the wrytynge, and con firmed it. Now when Daniel vnderstode that the wrytynge was made, he wente in to his house: and the wyndowes of his hall towarde Jerusalem stode open. There kne led he downe vpon his knees, thre tymes a daye: there he made his peticion, and pray sed his God, like as his maner was to do a fo re tyme.

Then these men made searche, and founde Daniel makynge his peticion, and prayenge vnto his God. So they came to the kyng, and spake before him concernynge his com mandement, sayenge: O kyng, hast thou not subscribed the statute, that within xxx. dayes who so requyret his peticion off eny god or man, but only of thyself, o kyng: he shalbe cast in to the denne of the Lyons? The kyng answered, ad sayde: yee, it is true. It must be as a lawe of y Medes and Per ses, that maye not be broken.

Then answered they, and sayde vnto the kyng: Daniel one of the prisoners of Iuda (O kyng) regardeth nether the ner thy statu te, that thou hast made, but maketh his pe ticion thre tymes a daye. When the kyng herde these wordes, he was sore grieved, and wolde haue excused Daniel, to deliuer him, and put off the matter, vnto the Somme we re downe, to the intent that he might saue him.

The prophet Daniel.

These men perceauynge the kynges mynde, sayde vnto him: knowe this (o kyng) that the lawe off the Medes and Perses is, that the commaundement and statute which the kyng maketh, maye not be altered. Then the kyng bad them brynge Daniel, and they cast him into the Lyons denne.

The kyng also spake vnto Daniel, ad sayde: Thy God, whom thou allwaye seruest, euen he shall defende the. And there was brought a stone, and layed vpon the hole of the denne: this the kyng sealed with his owne rynge, and with y signet of his prynces: that the kynges commaundement concerninge Daniel, shulde not be broken.

So the kyng wente in to his palace, and kepte him sober all night, so that there was no table spred before him, nether coude he take enyslepe. But betymes in the morninge at the breake off the daye, the kyng arose, and wente in all haist vnto the denne off the Lyons.

Now as he came nye vnto y denne, he cried wth a piteous voyce vnto Daniel: Yee y kyng spake, and sayde vnto Daniel: O Daniel, thou seruauit off the lyuynge God, Is not thy God (whom thou allwaye seruest) able to deliuer the from the Lyons? Daniel sayde vnto the kyng: O kyng, God saue thy life for euer.

My God hath sent his angel, which hath shut the Lyons mouthes, so that they might not hurte me. For why: myne vngilty nesse is founde out before him. And as for the (o kyng) I neuer offended the.

Then was the kyng excedinge glad, ad commaunded to take Daniel out off the denne. So Daniel was brought out of the denne, and no manner of hurte was founde vpon him. So he put his trust in his God. And as for those men which had accused Daniel, the kyng commaunded to brynge them, and to cast them in the Lyons denne: them, their children and their wyues. So the Lyons had the mastery of them, and brake all their bones a sonder, or euer they came at the grounde.

After this, wrote kyng Darius vnto all people, kynredes and tinges, that dwelt in all londes: peace be multiplied with you: My commaundement is, in all my dominio and kyngdome, that men feare and stonde in awe off Daniels God:

For he is the lyuynge God, which aby-deth euer: his kyngdome shall not fayle, and his power is euerslastynge. It is he that deliuereth, and sauech: he doth wonders and marvelous workes, in heauen and in earth:

The viij. Chap.

he hath preserued Daniel from the power of the Lyons. This Daniel prospered in the raigne off Darius and Cyrus of Persia.

The VII. Chapter.

In the first yere off Balthasars rege off Babilon, sawe Daniel a vision, and a vision was in his heade vpon his hedde. Which dreame he wrote, and the summe of the matter is this: Daniel spake, and sayde: I sawe in my vision by nyght, and beholde: the foure wyndes of y heauen stroue vpon the see, and foure greates beestes came vp from the see, one vnliteth ther.

The first was as a Lyon, and yet had he Eagles wynges. I sawe, that his wynges were plucked from him, and he taken away from the earth: that he stode vpon his feet as a man, and that there was geuen him a mans herte.

Beholde, the seconde beest was like a Beere, and stode vpon the one syde. Amonge his teth in his mouth he had iij greates loges, and it was sayde vnto him: Arise, eat up moch flesh.

Then I looked, and beholde, there was another like vnto a Leopard: this had wynges as a foule, enen foure vpon the backe. This beest had foure heades, ad there was geuen him. After this I sawe in a vision by nyght, and beholde: the fourth beest was grimme and horrible, and marvelous stronge. It had greates yron teth, it deuoured, and destroyed, and stamped the residue vnder feet. I was farre vnliteth the other beestes that were before it: for it had ten hornes, wheroff I toke good hede.

And beholde, there came vp amonge them, another like home, before whom there were thre of the first hornes plucked awaye. Beholde, this home had eyes like a man, and a mouth speakynge presumptuous thinges. I looked till the seates were prepared, ad till the olde aged sat him downe. This clothynge was as white as snowe, and the hayres of his heade like the pure woll.

This trone was like the fire flame, and his wheles as the burnynge fyre. There came forth a fire streame, and wente out from him. A thousand tymes a thousande serued him. x. M. tymes ten thousande stode before him. The iudgment was set, and the booke opened. Then toke I hede there vnto, because of the voyce of the proude wordes, which that he spake.

The prophet Daniel.

I behelde, till the beest was slayne, and his body destroyed, and geuen ouer to be burnt in the fyre.

As for the power of the other beestes also, it was taken awaye, but their lyues were prolonged for a tyme and season. I sawe in a vision by nyght, and beholde: there came one in the cloudes of heauen like the sonne of a man, which wente vnto the olde aged, before whom they brought him: Then gaue he him power ad dignite regall, that all people, trybes and tinges shulde serue him. His power is an euerslastynge power, which shall neuer be put downe: and his kyngdome endureth vncorrupte. My herte was vexed, and I Daniel had a troubled spiete within me, ad the visions off my heade made me afayed: till I gat me vnto one off them that stode by, to knowe the treuth, concerninge all the fethinges. So he tolde me, and made me vnderstode the interpretacio of these thinges.

These foure greates beastes, are foure kynges which shall aryse out of the earth. The first shall take in the kyngdome off the sayntes of the most hyest, and possesse it still more and more for a longe season. After this I requyred diligently to knowe the treuth, concerninge the fourth beest, which was so farre vnliteth the other beestes, and so horrible: whose teth were of yron, and his nailes off brassey: which deuoured and destroyed, and stamped the residue vnder his fete. I desyred also to knowe the treuth, as touchinge the ten hornes that he had vpon his heade, and this other which came vp afterwarde, before whose face they fell downe thre: which home had eyes and a mouth that spake presumptuous thinges, and looked with a grimmer visage then his felowes.

I behelde, and the same home made battail agaynst the sayntes, yee ad gat the victory off them: vntill the tyme, that the olde aged came, that the iudgment was geue to the chiefe sayntes: and till the tyme, that y sayntes had the kyngdome in possession.

He gaue me this answer: That fourth beest shall be the fourth kyngdome vpon earth: it shall be more then all other kyngdomes, it shall deuoure, treade downe ad destroye all other londes.

The ten hornes, are ten kynges that shall aryse out of that kyngdome, after whome there shall stonde vpon another, which shall be greater then the first.

He shall subdue thre kynges, and shall speake wordes agaynst the hyest off all: he shall destroye the sayntes of the most hyest and thynke, that he maye chaunge tymes and lawes. They shall be geuen vnder his power, vntill a tyme, two tymes, and halff a tyme.

But: the iudgment shalbe kepte, so that his power shalbe taken from him, for he shal be destroyed, and perish at the last. As for the kyngdome, power and all might that is vnder the heauen: it shal be geuen to the holy people off the most hyest, whose kyngdome is euerslastynge, yee all powers shall serue and obeye him. Thus farre extende y wordes.

Uerthelesse, I Daniel was so vexed in my thoughtes, that my countenance chaunged, but the wordes I kepte still in my herte.

The VIII. Chapter.

In the thirde yere off the raigne off kyng Balthasar, there appeared a visio vnto me Daniel, after that I had sene the first. I sawe in a vision, (and when I sawe it, I was at Susis in the chiefe cite, which lyeth in the londe off Elam) and in y vision, me thought I was by the ryuer off Olai.

Then I looked vp, and sawe: and beholde there stode before the ryuer, a ramme, which had hornes: and these hornes were hye, but one was hyer then another, and the hyest came vp last. I sawe that this ramme pushed with his hornes, agaynst the west, agaynst the north, and agaynst the south: so that no beestes might stonde before him, ner defende them from his power: but he dyd as him listed, and waxed greatly. I toke hede vnto this, and then came there an hegoate from the west, ouer the whole earth, and touched not the grounde.

This goate had a marvelous goodly horne betwixte his eyes, and came vnto the ramme, that had the two hornes (whom I had sene afore by the ryuer syde) and ranne scarcely vpon him with his might. I sawe him drawe nye vnto the ramme, beyng very feere vpon him: yee he gaue him such a stroke, that he brake his two hornes:

Uerthelesse, the ramme so moch strength as to stonde before him: but he kest him downe, trodde him vnder his fete: and no man was able to deliuer the ramme out of his power.

The goate waxed excedinge greates, and when he was at the strongest, his greates horn was broken also. Then grew there other foure such like in the steade, towarde the sou-

Yee it grewe vp vnto the prynce off the hoost, from whom the daylie offeringe was taken, and the place off his Sanctuary casten downe. And a certayne season was geuen vnto it, agaynst the daylie offeringe (because of wickednesse) that it might cast downe the verite to the grounde, and so to prosper in all thinges, that it went aboute. Upon this I herde one off the sayntes speakinge, which saynte sayde vnto one that asked this question:

How longe shall this vision off the daylie sacrifice and of the waistinge abhominacion endure: that the Sanctuary and the power shall so be troden vnder fete? And he answered him: Vnto the euenynges and the morninges, euen two thousande and thre hundred dayes: then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed agayne.

E Now when I Daniel had sene this vision, and sought for the vnderstandinge of it: beholde, there stode before me a thinge like vnto a man. And I herde a mans voyce in the ryner off Olai, which cryed, and sayde: O Gabriel, make this man vnderstande the vision. So he came, and stode by me. But I was afrayed at his cominge, and fell downe vpon my face.

Then sayde he vnto me: O thou sonne of man, marcke well, for in the last tyme shall this vision be fulfilled. Now as he was speakinge vnto me, I wayed saynte, so that I sunk downe to the grounde. But he toke holde vpon me, and set me vp agayne, sayinge: Beholde, I will shewe the, what shall happen in the last wyche: for in the tyme appoynted it shall be fulfilled.

The ramme which thou sawest with the two hornes, is the kynge off the Medes and Perses: but the goate is the kynge off Greke londe: the greate horn that stode betwixte his eyes, that is the principall kynge. But where as it brake, and foure other rose vp in the steade: it signifieth, that out of this people shall stonde vp foure kyngdomes, but not so mightie as it.

D After these kyngdomes (whyle vngodnesse is a growinge) there shall arise a kynge off an vnshamefast face, which shall be wyse in darcke speakinges.

He shall be mightie and stronge, but with his owne strength. He shall destroye the measure, and all that he goeth about, shall prosper: he shall slaye the stronge and holy people. And thorow his craftynesse, falsede shall prosper in his honde, his hand shall be proude, and many one shall be put to death in his welthyngesse. He shall stonde vp agaynst the prynce off prynces, but he shall be destroyed without honde. And this vision that is shewed vnto the, is as sure as the euenyng and the morninge. Therefore wyrt thou vp this sight, for it wylbe longe or it come to passe.

Upon this was I Daniel very saynte, that I laye sicke certayne dayes: but when I rose vp, I wente aboute the kynges busynesse, and manueled at the vision, neuerthelesse no man knewe of it.

The IX. Chapter.

In the first yere off Darius the sonne off Ahasuerus, which was of the seede off the Medes, and was made kynge ouer the realme off the Caldees: Yee euen in the first yere off his raigne, I Daniel desired to knowe the yearly nombere out of the booke, wherof the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet: that Jerusalem should be waiste lxx. yeres: and I turned me vnto God the LORDE, for to praye and make myne intercessio, with fastinge, sack cloth and ashes. I prayed before the LORDE my God, and knowlege, sayinge:

O LORDE, thou greate and fearfull God, thou that kepest couenaunt and mercy with them, which loue the, and do thy commandementes: We haue synned, we haue offended, we haue bene disobedient and gone backe: yee we haue departed from all thy preceptes and iudgements.

We wolde neuer folowe thy seruantes the prophetes, that spake in thy name to oure kynges and prynces to oure forefathers, and to all the people off the londe. O LORDE, rightuousnesse belongeth vnto the, vnto vs pertaineth nothyng but open shame: as it is come to passe this daye vnto euery man off Iuda, and to them that dwell at Jerusalem.

Yee vnto all Israel, whether they be farre or nye: thorow out all londes, wherin thou hast strowed them, because of the offences that they had done agaynst the.

The prophet Daniel.

Yee O LORDE, vnto vs, to oure kynges and prynces, to oure forefathers: euen to vs all, that haue offended the, belongeth open shame. But vnto the O LORDE oure God, pertaineth mercy and forgiuenesse. As for vs, we are gone backe from him, and haue not obeyed the voyce off the LORDE oure God, to walke in his lawes, which he layed before vs by his seruantes the prophetes: yee all Israel haue transgressed, and gone backe from thy lawe, so that they haue not hearkened vnto thy voyce.

Wherfore the curse and ooth, that is written in the lawe of Moses the seruant of God (against whom we haue offended) is poured vpon vs. And he hath perfourmed his wordes, which he spake agaynst vs, and agaynst our iudges that iudged vs: to bringe vpon vs such a greate plage, as neuer was vnder heauen, like as it is now come to passe in Jerusalem. Yee all this plage, as it is written in the lawe of Moses, is come vpon vs. Yet made we not oure prayer before the LORDE oure God, that we might turne agayne from oure wickednesse, and to be lerned in thy verite. Therefore hath the LORDE made haist, to bringe this plage vpon vs: for the LORDE oure God is rightuous, in all his workes which he doth: for why, we wolde not harken vnto his voyce.

And now, O LORDE oure God, thou that with a mightie honde hast brought thy people out of Egypte, to get thy self a name, which remaineth this daye: we haue synned (O LORDE) and done wickedly agaynst all thy rightuousnes: yet let thy wrathfull displeasure be turned awaye (I beseeke the) from thy cite Jerusalem thy holy hill. And why? for oure synnes sake and for the wickednesse off oure forefathers: is Jerusalem and thy people abhored, of all them that are aboute vs. Now therefore (O oure God) heare the prayer off thy seruant, and his intercession: O let thy face shyne ouer thy sanctuary, that lieth waiste.

O my God, encline thine eare, and hearken (at the leest for thine owne sake) open thine eyes: beholde how we be desolated: yee and the cite also, which is called after thy name: for we do not cast oure prayers before the in oure owne rightuousnesse, no: but only in thy greate mercies. O LORDE, heare: O forgiue LORDE: O LORDE confidre, tary not ouerlonge: but for thine owne sake do it, O my God: for thy cite and thy people is called after thy name.

D As I was yet speakinge at my prayers,

The x. Chap. Ho. lxxxij.

knowlege myne owne synnes and synnes off my people, makinge so myne intercession before the LORDE my God, for the holy hills sake off my God: yee whyle I was yet speakinge in my prayer, beholde, the man Gabriel (whom I had sene afore in the vision) came flyenge to me, and touched me aboute offeringe tyme in the euenyng. He informed me, and spake vnto me: O Daniel (sayde he) I am now come, to make the vnderstande it: for as soone as thou beganest to make thy prayer, it was so diuysed, and therfore am I come to shewe the. And why? for thou art a man greatly beloued.

Wherfore, ponde the matter wel, that thou mayest lerne, to vnderstande the vision. Lxx. weekes are determed ouer thy people, and ouer thy holy cite: that the wickednesse maye be consumed, that the synne maye haue an ende, that the offence maye be reconciled, and to bringe in euerlastinge rightuousnesse, to fulfill the visions and the prophetes, and to anoynte the most holy one. Vnderstande this then, and marcke it well: that from the tyme it shall be concluded, to go and repayre Jerusalem agayne, vnto Christ (or the anoynted) prynces: there shall be seven weekes. Then shall the stretes and walles be buylded agayne lxx. weekes, but with harde troublous tyme. After these lxx. weekes, shall Christ be slayne, and they shall haue no pleasure in him. Then shall there come a people with the prynce, and destroye the cite and the sanctuary: and his ende shall come as the water floude. But the desolacion shall continue till the ende off the batell.

He shall make a stronge bonde with many, for the space off a weke: and when the weke is half gone, he shall put downe the slayne and meat offeringe. And in the temple there shall be an abhominable desolacion, till it haue destroyed all. And it is concluded, yf this waistinge shall continue vnto the ende.

The X. Chapter.

In the thirde yere off kinge Cyrus off Persia, there was shewed vnto Daniel (otherwise called Balthasar) a matter, yee a true matter, but it is yet a longe tyme vnto it.

He vnderstode the matter well, and perceived what the vision was. At the same tyme, I Daniel mourned for the space off thre weekes, so that I had no lust to eate bred: as for fleshy and wyne, there came none within my mouth: No, I dyd not ones anoynte myself, till the whole thre weekes were out.

The prophet Daniel.

Upon the xxiii. daye of the first moneth, I was by the greates floude, called Tigris: I lift vp myne eyes, and looked: and beholde, a man clothed in lynmyng, whose loynes were gyrded vp with fyne golde of Araby: his body was like the Chysolite stone, his face (to lōke vpon) was like lightenyng, his eyes as the flame of fyre, his armes and fete were like sayre glisteringe metall, but the voyce of his wordes was like y<sup>e</sup> voyce of a multitude.

I Daniel alone sawe this vision, the men that were with me, sawe it not: but a greates fearfulness fell vpon them, so that they fled awaye, and hyd them selues. I was left there my self alone, and sawe this greates vision, so longe til there remayned nomore strength within me: Yee I lost my coloure cleme, I waisted awaye, and my strength was gone. Yet herde I the voyce of his wordes: & as soone as I herde it, sayntnesse came vpon me, and I fell downe flat to the grounde vpon my face. And beholde, an hande touched me, which set me vp vpon my knees & vpon the palmes of my hondes, sayenge vnto me: O Daniel, thou well beloued man: take good hede of the wordes, that I shal saye vnto y<sup>e</sup>, & stōde right vp, for vnto y<sup>e</sup> am I now sent.

And when he had sayde these wordes, I stode vp trembling. Then saide he vnto me: feare not Daniel: for why, sence the first daye that thou set thine herte to vnderstōde, and didest chassen thy self before thy God: thy wordes haue bene herde. And I had come vnto the whē thou beganest to speake, had not the prynce ouer the kyngdome of the Perses w<sup>o</sup> stōde me xxi. dayes. But lo, Michael one of the chese prynces, came to helpe me, him haue I left by the kyng of Persia, & am come to shewe the, what shal happen vnto thy people in the latter dayes: for it wilbe lōge yet or the vision be fulfilled.

Now when he had spoken these wordes vnto me, I kest downe my heade to y<sup>e</sup> grounde, and helde my tūge. Beholde, there touched my lippes one, very like vnto a man. Then opened I my mouth, and sayde vnto him, that stode before me: O my lord, my ioynres are lowsed in the vision, and there is no more strēgth within me: How maye my lordes seruau<sup>t</sup> then talke with my lord? seinge there is no strength in me, so that I cannot take my breth. Vpon this there touched me agayne, one moche like a man, & comforted me, sayenge: O thou man so wel beloued, feare not: be content, take a good herte vnto the, and be stronge. So when he had spoken vnto me, I recovered, & sayde: Spea ke on my lord, for thou hast refreshed me. The sayde he: knowest thou wherfore I am come vnto y<sup>e</sup>? now wil I go agayne to fight with the prynce of the Perses. As soone as I go forth, lo, the prynce of Babel shal come. Neuertheles, I wil shewe the the thinge, y<sup>e</sup> is fast noted in the scripture of treuth. And as for all yonder matters, there is none that helpeth me in them, but Michael y<sup>e</sup>re prynce.

The XI. Chapter.

IN the first yere of Darins of Media, I stode by him, to comforte him, & to strength him, and now wil I shewe the the treuth. Beholde, there shal stōde vp yet thre kynges in Persia, but y<sup>e</sup> fourth shal be farre richer then they all. And when he is in the chiefe power of his riches, he shal prouoke euery man agaynst the realm of Babel. Then shal there arise yet a mightie kyng, that shal rule with greates minion, and do what him list. And as soone as his kyngdome commeth vp, it shal be destroyed, & denyed towarde y<sup>e</sup> four wyndes of the heauen. They y<sup>e</sup> come after him, shal not haue soch power & dominion as he: but his kyngdome shal be scatred, yee euen amonge other the thos. And the kyng of y<sup>e</sup> south shal be mightier, then his other prynces. Agaynst him there shal one make himself stronge, & shal rule his dominion w<sup>o</sup> greates power.

But after certayne yeres they shal be vnyed together, & the kynges daughter of the south shal come to the kyng of the north, for to make frēdshipe, but she shal not optayne the power of that arme, nether shal she be able to endure thorow his might: but she, & soch as brought her (yee & he y<sup>e</sup> begat her, & comforted her for his tyme) shal be denyed vp. Out of y<sup>e</sup> braunches of hir rote, there shal one stōde vp in his steade: which with power of armes shal go thorow the kynges lande of the north, & handle him acordyng to his strength. As for their Idols & prynces, with their costly Jewels of golde & syluer, he shal cary them awaye captiues into Egypte, and he shal prouaile agaynst the kyng of the north certayne yeres. And when he is come into y<sup>e</sup> kynges realme of y<sup>e</sup> south, he shal be sayne to turne agayne in to his owne lande. Wherfore his somes shal be displeased, and shal gather together a mightie greates hoost of people: and one of them shal come, and go thorow like a waterfloude: then shal he returne, and go forth with vengeance and boostyng vnto his owne lande.

The kyng of y<sup>e</sup> south shal be angry,

The prophet Daniel.

and shal come forth to fight agaynst the kyng of the north: Yee he shal bringe a greates multitude of people together, and a greates heape shal be geue into his honde: these shal he cary awaye w<sup>o</sup> greates pryde, for so moche as he hath cast downe so many thousandes, neuertheles he shal not prouaile. For y<sup>e</sup> kyng of y<sup>e</sup> north shal gather (of the new) a greates heape of people then afore, & come forth (after a certayne tyme and yeres) with a mightie hoost & excedyng greates good.

At the same tyme there shal many stōde vp agaynst the kyng of the south, so that y<sup>e</sup> wicked childien of thy people also shal exalte them selues (to fulfill the vision) and then fall. So the kyng of the north shal come to laye sege, and to take the strōge fenced cities: And the power of the of y<sup>e</sup> south shal not be able to abyde him, & the best men of the people shal not be so stronge, as to resist him. Shortly, when he commeth, he shal handle him as he list, & no man shal be so hardy as to stōde agaynst him. He shal stōde in the pleasaunt countre, which thorow him shal be destroyed. He shal set his face w<sup>o</sup> all his power to optayne his kyngdome, & to be like it. Yee that shal he do, & geue him vnto the daughters amonge women, to destroye him. But he shal sayle, nether shal he optayne his purpose. After this, shal he set his face vnto the Ies, & take many of the. A prynce shal stoppe him, to do him a shame, besyde the confusion that els shal come vnto him. Thus shal he turne agayne to his owne lande, stōmble, & fall, and be nomore founde: so he that came vpon him & dyd him violence, shal stōde in his place, & haue a pleasaunt kyngdome: and after few dayes he shal be destroyed, & that nether in wraith ner in batell. In his steade there shal aryse a vyle person not holden worthy of a kynges dignite: this shal come in craftely, & optayne the kyngdome with sayre wordes: he shal fight agaynst the armes of the mightie (& destroye them,) yee & agaynst the prynce of the couenaunt.

So after y<sup>e</sup> he hath taken truce with him, he shal hadle disceatfully: that he maye get vp, & ouercome him with a small flocke: & so with craftynesse to get him to y<sup>e</sup> fattest place of the lande, and to deale otherwise, then ether his fathers or graūdfathers dyd. For he shal destroye the thinge, y<sup>e</sup> they had robbed & spoyle, yee & all their substance: ymagynyng thoughtes agaynst the strōge holdes, & that for a tyme. His power and herte shal be sterred vp w<sup>o</sup> a greates armie agaynst the kyng of the south: where thorow the kyng ge of the south shal be moned then vnto battell, with a greates & mightie hoost also. Neuerthelesse, he shal not be able to stōde, for they shal conspyre agaynst him. Yee they y<sup>e</sup> eate of his meate, shal hurte him: so that his hoost shal fall, & many be slayne downe.

These two kynges shal be mynded to do myschese, & talke of disceate at one table: but they shal not prospere: for why, the ende shal not come yet, vnto the tyme appoynted. The shal he go home agayne in to his owne lande with greates good, & set his herte agaynst the holy couenaunt, he shal be busy agaynst it, & then returne home. At the tyme appoynted he shal come agayne, & go towarde the south: So shal it happen otherwise then at the first, yet ones agayne. And why, the shippes of Cythim shal come vpon him, that he maye be smytten & turne agayne: y<sup>e</sup> he maye take indignacion agaynst the couenaunt of holynes, to medle agaynst it. Yee he shal turne him, & drawe soch vnto him, as leaue the holy couenaunt.

He shal set mightie men to vnhalowe the sanctuary of strēgth, to put downe the daylie offeringe, & to set vp the abhominable desolacion. And soch as breake the couenaunt, shal he flatter with sayre wordes. But y<sup>e</sup> people that wil knowe their God, shal haue the ouerhāde and prospere. These also that haue vnderseordyng amonge the people, shal enfourme the multitude: & for a longe season, they shal be persecuted with swearde, with fyre, with captyuyn & with the takinge awaye of their goodes. Now whē they fall, they shal be set vp with a litle helpe: but many shal cleue vnto them saynedly.

Yee some of those which haue vnderstōdyng shal be persecuted also: y<sup>e</sup> they maye be tryed, purified & clesed, till the tyme be out: for there is yet another tyme appoynted. The kyng shal do what him list, he shal exalte and magnifie himself agaynst all, that is God. Yee he shal speake marvelous thinges agaynst the God of all goddes, wherin he shal prospere, so longe till the wraith be fulfilled, for the conclusion is denyed alreedy. He shal not regarde the God of his fathers, but his lust shal be vpon wome: Yee he shal not care for any God, for he shal magnifie himself aboue all. In his place shal he worshipec the mightie Idols: & the god whom his fathers knewe not, shal he honour with golde and syluer, with precious stones and pleasaunt Jewels.

This shal he do, setyng helpe and succoure at the mightie Idols and straunge gods.

The prophet Daniel.

des. Soch as wil receaue him; and take him for God, he shal geue them greate worshipe and power: yee and make them lordes of the multitude, and geue them the londe with rewardes. In the latter tyme, shal the kinge of the south stryue with him: and the kinge of the north in like maner shall come agaynst him with charrettes, horsemen z with a greate navy of shippes. He shal come in to the londes, destroye and go thorow: he shal entreal so in to the sayre pleasaunt londe. Many cities z countrees shal decaye, excepte Edom, Moab z the best of the children of Ammon, which shal escape from his honde. He shall stretch forth his hōdes vpon the countrees, z the londe of Egypte shal not escape him. For thorow his goinge in, he shal haue dominion ouer the treasures of syluer z golde, z ouer all the precious Jewels of Egypte, Lybia and Ethiopia. Neuerthelesse the tydinges out of the east and the north shall trouble him, for the which cause he shal go forth to destroye z curse a greate multitude. The tentes of his palace shall be pyrch betwixte the two sees, vpon the hill of the noble sanctuary, for he shal come to the ende of it, and then shal no man helpe him.

The XII. Chapter.

In the tyme wil come also, that the grea- te prynce Michael, which stonde- th on thy peoples syde, shal aryse vp, for there shal come a tyme of trouble, soch as ne- uer was, sens there begāne to be eny people, vnto that same tyme. Then shal thy people be deliuered, yee all those that be foude wri- ten in the boke. Many of them that slepe in the dust of the earth, shal awake: some to e- uerlastinge life, some to perpetuall shame z reprofe. The wyse (soch as haue taught o- ther) shal glister, as the shyninge of heauen: and those that haue instructed the multitude vnto godlynesse, shal be as the starres, wil- de without ende.

And thou o Daniel, shut vp these wordes, z seale the boke, till the last tyme. Many shal go aboute here and there, and the shal know lege increase. So I Daniel looked, and behol- de, there stode other two: one vpon this sho- re of the water, the other vpon yonder syde. And one of the sayde vnto him, which was clothed in lymynge, and stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: How longe shall it be to the ende of these wonderous workes? Then herde I the man with the lymynge clothes, which stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: when he helde vp his right and left honde vnto heauen, z swaie by him which syneth for ever: that it shal tary fou- r tyme, two tymes z half a tyme: z when the power of the holy people is clenched, brode, the shal all these thinges be fulfilled.

I herde it well, but I vnderstode it not. Then sayde I: O my lord, what shal hap- pen after that? He answered: So thy waye Daniel, for these wordes shal be closed vp z sealed, till the last tyme: z many shal be pu- rified, clenched z tried. But the vngodly shal lyue wickedly, and those wicked (as many of the as they be) shal haue no vnderstandinge. As for soch as haue vnderstandinge, they shal regarde it. And from y tyme forth, the daylie offerynge shal be put downe z the abhominable desolacion set vp, there shal be a thousande two hundred z x. dayes. Well is him, that waiteth, z cometh to the then- sande iij. C. z xxxv. dayes. So thou thy waye now, till it be ended: take thy rest, and byde in thy lot, till the dayes haue an ende.

The prophet Oseas.

This is the worde of the LOR- DE, that came vnto Oseas the sonne of Bee- ri, in the dayes of Osiat, Joathan, Achaz z Ezechias kinges of Iuda: and in the tyme of Jeroboam the sonne of Joas kyng of Israel.

The first Chapter.

Irst, when the LORDE spake vnto Oseas, he saide vnto him: So thy waye, take an harlot to thy wife, and get childre by her: for the lode hath comitted greate whor- dome agaynst the LORDE. So he wente, and toke Gomer y daughter of Deblaim: which conceaued, and brought forth a sonne. And the LORDE sayde vnto him: call his name Israel, for I wil shortly auenge the bloude of Israel vpon the house of Iehu, and will bringe the kingdome of the house of Israel to an ende. Then will I breake the bowe of Israel, in the valley of Israel.

She conceaued yet agayne, and bare a daughter. And he sayde vnto him: Call hir name Louhama (that is, not opteyninge mercy): for I wil haue no pyre vpon the hou- se of Israel, but forget them, and put them cleue out of remembraunce. Neuerthelesse I wil haue mercy vpon the house of Iuda, z wil saue them, euen thorow the LORDE their God. But I wil not deliuer them thorow eny bow, swerde, batel, horses or horsemen.

Now when she had weened Louhama, she conceaued agayne, z bare a sonne. Then sayde he: call his name Lo Ami (that is to saye, not my people.) For why: ye are not my people, therefore will not I be yours. And though the nombre of the children of Israel be as the sonde of the see, which can nether be measured ner tolde: Yet in the place whe- re it is sayde vnto them, ye be not my people: euen there shall it be thus reported of them: they be y childre of the lymynge God. Then shal the children of Iuda and the childre of

The ij. Chap. Jo. lxxxiiij.

Israel be gathered together agayne, z cho- se them selues one heade, and then departe out of the londe: for greate shalbe the daye of Israel.

The II. Chapter.

Ill youre biethen, that they are my people: and youre susteren, that they haue optayned mercy. As for you- re mother, ye shal chide with her, and repro- ue her: for she is not my wife, nether am I hir husbōde: vnlesse she put awaye hir whor- dome out of my sight, and hir aduoutry from hir brestes. If no, I shal strype her naked, z set her, euen as she came in to y worlde: Yee I shall laye hir waiste, and make her like a wil- dernesse, and slaye her for thyrste. I shal ha- ue no pite also vpon hir children, for they be the children of fornicacion.

Their mother hath broken hir wedlocke, and she that bare them, is come to confucion. For she sayde: I wil go after my louers, that geue me my water and my bried, my woll z my flax, my oyle and my drynke. But I will hedge hir waye with thornes, and stoppe it, that she shal not fynde hir fotestoppes: and though she runne after hir loners, yet shall she not get them: she shal seke them, but not fynde them. Then shal she saye: well, I will go turne agayne to my first husbōde, for at y tyme was I better at ease, then now. But this wolde she not knowe, where as I yet ga- ue her come, wyne, oyle, syluer and golde, which she hath hanged vpon Baal.

Wherefore now will I go take my come z wyne agayne in their season, and set agayne my woll and my flax, which I gaue her, to couer hir shame. And now will I discouer hir foolishnesse, euen in the sight of hir lo- uers, and no man shal deliuer her out of my bondes. Morouer, I wil take awaye all hir myrrh, hir holy dayes, hir new moones, hir Sabbathes and all hir solempne feastes: I wil destroye hir vynyardes and fyge trees, though she saith: lo, here are my rewardes, that my louers haue geuen me. I wil make it a wodde, and the wyld beestes shal eat it vp: I wil punysh her also for the dayes of Baal, wherein she censed him, deckynge him with hir earynges and cheynes: when she folowed hir louers, and forgat me, saith the LORDE.

Wherefore beholde, I wil call her againe, bringe her in to a wildernes, and speake frend- ly vnto her: there wil I geue her hir vynyar- des agayne, yee and the valley of Achor al- so, to shewe hir hope z comfote. Then shal she synge there as in the tyme of hir youth, z like as in the daye when she came out of the londe of Egypte. Then (saierh the LORDE) she shal saye vnto me: O my housbande, & shal call me nomore Baal: for I wil take awaye those names of Baal from hir mouth, yee she shal neuer remembre their names eny more. Then will I make a couenaunt with them, with the wyld beasts, with the foules of the ayre, & with euerythinge that crepeth vpon the earth.

As for bowe, sixerde and batel, I will destroye soch out of the londe, & wil make them to slepe safely. Thus wil I mary the vnto my ne owne self for euermore: yee euen to my self wil I mary the, in rightousnesse, in equitye, in louynge kyndnesse and mercy. In faith also wil I mary the vnto my self, & thou shalt knowe the LORDE. At the same tyme wil I shewe my self frendly and gracious vnto y<sup>e</sup> heauens, saierh the LORDE: & the heauens shal helpe the earth, and the earth shal helpe the corne, wyne and oyle, and they shal helpe Iesrael. I wil sowe them vpon earth, for a seed to myne owne self, & wil haue mercy vpon her, y<sup>e</sup> was without mercy. And to the which were not my people, I wil saye: thou art my people. And he shal saye: thou art my God.

The III. Chapter.

Then sayde y<sup>e</sup> LORDE to me: Go yet y<sup>e</sup> waye & wowe an aduouterous woman, whō thy neghboure loneth, as y<sup>e</sup> LORDE doth the childre of Iisrael: how be it they haue respect to straunge goddes, and loue the wyne kannes. So I gat her for ry. syluerlinges, and for an homer and an half of barley, & sayde vnto her: Thou shalt byde with me a longe season, but se that thou playest not the harlot, and loke thou medle with none other man, & then wil I kepe my self for the.

Thus the childre of Iisrael shal syt a grea te whyle without kinge and pryncce, without offerynge and aulter, without prest and reuelacion. But after warde shal the children of Iisrael conuerter, and seke the LORDE their God, and Dauid their kinge: and in y<sup>e</sup> latter dayes they shal worship the LORDE, and his louynge kyndnesse.

The IIII. Chapter.

Are y<sup>e</sup> worde of the LORDE, o ye childre of Iisrael: For the LORDE must punyssh the, y<sup>e</sup> dwel in the londe. And why? There is no faith fulnesse, there is no mercy, there is no knowlege of God in the lō de: but swearinge, lyge, māslaughter, theft and aduoutry haue gotten the ouerhande, & one bloud guiltynesse foloweth another. Therfore shal the londe be in a miserable case, and all they that dwell therein, shal moue the beastes in the felde, the foules in y<sup>e</sup> ayre, and the fishes in the see shal dye. Yet is there one, that wil chaste nor reprove another. The prestes which shulde reforme other men, are become like the people.

Therfore stembled thou in y<sup>e</sup> daye, the prophet with the in the night. I wil blynde thy mother to sylence, & why? my people perissh, because they haue no knowlege. I wil ge then that thou hast refused vnderstandynge, therfore wil I refuse y<sup>e</sup> also: so that thou shalt be my prest. And for so much as thou hast forgotten the lawe of thy God, I wil also forget thy childre. The more they are creased in multitude, the more they synne agaynst me, therfore wil I charge them in noure in to shame. They eate vpon the synnes of my people, & corage them in their wickednesse. Thus the prest is become like the people. Wherfore I wil punyssh them for their wicked wayes, & reward them according to their owne ymaginacions: They shal haue no more, therfore shal they not prosper: they haue forsaken the LORDE, & not regarded him.

Whordome, wyne and dronkennesse shall the harte awaye. My people are couned at their stockes, their staffe must tell them. An whorish mynde hath disceaued them, so they comitte fornicacion agaynst their God. They make sacrifice vpon the hie mountaynes, & burne their incense vpon the hilles, amonge the okes, groves & busshes, for they are good shadowes. Therfore y<sup>e</sup> daughters are become harlottes, and y<sup>e</sup> responses haue broke their wedlocke. I wil not punyssh y<sup>e</sup> daughters for beinge defyled, & y<sup>e</sup> brides that became whores: seinge the fathers themselves haue medled with harlottes, and offered with vnthriftes: but the people that wil not vnderstande, must be punysshed.

Though thou Iisrael art disposed to playe y<sup>e</sup> harlot, yet shuldest not thou haue offended, o Juda: thou shuldest not haue runned Galgala, ner haue gone vnto Bethaue, ne haue sworne: the LORDE lyeth. For Iud is gone backe, like a waton come. The LORDE therfore shal make hir fede, as y<sup>e</sup> labe y<sup>e</sup> eth astraye. And where as Ephraim is become partaker of Idols, wel, let him go. The dronkenesse hath put the backe, & brought them to whordome. Their rulers loue whoredes, brynge saye they, to their owne shame. A wynde shal take holde of their sekyn, & they shal be cofounded in their offencynge.

The V. Chapter.

Are this, o ye prestes: take hede, o thou housholde of Iisrael: geue eare, o thou kingly house: for this punysshment wil come vpon you, that are become a snare vnto Myspa, and a spred net vnto the mount of Thabor. They kyll sacrifices by heapes, to begyle the people therewith: therfore wil I punyssh them all. I knowe Ephraim well ynough, & Iisrael is not hyd from me: for Ephraim is become an harlot, and Iisrael is defyled. They are not mynded to turne vnto their God, for they haue an whorish herte, so y<sup>e</sup> they can not knowe the LORDE.

But the pryde of Iisrael wil be rewarded him in his face, yee both Iisrael and Ephraim shal fall for their wickednesse, and Juda with them also. They shal come with their shepe & bullockes to seke y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, but they shal not fynde him, for he is gone from them. As for the LORDE, they haue refused him, and brought vp bastarde children: a moneth therfore shal deuoure them with their porcions.

Blowe with the shawmes at Gabea, and with the trumpet in Rama, crie out at Bethaue vpon the yonside of Ben Jamin. In the tyme of y<sup>e</sup> plage shal Ephraim be layed wast, therfore dyd I faithfully warne the trybes of Iisrael. Yet are the prynces of Juda become like them, that remoue the lōde-marches, therfore wil I poure out my wrath vpon them like water. Ephraim is oppressed, and can haue no right of the lawe: for why? they folowe y<sup>e</sup> doctrynes of men. Therfore wil I be vnto Ephraim as a moth, & to the house of Juda as a caterpillar.

When Ephraim sawe his sicknesse, and Juda his disease: Ephraim wente vnto Asur, and sent vnto kinge Jareb: yet conde not he helpe you, ner ease you of youre payne. I am vnto Ephraim as a lyon, and as a lyons whelp to the house of Juda. Euen I, I wil spoyle them, & go my waye. I wil take them with me, and no man shal rescue them. I wil go, and returne to my place, till they waxe faynt, and seke me.

The VI. Chapter.

At their aduersite they shall seke me, and saye: come, let vs turne agayne to the LORDE: for he hath smytten vs, and he shal heale vs: he hath wounded vs, & he shal bynde vs vpon agayne: after two dayes shal he quyen vs, in the thirde daye he shal raise vs vp, so that we shal lyue in his sight. Then shal we haue vnderstandinge, & endeuoure oure selues to knowe the LORDE.

he shal go forth as the sprynge of the daye, and come vnto vs as the euenynge and morninge rayne vpon the earth.

Ephraim, what shal I do vnto the? Juda, how shal I intreate the? seynge youre lone is like a moynynge cloude, & like a dew y<sup>e</sup> goeth early awaye. Therfore haue I cut downe the prophetes, & letten them be slayne for my wordes sake: so that thy punysshment shal come to light. For I haue pleasure in louynge kyndnesse, and not in offerynge: yee in the knowlege of God, more then in burnt sacrifice. But euen like as Adam dyd, so haue they broken my couenaunt, and set me at naught. Galaad is a cite of wicked doers, of malicious people and bloudshedders. The multitude of the prestes is like an heape of theues, murderers & bloudthirstie: for they haue wrought abhominacion. Horrible thinges haue I sene in the house of Iisrael, there playeth Ephraim the harlot, and Iisrael is defyled: but Juda shal haue an earnest for himself, when I returne the captiuite of my people.

The VII. Chapter.

Then I undertake to make Iisrael whole, then the vngaciousnesse of Ephraim and the wickednes of Samaria cometh to light: then go they aboute with lyes. At home, they be theues: and without, they fall to robbynge. They cosidre not in their hertes, that I remembre all their wickednes. They go aboute wth their owne ynnuencios, but I set them wel ynough. They make the kinge and the prynces, to haue pleasure in their wickednes & lyes. All these burne in aduoutry, as it were an ouen y<sup>e</sup> the baker heateth, whē he hath leste kneadinge, till the dowe be leuended. Euen so goeth it this daye with oure kinges and prynces, for they begynne to be woode dronken thorow wyne: they vse familiarite with soch as disceauethē. They with the ymaginacion of their herte are like an ouen, their slepe is all y<sup>e</sup> night like the slepe of a baker, in the moynynge is he as hote as the flame of fyre: they are alto gether as hote as an ouen.

They haue deuoured their owne iudges, all their kinges are full: yet is there none of the y<sup>e</sup> calleth vpon me. Therfore must Ephraim be mirte amonge y<sup>e</sup> heithen. Ephraim is become like a cake, y<sup>e</sup> no man turneth: strangers haue deuoured his strength, yet he regardeth it not: he waxeth ful of gray haire, yet wil he not knowe it: y<sup>e</sup> pride of Iisrael is cast downe before their face, yet wil they not turne to the LORDE their God, ner seke him, for all this.

The VI. Chapter.

24 Un their aduersite they shall seke me, and saye: come, let vs turne agayne to the LORDE: for he hath smytten vs, and he shal heale vs: he hath wounded vs, & he shal bynde vs vp agayne: after two dayes shal he quyen vs, in the thirde daye he shal raise vs vp, so that we shal lyue in his sight. Then shal we haue vnderstandinge, & endeuoure oure selues to knowe the LORDE.

Theshal go forth as the springe of the daye, and come vnto vs as the euenynge and mor- Pro. 16.
nynger ayne vpon the earth.

O Ephraim, what shal I do vnto the: O Juda, how shal I intreate the: se ynge youre lone is like a mornynge cloude, z like a dew y goeth early awaye. Therfore haue I cut downe the prophetes, z letten them beslayne for my wordes sake: so that thy punysshment shal come to light. For I haue pleasure in lo-uyng: kyndnesse, and not in offerynge: yee in the knowlege of God, more then in burnt sacrifice. But euen like as Adam dyd, so haue they broken my couenaunt, and set me at naught. Galaad is a cite of wicked doers, of malicious people and bloudshedders. The multitude of the prestes is like an heape of thenes, murtherers z bloudthurstie: for they haue wrought abhominacion. Horrible thinges haue I sene in the house of Israel, there playeth Ephraim the harlot, and Israel is defyled: but Juda shall haue an earnest for himself, when I returne the captiuyte of my people.

The VII. Chapter.

The VII. Chapter.

When I undertake to make Israel whole, then the vnggraciousnesse of Ephraim and the wickednes of Samaria commeth to light: then go they aboute with lyes. At home, they bethenes: and without, they fall to robbynge. They cōsidre not in their hertes, that I remēbre all their wickednes. They go aboute wth their owne ynnuenciōs, but I se them wel ynough. They make the kinge and the princes, to haue pleasure in their wickednes & lyes. All these burne in aduoutry, as it were an ouen y<sup>f</sup> the baker heateth, whē he hath leste kneadinge, till the dowe be leuended. Euen so goeth it this daye with oure kinges and prynces, for they begynne to be woode droncken thoroow wyne: they vse familiarite with soch as disceue thē. They with the ymaginacion of their herte are like an ouē, their slepe is all y<sup>f</sup> night like the slepe of a baker, in the mornynge is he as hote as the flame of fyre: they are also gether as hote as an ouen.

They haue deuoured their owne iudges, all their kinges are fallē: yet is there none of thē y<sup>e</sup> calleth vpon me. Therfore must Ephraim be mixte amonge y<sup>e</sup> Zebithen. Ephraim is become like a cake, y<sup>e</sup> no man turneth: straun-gers haue deuoured his strength, yet he regardeth it not: he wareth ful of gray haire, yet wil he not knowe it: y<sup>e</sup> pride of Israel is cast dorone before their face, yet wil the ynos turne to the LORDE their God, ner seeke him, fo: all this.

The ix. Chap.

Ephraim is like a done, that is begyled, and hath no herte. Now call they vpon the Egipcians, now go they to the Assirians: but whyle they be goinge here and there, I shal spiede my net ouer them, & drawe them downe as yf foules of the ayre: and accordinge as they haue bene warned, so will I punyssh them. Wo be vnto them, for they haue forsake me. They must be destroyed, for they haue set me at naught. I am he that haue re demed them, and yet they dyssemble wth me. They call not vpon me with their hartes, but lye yonginge vpon their beddes. Where as they come together, it is but for meate & drinke, and me will they not obeye. I haue taught them, and defended their arme, yet do they ymagin myschefe agaynst me. They turne them selues, but not a right, & are be come as a broken bowe. Their prynces shal be slayne wth the swearde, for the malice of their tungen, soch blasphemies haue they lerned in the londe of Egipte.

The VIII. Chapter.

Set the home to thy mouth, and blo we: get the swiftly (as an Aegle) vnto the house of the LORDE: for they haue broken my conenant, and transgres sed my lawe. Israel can saye vnto me: thou art my God, we knowe the: but he hath re fused the thinge that is good, therefore shal the enemye folowe vpon him. They haue or dained kinges, but not thorow me: they haue made prynces, and I must not knowe of it. Of their syluer and golde haue they made them ymages, to bringe them selues to de struccion.

Thy calse (O Samaria) shalbe taken a waye. for my wrothfull indignacion is go ne forth agaynst the. How longe wil it be, or they can be clensted? For the calse came from Israel, the worke man made it, therefore can it be no God, but euen to a spyders webbe shal yf calse of Samaria be turned. They ha ue sowne wynde, therefore shal they reepe a storme.

Their sede shal beare no come, there shal no meel be made of their increase: though yf re be, yet shal straungers deuoure it vp. Is rael shal perish, the Gentiles shal entreate him as a foule vessel. Sens they went vp to the Assirians, they are become like a wyldc asse in the deserte.

Ephraim geueth rewardes to get louers, therefore are they scarred amoge the heithen, ther wil I gather them vp. They shal soone be weery of the burthen of kinges & pryn ces. Ephraim hath made many alters to do wickednes, therefore shal the alters come to his synne. Though I shewe the my lawe neuer so moch, they counte it but straunge doctrine. Where as they do sacrifice, offeringe the flesh and eatinge it: the LORDE will haue no pleasure therin: but will remembre their wickednes, and punyssh their synnes. Israel turneth agayne into Egipte, they ha ue forgotten him that made them, they buylde churches, and Iuda maketh many stronge cities: therefore wil I sende a fyre into the cities, and it shal consume their places.

The IX. Chapter.

Son thou triumphe (O Israel) me. I ke no boostinge more then the heithen, for thou hast comitted aduon try agaynst yf God: straunge rewardes hast thou loued, more the all come floores. There fore shal they nomore enioye the come floo res and wyne presses, and their swete wyne shal fayle the. They wil not dwel in the LOR DES londe, but Ephraim turneth agayne into Egipte, & eateth vncleane thinges amonge the Assirians. They poure out no wyne for a drinke offeringe vnto the LORDE, ne ther geue they him their slayne offeringes: but they be vnto them as mourners meates, wherin all they that eateth them, are defiled. For the bried that they haue soch lust vnto, shal not come in the house of the LORDE. What wil ye do then in the solempne dayes, and in the feast of the LORDE? lo, they shal get them awaye for the destruccion, Egipte shal receaue them, & Noph shal bury them.

The nettles shal ouergrowe their plea saunt goodes, and burres shal be in their ta bernacles. Be ye sure (O Israel) the tyme of visitacion is come, the dayes of recompen cinge are at honde. As for the prophet, ye holde him for a foole: and him that is rich in the sprete, for a mad man: so greate is youre wickednes and malice. Ephraim hath ma de himself a watchman of my God, a pro phet yf is become a snare to do hurte in every strete, and abhominacion in the house of his God. They be gone to faire, & haue destroyed the selues, like as they dyd afore tyme at Ga baa. Therefore their wickednes shal berem bried, and their synnes punysshed.

I fande Israel like grapes in the wilde nes, & swete their fathers as the first fyges in yf toppe of yf fyge tre. But they are gone to Baal peor, & runne a waie fro me to yf shame full Idoll, & are become as abhominable as their louers Ephraim slieth like a byde, so shal their glory also: In so moch, yf they shal nether begette, co ceauener beare children.

The prophet Oseas.

And though they bringe vp eny, yet will I make them childlesse amonge men. Yee wo shal come to them, when I departe from them. Ephraim (as me thinke) is planted in wylde places, like as Tyus, but now must she bringe hir owne children forth to the man slayer.

LORDE thou shalt geue them: what shal thou geue them? geue them an vn fructifull wombe and drye brestes. All their wic kednesse is done at Galgal, there do I abhor rethem. For the vngaciousnes of their ow ne impiacions, I wil dryue them out of my land. I will loue them nomore, for all their prynces are vnfaithfull. Ephraim is hewen downe, their rote is dryed vp, so yf they shal bringe nomore frute: yee and though they bringe forth eny, yet wil I slaye euen the best beloved frute of their body. My God shal cast them awaye, for they haue not bene obe dient vnto him, therfore shal they go astraye amonge the heithen.

The X. Chapter.

Israil was a goodly vyne, but he hath brought forth vnprofitable fru it: yee the more frute he had, the moe aueris he made: yf more good I dyd to their londe, the more frendshipe shewed they to their ymages. Their herte is denyded, therfo re wil they be destroyed. The LORDE shal breake downe their ymages, he shal destroye their alters. Then shal they saye: we haue no kinge, for why? we haue not feared the LORDE. And what shal then the kinge do to vs? They comon together, and sweare vayne ootheres: they be cofederate together, ther fore groweth their punysshment, as the weeds in the sowes of the londe.

They that dwell in Samaria haue wor shipped the calse of Berhan: therefore shal the people mourne ouer them, yee and the prestes also, that in their welchynesse reioy sed with them: and why? it shal passe awaye from them. It shalbe brought to the Assi rian, for a present vnto kinge Jareb. Ephra im shal receaue full punishment: Israel shal be confounded for his owne ymaginacions, Samaria wth his kinge shal vanish awaye, as the scomme vpon the water. The hye pla ces of Auen where Israel do synne, shal be cast downe: thistles and thornes shal growe vpon their alters. Then shal they saye to yf mountaynes: couer vs, and to the hilles: fall vpon vs.

O Israel, thou hast synned as Gaba a dyd afore tyme, where they remayned: shul de not the batel then come vpon the wicked

The xi. Chap. Jo. lxxxvi.

children, as wel as vpon the Gabaonites: I wil chasten them, euen after myne owne de syre, the people shal be gathered together o uer them, wher I punyssh them for their grea te wickednesse. Ephraim was vnto me, as a cow that is used to go to plowe, therefore I loued him, and fell vpon his saye neck. I do ue Ephraim, Iuda plowed, & Jacob plowed the husbode man: that they might sowe vnto rightuousnes, and reape the frutes of wel doynge: yf they might plowe vp their fresh londe, and seke the LORDE, till he came, and lerned them rightuousnes.

But now they haue plowed them wicked nesse, therefore shal they reepe synne, and eate the frute of lyes. Seinge thou puttest thy cofidence in thine owne wayes, and leaneest to yf multitude of thy worthies: there shal growe a sedicion amonge thy people. All yf stro ge cities shal be layed waiste, euen as Salma na was destroyed with his familiers, tho row him that was auenged of Baal, in the daye of batel, where yf mother perished with hir childre. Euen so shal it go with you (O Be thel) because of youre malicious wickednes. Like as the mornyng goeth awaye, so shal the kinge of Israel passe.

The XI. Chapter.

When Israel was yoge, I loued him: and called my sonne out of the lon de of Egipte. But yf moze they we re called, the more they wente backe: offeringe vnto Idols, and censynge ymages. I ler ned Ephraim to go, and bare them in myne armes, but they regarded not me, that wolde haue helped them. I led them with coardes of frendshipe, & with bondes of loue. I was quen he, that layed the yocke vpon their neckes. I gaue them their fodder myself, yf they shulde not go agayne into Egipte: And now is Assur their kinge: for they wolde not tur ne vnto me. Therefore shal yf swearde begyn ne in their cities, the stoare that they haue lickened vnto, shal be destroyed and eaten vp: and that because of their owne ymagina cions. My people hath no lust to turne vnto me, their prophetes laye the yocke vpon the, but they ease them not of their burthen.

What greate thinges haue I geuen the, o Ephraim: how faithfully haue I defen ded the, o Israel: haue I dealt with the as with Adama: or haue I intreated the like Seboim? No, my hert is otherwise mynded. Yee my mercy is to feruent: therefore haue I not turned me to destroye Ephraim in my wrothful displeasure. For I am God and no man, I am euen that holy one in the myddest of the, though I came not within the cite.

The prophet Oseas.

The LORDE roareth like a lyon, that they maye folowe him: Yee as a lyon roareth he, that they maye be a frayed, like the children of the see: that they maye be scarred awaye from Egipte, as men scarre byrdes: & frayed awaye (as doves use to be) from the Assirians londe: and that because I wolde haue them tary at home, saith the LORDE. But Ephraim goeth about me with lies, and the house of Israel dyssembleth. Only Juda holdeth him with God, and with the true holy thinges.

The XII. Chapter.

Ephraim kepeth the ayre, and foloweth after the east wynde: he is euer increasinge lyes & destruction. They be confederate with the Assirians, their oyle is caried into Egipte. The LORDE hath a courtte to holde with Juda, and wil punyssh Jacob: After their owne waies and a cordin ge to their owne inuencions, shal he recompence them. He toke his brother by the hele, when he was yet in his mothers wombe: and in his strength he wrestled with God. He strone with the Angel, and gat the victory: so that he prayde and desired him. He sawde him at Bethel, & there he talked wth vs.

Yee the LORDE God of hoostes, euen y<sup>e</sup> LORDE him self remembred him: Then turne to thy God, kepe mercy and equitye, and hope still in thy God. But the marchaunt hath a false weight in his honde, he hath a pleasure to occupie extortion. Ephraim thinke thus: Tush, I am rich, I haue good ynough: In all my workes shal not one fauete be founde, that I haue offended. Yet am I the LORDE thy God, eue as when I brought the out of the londe of Egipte, and set the in thy tentes, and as in the hye feast dayes.

I haue spokē thorow the prophetes, and shewed dyuerse visions, and declared my self by the ministracion of y<sup>e</sup> prophetes. But at Galaad is the abhominacion, they are fallen to vanyte. At Galgal they haue slayne oxen: and as many heapes of stones as they had in their lōde forowes, so many altars haue they made. Jacob fled into the lōde of Siria, and Israel serued for a wife, and for a wife he kepeth shepe.

By a prophet the LORDE brought them out of Egipte, and by a prophet he preferred the. But Ephraim hath prouoked him to displeasure thorow his abhominacions: therefore shal his bloude be poured vpon him self, and the LORDE his God shal rewarde him his blasphemies.

The xiiij. Chap.

The XIII. Chapter.

In the abhominacion of Ephraim is come also in to Israel. He is gone backe to Baal, therefore must he dye. And now they synne more and more: of their synner, they make them molten ymages, like the Idols of the heithen, and yet all is nothinge but the worke of the craftsman. Yee with stōdinge they preach of the same: who so wil kysse the calves, offreth to men. Therefore they shal be as the mourninge clōde, and as the dew that early passeth awaye: and like as dust that y<sup>e</sup> wynde taketh awaye from the floore, and as smoke that goeth out of y<sup>e</sup> chymney.

I am the LORDE thy God, which brought the out of the lōde of Egipte: that thou shuldest knowe no God but me only, & that thou shuldest haue no Saviour but only me. I toke diligent hede of the in the wilderness that drye lōde. But when they were wel fedde and had ynough, they wayed pēde, and forgat me. Therefore will I be vnto them as a lyon, and as a leoparde in y<sup>e</sup> waye to the Assirians. I wil come vpon them as a she beer, that is robbed of hir welpes, and I wil breake that stubburne herte of theirs. There wil I deuoure them as a lyon: yee the wylde beastes shal teare them.

O Israel, thou doest but destroye thy self. In me only is thy helpe. Where are thy thinges now, that shulde helpe the in all thy ciuities? Yee and thy iudges, of whom thou saydest: geue me a kinge and prynces: well, I gaue the a kinge in my wrath, and in my displeasure will I take him from the agayne. The wickednesse of Ephraim is bounde together, & his synne lieth hyd. Therefore shall sorowes come vpon him, as vpon a woman that trauaileth. An indiscrete sonne is he: for he considereth not, that he shulde not haue bene able to haue endured in the tyme of his byrth, had not I defended him from the graue, and deliuered him from death.

O death, I wil be thy death: o hell, I wil be thy styng. Yet can I see no comfort, for when he is now the goodliest amonge the brethren, the east wynde (euen the wynde of the LORDE) shal come downe from the wilderness, and drye vp his condytes, and drynke vp his welles: he shal spoyle the treasure of all pleasaunt vessels.

As for Samaria, they shal be made waiffe, & why: they are disobedient vnto their God. They shal perishe with the swerde, their children shal be slayne, and their women bygg with childe shal be ryppe vp.

The prophet Oseas.

The XIII. Chapter.

I vnto the now (o Israel) vnto y<sup>e</sup> LORDE thy God, for thou hast taken a greate fall thorow thy wickednesse. Take these wordes with you, when ye turne to the LORDE, & saye vnto him: O forgene vs all oure synnes, receaue vs graciously, & then wil we offre y<sup>e</sup> bullockes of oure lypes vnto the. Assur shal be no more oure helper, neither wil we ryde vpon horses eny more. As for the workes of oure bondes, we wil nomore call vpon them: For it is thou that art oure God, thou shewest euer mercy vnto the fatherlesse.

O yf they wolde do this) I shulde heale their sores: yee with all my herte wolde I loerhem: so yf my wrath shulde clene be turned awaye from them. Yee I wolde be vnto Israel as the dewe, and he shulde growe as y<sup>e</sup> lylie, & his rote shulde breake out as Libanus. His branches shulde sprede out abroad, & be as fayre as the olyue tre, & smel as Libanus. They that dwel vnder his shadowe, shulde come agayne, & growe vp as the corne, & flourish as the vyne: he shulde haue as good a name, as the wyne of Libanus.

O Ephraim, what haue I to do with Idols eny more. I wil graciously heare him, & lede him forth. I wil be vnto the as a grene fyre tre, vpon me shalt thou fyndethy fruite. Who so is wyse, shal vnderstande this: & he yf is right enstructe, wil regarde it. For y<sup>e</sup> wayes of the LORDE are righteous, soch as be godly wil walke in them: As for the wicked, they wil stōble therein.

The ende of the prophet Oseas.

The Prophet Joel.

What Joel conteyneth.

- Chap. I. He sheweth Israel, that all their glory and outwarde ceremonies, shal be put downe and cease.
- Chap. II. The plagis are greate, wherfore he wolde haue them to mourne: yet yf they will amende, they maye hope for grace.
- Chap. III. How the people are brought agayne, and their enemies punished.

The first Chapter.

In this is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Joel the sonne of Phathuel: Heare o ye elders: pōdrie this wel, all ye that dwell in the lō

The i. Chap. Jo. lxxxvij.

de: yf euer there happened soch a thinge in youre dayes, or in y<sup>e</sup> dayes of youre fathers. Tell youre children of it, & let them shewe it vnto their children, & so they to certifie their posterite therof. Loke what the caterpillar hath leste, yf hath the greshopper eaten vp: what the greshopper leste, that hath the locuste eaten vp: & what the locuste hath leste, that hath the blastyng consumed. Wake vp ye dion: Kardes, & wepe: mourne all ye wyne suppers, because of youre swete wyne, for it shal be taken awaye from youre mouth. Yee a nightie & an innumerable people shal come up in to my lōde: these haue teth like the teth of lyons, & chafte bones like the lyones. They shal make my vynyarde waiffe, they shal pyll of the barckes of my fygetrees, stry pethem bare, cast them awaye, and make the branches whyte.

Make y<sup>e</sup> mone as a virgin doth, yf gyrdeth her selfe with sacke, because of hir bryde gone. For the meate & drynt offeringe shal be taken awaye from the house of the LORDE: & the prestes y<sup>e</sup> LORDES ministers shal mourne. The felde shal be waisted, the lōde shal be in a miserable case: for the corne shal be destroyed, the swete wyne shal come to confusion, & the oyle vterly desolate. The husbandemen & the wyne garbeneres shal loke pitteously & make lamentacion, for the wheate wyne & barley, & because the harvest vpon the felde is so clene destroyed. The grape gatherers shal make greate mone, when the vynyarde & fygetrees be so vterly waisted. Yee all the pomgarnettes, palmtrees, apletrees, & the other trees of the felde shal wyther awaye. Thus the mery cheare of the children of men shal come to confusion.

Gyde you, & make y<sup>e</sup> mone, o ye prestes: mourne ye ministres of the altare: go youre waye in, & slepe in sack cloth, o ye officers of my God: for the meate & drynt offeringe shal be taken awaye from the house of y<sup>e</sup> God. Proclaime a fastyng, call the cōgregacion, gather the elders & all the inhabitants of the lōde together into the house of the LORDE y<sup>e</sup> God, & crie vnto the LORDE: alas, alas for this daye. And why: the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and cometh as a destroyer from the Almighty. Shal not y<sup>e</sup> meates be taken awaye before oure eyes, the mynth also & ioye from the house of oure God? The sede shal perishe in the ground, the garners shal lye waiffe, the floores shal be broken downe, for the corne shal be destroyed. O what a sighinge make the catell: the bullockes are very euell lityng, because they haue no pasture:

The prophet Joel.

and the shepe are fameshed awaye.

O LORDE, to the will I crie: for the fyre hath consumed the goodly pastures of the wyldernesse, and the flame hath brent vp all the trees of the felde. Yee the wyld beestes crie also vnto the: for the water ryuers are dried vp, and the fyre hath consumed the pastures of the wyldernesse.

The II. Chapter.

Blowe out y trompet in Sion, z crie vpo my holy hill, y all soch as dwel in the londe, maye treble at it: for y daie of the LORDE commeth, z is harde at hond: a darcke daie, a gloomyng daie, a cloudy daie, yee z a stormy daie, like as the morninge spredeth out vpo the hilles: Namely, a great z mightie people: soch as haue not bene sens y begynnynge, nether shal be after them for euermore. Before him shal be a consuminge fyre, z behynde him a burnynge flame. The londe shal be as a garden of pleasure before him, but behinde him shal it be a very waist wilderness, z there is no man, that shal escape him. They are to lye vpon like bayded horses, z runne like horse men. They slyppe vp vpon y hilles, as it were the sounde of charrettes: as the flame of fyre that consumeth the strawe, and as a mightie people redy to the batell.

B The folke shal be a frayd of him, all faces shal be as blacke as a pot. These shal runne like giannes, z leape ouer the walles like men of warre. Every man in his goinge shal kepe his araie, z not go out of his path. The re shal not one drye another, but ech shal kepe his owne waye. They shal breake in at the wyndowes, z not be hurte: They shal come into the cite, z runne vpon the walles: They shal clymme vp vpon the houses, z slyppe in at the wyndowes like a thefe. The earth shal quake before him, yee the heauens shal be moued: the Sonne z Moone shal be darkened, and the starres shal withdraue their shyne. The LORDE shal shewe his voyce before his hoost, for his hoost is greates, stronge z mightie to fulfill his commaundment. This is y greates and maruelous fearfull daie of the LORDE: And who is able to abyde it?

C Nowtherfore saith the LORDE: Turne you vnto me with all youre hertes, with fasting, wepyng and mournynge: rente youre hertes, z not youre clothes. Turne you vnto the LORDE youre God, for he is gracious z mercifull, longe sufferyng z of greates compassion: z redy to pardone wickednes. Then (no doute) he also shal turne, z forgene: z after his chastenynge, he shal let youre increase remayne, for meat z drynke offerynges vnto the LORDE youre God: Blowe out with the trompet in Sion, proclame a fastynge, call the congregacion, z gather the people together: warne the congregacion, gather the elders, bringe the children z suckynges together. Let y brydegrome go forth of his chamber, z the bryde out of her closet. Let the priestes serue the LORDE betwixt the porch z y altar, wepyng z sayenge: be fauourable (O LORDE) be fauourable vnto thy people: lest thine heretage be brought to soch confusion, lest the heithen be lordes therof. Wherefore shulde they saye amonge the heithen: where is now their God?

Then shal the LORDE be gelous ouer his londe, z spare his people: yee y LORDE shal answere, z saye vnto his people: Beholde, I wil sende you come, wyne z oyle, so that ye shal haue plenty of them: z I wil nomore geue you ouer to be a reprove amonge the heithen. Agayne, as for him of the north, I shal drye him farre from you: z shute him out into a drye and waist londe, his face towards the east see, and his hynder partes towards the vttermost see. The stynte of him shal go vp, and his fylthy corrupcion shal fall vpon himself, because he hath dealte so proudly. Feare not (O londe) but be glad and reioyse, for the LORDE wil do greates things. Be not ye a frayd nether (O ye beastes of the felde) for the pastures shal be grene, and the trees shal beare their frute: the fygetrees z vmygdes shal geue their increase.

Be glad then (O ye children of Sion) and reioyse in the LORDE youre God, for he hath geuen you the teacher of righteounes: z he it is y shal sende you dewne showers of rayne, early and late in the first moneth: so that y garners shal be full of corne, and the prestes plenteous in wyne and oyle. And as for the yeaeres that y gresshopper, locuste, blasstinge z caterpillar (my greates hoost, which I sent amonge you) haue eaten vp, I shal restore them to you agayne: so that ye shal haue ynough to eate, and be satisfied: and prayse the name of the LORDE youre God, that so maruelously hath dealte with you.

And my people shal neuer be confounded eny more: Ye shall well knowe, that I am in the myddest of Israel, and that I am youre God: yee and that there is none other, and my people shal nomore be brought to confusion.

After this, will I poure out my sperte vpon all flesh: z ye sonnes z ye daughters shal prophesy: ye olde men shal dreame

The prophet Joel.

and your yongemen shal se visions: Yee in those dayes I will poure out my sperte vpon seruantes and maydens: I will shewe wonders in heauen aboue, and tokes in the earth beneath: bloude and fyre, and the vapoure off smoke. The Sonne shal be turned into darcknesse, z y Moone into bloude: before y greates z notable daie off the LORDE come. And the tyme shal come: y who so euer calleth on the name of the LORDE, shal be saued. For vpon the mount Sion z at Jerusalem, there shal be a saluacion, like as the LORDE hath promysed: yee z amonge the other remnant, whom the LORDE shal call.

The III. Chapter.

Take hede: In those dayes z at y same tyme, when I turne agayne the captynite of Iuda z Jerusalem: I shal gather all people together, z bringe the in to the valley of Josaphat: and there wil I reason with the, because of my people z here rage of Israel: who they haue scatred about in the nacions, z parted my lode: yee they haue cast lottes for my people, the yonge men haue they set in the bodel house, z solde the damels for wyne, y they might haue to drinke. Thou Tirus and Sidon and all ye borders of the Philistynes: what haue ye to do with me? Will ye despyse me? well: yf ye will nedes despyse me, I shal recopence you, euen vpon youre heade, z y right shortly: for ye haue taken awaye my syluer z golde, my fayre z goodly Jewels, z brought them in to youre gods houses. The children also of Iuda and Jerusalem haue ye solde vnto the Gekes, that ye might bringe the farre fro y borders of the owne countrees.

Beholde therefore: I will rayse them out of the place, where ye haue solde them, z will rewarde you euen vpon youre heade. Your sonnes z your daughters will I sell thow the bondes of the childre of Iuda, z so they shal gene them forth to sell, vnto the of Saba, a people of a farre countre: for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. Crie out these things amonge the Gentiles, proclame warre, wake vp the giannes, let them drave nye, let the come vp all the lusty warryours of the. Make you swerdes of youre plowshares, and speares of youre sickles z sythes. Let y weate man saye: I am stronge. Mustre you, and come, all ye heithen rounde aboute: gather you together, there shal the LORDE laye all thy giannes to the grounde. Let the people aryse, and get them to the valley of Josaphat: for there wil I sit, and iudge all heithen rounde aboute.

The iij. Chap. Jo. lxxxviij.

Laye to youre sythes, for the harvest is ripe: come, get you downe: the wynepresse is full, yee the wynepresses runne ouer, for their wickednesse is waxen greates. In the valley appoynted, there shal be many, many people: for the daie of the LORDE is nye in y valley appoynted. The Sonne and Moone shal be darkened, z the starres shal withdraue the light. The LORDE shal roare out of Sion, z crie out of Jerusalem, that the heauens z the earth shal quake withall. But the LORDE shal be a defence vnto his owne people, ad a refuge for the childre of Israel. Thus shal ye knowe, y the LORDE youre God dwell vpo my holy mount of Sion. Then shal Jerusalem be holy, z there shal no straungers go thow her eny more. Then shal the mountaynes droppe swete wyne, z the hylles shal flowe with mylke. All the ryuers of Iuda shal haue water ynough, z out of the LORDES house, there shal flowe a sprynge, to water y broke of Sittim: but Egipte shal be layed waist, z Edon shal be desolate: because they haue dealte so cruelly with the childre of Iuda, and shed innocent bloude in their londe. Agayne, Iuda shal be inhabited for euermore, z Jerusalem from generacion to generacion: for I wil not leaue their bloude vnauenged. And the LORDE shal dwell in Sion.

These are the sermons, that were shewed unto Amos (which was one of the shepherdes at Thecna) upon Israel, in the tyme of Osiat kynge of Iuda, and in the tyme of Jeroboam sonne of Joas kynge of Israel, two yere before y<sup>e</sup> earth quake. And he sayde: The LORDE shal reare out off Sion, and shewe his voyce fro Ierusalem: so that y<sup>e</sup> pastures of the shepherdes shal be in a miserable case, and y<sup>e</sup> toppe of Charnel dried vp.

Thus wil I breake the barres off Damascus, and rote out the inhabiter fro the felde of Auen, and him y<sup>e</sup> holdeth the scepter, out off y<sup>e</sup> pleasunt house: so y<sup>e</sup> the people shal be dryuen out off syrie Siria. sayeth the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: for thre and foure wickednesses off Edom I wil not spare him, because he persecuted his brother with the swerde, destroyed his mothers wombe, bare hatred very longe, and so kepte indignacion allwaye by him. pest and in the daye off stomer: so that the kynge shal go in to captyue, he and his pecces together, sayeth the LORDE.

The II. Chapter.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: for thre and foure wickednesses off Moab, I wil not spare him: because he brent the bones off the kynge of Edom to ashes. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to Moab, which shal consume y<sup>e</sup> pallaces of Cariath: Moab shal perish with a noyse, and the sounde of a shawme. I wil rote out the indgement amogethem, and slaye all his prynces with him, sayeth the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: for thre and foure wickednesses off Iuda, I wil not spare him: because he hath cast asyde the lawe of the LORDE, and not kepte his commaundementes: for why, they wolde nedes be disceant with the lyes, that thei fore fathers folowed. Therefore wil I sende a fyre in to Iuda, which shal consume the palaces of Ierusalem.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: for thre and foure wickednesses off Israel, I wil not spare him: because he hath sold the righteous for money, and the poore for shues. They treade vpon poore mens heades in the dust of the earth, and croke the wayes off the mete. The sonne and the father go to the harlot, to dishonoure my helynesse: they lye besyde euery altar vpon clothes taken to pledge, and in the house of their goddes they drynke the wyne of the oppressed. Yet destroyed I the Amoute before them, that was as he as the Cedre trees, and as stronge as the oaks: not withstandinge I destroyed his frute fro aboue, and his rote from vnder.

Agayne: I brought you out of the londe of Egypte, and led you xl. yeres thorow the wyldernesse, that ye might haue the Amonters londe in possession. I raysed vp prophetes amonge youre children, and absteyners amonge youre yōgemmen. Is it not so, o ye children off Israel, sayeth the LORDE: But ye gaue the absteyners wyne to drynke, yee ye commaunded the prophetes, sayenge: Prophecy not. Beholde, I wil crashe you in sonder, like as a wayne crassheth, y<sup>e</sup> is full of sheues: so that y<sup>e</sup> swifte shal not escape, neither the stronge be able to do eny thyng: no, the giaunte shal not saue his owne life. The archer shal not abyde, and the swifte off foote shal not escape. The hoisina shal not saue his life, and he that is as maly of stomack as a giaunte, shal in that daye be fayne to runne his waye naked, sayeth the LORDE.

The prophet Amos.

The III. Chapter.

Heare, what the LORDE speaketh vnto you (o ye children off Israel) namely, vnto all y<sup>e</sup> trybes, who I brought out off Egypte, and sayde: You only haue I accepted from all the generacions off the earth: therefore wil I vyset you in all youre wickednesses. Maye twaine walke together except they be agreed amonge them selues? Doth a lyon roare in the wodde, excepte he haue a pray? Or crieth a lyons whelp out off his denne, excepte he haue gotten semthiſge? Doth a byrde fall in a snare vpo y<sup>e</sup> earth where no fouler is? Taketh a man his snare vpo the grounde, afore he cathe sem what? Crie they out Alarum with the trompet in the cite, and the people not afrayed? Commeth there eny plage in a cite, without it be the LORDES doinge? Now doth the LORDE God no maner of thinge, but he telleth his secretes before vnto his seruantes y<sup>e</sup> prophetes. When a lyon roareth, who will not be afrayed? Seynge then that the LORDE God himself speaketh, who will not prophesy?

Preach in the palaces at Asdod, and in the palaces off the londe off Egypte, and saye: gather you together vpon the mountaynes off Samaria, so shall ye se greates murther and violent oppression amonge them: for why, they regarde not the thinge that is right, sayeth the LORDE: they gather together euell gotten goodes, and laye vpo robberie in their houses.

Therefore, thus sayeth the LORDE God: This londe shal be troubled and beseged rounde aboute, thy strength shal be plucte from the, and thy palaces robbed. Thus saith the LORDE: like as an hyrdeman taketh two legges off a pece off an eare out off the Lyons mouth: Euen so the children off Israel (that dwell in Samaria, hauynge their couches in the corner, and their beddes at Damascus) shal be plucte awaye. Heare, and beare record in the house of Jacob (sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes) that when I begynne to vyset the wickednesse off Israel, I wil vyset y<sup>e</sup> altars at Bethel also: so that the hornes of the altar shal be broken off, and fall to the grounde.

As for the wynter house and summer house, I wil smyte them downe: and the houses off mery, yee and many other houses shal perish, and be destroyed, sayeth the LORDE.

The IIII. Chapter.

The iiij. Chap. 35. lxxxix.

Heare this worde, o ye sat kynne, that be vpon the hill off Samaria: ye that do poore me wronge, and oppresse the nedye: ye that saye to youre lordes: brynge hither, let vs drynke. Therefore the LORDE hath sworne by his helynesse: The dayes shal come vpon you, that ye shal be lift vp vpo speeres, and youre posterite caried awaye in sylsher pannes. Ye shall get you out at the gap pes one after another, and in Armon shal ye be cast awaye, sayeth the LORDE.

Ye came to Bethel for to worke vngacionsnes, and haue increased youre synnes at Galgal. Ye brought youre sacrifices in the mounyng, and youre tythes vnto the thirde daye. Ye made a thāt offeringe off leuen, ye promised frewill offeringes, and proclaimed them. Soch lust had ye, o ye children off Israel, sayeth the LORDE God. Therefore haue I geuen you ydle teth in all youre cities, and scarcenesse off bred in all youre places: yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE.

When there were but thre monethes vnto y<sup>e</sup> harvest, I withheld the rayne from you: yee I rayned vpo one cite, and not vpo another one pece off grounde was moystured with rayne, and the grounde that I rayned not vpon, was drye. Wherefore two (yeethre) cities came vnto one, to drynke water: but they were not satisfied, yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORDE.

I haue smyten you with drouth and blastinge: and loke how many orchardes, vinyardes, fygetrees and olyue trees ye had: y<sup>e</sup> cattirpiller hath eaten them vp. But yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Pestilence haue I sent amoge you, as I dyd in Egypte: youre yonge men haue I slayen wth y<sup>e</sup> swerde, and caused youre hoyses be taken captyue: I made the styndinge sauoure of youre tentes to come vp in to youre nostrils. Yet wil ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Some off you haue I ouerthrowen: as I ouerthrowe Sodome and Gomore: so that ye were as a brande plucte out off the fyre. Yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Therefore, thus wil I handle the agayne (O Israel) ye euen thus wil I handle the. Make the ready then to mete thy God, o Israel. For lo, he maketh the mountaynes, he ordeneth the wynde, he sheweth man what he is aboute to do: he maketh the mounyng and the darcknesse, he treadeth vpo the hye places off the earth: y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God of hoostes is his name.

The V. Chapter.

Hear this worde (o ye house of Israel) and why? I must make this mone for you: The virgin Israel shall fall, & neuer rise vp agayne: she shall be cast downe vpon hir owne grounde, and no man shall helpe hir vp. For thus sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORD God: Where as there dwelt a M. in one cite, there shall be left scarce an C. therein: and where y<sup>e</sup> re dwelt an C. there shall scarce ten be left for the house off Israel. Neuertheles, thus sayeth the LORD vnto y<sup>e</sup> house of Israel: Sete after me, ad ye shall lyue, but sete not after Bethel. Come not at Galgal, and go not to Bersaba: for Galgal shall be caried awaye captiue, and Bethel shall come to naught. Sete the LORD, y<sup>e</sup> ye maye lyue: lest the house of Joseph be brent with fyre and consumed, and lest there be none to quench Bethel.

Returne the lawe to womwood, and cast downe rightuousnes vnto the grounde. The LORD maketh the vij. starres and the Oryons, he turneth the night into daye, and off the daye he maketh darcknesse. He calleth y<sup>e</sup> waters of the see, and poureth them out vpon the playne grounde: the LORD is his name. Heraseth destruccion vpon the mightie people, & bryngeth downe the stronge hold: but they owe him euell will, y<sup>e</sup> reproueth them openly: and who so telleth the the playne treuth, they abhorre him. For so moch the as ye oppresse y<sup>e</sup> poore, and robbe him of his best sustenance: therefore, where as ye haue buylded houses off square stone, ye shall not dwell in them. Maruelos pleasaunt vnyardes shall ye plante, but the wyne of the shall ye not drynke: and why? as for the multitude of youre wickedneses and youre stoute synnes, I knowe them right well. Enemies are ye off the righteous, ye take rewardes, ye oppresse the poore in iudgment. Therefore the wyse must now be fayne to holde his tuge, so wicked a tyme is it.

Sete after the thinge that is good, & not euell, so shall ye lyue: yee the LORD God off hoostes shall be with you, according to youre owne desyre. Hate the euell, and loue the good: set vp right agayne in the porte: & (no doute) the LORD God off hoostes shall be mercifull vnto the remnant of Joseph. Off no (sayeth the LORD God, the God off hoostes) there shall be mourninge in all stretes, yee they shall saye i every strete: alas, alas. They shall call the house bonde man to lamentacio, and soch as can mourne, to mournynge. In all vnyardes there shall be heynnesse, for I will come amonge you, sayeth the LORD. Wo be vnto them that desyre the daye off y<sup>e</sup>

LORDE: Wherefore wolde ye haue it? As for that daye of the LORD, it shall be darke & not cleare: yee like as when a man runneth for a lyon, and a Beer meteth with him: so he cometh into the house, and leeneth his honde vpon the wall, a serpent byteth him. Shall not the daye of the LORD be darke, and not cleare: shall it not be cloudy, and no shyne in it?

I hate and abhorre youre holy dayes, & where as ye censeme when ye cometogether I will not accepte it. And though ye offere me bientoferinges and meatoferinges, ye haue I no pleasure therein: As for youre thankoferinges, I wil not loke vpon them. Awaye with that noyse of thy songes, I wil not heare thy playes of musick: but se that equyte flowe as the water, and rightuousnesse as a mightie streame. O ye house of Israel, gaue ye me offeringes and sacrificies xl. yeares longe in the wyldernes? Yet haue ye set vp tabernacles to youre Moloch, and ymages of youre Idols, yee ad the statute of youre god Bemphe, figures which ye made to worshipethem. Therfore wil I cause you be caried awaye beyonde Damascus, sayeth the LORD, whose name is the God off hoostes.

The VI. Chapter.

Wo be to the proude welchy in Samaria: to soch as thinke the so sure vpon y<sup>e</sup> mount of Samaria: which holde them selues for the best of the worlde, and make the house of Israel, eue as they list. Go to Calne, and se: and from thence get you to Hemath the greate cite, and so go downe to Gath of the Philistines: be they better at it se then these kyngdomes, or the border of the ir londe wyder then yours: Ye are taken out for the euell daye, even yet that syt in the stile of wysfulnesse: Yet that lye vpon beddes off yuery, and vse youre wantonnesse vpon youre couches: ye that eate the best lambes off flocke, and the fattest calves off the woame: ye that synge to the lute, and in playenge off instrumentes compare youre selues vnto Dauid: ye that drynke wyne out of goblettes, & annoynte youre selues with the best oyle, but no man is sory for Josephs hurte. Therefore now shall ye be the first of them, that shall be led awaye captiue, and the lusty chere of the wysfull shall come to an ende.

The LORD God hath swome euen by himself (sayeth the LORD God off hoostes) I hate the pryde of Jacob, and I abhorre his palaces: and I wil geue ouer the cite, w<sup>ch</sup> all that is therein: so that though there remain men in one house, they shall dye. So ther nexte kynnsfolkes and the deed buriers shall take them, and cary awaye their bones, and saye vnto him, that is in the ynnnermer house: is there yet eny mo by y<sup>e</sup>? And he shall answer: they are all gone, holde thy tunge (shall he saye) for they wolde not remembre the name of the LORD.

Beholde, the LORD is mynded to smyte the greate houses, so that they shall decaye: as the little houses, that they shall cleue a sundur. Who can runne with hoises, or plowe w<sup>ch</sup> open vpon the harde rockes off stone? For why, ye haue turned true iudgment into byttemesse, and the frute of rightuousnesse in to wormwood: yee euen ye, that reioyse in vayne thynges: ye that saye: haue not we optayned homes in oure owne strength? Well, take heede, o ye house off Israel, sayeth the LORD God off hoostes: I will brynge a people vpo you, which shall trouble you, from the waye that goeth towarde Hemath, vnto the brote in themet ower.

The VII. Chapter.

The LORD God shewed me soch a vision: beholde, there stode one that made gresshoppers, euen when the come was shuryng forth, after the kyng had clipte his shepe. Now when they vnderoke to eate vp all the grene thinges in y<sup>e</sup> londe, I sayde: O LORD God, be mercifull, I beseeche the: who shulde els helpe vp Jacob, that is brought so lowe? So the LORD was gracious therein, and the LORD sayde: well, it shall not be. Agayne, y<sup>e</sup> LORD shewed me this vision: beholde, the LORD God called the fyre to punyssh withall, and it deuoured the greate deperey: yee it consumed a parte allre dy. Then sayde I: O LORD God, holde thy ne honde: for who shulde els helpe vp Jacob that is brought so lowe? So the LORD was mercifull therein, and the LORD God sayd: well, it shall not be.

Morouer, he shewed me this vision: beholde, the LORD stode vpon a plastered wall, & a masons trowell in his hode. And the LORD sayde vnto me: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a masons trowell. Then sayde the LORD: beholde, I will laye the trowell amonge my people of Israel, and will nomore ouersee them: but the hye hilchapels off Isaac must be layed waist, and the churches off Israel made desolate: and as for the house of Jeroboam, I will stonde vp agaynst it with the swerde. Vpon this sent Amasias the prest to Bethel vnto Jeroboam the kinge of Israel, sayenge: Amos maketh the house off

Israel to rebell agaynst the, the londe ca<sup>n</sup> not awaye with his wordes. For Amos sayeth: Jeroboam shall dye with the swerde, and Israel shall be led awaye captiue out of their owne londe. And Amasias sayde vnto Amos: Get the hence (thou that cast se so well) and fle in to the londe of Iuda: get the theryn lyuynge, and prophecy there: and prophecynomore at Bethel, for it is the kynges chapel, and the kynges court.

Amos answered, and sayde to Amasias: As for me, I am nether prophet, ner prophe-tes sonne: but a keeper of catell. Now as I was breakynge downe molberies, and goynge after the catell, the LORD toke me, & sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and prophecy vnto my people of Israel. And therefore, heare thou now the worde off the LORD: Thou saiest: prophecy not agaynst Israel, and speake nothinge agaynst the house off Isaac. Wherefore thus sayeth the LORD: Thy wife shall be defyled in y<sup>e</sup> cite, y<sup>e</sup> sonnes and daughters shall be slayne with the swerde, and thy londe shall be measured out with the lyne: Thou thy self shalt dye in an vnclene londe, and Israel shall be dryuen out off his owne countre.

The VIII. Chapter.

The LORD God shewed me methis vision: and beholde, there was a man de with sommer frute. And he sayde: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a man de with sommer frute. Then sayde the LORD vnto me: the ende cometh vpon my people of Israel, I wil nomore ouersee them. In that daye shall the songes off the temple be turned in to sorow, sayeth the LORD God. Many deed bodyes shall lye in euery place, & be cast forth secretly. Heare this, O ye y<sup>e</sup> oppresse the poore, and destroye the nedye in y<sup>e</sup> londe, sayenge: Whan will the new moneth be gone, that we maye sell vytale, and y<sup>e</sup> Sabbath, that we maye haue scarcenesse of corne: to make the busshel lesse, and the Syckle greater: We shall set vp false waightes, y<sup>e</sup> we maye get the poore vnder vs with their money, and the nedye also for shues: yee let vs sell the chaffe for corne.

The LORD hath swome agaynst the pryde of Jacob: these woikes of theirs will I neuer forget. Shall not the londe tremble, and all they that dwell therein, mourne for this? Shall not their destruccion come vpon them like a water streame, & flowe ouer the, as the floude of Egypte? At the same tyme (sayeth the LORD God) I shall cause y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>on</sup>ne to go downe at noone, and the londe to be Beholde, the tyme cometh (sayeth the LORDE God) yf I shal sende an hunger in to y earth: not the hunger of bried, ner the thyrst of water: but an hunger to heare the worde off the LORDE: so that they shal go from the one see to the other, yee from y north vnto y east, runnyng aboute to seeke the worde of y LORDE, and shal not fynde it. Though they were buried in the hell, my honde shal fetch them from thence: though they clymme vp to heauen, yet shal I cast them downe: though they hyde them selues vpon the coppe of Carmel, yet shal I seeke them out, and brynge them from thence: Though they crepe downe from my sight in to the depe of the see, I shal comaunde the serpente, cuen there to bite them. ## The ix. Chap.

Beholde, the eyes of the LORDE are vpon the realme that symeth, to rote it cleane out of the earth: Neuertheles, I will not destroye the house of Jacob, saith the LORDE.

For lo, this I promise: though I siffe y house of Israel amonge all nations (like as they vse to siffe in a syne) yet shall not y smallest granel stone fall vpon the earth: But all the wicked doers of my people, that saye: Tush, the plage is not so nye, to come so hately vpon vs: those shal perish with the swerde. At that tyme wil I buylde agayne the tabernacle off David, that is fallen downe, and hedge vp his gappes: and loken is broke, I shal repayre it: yee I shal buylde it agayne, as it was afore tyme, yf they maye possesse the remnaunt of Edom, yee and all soch people as call vpon my name wch, saith the LORDE, which doth these things.

Beholde, the tyme cometh (saith the LORDE) that the plowman shal ouertake y mower, and y treader off grapes, him that soweth sede. The mountaynes shal droppe swete wyne, and the hilles shal be fructfull, and I wil turne the captiuite of my people of Israel: they shal repayre the waiste cities, & haue the in possession: they shal plante vineyardes, and drynke the wyne therof: they shal make gardens, and enioye the frutes off the. And I wil plate them vpon their owne ground, so that I will neuer rote them out agayne from their londe, which I haue geuen yf sayeth the LORDE thy God.

What Abdy conteyneth.

Chap. 1 He prophesyeth agaynst the proude smackers of the Edomites, that vered the Idolies in their aduersite. He sheweth, what plagges shal come vpon them.

The first Chapter.

This is the vision that was shewed vnto Abdy: Thus hath y LORDE God spoke vpon Edom: We haue herde of the LORDE yf there is an embassage sent amonge the heithen: Up, let vs aryse, and fight agaynst them. Beholde, I will make y small amonge the heithen, so that thou shalt be utterly despised. The pryde of thine herte hath lift the vp, thou that dwellest in y stroge holdes off stone, and hast made the an hye seate: Thou sayest in thine herte: who shal cast me downe to the grounde? But though thou wentest vp as hye as the Aegle, and maydest thy nest aboue amonge the starnes: yet wolde I plucke the downe from thee. Yf y theues & robbers came to y by night, thou takinge thy rest: shulde they not scale, till they had ynough? yf the grape gatherers came vpon the, wolde they not leaue the some grapes? But how shall they rype Esau, and seke out his treasures?

2 Yee the men that were sworne vnto the, shal brynge the out off the borders off thine owne londe. They that be now at one with the, shal disceane the, and ouercome y: Eue they that eate thy bried, shal betraye the, or eue thou perceaue it. Shal not I at the same tyme destroye the wyse men of Edom, and those that haue vnderstandinge, from the mount off Esau? Thy giannes (o Theman) shal be a frayd, for thorow the slaughter they shal be all ouerthrowne vpon the mount off Esau. Shame shal come vpon the, for y malice that thou shewedest to thy brother Jacob: yee for euermore shalt thou perish, & that because of the tyme, when thou didest set thyself agaynst him, euen when the enemies caried awaye his hoost, and when the aleantes came in at his portes, and cast lottes vpon Jerusalem, and thou thyself wast as one of them.

3 Thou shalt nomore se the daye of thy brother, thou shalt nomore beholde the tyme of his captiuite: thou shalt nomore reioyse ouer the children of Juda, in the daye of their destruccion, thou shalt triumph nomore in the tyme of their trouble. Thou shalt nomore come in at the gates off my people, in the tyme of their decaye: thou shalt not se their mysery in the daye of their fall.

Thou shalt sende out no man agaynst the irhoost, in the daye of their aduersite: nether shalt thou stode waytinge enymore at y corners of the stretes, to murthur soch as are fled, or to take them presoners, that remaine in the daye of their trouble. For the daye off the LORDE is harde by vpon all heithen. Like as thou hast done, so shalt thou be dealt withall, yee thou shalt be rewarded euen vpon thine heade. For like wyse as ye haue dyoncken vpon myne holy hill, so shal all heithen dryncke continually: yee dryncke shal they, and swallowe vp, so that ye shall be, as though ye had neuer bene.

The i. Chap. Fo. xci.

But vpon the mount Sion, there shall a remnaunt escape: these shal be holy, and the house of Jacob shal possesse euenthose, that had them selues afore in possessio. Moreover, the house of Jacob shal be a fyre, the house of Joseph a flame, & the house of Esau shal be the strawe: which they shal kyndle and cosume, so that nothinge shal be left of the house off Esau, for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. They of the south shal haue the mount off Esau in possession: and loke what lieth vpon the greunde, that shal the philistynes haue: the playne felde shal Ephraim and Samaria possesse: and the mountaynes off Galaad shal Ben Jamin haue. And this hoost shal be the childre off Israels presoners: Now what so lieth from Canaan vnto Sarpad, and in Sepharad, that shal be vnder the subiection off Jerusalem: and the cities off the south shal enheret it. Thus they that escape vpon the hill off Sion, shal go vp to punyssh the mount off Esau, and the kyngdome shal be the LORDES.

The Prophet Jonas.

What Jonas conteyneth.

Chap. 1. God sendeth Jonas vnto Ninine, he fleth, and is cast in to the see.
Chap. 2. A fysh swalloweth vp Jonas, which crieth vnto God, and prayserh hym, and the fysh casteth him out agayne vpon the londe.
Chap. 3. God sendeth him agayne to Ninine, to shewe them the punysshment for to come, yf they wil not repent: they amende, and God is mercifull to them.
Chap. 4. Jonas is angrie, and complayneth off God, which reformeth him.

The first Chapter.

He worde of the LORDE came vnto Jonas the sonne of Amithai, sayenger: Aryse, and get the to Ninine that greete cite: and preach vnto them, how y their wickednesse is come vp before me. And Jonas made him ready to fle vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE, and gat him downe to Joppa: where he founde a shippe ready for to go vnto Tharsis. So he payde his fare, and wente aborde, that he might go with them vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE. But the LORDE hurled a greate wynde in to the see, and there was a mightie tempest in the see: so that the shippe was in ioperdy of goinge in peces. Then the maryners were a frayde, and cried every man vnto his god: and the goodes that were in the shippe, they cast into the see, to lighten it off them. But Jonas gat him vnder y hatches, where he layed him downe and slombred.

B So the master of the shippe came to him and sayde vnto him: why slombrest thou?
Up, call vpon thy God: yf God (happly) wil thynke vpon vs, that we peryshe not. And they sayde one to another: come, let vs cast lottes: that we maye knowe, for whose cause we are thus troubled. And so they cast lottes, and the lot fell vpon Jonas.

C The sayde they vnto him: tell vs, for who se cause are we thus troubled? what is thine occupacion? whence comest thou? what countre man art thou, and of what nacion?
He answered them: I am an Ebrie, and I feare the LORDE God of heauen, which made both the see and drie lande. Then were y men exceedingly afrayed, & sayde vnto him:
why didest thou so? (for they knewe, that he was fled from the presence of the LORDE, because he had tolde them) and sayde morouer vnto him: What shall we do vnto the, that the see maye cease from troublinge vs? (for the see wrought and was troublous) he answered them: Take me, and cast me in to the see, so shal it let you be in rest: for I wo-te, it is for my sake, that this greate tempest is come vpon you.

D Nevertheless, the men assayed with rowinge, to brynge the shippe to lode: but it wol-de not be, because the see wrought so, & was so troublous agaynst them. Wherfore they cried vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LOR-DE, let vs not perishe for this mans death, nether laye thou innocent bloude vnto oure charge: for thou (O LORDE) hast done, even as thy pleasure was.

E So they toke Jonas, and cast him in to the see, and the see leste ragynge. And the men feared the LORDE exceedingly, doynge sacrifices & makinge vowes vnto the LOR-DE.

The II. Chapter.

A Vnto the LORDE prepared a greate fyll he, to swallow vp Jonas. So was Jonas in the bely of the fyll, thre da-yes and thre nightes. And Jonas prayed vnto the LORDE his God, out of the fyll shes bely, and sayde: In my trouble I called vnto y LORDE, and he herde me: out off the bely off hell I cried, and thou herdest my voyce.

Thou haddest cast me downe depe in y mdest off the see, and the floude compassed me about: yee alle thy waves and rowles of water went ouer me, I thoughte that I had bene cast awaye out of thy sight: but I wil ye agayne lode towarde thy holy temple.

B The waters compassed me, euen to the re-ry soule: the depe laye aboute me, and the wades were wrapte aboute myne heade. I went downe to the botome of the hilles, & was barred in with earth for ever. But thou (O LORDE my God) hast brought vp my lyfe a-gayne out of corrupcion. When my soule faynted within me, I thought vpon the LOR-DE: and my prayer came in vnto the, euen in to thy holy temple. They that holde of voyne varyties, wil forsake his mercy. But I wil do the sacrifice with the voyce of thankesgynge, and wil paye that I haue vowed: for why? saluacion cometh of the LORDE.
And y LORDE spake vnto y fyll, and it cast out Jonas agayne vpon the drie lande.

The III. Chapter.

A Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jonas agayne, sayenge: vp, and get the to Ninine that greate cite, & preach vnto them the preachinge, which I bade the. So Jonas arose, and wente to Ninine at the LORDES commaundement. Ninine was a greate cite vnto God, namely, of thre dayes iourney.

B And Jonas wente to, and entred in to y cite: euen a dayes iourney, and cried, sayenge: There are yet xl. dayes, and then shal Ninine be overthrowen. And the people of Ninine beleued God, and proclaimed fastynge, and arayed themselves in sack cloth, as well the greate as the small of them. And they dinges came vnto y kinge of Ninine, which arose out off his seate, and dyd his appe-rell off, and put on sack cloth, and sate him downe in ashes.

C And it was cried and commaunded in Ninine, by the auctorite of the kinge and his loides, sayenge: se that nether man or best, ore or shepetailf ought at all: and that they nether fede ner drinke water: but put on sack cloth both man and best, and crye mighte-ly vnto God: yee se that every man turne fro his euill waye, and from the wickednesse, & he hath in honde.

The prophet Jonas.

Who can tell? God maye turne, and repete, and cease from his searce wrath, that we perishe not. And when God sawe their wortes, how they turned from their wicked wa-yes: he repented on the euill, which he sayde he wolde do vnto them, and dyd it not.

The III. Chapter.

A Wherfore Jonas was sore discontent, and angrie. And he prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE, was not this my sayenge (I praye the) when I was yet in my countre: therfore I haisted rather to fle vnto Tharsis, for I knowe well ynough that thou art a mercifull God, full of compassion, lode sufferinge, and of greate kyndnesse, and repentest when thou shul-desteate punysshment. And now O LORDE, take my life fro me (I beseeke the) for I had rather dye then lyue. Then sayde the LORDE: art thou so angrie? And Jonas gat him out of the cite, and sat downe on y east syde ther-of: and there made him a bothe, and sat vnder it in the shadow, till he might se, what shulde chaunce vnto the cite.

B And the LORDE God prepared a wylde vyne, which sprange vp ouer Jonas, that he might haue shadowe aboue his heade, to deliuer him out of his payne. And Jonas was exceedingly glad of the wylde vyne.
But vpon the nexte morow agaynst the springe of the daye, the LORDE ordered a womme, which smote the wylde vyne, so that it wethered awaye. And when the Sonne was vp God prepared a feruent east wynde: and the Sonne bete ouer the heade of Jonas, that he faynted agayne, and wysshed vnto his soule, that he might dye, and sayde: It is better forme to dye, than to lyue. And God sayd vnto Jonas: Art thou so angrie for the wylde vyne? And he sayde: yee very angrie am I euen vnto the deeth. And the LORDE sayde:
thou hast compassion vpon a wylde vyne, wherof thou bestowdest no laboure, ner maydest it growe: which sprange vp in one night and perished in another. And shulde not I then haue compassion vpon Ninine that greate cite, wherin there are aboue an C. and xx. thousande personnes, y knowe not their right hode fro the lef-te, besydes moch
catell?

The first Chapter.

This is the worde of the LOR-DE, that came vnto Nicheas the Morastite, in the dayes of Joathan, Ahas and Ezechi-as kiges of Juda: which was shewed him vpon Samaria and Jerusalem.

A Heare all ye people, marcke this well o earth, and all that therein is: Meete the LORDE God himself be witnesse amonge you, euen y LORDE from his holy temple. For why? be-holde, the LORDE shal go out of his place, & come downe, and treade vpon the hic thin-ges of the earth. The mountaynes shal consume vnder him, & the valleys shal cleue asunder: like as wax cosumeth at the fyre, & as y waters runne downwarde. And all this shal be for the wickednesse of Jacob, and the syn-nes of the house of Israel.

B But what is the wickednesse of Jacob?
Is not Samaria? Which are the hye places of Juda? Is not Jerusalem? Therfore I shal make Samaria an heape of stones in the felde, to laye aboute the vynyarde: hir stones shal I cast into the valley, & discover hir fou-dacions. All hir ymages shal be broke downe & all hir wynnynge shal be brient in the fyre:
yee all hir Idols will I destroye: for why, they are gathered out of the hyre of an who-re, & into an whores hyre shal they be turned agayne. Wherfore I wil mourne & make la-mentacion, bare & naked will I go: I must mourne like y diags, & take sorrow as y Es-triches: for their woude is past remedy: And why? it is come in to Juda, & hath touchyd y porte of my people at Jerusalem allredy. We-pe not, lest they at Geth perceaue it.

C Thou at Bethphara, welter thyself in the dust and ashes. Thou that dwellest at Sephir, get thee hence with shame. The pride shall boote no more for very sorrow: and why? his neighbour shall take from her what she hath. Therebellious cities hope, that it shall not be so evil: but for all that, the plague shall come from the LORD, even into the port of Jerusalem. The greater noise of the charrettes shall feare them, that dwell at Lachis, which is an occasion of synne of the daughter of Sion, for in the came up the wickednesses of Israel. See she sent her conspers in to the land of Gath.

The houses of lies will disceane the kyn- ges of Israel. And as for the (o thou that dwellest at Moassa) I shall bringe a posses- sion upon the, and the plague of Israel shall reach vnto Odolla. Make the balde, and sha- ue the, because of thy tender children: Make the cleane balde as an Aegle, for they shall be caried awaye captiue from the.

The II. Chapter.

A Vnto them, that ymagyn to do harme, and deuyse vngaciousnesse upon their beddes, to perfourme it in y cleare daye: for their power is agaynst God. When they covet to haue lande, they take it by violence, they robbe men off their houses.

Thus they oppresse a man for his house, and euery man for his heretage. Therefore thus sayeth the LORD: Beholde, agaynst this householde haue I deuysed a plague, wherout ye shall not plucke youre neckes: Ye shall no more go so proudly, for it will be a perleus ty- me. In that daye shall this terme be vsed, and a mourninge shall be made ouer you on this manner: We be utterly desolate, the por- tion off my people is translated. When will he parte vnto vs the lande, that he hath ta- ken from vs?

Nevertheless there shall be noman to de- uide the thy portion, in the congregacion off the LORD. Tush, holde youre tange (sayeth he) I shall not fall vpon this peo- ple, we shall not come so to confucion, sa- yeth the house off Jacob. Is the spere off the LORD so cleane awaye? or is he so myn- ded? Treuth it is, my wordes are frendly vnto them that lyue right: but my people doth the contrary, therefore must I take par- te agaynst them: for they take awaye both cote and cloke from the symple.

Ye haue turned youre selues to fight, the women off my people haue ye shot out fr- their good houses, and taken awaye my ex- cellent giftes from their children. Vp, get you hence, for here shall ye haue no rest.

Because off their Idolatry they are cor- rupte, and shall miserably perish. Off I were a fleshy felowe, and a preacher of lyes and tolde them that they might syt bebbin- ge and bollynge, and be droncken: O that were a prophet for this people.

But I will gather the in dede (o Jacob) and dryue the remnant off Israel all toge- ther. I shall cary them one with another, as a flocke in the folde, and as the cattell in their stalles, that they maye be disquieted off other men.

Who so breaketh the gappe, he shall go before. They shall breake vp the porte, and go in and out at it. Their kynge shall go befo- re them, and the LORD shall be vpon the heade of them.

The III. Chapter.

Hare, o ye heade of the house of Ja- cob, and ye leders of the house of Is- rael: Shulde not yet knowe, what we re lausfull and right? But ye hate the good, and loue the euill: ye plucke off mens syn- nes, and the flesh from their bones: Ye eat the flesh of my people, and slay off their syn- ne: ye breake their bones, ye choppe them in peces as it were in to a cauldron, and as flesh into a pot. Now the tyme shall come, that when they call vnto the LORD, he shall not heare them, but hyde his face from them: be- cause that they row their owne ymaginacions, they haue deale so wickedly.

And as concerninge the prophetes that disceane my people, thus the LORD sayeth agaynst them: When they haue eny thinge to byte vpon, then they preach that all shall be well: but yf a man put not some thinge in to their mouthes, they preach of warre agaynst him.

Therefore youre vision shall be turned to night, and youre prophesyenge to darcknesse. The Sonne shall go downe ouer these pro- phetes, and the daye shall be darcke vnto them. Then shall the vision seers be ashamed, and yf sayth sayers confounded: yee they shall be say- ne (all the packe of the) to stoppe their mouthes, for they haue not Gods woide. As for me, I am full of strenght, and of yf spere of yf LORD, full of iudgment and boldnesse: tell me the house of Jacob their wickednesse, and the house of Israel their synne.

C O heare this ye rulers of the house of Ja- cob, and ye iudges of the house off Israel: ye that abhorre the thinge that is lausfull, and waiste asyde the thinge that is straight: Ye that brylde vp Sion with bloude, and Jeru- salem with doynge wronge. O ye iudges, ye geue sentence for giftes: O ye preastes, ye teach for lucre: O ye prophetes, ye prophesy for money. Yet wil they be take as those that holde vpon God, and saye: Is not the LORD amonge vs? Tush, there can no misfortu- ne happen vs. Therefore shall Sion (for you- re sakes) be plowed like a felde: Jerusalem shall become an heape of stones, and the hill of yf temple shall be turned to an hye wodde.

The IIII. Chapter.

In the latter dayes it wil come to passe, that the hill off the LORDS house shall be set vp byer the eny mou- tayne or hilles: See the people shall preese vnto it, and the multitude off the Gentiles shall haist them thither, sayenge: Come, let vs go vp to the hill of the LORD, and to the house of the God of Jacob: that he maye teach vs his waye, and that we maye walke in his pathes.

For the lawe shall come out off Sion, and the worde of God from Jerusalem, and shall geue sentence amonge the multitude off the heithen, and resourmeth the people off farre countrees: so that of their swordes they shall make plowshares, and sythes off their spea- res.

One people shall not lift vp a swerde a- gainst another, yee they shall nomore lerne to fight: but euery man shall syt vnder his vin- yarde and vnder his fyge tree, and no man to fraye him awaye: for the mouth off yf LORD of hostes hath spoken it. Therefore, whe- re as all people haue walked euery man in yf name of his owne god, we will walke in the name of oure God for ever and ever. At the same tyme (sayeth the LORD) will I gather vnto the lame and the outcastes, and such as I haue chastened: and will geue yssue vnto the lame, and make of yf outcastes a greates peo- ple: and the LORD himself shall be their kyn- ge vpon the mount Sion, fro this tyme forth for evermore. And vnto the (o thou tower of Eder, thou stronge holde off the dought- ter Sion) vnto the shall it come: enē the first lordshipe and kyngdome of the doughter Je- rusalem. Why the art thou now so heuy? is the renowme in the: are thy counsellers awaye that thou art so payned, as a woman in hir trauaile?

And now (o thou doughter Sion) be so- ry, let it greue the as a wise laboringe with childe: for now must thou get the out off the cite, and dwell vpon the playne felde: See vnto Babilon shall thou go, there shalt thou be deliuered, and there the LORD shall low- se the from the honde off thine enemies.

Now also are there many people gathe- red together agaynst the, sayenge: what, Si- on is cursed, we shall se oure lust vpon her. But they knowe not the thoughtes off the LORD, they vnderstonde not his counsell, that shall gather them together as the shee- ues in the barne. Therefore get the vp (o thou doughter Sion) and thros she out the come: For I wil make thy home yron, and thy cla- wes brass, that thou mayest grynde many people: their goodes shalt thou appropria- te vnto the LORD, and their substaunce vnto the ruler off the whole worlde.

The V. Chapter.

After that shalt thou be robbed thy self, o thou robbers doughter: they shall laye sege agaynst vs, and smyte the iudge off Israel with a rodde vpon the cheeke. And thou Bethleem Ephrata, art lit- tle amonge the thousandes off Juda. Out off the shall come one vnto me, which shall be yf gouernoure i Israel: whose outgoinge hath bene from the begynnynge, and from euers- tinge. In the meane whyle he plageth them for a season, vntill the tyme that she (which shall beare) haue borne then shall the rem- nant of his biethren be conuerted vnto yf children of Israel. He shall stonde fast, and ge- ue fode in the strenght of the LORD, and in the victory of the name of yf LORD his God: and when they be conuerted, he shall be magnified vnto the farthest partes of the worlde.

Then shall there be peace, so that the As- sirian maye come in to oure lande, and trea- de in oure houses. We shall bringe vp seuen shepherdes and viij. prynces vnto them: the- se shall subdue the lande of Assur w the swer- de, and the lande of Tyrod with their na- ked weapons. Thus shall he deliuer vs from the Assiria, when he cometh within oure lande, and setteth his fore within oure bor- ders. And the remnant of Jacob shall be a- monge the multitude of people, as the dew of the LORD, and as the droppes vpon the grasse, that tarieth for no man, and waiteth of no body. See the residue of Jacob shall be amonge the Gentiles and the multitude off people, as the lyon amonge the beestes of yf wodde, and as the lyons whelp amonge a flocke of shepe: which (when he goeth thorow) treadeth downe, teareth in peces, and there is no man that can helpe. Thyne honde shal be lift vp vpon thine enemies, and all thine aduersaries shal perish.

C The tyme shal come also (sayeth the LORD) that I wil take thine horses from the, & destroye thy charettes. I will breake downe the cities off thy londe, and ouerthrowe all thy stronge holdes. All witchcraftes will I rote out of thine hande, there shall no mo soyth sayenges be within the. Thine Idols and thine ymages will I destroye out of y so that thou shalt no more bowe thy self vnto the workes of thine owne hondes. Thy groues wil I plucke vp by the rotes, & breake downe thy cities. Thus wil I be auenged also, vpon all heithen that will not heare.

The VI Chapter.

A Erken now what the LORD sayeth: Vp, reprimethe mountaynes, and let the hilles heare thy voyce. O heare the punishment of the LORD, ye mountaynes, and ye mightie foundacions of y earth: for the LORD wil reprimen his people, & reason with Israel: O my people, what haue I done vnto the? or wherin haue I hurte the? geue me answere. Because I brought the fro the londe of Egypte, and deliuered the out of the house of bondage: Because I made Moses, Aaron and Miriam to lede the: Remembre (O my people) what Balach the kynge of Moab had ymagined agaynst the, & what answere that Balaam the sonne of Beor gaue him, from Sethim vnto Galgal: y ye maye knowe the lowynge kyndnes of y LORD.

B What acceptable thyng shal I offre vnto the LORD? shall I bowe myne to the hye God? Shall I come before him w' brent offeringes, and with calues of a yeare olde? hath the LORD a pleasure in many thousand rammes, or innumerable streames of oyle? O: shal I geue my firstborne for myne of fences, and the frute of my body for the synne of my soule? I wil shewe the (O ma) what is good, and what the LORD requyeth off the: Namely, to do right, to haue pleasure in lowynge kyndnesse, to be lowly, and to walke with thy God: that thou mayest be called a cite of the LORD, & that thy name maye be righteousnesse. Heare (O yerybes) who wolde els geue you soch warnyng? Shulde I not be displeased, for the vnrightrous good in the houses of the wicked, and because the measure is minished? O: shal I iustifie the false balauces and the bagge of disceant full weightes, amonge those that be full off riches vnrightrously gotten: wherethe cursyns deale with falsede, speake lyes, and haue disceant full runges in their mouthes.

Therefore I will take in honde to punyssh the, and to make the desolate, because of thy synnes. Thou shalt eate, & not haue ynough: yee thou shalt bringe thy self downe. Thou shalt fle, but not escape: & those y thou woldest saue, wil I deliuer to the swerde. Thou shalt sowe, but not reape: thou shalt passe out olyues, but oyle shalt thou not haue, & anoynte thy self withall: thou shalt treade out swete must, but shalt drynke no wyne. Repete the ordinaunces of Amri, & all the actemes of the house of Achab: y folowetheir pleasures, therfore wil I make the wast, & cause y inhabitants to be abhorred. O my people: & thus shalt thou beare thine owne shame.

The VII. Chapter.

Wis me: I am become as one, that goeth a gleanynge in the harvest. There are no mo grapes to eate, yet wolde I sayne (with all my herte) haue of the best frute. There is not a godly man vpon earth, there is not one rightrous amonge me. They laboure all to shed bloude, & eueryma hunteth his brother to deatch: yet they say they do well, when they do euell. As the pynce wil, so sayeth the iudge: y he maye do him a pleasure agayne. The greatesma speaketh what his herte desyeth, & y hearers allowe him. The best off the is but as a thistle, and the most rightrous of them is but as a burre in the hedge. But when the daye of thy pryders cometh, y thou shalt be vnsured: the shal they be waisted awaye. Let no man beleue his frende, ner put his confidence in a pynce. Repete the porte of thy mouth, from her y lieth in thy bosome: for y sonne shal put his father to dishonoure, the doughter shal ryse agaynst her mother, y doughter in lawe agaynst hir mother in lawe: and a mans foes shal be even they of his owne houshold.

Nevertheless I wil loke vp vnto y LORD, I wil patiently abyde God my sauour: my God shal heare me. O thou enemye of myne, reioyce not at my fall, for I shal get vp agayne: and though I sit in darcknesse, yet y LORD is my light. I will beare the punishment of the LORD (for why, I haue offended him) till he sit in iudgment vpon my cause, and se that I haue right. He wil bringe me forth to the light, and I shal se his rightrousnesse.

The prophet Michas.

She that is myne enemy shall loke vpon it, & be confounded, which now saith: Where is thy LORD God? Myne eyes shal beholde her, when she shal be troden downe, as the claye in the stretes. The tyme wil come, that thy gappes shal be made vp, and the lame shal goe abroad: and at that tyme shal they come vnto the, from Assur vnto the stronge cities, and from the stronge cities vnto the ryuer: from the one see to the other, from the one mountayne to the other.

For standinge the londe must be waisted, because of them that dwell therein, and for the frutes of their owne ymaginacions. Therefore fede thy people with thy rodde, the flocke of thine heretage which dwell desolate in the wodde: that they maye be fedde vpon the mount of Charnel, Basan & Galad as aforetyme. Maruelous thinges will I shewe them, like as when they came out of Egypte. This shal the heithen se, and be ashamed for all their power: so that they shal laye their honde vpon their mouth, and stopper their eares. They shal lick the dust like a serpent, & as the wormes of the earth, y tremble in their holes. They shal be a frayd of the LORD oure God, & they shal feare y.

Where is there soch a God as thou? that pardonest wickednes, and forguest the offences of the remnant of thine heretage? he kepeth not his wrath for ever. And why? his delyte is to haue compassion: he shal turne agayne, & be mercysfull to vs: he shal put downe oure wickednes, & cast all oure synnes into the botome of the see. Thou shalt kepe thy trust with Jacob, and thy mercy for Abraham, like as thou hast sworne vnto oure fathers longe ago.

The i. Chap. No. xciiij.

The first Chapter.

he LORD is a gelous God, and a taker of vengeance: yee a taker of vengeance is y LORD, and wrothfull. The LORD taketh vengeance of his enemies, and reserveth displeasure for his aduersaries. The LORD suffreth longe, he is of greate power, & so innocent, that he leaueth no man faultlesse before him. The LORD goeth forth in tempest and stormy wether, the cloudes are the dust of his fete. When he reprimeth the see, he dryeth it vp, & turneth all the floudes to drye londe. Basan is desolate, Charnel and the pleasure of Libanus waisterh awaye. The mountaynes tremble for him, the hilles consume. At the sight of him, the earth quaketh: yee the whole worlde, and all that dwell therein. Who maye endure before his wrath? O: who is able to abyde his grymme displeasure? his anger taketh on like fyre, and the harde rockes burst in sunder before him.

For gracious is the LORD, and a stronge holde in tyme of trouble, he knoweth the that put their trust in him: when the floude remeth ouer, and destroyeth the place, and when the darcknesse foloweth still vpon his enemies. What do ye ymagin then agaynst the LORD on this maner? (Tush, when he hath once made an ende, there shal come no more trouble.) For like as the thornes that sticke together, and as the drye strawe, so shal the dyon Pardes be consumed together, even when they be full. There come out of y soch as ymagin myschese, and geue vngacious counsell agaynst the LORD.

Therefore thus saith the LORD: Let the be as wel prepared, yee and as many as they can, yet shal they be hewen downe, and passe awaye. And as for the, I wil verethe, but not utterly destroye the. And now wil I breake his rodde from thy backe, and burst thy bondes in sonder. But the LORD hath geuen a commaundement concernynge the, that there shal come no more sede of thy name. The carned and casten ymages will I rote out of the house of thy god. Thy graue shal I prepare for the, and thou shalt be confounded.

The II. Chapter.

Helpe, vpon the mountaynes come the fete of him, that bringeth good tydings, & preacheth peace. O Judah, kepe thy holy dayes, persourme thy promyses: for Belial shal come no more in the, he is utterly rote out.

The prophet Naum.

The scatterer shal come vp agaynst the, & laye sege to the castell. Loke thou wel to the stretes, make thy loynes stronge, arme thy self with all thy myght: for the LORDE shal restore agayne the glory of Jacob, like as yf glory of Israel. The destroyers haue broken chem downe, & marred the royne braunches. The shyld of his gyauntes glistereth, his men of warre are clothed in purple. His charrettes are as fyre, when he maketh him forward, his archers are wel deckt & trimmed. The charrettes rolle vpon the stretes, & welter in the hye wayes. They are to loke vpon like cressettes of fyre, and go swyftly, as the lightenyng.

B When he doth but warne his gyauntes, they fall in their araye, & haistely they clyme vpon the walles: yee the engyns of the warre are prepared all ready. The water portes shal be opened, and the kinges palace shal fall. The quene hir self shal beled awaye captyue, and hir gentylwomen shal mourne as the dones, & grone within their hertes. Ninue is like a pole full of water, but then shal they be fayne to fle. Stonde, stode, (shal they crye) & there shal not one turne backe. Awaye with the syluer, awaye with the golde: for here is no ende of treasure. There shal be a multitude of all maner costely ornaments. Thus must she be spoyled, emptied & clene striped out: that their hertes maye be melted awaye, their knees treble, all their loynes be weake, and their faces blacke as a pot.

Where is now the dwellinge of the lyons, and the pasture of the lyons whelpes: where the lyon and the lyonesse wente with the whelpes, and no man frayd them awaye? But the lyon spoyled ynough for his yonge ones, and deuoured for his lyonesse: he fylled his dennes with his pray, & his dwellinge place with that he had rauysshed. Beholde, I wil vpon the (saith the LORDE of hostes) and wil set fyre vpon thy charrettes, that they shal smoke withall, and the swerde shal deuoure thy yonge lyons. I wil make an ende of thy spoilinge from out of the earth, & the voyce of thy messaungers shal nomore be herde.

The III. Chapter.

A O to that blondthursty cite, which is all full of lyes and robbery, & wil not leane of from rauysshinge. There a man maye heare scourginge, russhinge, the noyse of the wheles, the crienge of the hoyses, & the rollinge of the charrettes. There the horse men get vp with naked swerdes, and glisteringe speares: Therelyeth a multitude slayne, and a greate heape of dead bodies: There is no ende of deed coarces, yea men fall vpon their bodies: And that for the greate and manyfolde whordome, of the fayre and beautifull harlot: which is a mastresse of wyche craft, yee and sellethe the people to row hir whordome, and the nations to row hir wyche craft.

Beholde, I wil vpon the (saith the LORDE of hostes) and wil pull thy clothes ouer thy head: that I maye shewe thy nakednes amonge the heithen, and thy shame amonge the kingdomes. I wil cast dyte vpon y, to make the be abhorred, and a gasynge stocke: yee all they that loke vpon the, shal starte backe, & saye: Ninue is destroyed.

Who wil haue pyte vpon the: where shal I seke one to conforthe the? Art thou better then the greate cite of Alexandria: that laye in the waters, and had the waters rounde aboute it: which was strongly fenced & walled with the see? Ethiopia and Egypte were hir strenght, & that excedinge greate aboue measure. Aphrica and Lybia were hir pers, yet was she dryuen awaye, & brought in to captiuite: hir yonge childien were smitten downe at the heade of euery strete, the lottes were cast for the most auncient men in her, and all hir mightie men were bounde in chaynes. Euen so shalt thou also be dronken, and hyde thy self, and seke some helpe agaynst thine enemy. All thy stronge cities shal be like fyge trees wth rype fyges: which whē a mā shaketh, they fall in to the mouth of the eater.

Beholde, thy people with in the are but women: the portes of thy londe shal be opened vnto thine enemies, and the fyre shal be uoure yf barres. Drawe water now agaynst thou be beseged, make vp thy stronge holdes, go into the claye, temple the mortar, make stronge bucke: yet the fyre shal consume the, the swerde shal destroye the, yee as yf locustes doth, so shal it eate the vp. It shal fall heuely vpon the as the locustes, yee right heuely shal it fall vpon the, euen as the greshoppers. Thy marchauntes haue bene mothen the starres of heane: but now shal they sprede abroad as the locustes, and fle the waye: Thy lordes are as the greshoppers, & thy capraynes as the multitude of greshoppers: which whē they be colde, remaine in yf hedges: but whē the Sonne is vp, they fle awaye, and no mā can tell where they are become. Thy shepherdes are as slepe of kinges of Assur: thy worthies are layed downe: yf people is scatted abroad vpon the mountaynes, Chap. I. He complayneth vnto God of the wickednes of the people, and threateneth them with the plage of God.

Chap. II. He reproveth the curvours and vnrighuous men.

Chap. III. A prayer of the prophet.

The first Chapter.

This is the heuy burthe, which the prophet Abacuc dyd se. O LORDE, how longe shal I crie, & thou wilt not heare? How longe shal I complayne vnto the, suffryng wronge, and thou wilt not helpe? Why lettest thou me se weerynesse and labour? Tyranny and violence are before me, power ouergoeth right: for the lawe is come in peces, and there can no right indgment go forth. And why? the vngodly is more set by then the rightuous: this is the cause, yf wronge indgment proceedeth. Beholde amonge the heithen, and loke wel: wondre at it, and be abashed: for I wil do a thinge in youre tyme, which though it be tolde you, ye shal not beleue.

Sorlo, I wil rase vp yf Caldees, that bytter and swifte people: which shal go as wyde as the londe is, to take possession of dwellinge places, that be not their owne. A grymme & boystedous people is it, these shal sit in indgment & punyshe. Their horses are swifter then the cattles of the mountayne, & bytter soier then yf wolues in yf euenyng. Their harimen come by greate heapes from farre, they fle hastily to dens as the Aegle. They come all to spoyle: out of them cometh an east wynde, which bloweth and gathereth their captyues, like as the sonde. They shal mocke the kinges, and laugh the prynces to scorne. They shal not set by eny stronge holde, for they shal laye ordinaunce agaynst it, and take it. Then shal they take a fresh corse, & ge vnto them, to go forth & to do more euell, & so as crye that power vnto their God.

The ij. Chap. No. xcv.

But thou O LORDE my God, my holy one, thou art from the begynnyng, therfore shal we not dye. O LORDE, thou hast ordered them for a punyshtment, and set them to reprove the mightie. Thine eyes are clene, thou mayest not se euell, thou canst not beholde yf thinge that is wicked. Wherfore then dost thou loke vpon the vngodly, and holdest thy tunge, when the wicked deuoureth the man that is better thē himself? Thou makest men as the fish in the see, and like as the crepinge beestes, that haue no gyde. They take vp all with their angle, they catch it in their net, & gather it in their yarne: wherof they reioyce and are glad. Therfore offre they vnto their net, and do sacrifice vnto their yarne: because that thorow it their porcion is become so fat, and their meate so pleteous. Wherfore they cast out their net agayne, & neuer cease to slaye the people.

The II. Chapter.

I Stode vpon my watch, and set me vpon my bulworke, to loke & se what he wolde saye vnto me, and what answer I shulde geue him yf reproue me. But the LORDE answered me, and sayde: Wryte the vision planely vpon thy tables, that who so cometh by, maye rede it: for yf visio is yet farre of for a tyme, but at yf last it shal come to passe, & not sayle. And though he tary, yet wait thou for him, for in very dede he wil come, and not be slacke. Beholde, who so wil not beleue, his soule shal not profpere: but the iust shal lye by his faith. Like as the wyne disceaueth the dronckarde, euen so the proude shal sayle & not endure. He openeth his desyre wyde vp as the hell, & is as vnfaciable as death. All heithen gathereth he to him, & heapeth vnto him all people.

But shal not all these take vp a prouerbe agaynst him, and mocke him with a byworde, and saye: Wo vnto him that heapeth vp other mens goodes: How longe wil he lade himself with thicke claye? O how sodenly wil they stonde vp, yf shal byte the, & awake, that shal teare yf in peces: yee thou shalt be their pray. Seinge thou hast spoyled many heithen, therfore shal the remnaunt of the people spoyle the: because of mens bloude, & for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite & vnto all them that dwel therein.

Wo vnto him, that couetously gathereth enell gotten goodes in to his house: that he maye set his nest an hye, to escape from the power of myffortune. Thou hast deuysed yf shame of thine owne house, for thou hast slayne to moch people, and hast wilfully offended: so that the very stones of the wall shall crie out of it, and the tymber that lieth betwixte the ioyntes of the buyldinge shall answer. Wo vnto him, y buyldeth the towne with bloude, and maynteneth y cite with vnrightrousnes. Shal not the LORDE of hoostes bringethis to passe, that the laboure of the people shal be brient with a greate fyre, and that the thinge wher vpon the people haue weered them selues, shall be lost? For the earth shalbe full of knowlege of the LORDES honoure, like as the waters that couer the see.

Wo vnto him that getteth his neighbour drynke, to get him wrothfull displeasure for his dronkenesse: that he maye se his preyntes. Therfore with shame shalt thou be fylled, in steade of honoure. Drynke thou also, till thou slombe withall: for the cuppe of the LORDES right hode shall compass the aboute, and shamefull spewinge in iacade of thy woishipe. But the LORDE in his holy temple is he, whom all the worlde shulde feare.

The III. Chapter.

A prayer of the prophet Abacuc for the ignoraunt.

A LORDE, when I herde speake of y, I was afayed. The worke y thou hast taken in honde, shalt thou performe in his tyme. O LORDE: and when thy tyme commeth, thou shalt declare it. In thy very wrath thou thinkest vpon mercy. God commeth from Theman, and the holy one from the mount of Pharan. Sela.

His glory couereth the heauens, and the earth is full of his prayse. His shyne is as y sonne, z beames of light go out of his honde, there is his power hid. Destruction goeth before him, and burnynge cressettes go from his fete. He stondeth, z meassureth the earth: he loketh, z the people consume awaye, the mountaynes of y wolde fall downe to powder, and the hilles are sayne to bowe them selues, for his goinges are euerlastinge and sure.

I sawe, that the pavilions of the Morians and the tentes of the londe of Madian were vexed for weerynesse. Wast thou not angrie (O LORDE) in the waters: was not thy wrath in the floudes, and thy displeasure in the see: yes, when thou sattest vpon thine horse, and when thy charettes had the victory. Thou shewdest thy bowe opely, like as thou haddest promised with an oath vnto thy rebes. Sela.

Thou didest deuynge the waters of the earth. When the mountaynes saw the, they were afayed, y water streame were awaye: the depe made a noyse at the liftinge vpon thine honde. The Sonne and Mone remayned still in their habitacion. Thine arrows wente out glisteringe, and thy speares as the shyne of the lightenyng. Thou trodest downe the londe in thine anger, and didest thy shewe the: z eithen in thy displeasure. Thou madest forth to helpe thy people, to helpe the anoynted. Thou smotest downe the heauens in the house of the vngodly, z discoveredst his foundations, eue vnto y necke of him. Sela.

Thou curstest his septers, the captaynes of his men of warre: which come as a stormy wynde to scatere me abrode, z are glad when they maye eat vp y poore secretly. Thou madest a waye for thine horses in the see, and in the mudde of greate waters. When I herde this, my body is vexed, my lippes tremble at y voyce therof, my bones corrupte. I am afayed where I stonde. O that I might rest in the daye of trouble, that I might go vpon to oure people, which are already prepared.

For the fyge trees shal not be grene, z the vynes shal beare no frute. The laboure of olyue shalbe but lest, and the londe shal beare no come: the shepe shalbe taken out of y folde, and there shalbe no cattell in y stalle. But as forme, I wil be glad in the LORDE, and will reioyce in God my Sanioure. The LORDE God is my strength, he shall make my fete as the fete of hertes: z he which getteth y victory, shal bringe me to my hyppes, synginge vpon my psalmes.

What Sophony conteyneth.

Chap. i. Zeprophecieth of plagues for to come vpon Iuda.

Chap. ii. Zeprophecieth them to amede, that they maye escape the wrath of God: and sheweth the Gentiles their punishment.

Chap. iii. Punishment because of the wickednesse of the Jewes: whom God therfore refused, and chose the zeithen.

The first Chapter.

This is the worde of the LORDE, which came vnto Sophony the sonne of Chusi, the sonne of Gedelias, the sonne of Amarias y sonne of Iezechias: in the tyme of Josias the sonne of Amon kinge of Iuda. I wil gather vp all thinges in the londe (saith the LORDE) I wil gather vp man and beast: I wil gather vp the foules in the ayre, and the fysh in the see: to the greate decaye of the wicked, z wil utterly destroye the men out of the londe, saith the LORDE. I wil stretch out myne honde vpon Iuda, and vpon all soch as dwell at Jerusalem. Thus wil I rote out the remnant of Baal from this place, and the names of the Remurys and prestes: yee z soch as vpon their house toppes woishipe z bowe themselves vnto the hoost of heauen: which sweare by the LORDE, and by their Malchom also: which starte a backe from y LORDE, and nether seke after the LORDE, nor regarde him.

Be still at y presence of the LORDE God, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde: yee the LORDE hath prepared a slayne offeringe, and called his gestes therto. And thus shall it happen in the daye of the LORDES slayne offeringe: I wil vyset the prynces, the kynges children, z all soch as were straunge clothinge. In the same daye also wil I vyset all those, that treade ouer the thresholde so proudly, which fyll their lordes house w robbery and falsede. At y same tyme (saith the LORDE) there shall be herde a greate crye from the fishpoynte, and an howlinge from y other poyte, and a greate murther from the hilles. Howle yet that dwell in the myll, for all the marchaunt people are gone, and all they that were laden with syluer, are roted out.

At the same tyme wil I seke thow Jerusalem with lanternes, and vyset them that contynue in their dregges, and saye in their hertes: Tush, the LORDE wil do nether good nor euell. Their goodes shalbe spoyled, and their houses layed waist. They shall buylde houses, and not dwell in them: they shal plan te vynyardes, but not drynke the wyne ther of. For the greate daye of the LORDE is at honde, it is harde by, z commeth on a pace. Horrible is y tydinges of the LORDES daye, then shall the giaunte crie out: for that daye is a daye of wrath, a daye of trouble z heynnesse, a daye of utter destruction z misery, a darcke z glomyng daye, a clondy z stormy daye, a daye of the noyse of trempettes and shawmes, agaynst the stronge cities and hie towres. I wil bunge y people into soch vexacion, that they shal go aboute like blind men, because they haue synned agaynst the LORDE. Their bloude shalbe shed as the dust, z their bodies as the myre. Neither their syluer ner their golde shalbe able to deluyer the in that wrothfull daye of the LORDE, but the whole londe shalbe consumed thow the fyre of his gelousy: for he shall soone make clene ryddaunce of all them that dwell in the londe.

The II. Chapter.

Come together and gather you, O ye A frauerde people: or y thinge go forth that is concluded, z or the tyme be passed awaye as the dust: or the fearfull wrath of the LORDE come vpon you, yee or the daye of the LORDES sore displeasure come vpon you. Seke the LORDE all yee meke harted vpon earth, ye that worke after his indgmet: seke rightuousnesse, seke lowlynesse: that ye maye be defended in the wrothfull daye of y LORDE. For Gaza shalbe destroyed, z Ascalon shalbe layed waist: They shal cast out Asdod at the noone daye, and Accaron shalbe plucked vp by the rotes.

Wo vnto you y dwell vpon the see coast, ye murtherous people: the worde of y LORDE shal come vpon you. O Canaan thou londe of the Philistynes, I wil destroye the, so that there shal no man dwell in the eny more: z as for the see coast, it shal be hyrdmens cottages z shepe foldes: yee it shalbe a porcion for soch as remayne of the house of Iuda, to fede ther vpon. In y houses of Ascalon shal they rest towarde night: for the LORDE their God shal vyset the, z turne awaye their captiuite. I haue herde the despite of Moab, z the blasphemies of the children of Ammon: how they haue shamefully increased my people, and magnified them selues within the borders of their londe. Therfore as truly as I lyue (saith the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel) Moab shalbe as Sodome, z

Ammon as Gomorra: euen driethome hedges, salt pittes and a perpetuall wyldernes. The residue of my folke shall spoyle them the remnant of my people shall haue them in possession. This shal happen vnto them for their pryde, because they haue dealesd shamefully with the LORDE of hoostes people, and magnified them selues aboue them. The LORDE shall be grymme vpon them, and destroye all the goddes in the londe. And all the Iles of the heithen shal worshi pe him, euery man in his place.

C Ye Moiris also shal perish with my swer de: yee he shall stretch out his honde ouer the north, and destroye Assur. As for Tyne, he shal make it desolate, drye and waist. The flockes and all the bestes of the people shall lye in the myddest of it, pellicanes and storckes shall abyde in the vpper pestes of it, foules shal synge in the wyndowes, and rauens shal sit vpon the balckes, for the bordes of Cedie shalbe ryne downe. This is the proude and carelesse cite, that sayde in hir herte: I am, and there is els none. O how is she made so waist, y the beestes lyetherin: Who so goeth by, mocketh her, and poynteth at her with his synger.

The iij. Chapter.

A O to the abhominable, fylthie and cruel cite: which wil not heare, ner be reformed. Hir trust is not in the LORDE, nether wil she holde herto hir God. Hir rulers within her are as roaringe lyons: hir indges are as wolues in the enenyng, which leane nothinge behynde them till the morow. Hir prophetes are light personnes and vnfaithfull men: hir prestes vnhalowe the Sanctuary, and do wronge vnder the pretence of the lawe. But the iust LORDE that doth no vnrigh, was amonge them, euery mornynge shewinge them his lawe clearly, and ceassed not. But the vngedly wil not lerne to be asshamed. Therefore wil I rote out this people, and destroye their towres: yee and make their stretes so voyde, that no man shall go therin. Their cities shall be broke downe, so that no body shal be left, ner dwell there any more.

B I sayde vnto them: O feare me, and be content to be reformed. That their dwellinge shulde not be destroyed, and that there shulde happen vnto them none of these thinges, wherewith I shal vysethe. But neuertheles they stonde vp carly, to folowe the filthynes of their owne ymaginacions. Therefore ye shal waite vpon me (saith the LORDE) vntil the tyme that I stonde vp: for I am deter-med, to gather the people and to bringe the Kingdome together, that I maye pout out myne anger, yee all my wrothfull displeasure vpon them. For all the woulde shalbe consumed with the fyre of my gelously. And then wil I clense the lippes of the people, that they: yee euerychone call vpon the name of the LORDE, and serue him with one shulder. So was I haue subdued, and my children also whom I haue scattered abroad, shal bringe me presentes beyonde the waters of Ethiopia.

In that tyme shalt thou nomore be founded, because of all thy ymaginacions wher thou haddest offended me. I wil take awaye the proude boosterie of thine honoure from the, so that thou shalt be more tryumphe because of my holy name. The also wil I leane a smal poore symple people, which shal trust in the name of the LORDE. The remnant of Israel shal be named, ner speake lyes: nether shal they be disceatful tounge be founde in their mouth. For they shal be fed, and take their rest, no man shal make them a frayd. Gentiles o daughter Sio, be ioyful o Israel: ceaze to be glad from thy whole herte, o daughter Jerusalem, for the LORDE hath taken awaye thy punishment, and turned backe thine enemies. The kinge of Israel, euen the LORDE himself is with the: so that thou shalt nomore feare any mysfortune.

In that tyme it shall be sayde to Jerusalem: feare not, and to Sion: let not thine indges be slacke, for the LORDE thy God is with the, it is he that hath power to saue: he hath a special pleasure in the, and a marvellous rewarde the: yee hereioyseth the gladnesse. Sech as haue bene in bewaile wil I gather together, and take out of the congregation: as for the shame and reproch that hath benelayed vpon the, it shal be so re from the. And lo, in y tyme wil I destroye all those that were the: I wil helpe the, and gather vp the cast awaye yee: I wil geue them honoure and prayse in all londes, when they haue bene put to shame. As y saye me wil I bringe you in, and at the same tyme wil I gather you: I wil geue you a name of a good repaire, amonge all people of the earth, when I turne backe youre captiuite before your eyes, saith the LORDE.

The prophet Aggeus.

What Aggeus conteyneth.

Chap. i. He exhorteth the people to buylde vpon the temple, and rapraue their luge variage. Chap. ij. He exhorteth the rulers a corage. Of the ornaments and glory of the seconde temple, wherby is vnderstode the church of the faith full.

The first Chapter.

In the seconde yeare of kynge Darius, in the vi. moneth the first daye of the moneth, came the worde of the LORDE (by the prophet Aggeus) vnto Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel y prynce of Iuda, and to Iesua the sonne of Josedec the hye prest, sayenge: Thus speaketh the LORDE of hoostes, and saith: This people doth saye: The tyme is not yet come to buylde vpon the LORDES house. Then spake the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus z sayed: Ye ye sayes can synde tyme to dwell in fylde houses, and shal this house lye waist: Considre now youre owne wayes in youre hertes (saith y LORDE of hoostes) ye some moch, but ye bringe litle in: yee eate, but ye haue not ynough: ye drinke, but ye are not fylled: ye decke youre selues, but ye are not warme: z he y earneth any wage, putteth it in a broken purse.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Considre youre owne wayes in youre hertes, get you vnto the mountayne, fetch wod, z buylde vpon the house: that it maye be acceptable vnto me, and that I maye shewe myne honoure, saith the LORDE. Ye looked for moch, and lo it is come to litle: z though ye bringe it home, yet do I blowe it awaye. And why shal I saith the LORDE of hoostes: Lue because that my house lyeeth so waist, and yee renne euery man vnto his owne house. Wherfore the heauen is forbydden to geue you any dew, and the earth is forbydden to geue you encrease. I haue called for a dronch, both vpon the londe z vpon the mountaynes, vpon corne, vpon wyne z vpon oyle, vpon euery thinge that the grounde bringeth forth, vpon men and vpon catell, yee and vpon all handylaboure.

Now when Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, z Iesua the sonne of Josedec the hye prest with the remnant of the people, herde the voyce of the LORDE their God, z the wordes of the prophet Aggeus (like as the LORDE their God had sent him) the people dyd feare the LORDE, Then Aggeus the LORDES angel sayed in the LORDES message vnto the people: I am with you, saith the LORDE. So the LORDE waked vp the spiete of Zorobabel the prynce of Iuda, and the spiete of Iesua the sonne of Josedec the hye prest, and the spiete of the remnant of all the people: they came z laboured, in the house of the LORDE of hoostes their God.

The ij. Chapter.

In the xiiij. daye of the firste moneth, in the secnde yeare of kynge Darius, the xxi. daye of the seventh moneth, came the worde of the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus, sayenge: speake to Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel prynce of Iuda, and to Iesua the sonne of Josedec the hye prest, and to the residue of y people, z saye: Who is left amonge you, that sawe this house in hir first benty: But what thinke ye now by it? Is it not in youre eyes, eue as though it were nothinge? Neuerthelesse be of good chere, o Zorobabel (saith the LORDE) be of good confoite, o Iesua thou sonne of Josedec, hye prest: take good hartes vnto you also, all ye people of the londe, saith the LORDE of hoostes, and do acordinge to the worde (for I am with you, saith the LORDE of hoostes) like as I agreed with you, when ye came out of the londe of Egypte: z my spiete shalbe amonge you, feare ye not.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Yet once more will I shake heauen and earth, the see and the drye lode: yee I will moue all heithen, z the comfoite of all heithen shall come, z so wil I fylle this house with honoure, saith the LORDE of hoostes. The syluer is myne, z the golde is myne, saith the LORDE of hoostes. Thus y glory of the last house shalbe greater the first, saith the LORDE of hoostes: z in this place wil I geue peace, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The xiiij. daye of the ix. moneth in the se conde yeare of kynge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto the prophet Aggeus sayenge: Thus saith y LORDE God of hoostes: Are the prestes concernynge the lawe, z saye: Yf one beare holy flesch in his cote lappe, z with his lappe do touch the bried, potage, wyne, oyle or any other meate: shall he be holy also? The prestes answered, z saide: No. Then sayde Aggeus: Now yf one beynge defyled with a deed carcase, touch any of the se: shall it also be vnclene? The prestes gaue answer z sayed: yee, it shall be vnclene. The Aggeus answered, and sayde: Lue so is this people z this nacion before me, saith y LOR

The prophet Aggeus.

DE: and so are all the workes of their hōdes, yee and all that they offre, is vnclene.

C And now (I praye you) cōsidre from this daye forth, and how it hath gone with you afore: or euer there was layed one stone vpon another in the temple of the LORDE: that when ye came to a corne heape of xx. bushels, there were scarceten: and that when ye came to the wyne presse for to poure out L. portes of wyne, there were scarce xx. For I smote you with heate, blastinge & hale stones in all the labours of your hōdes: yet was there none of you, that wolde turne vnto me, saith the LORDE. Considre then from this daye forth and afore, namely, from the xxiiij. daye of their moneth, vnto the daye that the foundation of the LORDES temple was layed: Mark it well, Is not the seide yet in the barne: haue not the vines, the fygetrees, the pomgranates and olyue trees bene yet vnfrutefull: but frō this daye forth, I shal make them to prospere.

Moreover the xxiiij. daye of the moneth came the worde of the LORDE vnto Aggeus agayne, sayenge: Speake to Zorobabel the prynce of Iuda, and saye: I will shake both heauen and earth, and ouerthrowe the seate of the kingdomes, yee & destroye the mightie kingdome of the heithē. I wil ouerthrowe the charettes, and those that syt vpon them, so that both horse and man shal fall downe, enery man thorow his neighbours swerde. And as forthe, o Zorobabel (saith the LORDE of hoostes) thou sonne of Salathiel, my seruant: I wil take the (saith the LORDE) at the same tyme, and make the as a seale: for I haue chosen the, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

The first Chapter.

In the eight moneth of these secōde yere of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo, the prophet, sayenge: The LORDE hath bene sore displeased at youre forefathers. And saye thou vnto them: thus saith the LORDE of hoostes. Turne you vnto me (saith the LORDE of hoostes) and I wil turne me vnto you, saith the LORDE of hoostes. Be not ye like youre forefathers, vnto whom the prophetes cried afore tyme, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE God of hoostes: Turne you from youre euell wayes, & from youre wicked imaginations. But they wolde not heare, ner regard me, saith the LORDE. What is now become of youre forefathers and the prophetes: are they yet still alyue? But dyd not my wordes & statutes (which I cōmaunded by my seruantes & prophetes) touch yō forefathers? Vpon this, they gaue answer & sayde: like as yō LORDE of hoostes deuysed to do vnto vs, acordinge to yō owne wayes & imaginations, euen so hath he dealte with vs.

Vpon the xxiiij. daye of the xi. moneth (which is the moneth Sebat) in the secōde yere of Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo the prophete, sayenge: I sawe by night, and lo, there sat one vpon a reade horse, and stode still amonge the Myrtrees, that were beneth vpon the ground: and behynde him were there reade, spredd and whyte horses.

The prophet Zachary.

Then sayde I: O my LORDE, what are these? And the angel that talked with me, sayde vnto me: I will shewe the what these be. And the man that stode amonge the Myrtrees, answered & sayde: These are they, whom the LORDE hath sent to go thorow the worlde. And they answered the angel of the LORDE, that stode amonge the Myrtrees, and sayde: We haue gone thorow the worlde: and beholde, all the worlde dwell at ease, and are carelesse.

Then the LORDES angel gaue answer and sayde: O LORDE of hoostes, how longe wilt thou be vnmercifull to Ierusalem and to the cities of Iuda, with whom thou hast bene displeased now these lxx. yeres? So the LORDE gaue a lowynge and a comfortable answer, vnto the angel that talked with me. And the angel that commoned with me, sayde vnto me: Crie thou, and speake, thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I am excedynge gelous ouer Ierusalem and Sion, and sore displeased at the carelesse heithen: for where as I was but a litle angrie, they dyd their best that I might destroye them. Therefore thus saith the LORDE: I wil turne me agayne in mercy towarde Ierusalem, so that my house shalbe buyded in it, saith the LORDE of hoostes: yee and the plommet shalbe layed abrode in Ierusalem, saith the LORDE of hoostes.

Crie also, and speake: thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: My cities shalbe in good prosperite agayne, the LORDE shal yet confort Sion, and chose Ierusalem. Then lift I vp myne eyes and sawe, and beholde, foure homes. And I sayde vnto the angel, that talked with me: what be these? he answered me: These are yō homes, which haue scattered Iuda, Israel and Ierusalem abrode. And yō LORDE shewed me iiii. carpenters. Then sayde I: what wil these do? he answered, & sayde: These are the homes, which haue so strowed Iuda abrode, that no man durst lift vp his heade: But these are come to fraye them awaye, and to cast out yō homes of the Gentiles, which lift vp their home ouer the londe of Iuda, to scatte it abrode.

The ii. Chapter.

Lift vp myne eyes agayne, & loke: and beholde, a man with a measure lyne in his honde. Then saide I: where goest thou? And he sayde vnto me: To measure Ierusalem, that I maye se how longe and how brode it is. And beholde, the angel that talked w me, wente his waye forth. Then were there out another angel to mete him, & sayde vnto him: Runne, speake to this yongeman, & saye: Ierusalem shal be inhabited without eny wal, for y very multitude of people & catell, y shal be therein. Yee I myself (saith the LORDE) wil be vnto her a wall of fyre rounde aboute, & wil be honoured in her.

O get you forth, O fle from the londe of y north (saith the LORDE) ye, whom I haue scattered in to the foure wyndes vnder heauē, saith the LORDE. Saue thy self, o Sion: thou that dwellest with y daughter of Babilon, for thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: With a glorious power hath he sent me out to the heithē, which spoyled you: for who so toucheth you, shal touche the aple of his owne eye. Beholde, I will lift vp myne honde ouer them: so that they shal be spoyled of thosse, which afore serued them: & ye shal knowe, that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me.

Be glad, & reioyce, o daughter of Sion: for lo, I am come to dwell in the myddest of the, saith the LORDE. At the same tyme the re shal many heithen cleue to the LORDE, & shal be my people. Thus wil I dwell in the myddest of the, & thou shalt knowe, that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto the. The LORDE shal haue Iuda in possession for his parte in the holy grounde, & shal chose Ierusalem yet agayne. Let all flesh be still before the LORDE, for he is rysen out of his holy place.

The iii. Chapter.

Ild he shewed me Iesua y hye prest, stondinge before the angel of the LORDE, and Satan stode at his right honde to resiste him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Satan: The LORDE reprobeth the (thou Satan) yee the LORDE that hath chosen Ierusalem, reprobeth the. Is not this a brande take out of the fyre? Now Iesua was clothed in vnclene rayment, and stode before the angel: which answered & sayde vnto those, y stode before him: take awaye y foule clothes from him. And vnto him he sayde: Beholde, I haue take awaye thy synne from the, & wil decke the with chaunge of rayment. He sayde moreover: set a sayre myter vpon his heade. So they set a sayre myter vpon his heade, & put on clothes vpon him, and the angel of y LORDE stode there. Then the angel of the LORDE testified vnto Iesua, & spake, thus sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: If thou wilt walke in my wayes, & kepe my watch: thou shalt rule my house, & kepe my courtes, & I wil gene the place amonge these that stonde here. Heare o Iesua thou hye prest, thou & thy frendes that dwell before the, for they are wōderous people. Beholde, I will bringe forth the braunch of my seruant: for lo, the stone that I hanelayed before Iesus: vpon one stone shalbe viij. eyes. Beholde, I will hewe him out (saith the LORDE of hoostes) and take awaye the synne of that londe in one daye.

Then shall every man call for his neighbe-re, vnder the vyne & vnder y fygetre, saith the LORDE of hoostes. The III. Chap.

And y angel that talked with me, came agayne, & waked me vp (as a man that is rayed out of his slepe) & sayde vnto me: What seist thou? And I sayde: I haue loked, and beholde: a candellsticke all of golde, with a boll vpon it & his viij. lampes therin, & vpon every lampe viij. stalkes: And
ij. olyue trees therby, one vpon the right sy-de of the boll, & the other vpon the left syde.
So I answered, & spake to the angel y talked with me, sayenge: O my lord what are these? The angel that talked with me, answered & sayde vnto me: knowest thou not what these be? And I sayde: No, my lord. He answered, & sayde vnto me: This is the worde of the LORDE vnto Zorobabel, sayenge: Nether thorow an hoost of men, ner thorow strength, but thorow my sprete, saith y LOR-DE of hoostes. What art thou thou greate mountayne) before Zorobabel: thou must be made eauen. And he shal bringe vp the first stone, so that men shal crie vnto him: good lucke, good lucke.

Morouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: The bondes of Zorobabel haue layed y foundation of this house, his bondes also shal fynishe it: that ye maye knowe, how that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto you. For he that hath benedes-pyed a litle season, shal reioyce, whē he seyth the tyme weight in Zorobabels honde. The viij. eyes are the LORDES, which go thorow the hole wolde. Then answered I, & sayde vnto him: What are these two olyue trees vpon the right and left syde of the candellstic-ke? I spake morouer, & sayde vnto him: what be these ij. olyue braunches which thorow y two golden pipes) emptye themselves into the golde? He answered me, & sayde: knowest thou not, what these be? And I sayde: No, my lord. Then sayde he: These are the two olyue braunches, that stonde before the ruler of the whole earth.

The V. Chapter.

So I turned me lifynge vp myne eyes, & loked, & beholde, a flyenge boke. And he sayde vnto me: what seist thou? I answered: I se a flyenge boke of fy.

cabites longe & x. cabites brode. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the curse, y goeth forth ouer the whole earth: For all theyes shalbe indged after this boke, & all swearers shalbe indged acordinge to the same. I will bringe it forth (saith the LORDE of hoostes) so y it shal come to the house of the thefe, & to the house of him, that falsly sweareth by my name: & shal remayne in his house, & consume with the tymbre & stones therof. The angel that talked with me, wente forth, & sayde vnto me: lift vp thine eyes & se, what this is y goeth forth. And I sayde: what is it? He answered: this is a measure goinge out. He sayde morouer: Euen thus are they (y dwell vpon the whole earth) to loke vpon. And be-holde, there was lift vp a talent of leade: & lo, a woman sat in the myddest of the measure. And he sayde: This is vngodlynesse. So he cast her in to the myddest of the measure, & threwe y lempe of leade vp in to an hole.

Then lift I vp myne eyes, & loked: & be-holde, there came out ij. women, & the wynde was in their wynges (for they had wynges like the wynges of a stork) & they lift vp the measure betwixte the earth & the heauen. Then spake I to the angel, y talked w me: whyther wil these beare the measure?
And he sayde vnto me: into the londe of Sy-near, to buyde them an house: which when it is prepared, the measure shal beset them in his place.

The VI. Chapter.

Morouer I turned me, lifynge vp myne eyes, & loked: & beholde, there came iij. charettes out fro betwixte two hilles, which hilles were of brasse: In the first charet were reade horses, In the sec-de charet were blacke horses, In y thirde cha-ret were whyte horses, In y fourth charet were horses of dyuerse colours, & stronge. Then spake I, and sayde vnto the angel that talked with me: O lord, what are these? The angel answered, & sayde vnto me: These are the
iij. wyndes of the heauen, which be come forth to stode before the ruler of all y earth.
That with the blacke horse wente into the londe of the north, & the whyte folowed the,
and the spretled horses wente forth towards the south. These horses were very stronge, & wente out: and sought to go and take their iourney ouer the whole earth. And he sayde:
get you hence, and go thorow the wolde.
So they wete thorow out the wolde. Then cried he vpon me, and spake vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, these that go toward y north, shal still my wrath in the north countre.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Take of the presoners that are come from Babilon: namely, Zeldai, Tobiaas and Jdaia: & come thou the same daye, and go in to the house of Josias the sonne of Sophony. Then take golde and syluer, and make crownes therof, and set them vpon the heads of Iesus the sonne of Josedec, the hie prief, and speake vnto him: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, the man who se name is the braunch: & he that shal spin-ge vp after him, shal buyde vp the temple of the LORDE: yee euen he shal buyde vp the temple of the LORDE. He shal beare the pray-se he shal sit vpon the LORDES trone, and haue the dominacion.

A prief shall he be also vpon his trone, & a peaceable counsell shal be betwixte them both. And the crownes shal be in the temple of the LORDE, for a remembraunce vnto Zelem, Tobias, Jdaia and Zenthe sonne of Sophony. And soch as be farre off, shal come and buyde the temple of the LORDE: that ye maye knowe, how that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto you. And this shal come to passe, yf ye wil herken diligently vnto the voyce of the LORDE youre God.

The VII. Chapter.

It happened also in the fourth yeare of tynge Darius, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary in the fourth daye of the ix. moneth, which is called Cassen: what tyme as Sarasar and Kogomelech and the men that were with them, sent vnto Bethel for to praye before y LORDE: and that they shulde saye vnto the priefes, which were in the house of the LOR-DE of hoostes, and to the prophetes: Shul-de I wepe in the systre moneth, and absteyne, as I haue done now certayne yeares?
Then came the worde of the LORDE of hoo-stes vnto me, sayenge: Speake vnto all the people of the londe, and to the priefes, and saye: when ye fasted and mourned in the v
vii. moneth (now this lxx. yeares) dyd ye fast vnto me? When ye ate also and dronke, dyd ye not eate and drinke for youre owne selues?
Are not these the wordes, which the LOR-DE spake by his prophetes afore tyme, when Ierusalem was yet inhabited and welthy, she and the cities rounde aboute her: when there dwelt me, both toward the south and in the playne countrees?

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto
Zachary, sayenge: Thus saith y LORDE of hoostes: Execute true iudgment: shewe mercy and louynge kyndnesse, every man to his brother: Do the wyddewe, the fatherles-se, the straunger, and poore no wronge: and let no man ymagen euell agaynst his brother in his hert. Neuertheles they wolde not take hede, but turned their backes, and stopped their eares, that they shulde not heare.

yee they made their hertes as an Adamant stone, lest they shulde heare the lawe & wor-des, which the LORDE of hoostes sent in his holy sprete by the prophetes afore tyme.

Wherfore the LORDE of hoostes was very wroth at them. And thus is it come to passe, that like as he spake and they wolde not heare: euen so they cried, and I wolde not heare (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but sca-tered them amonge all Gentiles, whom they knewe not. Thus the londe was made so desolate, y there traualed no man in it nether to ner fro, for that pleasant londe was veterly layed waist.

The VIII. Chapter.

So the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I was in a greate gelousy ouer Sion, yee I haue bene very gelous ouer her in a greate displeasure. thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: I wil turne me agayne vnto Sion, and wil dwel in the myd-dest of Ierusalem: so that Ierusalem shalbe called a faithfull and true cite, the hill of the LORDE of hoostes, yee an holy hill.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: There shall yet olde men and women dwel agayne in the stretes of Ierusalem: yee and soch as go with stanes in their bondes for very age. The stretes of the cite also shalbe full of yonge boyes and damselles, playnge vpon the stretes.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: yf the residues of this people thynke it to be vn-possible in these dayes, shulde it therfore be vnpossible in my sight, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: Thus saith the LORDE of hoo-stes: Beholde, I wil deliuer my people from the londe of the east and west, and wil bryn-ge them agayne: that they maye dwel at Jerusalem. They shalbe my people, and I will be their God, in trench and rightuousnesse.
Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: let you-re bondes be stronge, yee that now heare these wordes by the mouth of the prophetes, which be in these dayes that the foundation is layed vpon the LORDE of hoostes house, that the temple maye be buylded. For why?
before these dayes nether men ner catel cou-

be wyne eny thinge, nether might eny man come in and out in rest, for trouble: but I let euery man go agaynst his neyghboure.

Nevertheless I wil now intreate the rest due of this people nomore, as afore tyme (saith the LORDE of hoostes) but they shal be a sede of peace. The vynyarde shal gene hir frute, the grounde shal gene hir increase, and the heauens shal gene their dew: and I shal cause the remnant of this people, to haue all these in possession. And it shall come to passe, that like as ye were a curse amonge the heithen (O ye house of Juda and ye house of Israel) Euen so wil I deliuer you, that ye shal be a blessing: feare not, but let your hoes be stronge.

For thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: like as I deuysed to punyssh you, what tyme as youre fathers prouoked me vnto wraith (saith the LORDE of hoostes) and spared not: Euen so am I determed now in these dayes, for to do wel vnto the house of Juda and Jerusalem, therefore feare ye not. Now the thinges that ye shal do, are these: Speake euery man the treuth vnto his neyghboure, execute indgment truly and peaceably within youre portes, none of you ymagyne uell in his hert agaynst his neyghboure, and loue no false ootheres: for all these are the thinges that I hate, saith the LORDE. And the worde of the LORDE of hoostes came vnto me, sayenge: thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: The fast of the fourth moneth, the fast of the fifth, the fast of the seventh, and the fast of the tenth, shal be ioye and gladnesse, and prosperous hye feastes vnto the house of Juda: Only, loue the treuth and peace.

Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: They shall yet come, people, and the inhabitants of many cities: and they that dwell in one cite, shal go to another, sayenge: Let vs go, and praye before the LORDE, for vs seke the LORDE of hoostes, I wil go with you. Recmoch people and mightie heithen shal come and seke the LORDE of hoostes at Jerusalem, and to praye before the LORDE. Thus saith the LORDE of hoostes: In that tyme shal ten men (out of all maner of languages of the Gentiles) take one Jewe by the hemme of his garment, and saye: we wil go with you, for we haue herde, that God is amonge you.

The IX. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE shal be receaued at Adrach, and Damascus shal be his offerynge: for the eyes of all me and of the trybes of Israel shal lōke vp vnto the LORDE. The borders of Hamath shal be harde therby, Tyrus also and Sidon, for they are very wise. Tyrus shal make herself stronge, heape vp syluer as the sōde, and golde as the claye of the stretes. Beholde, the LORDE shal take her in, and haue her in possession: he shal smyte downe hir power in to the see, and she shal be consumed with fyre. This shal Ascalon se, and be afrayed. Gaza shal be very soyy, so shal Accaron also, because hir hope is come to confucion. For the kinge of Gaza shall perish, and at Ascalon shal no man dwell.

Strangers shall dwell at Asdod, and as for y pryd of y Philistynes, I shal rote it out. Their blonde will I take awaye from their mouth, and their abhominacions from amonge their teth. Thus they shal be left for our God, yee they shal be as a prynces in Juda, and Accaron like as Jebusi. And so will I compass my house rounde aboute with mynne of warre, goinge to and fro: that no opposoure come vpon them eny more. For that haue I sene now with myne eyes.

Reioyce thou greatly, o daughter Sion: be glad, o daughter Jerusalem. For lo, thy kinge cometh vnto the, euen the rightwys and Sauoure: Lowly and symple is he, he rydeth vpon an asse, and vpon the foale of an asse. I wil rote out the charettes fro Ephraim, and the horse from Jerusalem, the batelbowes shal be destroyed. He shall gene the doctrine of peace vnto the heithen, and his dominion shal be from the one see to the other, and from the floudes to the endes of the worlde.

Thou also thorow the blonde of thy enuenaunt: shal let thy prisoners out of the pytte, wherein is no water. Turne you now to the stronge holde, yet that be in prison, and longesore to be deliuered: And this daye I bringe the worde, that I wil rewarde the double agayne. For Juda haue I bent out as a bowe for me, and Ephraim haue I fylled.

Thy sonnes (o Sion) wil I raise vp agaynst the Grekes, and make the as a giantes stronge: the LORDE God shal be sene aboute the, and his dartes shal go forth as the lightninge. The LORDE God shal blowe the trumpet, and shal come forth as a storme out of the south.

The LORDE of hoostes shall defende the, they shall consume and deuoure, and subdue them with slynge stones. They shal drynter rage, as it were thorow wyne. They shal be fylled like y basens, and as y hornes of y altar. The LORDE their God shal deliuer the in y daye, as the flock off his people: for the stone off his Sanctuary shal be set vp in his land. O how prosperous and goodly a thyng shall that be. The come shall make the yongemen chearefull, and the new wyne the maydens.

The X. Chapter.

Raye the LORDE then by tymes to gene you the latter rayne, so shall the LORDE make cloudes, and gene you rayne ynough for all the increace off the felde: for rayne is the answer of Idols. The soytayers se lyes, and tell but vayne dreames: the comfort that they gene, is no thyng worth. Therefore go they astraye like a flocke of shepe, and are troubled, because they haue no shepherde. My wrothfull displeasure is moued at the shepherdes, and I will vysethe goates. For the LORDE of hoostes wil graciously vsethe his flocke (the house of Juda) and holde them as a goodly fayre horse in the batell. Out of Juda shal come the helmer, the male, the batelbowe, and all the princes together. They shal be as the giantes, which in the batell treade downe the myre vpon y stretes. They shal fight, for y LORDE shal be with them, so that the horsmen shal be confounded.

I wil coforte the house of Juda, and preserve the house of Joseph. I wil turne them also, for I pyttie them: and they shal be like as they were, when I had not cast them of. For I the LORDE am their God, and wil heare them. Ephraim shal be as a giant, and their herte shal be cherefull as thorow wyne: their children shal se it, and be glad, and their herte shal reioyce in the LORDE. I wil blowe for them and gather them together, for I wil redeme them. They shall increace, as they increased afore. I wil sowe the amonge the people, y they maye thinke vpon me in farre countrees: they shal lyue w their childre, and turne agayne. I wil bunge them agayne also from the londe of Egypte, and gather them out of Assiria. I wil carye them into y londe of Galaad and to Libanus, and they shal wante no thyng. He shall go vpon the see of trouble, and smyte the see waves: so y all the depe floudes shal be dried vp. The proude boostinge of Assur shal be cast downe, and the scepter off Egypte shal be taken awaye. I wil comforte them in the LORDE, that they maye walke in his name, saith the LORDE.

Penthydores (o Libanus) that the fyre maye consume thy Cedre trees. Howle ye fyre trees, for the Cedre is falle, yee all y proude are waisted awaye. Howle (o ye of trees of Baasan) for y mightie stronge wod is cut downe. Men maye heare the shepherdes mourne, for their glory is destroyed. Men maye heare the Lyons whelpes roare, for the pryde off Iordane is waisted awaye.

Thus sayeth the LORDE my God: Seede the shepe of y slaughter, which shal be slayne of those that possesse them: yet they take it for no syme, but they y sell the, saye: The LORDE be thanked, I am rich: Rec their owne shepherdes spare them not. Therefore wil I nomore spare those that dwell in the londe (saith the LORDE) but lo, I wil deliuer the people, euery man in to his neyghbours honde, and in to the hōde of his kyng: that they maye smyte the londe, and out off their bondes wil not I deliuer them.

I myself fedde y slaughter shepe (a poore flocke verely) and toke vnto me two stanes: the one I called louyngemekenesse, the other I called wo, and so I kepte the shepe. Thre shepherdes destroyed I in one moneth, for I might not awaye w them, nether had they eny delyre in me. Then sayde I: I wil fede you nomore, the thinge that dyeth, let it dye: and that wil perishe, let it perishe, and let the remnant eate, euery one the flesh of his neyghboure. I toke also my louyngemeke staff, and brake it, that I might disauill the conuenaunt, which I made with all people. And so it was broken in that daye.

Then the poore symple shepe that had a respecte vnto me, knewe therby, that it was the worde of the LORDE. And I sayde vnto them: yff ye thynke it good, bringe hither my pryce: yf no, then leaue. So they wayed downe xxx. syluer pens, y value that I was prysed at. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: cast it vnto the potter (a goodly pryce for me to be valued at of them) and I toke the xxx. syluers pens, and cast them to the potter in the house of the LORDE.

Then brake I my other staff also (namely wo) that I might lowse the brotherheade betwixte Juda and Israel. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take to the also the staff off a foolish shepherde: for lo, I wil raise vp a shepherde in the londe, which shall not seke after the thinges that be lost, ner care for such as go astraye: he shall not heale the wounded, he shall not nourish the thing that is whole: but he shall eat the flesh off such as be fat, and reare their claws in peccies.

The prophet Zachary.

O Idols shepherde, that leaue the flocke. The sword shall come vpon his arme and vpon his right eye. His arme shall be clenched vp, and his right eye shall be sore blinded.

The XII. Chapter.

The heavy burthen which y<sup>e</sup> LORD hath denyed for I<sup>s</sup>rael.

Unus saith the LORD, which spred the heanes abroad, layde the foundation of the earth, and geueth man, y<sup>e</sup> breath of life: Beholde, I will make Ierusalem a cuppe of surfet, vnto all the people y<sup>e</sup> are rounde aboute her: yee Iuda himself also shall be in the sege agaynst Ierusalem. At the same tyme will I make Ierusalem an heuy stone for all people, so that all such as lift it vp, shall be toarne and rete, and all the people of the earth shall be gathered together agaynst it.

In that daye (sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORD) I will make all horses abasshed, and those that ryde vpon them, to be out of their wyttes. I will open myne eyes vpon the house of Iuda, and smyte all the houses of the people with blindness. And the prynces of Iuda shall saye in their hertes: The inhabitants off Ierusalem shall geue me consolacion in the LORD off hoostes their God. In that tyme will I make the prynces of Iuda like an hore burnynge ouen with wodd, and like a cresshet off fyre amonge the strawes: so that they shall consume all the people rounde aboute them, both vpon the right honde and the left. Ierusalem also shall be inhabited agayne: namely, in the same place where Ierusalem stonde.

The LORD shall preserue the tentes off Iuda like as afore tyme: so that the glory of the house of Dauid and the glory of the cytesyns of Ierusalem, shall be but litle regarded, in comparison off the glory off Iuda. In that daye shall the LORD defende the cytesyns of Ierusalem: so that the weakest then amonge them shall be as Dauid: and the house of Dauid shall be like as Gods house, and as the angell off the LORD before them.

At the same tyme will I go aboute to destroye all such people as come agaynst Ierusalem. Moreover, vpon the house off Dauid and vpon the cytesyns off Ierusalem, will I

The xiiij. Chap.

pouere out the spere of grace and praye: so that they shall loke vpon me, whom they haue feared: and they shall beweepe him, as men mourne for their only begotten sonne. Yee and be sory for him, as men are sory for their first childe.

Then shall there be a greates mourninge at Ierusalem, like as the lamentacion at A<sup>d</sup>remmon in the felde off Maggadon. And the londe shall bewaile, euery tyme by the selues: The kynred off the house of Dauid them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: The kynred off the house of I<sup>s</sup>achar them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: The kynred off the house of I<sup>s</sup>achar them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: The kynred off the house of Simeon them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: In like maner, all the other gentes, euery one by them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues.

The XIII. Chapter.

In that tyme shall the house off Dauid and the cytesyns off Ierusalem haue an open well, to wash off synne and vnclennesse. And then (sayeth the LORD off hoostes) I will destroye the names of Idols out off the londe: so that they shall no more be put in remembraunce.

As for the false prophetes also and the vnclene spere, I shall take them out off the londe: So that yf eny off them prophesy eny more, his owne father and mother that begat him, shall saye vnto him: Thou shalt dye, for thou speakest lyes vnder the name off the LORD. Yee his owne father and mother that begat him, shall wounde him, when he prophesyeth. And then shall those prophetes be confounded, euery one off his wilson when he prophesieth: neither shall they weare sack clothes eny more, to disceane me with all. But he shall be sayne to saye: I am no prophet: I am an husbonde man, for so am I taught by Adam fro my yowth vp. And yf it be sayde vnto him: How came these woundes then in thine hondes? he shall answer: Thus am I wounded in the house off myne owne frendes.

Arise (othousewarde) vpon my shepheard, and vpon the prynce of my people, sayeth the LORD off hoostes: Smyte the shepheard and the shepe shall be scatred abroad, and so will I turne myne honde to the litle ones. And it shall come to passe (sayeth the LORD) that in all the londe two partes shall be

The prophet Zachary.

one, but the thirde parte shall remayne therein. And the same thirde parte wil I bringe thorow the fyre, and will clense them, as the syluer is clensed: yee and trye them, like as golde is tryed.

Then shall they call vpon my name, and I wil heare them: I will saye: it is my people. And they shall saye: LORD, my God.

The XIII. Chapter.

Behold, the daye of the LORD cometh, that thou shalt be spoyled and robbed: for I wil gather together all the heithen, to fight agaynst Ierusalem: so that the cite shall be wonne, the houses spoyled, and the women defyled. The half of the cite shall go awaye in to captiuyte, and the residue of the people shall not be caried out of the cite.

After that shall the LORD go forth to fight agaynst those heithen, as men vse to fight in the daye of batell. The shall his fete stide vpon the mount oliuete, that lieth vpon the east syde of Ierusalem. And y<sup>e</sup> mount olyuete shall cleue in two, eastwarde, & westwarde: so y<sup>e</sup> there shall be a greates valley: & the halff mount shall remoue towarde the north, and the other halff towarde the south.

And ye shall fle vnto the valley of my hilles, for the valley off the hilles shall reach vnto Asal. Yee fle shall ye, like as ye fled for the earthquake in the dayes off O<sup>l</sup>ias kynge of Iuda. And the LORD my God shall come, and all sanctes with him. In that daye shall it not be light, but colde and frost. This shall be that specyall daye, which is knowne vnto the LORD: neither daye ner night, but aboute the eueninge tyme it shall be light. In that tyme shall there waters of life runne out from Ierusalem: the halff parte of them towarde the east see, and the other halff towarde the vttemost see, and shall continue both somer and wynter. And the LORD himself shall be kynge ouer all the earth.

At that tyme shall there be one LORD only, and his name shall be but one. Men shall go aboute the whole earth, as vpon a felde: from Sibe to Remmon, and from y<sup>e</sup> south to Ierusalem. She shall be set vp, and inhabited in hir place: from Ben Jamins porte, vnto the place of the first porte, and vnto y<sup>e</sup>

The xiiij. Chap. Fo. ci.

corner porte: and from the tower of Zanael, vnto the kynges wyne presses. There shall men dwell, and there shall be no more cursinge, but Ierusalem shall be safely inhabited.

This shall be the plague, wherewith y<sup>e</sup> LORD wil smyte all people, that haue sought agaynst Ierusalem: namely, their flesh shall consume awaye, though they stonde vpon their fete: their eyes shall corrupte in their holes, and their tange shall consume in their mouth.

In that daye shall the LORD make a greates sedicion amonge them, so that one man shall take another by the honde, and laye his hondes vpon the hondes of his neyghboure. Iuda shall fight also agaynst Ierusalem, and the goodes of all the heithen shall be gathered together rounde aboute: golde and syluer and a very greates multitude off clothes. And so shall this plague go ouer horses, mules, camels, asses and all the beastes that shall be in the hooft, like as yonder plague was.

Euery one that remayneth then of all y<sup>e</sup> people, which came agaynst Ierusalem, shall go vp yearly, to worship the kynge (euery y<sup>e</sup> LORD off hoostes) and to kepe the feast off tabernacles. And loke what generacion vpon earth goeth not vp to Ierusalem, for to worship the kynge (euery the LORD off hoostes) vpon the same shall come no rayne. Off the kynred off Egypte go not vp & come not, it shall not rayne vpon them nether.

This shall be the plague wherewith y<sup>e</sup> LORD wil smyte all heithen, that come not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles: yee this shall be the synneplage of Egypte and the synneplage of all people, that go not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles.

At that tyme shall the rydinge geer of y<sup>e</sup> horses be holy vnto the LORD, and the ketrels in the LORDS house shall be like the basens before the altar: yee all the ketrels in Ierusalem and Iuda, shall be holy vnto the LORD off hoostes: and all they that slaye offerings, shall come and take of them, and dight them therein. And at that tyme there shall be no mo Cananites in the house of the LORD.

The Prophet Malachy.

What Malachy conceynerh.

- Chap. I. The benefites of God, shewed special ly vnto Israel before all other: Agayne, the punysshment of the vnthankfulnesse, vnfaithfulnesse and covetousnesse of the prestes and the people.
- Chap. II. He threatneth punysshment and confusion vnto the prestes, and commaundeth men to loue their wyues.
- Chap. III. Of Christes commynge, and of him that maketh redy his waye before him. Of the abrogacion of the olde, leuiticall pretheade. Of the power of the iudge for to come and of that fearful daye.

The first Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LORDE sheweth agaynst Israel by Malachy.

I haue loued you, sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORDE: ad yet ye saye: wherin hast thou loued vs? Was not Esau Jacobs brother, sayeth the LORDE: yet haue I loued Jacob, and hated Esau: yee I haue made his hilles waist, and his heretage a wilderness for dragons. And though Edem sayde: well, we are destroyed, we wil go buylde vp agayne the places that be waisted: yet (sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORDE of hoostes) what they buylde, that brake I downe: so that it was called a cursed londe, and a people, whom the LORDE hath euer bene angrie, withall.

Your eyes haue sene it, ad ye youre selues must confesse, that y<sup>e</sup> LORDE hath brought the londe of Israel to greate honoure. Shulde not a sonne honoure his father, and a seruaut his master? If I be now a father, where is myne honoure? yf I be the LORDE, where am I feared? sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

Now to you prestes, that despise my name. And yf ye saye: wherin haue we despised thy name? In this, that ye offre vnclene bried vpon myne altier. And yf ye wil saye: wherin haue we offered eny vnclene thyng vnto the? In this that ye saye: the altier of the LORDE is not to be regarded. If ye offre y<sup>e</sup> blynde, is not y<sup>e</sup> euell? And yf ye offre the lame and sick, is not that euell? Yee offre it vnto thy pryncce, shal he be content with the, or accepte thy personne, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

The ii. Chap.

And now make youre prayer before the LORDE, that he maye haue mercy vpon vs: for soch thinges haue ye done. Shal he regarde youre personnes (thynke ye) sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: yee what is he amonge you, that wil do so moch as to shut y<sup>e</sup> doores, or to mangle y<sup>e</sup> fyre vpon myne altier for naughte? I haue no pleasure in you, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: and as for the meat offeringe, I wil not accepte it at youre honde. For from the ryssinge vp of y<sup>e</sup> sonne vnto y<sup>e</sup> goinge downe of the same, my name is greate amonge the Gentiles: yee in every place shal there sacrifice be done, and a clene meat offeringe offered vpon my name: for my name is greate amonge the heithen, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. But ye haue vnhalowed it, in that ye saye, the altier of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE is not to be regarded, and the thinge that is set ther vpon, not worthy to be eaten.

Now saye ye: It is but labour and trauaile, and thus haue ye thought some arte, (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) offeringe robbery, yee the lame and the sick. Ye haue brought me in a meat offeringe, shal I accepte it of youre honde, sayeth the LORDE: Cursed be the dyssembler, which hath in his flocke one that is male, and when he maketh a vowe, offereth a spotted one vnto the LORDE. For I am a greate kynge (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and my name is fearful amonge the heithen.

The II. Chapter.

Now (o ye prestes) this commandement toucheth you: yf ye wil not heare it, ner regarde it, to geue the glory vnto my name (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) I wil sende a curse vpon you, and curse youre blessinges: yee curse them, yf ye do not take hede. Beholde, I shal ruppe youre sede, and cast downe in youre faces: euen the donge of youre solempne sacrifices: and it shal cleue fast vpon you. And ye shal knowe, that I haue sent this commandement vnto you: that my couenaunt which I made with Levi, might stande, sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORDE of hoostes.

I made a couenaunt of life and peace with him: this I gaue him, that he might stande in awe of me: and so he dyd feare me, ad had my name in reuerence. The lawe of truth was in his mouth, and there was no wickednesse founde in his lippes. He walked with me in peace ad equitye, and dyd turne many one awaye from their synnes. For the prestes lippes shulde be sure knowlege, that men maye see the lawe at his mouth, for he is a messaunger of the LORDE of hoostes. But as for you, ye are gone clene out off the waye, and haue caused the multitude to be offended at the lawe: ye haue broken the couenaunt of Levi, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Therefore wil I also make you to be despised, and to be of no reputacion amonge all y<sup>e</sup> people: because ye haue not kepte my wayes, but bene parciall in the lawe.

The prophet Malachy.

Haue we not all one father: hath not one God made vs? why doth euery one off vs then despise his owne brother, and so breake the couenaunt of oure fathers? Now hath Juda offended: yee the abhominacion is done in Israel and in Ierusalem, for Juda hath defyled the Sanctuary of the LORDE, which beloued, and hath kepte the daughter of a strange God. But the LORDE shal destroye the mathe that doth this (yee both the master and the scholar) out off the tabernacle of Jacob, with him that offereth vpon meat offeringe vnto the LORDE of hoostes. Now haue ye brought it to this poynte agayne, that the altier of the LORDE is covered with teares wepyng and mournyng: so that I wil no more regarde the meat offeringe, nether wil I receaue or accepte eny thinge at youre handes.

And yet ye saye: wherfore? Euen because that where as the LORDE made a couenaunt betwixte y<sup>e</sup> and the wise off thy youth, thou hast despised her: yet is she thyne owne companyon and married wife.

So dyd not the one, and yet had he an excellent sprece. What dyd then the one? He sought the sede promised of God. Therefore loke well to youre sprece, and let no man despise y<sup>e</sup> wife of his youth. If thou hatest her, put her awaye, sayeth the LORDE God of Israel and geue her a clothinge for the scome, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Loke well then to youre sprece, and despise her not. Ye greue the LORDE with youre wordes, and yet ye saye: wherewithall haue we greued him? In this, that ye saye: All that do euell are good in the sight of God, and soch please him. Or els where is the God that punyssheth?

The III. Chapter.

Behold, I wil sende my messaunger, which shal prepare the waye before me: and the LORDE whom ye wolde haue, shal soone come to his temple, yee euen the messaunger of the couenaunt whom ye longe for.

Beholde, he cometh, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. But who maye abyde the daye of his commynge? Who shalbe able to endure, when he appeareth? For he is like a goldsmithes fyre, ad like wast her sope. He shal syt him downe to trye and to clense y<sup>e</sup> syluer, he shal pouрге the children of Levi, and purifie them like as golde and syluer: that they maye drynge meat offeringes vnto the LORDE in rightuousnes. Then shal the offeringe of Juda and Ierusalem be acceptable vnto the LORDE, like as from the begynninge in the yeres afore tyme. I wil come and punyssh you, and I myself wil be a swift roynes agaynst the witches, agaynst the aduocaters, agaynst false swearers: yee ad agaynst those, that wygeously kepe backe the hyelinges dewty: which were the wyddowes and the fatherlesse, and oppresse the straunger, and feare not me, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. For I am the LORDE y<sup>e</sup> chaunge not, and ye (o children of Jacob) wil not leaue of: ye are gone awaye fro myne ordinaunces, and sens y<sup>e</sup> tyme of youre forefathers haue ye not kepte them.

Turne you now vnto me, and I wil turne me vnto you, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. Ye saye: Wherin shal we turne? Shulde a man vse falsede and disceate with God, as ye vse falsede and disceate with me? Yet ye saye: wherin vse we disceate with the? In Tythes and heaue offeringes. Therefore are ye cursed with penury, because ye dyssemble with me, all the sorte of you.

Bringye euery Tythe in to my barne, y<sup>e</sup> there maye be meat in myne house: and proue me withall (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) yf I wil not open the wyndowes of heauen vnto you, and poure you out a blessinge with plenteousnesse. Yee I shal reprove the consumer for youre sakes, so that he shal not eate vpon the frute of youre grounde, nether shal y<sup>e</sup> vynyarde be baren in the selde, sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORDE of hoostes: In so moch that all people shal saye, that ye be blessed, for ye shal be a pleasant lode, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes.

Ye speake hard wordes agaynst me, sayeth the LORDE. And yet ye saye: What haue we spoken agaynst the? Ye haue sayed: It is but lost labour, to serue God: What profit haue we for keepyng his commandementes, and for walkyng humbly before the LORDE of hoostes? Therefore maye we saye, that the proude are happye, and that they which deale with vngodlynesse, are set vp: for they tempte God, and yet escape.

The prophet Malachy.

But they that feare God, saye thus one to another: The LORDE cōsidreth and heareth it. Yee it is before him a memoriall boke written for such as feare the LORDE, and remembre his name. And in the daye that I wil make (saith y LORDE of hostes) they shal be myne owne possession: and I will fauoure them, like as a man fauoureth his owne sonne, that doth him seruyce. Turne you therfore, and conside what difference is betwixte the righteous and vngodly: betwixte him that serueth God, and him that serueth him not.

D For marke, the daye cometh that shall burne as an oue: and all the proude, yee and all such as do wickednesse, shal be straw: and the daye that is for to come, shall burne the vp (saith the LORDE of hostes) so that it shal leaue them nether rote ner braunch. But vnto you that feare my name, shall the Sonne of righteousness aryst, & he shall be vnder his winges. Ye shal go forth, and triplie as y fat calues. Ye shal treade vngodly: for they shal be like the ashe vnder the soles of youre feete, in the daye that I shal make, sayeth the LORDE of hostes.

Remember the lawe of Moses, which I commaunded vnto him, and reb for all Israel, with the seruantes and mauntes. Beholde, I will sende vnto you the prophet: before the comynge off the daye, the great and fearfull LORDE. He shall turne the herres of the fathers to their children, and the hertes of the children to their fathers, that I come not, and smyte the earth with cursynge.

The translatoure vnto the reader.

These booke (good reader) which be called Apocrypha, are not indged amonge the doctours to be of like reputacion with the other scripture, as thou mayest perceaue by S. Jerome in epistola ad Paulinum. And the chese cause therof is this: there be many places in them, that seme to be repugnant vnto the open and manifest trueth in the other booke of the byble. Neuertheles I haue not gathered them together to the intent that I wolde haue them despysed, or litle sett by, or that I shulde thinke them false, for I am not able to proue it: yee I doute not verely, yf they were equally conferred with the other open scripture (tyme, place, and circumstance in all thinges considered) they shulde nether seme contrary, ner be vntuly & perversly aledged. Trueth it is: A mas face can not be sene so wel in a water, as in a fayre glasse: nether can it be shewed so clearly in a water that is stered or moued, as in a styll water. These & many other hard places of scripture haue bene sore stered and myrte with blynde and curvions opynions of men, which haue cast soch a myst afore the eyes of & symple, that as longe as they be not conferred with the other places of scripture, they shall not seme other wyse to be vnderstonde, then as curvionsnes expoundeth them. But who so euer thou be that readeest scripture, let the holy goost be thy teacher, and let one text expounde another vnto the: As for soch dreames, visions and darck sentences as be hyd from thy vnderstandinge, commytte them vnto God, and make no articles of them: But let the playne text be thy gyde, and the spere of God (which is the author therof) shall lede the in all trueth.

As for the prayer of Salomo (which thou findest not herin) & prayer of Azarias, and the swete songe that he and his two felowes songe in the fyre: the first (namely the prayer of Salomon) readeest thou in the eight chapter of the thirde booke of the Kynges, so that it appeareth not to be Apocryphum: The other prayer and songe (namely of the thre children) haue I not founde amonge any of the interpreters, but onely in the olde latyn texte, which reporteth it to be of Theodorios translatioun. Neuertheles, both because of those & be weake and saymions, and for their sakes also that loue soch swete songes of thankes geyninge: I haue not left them out to the intent that the one shulde haue no cause to complayne, and that the other also myght haue the more occasion to geue thankes vnto God in aduersite, as the thre children dyd in the fyre. Grace be with the. Amen.

The thirde booke of Esdras.

What this booke conteyneth.

Chap. I. The vertuous Kyng Osiat remueth the seruyce of God, setteth the prestes in their ordie, and holdeth the feast of Easter. Of his death. Of Jechonias his sonne. Of Kyng Joachim and Sedechias.

Chap. II. God moueth Kyng Cyrus to delyuer the prisoners, life as he promysed by the prophet Jeremy. Of Kyng Artaxerxes, by whose auctorite the Jewes are forbydden to bylde vp Jerusalem.

Chap. III. Of the feast that Kyng Darius made, and of the thre yonge men that wrote euery one his sentence, to proue who might saye the best. The first sheweth his mynde.

Chap. IIII. The seconde goeth aboute to proue his sentence the wisest, but Zorobabel getteth the victory, for the trueth beareth euer the bell. Darius commaundeth to bylde vp Jerusalem agayne.

Chap. V. What they be & how many, that came agayne to Jerusalem out of the captivity of Babilon. The temple and the altare are bylde agayne. The Zethen withstonde them.

Chap. VI. The officers in Syria laboure vnto Kyng Darius, to forbyd the byldeinge of the temple at Jerusalem: but he commaundeth to kepe the ordinaunce that Kyng Cyrus made before.

Chap. VII. The aduersaries myndes are satisfied, the byldeinge is fynished, and the Passouer holden.

Chap. VIII. How Esdras and the other (beinge discharged by the letters and commaundment of Kyng Artaxerxes) go vp to Jerusalem. The complayne concerninge those, that were defyled and vncleane.

Chap. IX. Of the counsell that was taken, touchinge the vncleane mariage.

The iij. booke of Esdras.

The first Chapter.

Ald Josias helde the feast of Easter in Jerusalem vnto the LORDE, and slewe y<sup>e</sup> Passeouer the xiiij. daye of the first moneth. He set & prestes also in ordie (acordinge to their daylie courses) beyng arayed in longe garmetes in the temple of the LORDE. And he spake vnto the Levites the holy ministers of Israel, that they shulde halowe them selues vnto the LORDE, to set the holy arte of the LORDE, in the house that Kyng Salomo the sonne of David had buylde and sayde: Ye shal nomore beare the Arke vpon y<sup>e</sup> shulders. Now serue y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, & take the charge of his people of Israel, after youre villagies and youre trybes: acordinge as Kyng David the Kyng of Israel hath ordered, & acordinge as Salomon his sonne hath honorably prepared: Yee loke & ye all do seruyce in the temple, acordinge to the ordunge and distribucion of the pryncipall men which are appoynted out of the trybes, to do seruyce for the childre of Israel. Kyll y<sup>e</sup> Passeouer, & prepare offeringes for y<sup>e</sup> brethien, and do acordinge to the commaundment of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, which he gaue vnto Moses. And vnto y<sup>e</sup> people & was foude, Josias gaue xxx. thousande of shepe, lambes, kyddes and goates, & thre thousande oxen. These the Kyng (of his kyngly liberalite) gaue vnto the people, acordinge as he had promysed: & to the prestes (for the Passeouer) he gaue two thousande shepe & an hundred oxen. Morouer Jechonias & Semeias and Nathanael brethien, & Zafabias, Jehiel and Josabad, gaue them to the Passeouer, fyue thousande shepe and fyue hundred bullockes.

And whan these thinges were brought to passe, the prestes and the Levites stode goodly in their ordie, and had the vncleanned bled thorow out y<sup>e</sup> trybes. And after the ordunge of the pryncipall men in the trybes, they offred vnto the LORDE in the sight of the people, acordinge as it is wrytten in the

The first Chap. Exo. ij.

booke of Moses, & so they rested the Easter-lambe as a cordinge was. As for the that offeringes & the other, they dyght the in kettels & porters, & sett them before the people wth good will, and afterwarde before them selues and the prestes. For the prestes offred the fatt, vntill the tyme was expyred, but the Levites prepared for them selues & for their brethien the childre of Aaron. The syngers also & childre of Asaph stode in their ordie, acordinge as Dauid had denysed. So dyd Asaph, Zachary & Jedithi, which were appoynted by the Kyng. Morouer the porters & doorekeepers stode by the dores & diligently, so & none wente out of his stondinge & seruyce: for their brethien (the Levites) prepared for them. Thus were all thinges perfourmed, that belonged to the offeringe of the LORDE. In that daye they helde the Passeouer, & offred thank offeringes besyde y<sup>e</sup> sacrifice of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE, acordinge to y<sup>e</sup> commaundment of Kyng Josias.

So the childre of Israel which were the present helde an honorable Passeouer, & the feast of swete bred vij. dayes longe. Yee soch a Passeouer was not kepte in Israel, from y<sup>e</sup> tyme of the prophet Samuel. And all the Kynges of Israel helde not soch an Easter, as this which Kyng Josias helde, & y<sup>e</sup> prestes, & levites, & Jewes & all Israel, of all the & were at Jerusalem. In y<sup>e</sup> xviij. yere of y<sup>e</sup> raigne of Josias was this Passeouer kepte. And whan a perfecte hert dyd Kyng Josias ordie all his workes (before y<sup>e</sup> LORDE) & y<sup>e</sup> thinges & were wrytten of hi in tymes past, concerninge those & synned & were vngodly agaynst y<sup>e</sup> LORDE before all people, & y<sup>e</sup> sought not the worde of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE vpon Israel. After all these actes of Kyng Josias, pharao & Kyng of Egypte were vp, & came towarde Carcamis by Euphrates, & Josias were to mete hi. Then sent the Kyng of Egypte vnto Josias, sayenge: what haue I to do wth y<sup>e</sup>, o Kyng of Juda? I am not sent of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE to fight agaynst y<sup>e</sup>, for my warre is vpon Euphrates, go thou & waye home agayne in all y<sup>e</sup> haist. And Josias wolde not turne agayne vpon his charet, but vnderooke to fight agaynst him, & herte ned not vnto þe worde of þe prophete, which he tolde him out of the mouth of God, but pitched a battaill agaynst him in þe felde of Mageddo. And the prynces preassed to kynge Josias. Then sayde the kynge vnto his seruauntes: Carry me awaye out of the battaill, for I am sore wounded. And immediatly his seruauntes toke him awaye out of the front of the battaill. Then satt he vp vpon the secōde charett, came to Ierusalem, dyed, & was buried in his fathers sepulchre. And in all Jewry they mourned for Josias, yee the rulers also & their wyues made lamentacion for him vnto this daye: And this was done euer still in Israel.

c. 22. f.

D These thinges are written in the boke of of the stories of þe kynges of Iuda: namely, all the actes & workes of kynge Josias, his kyngly power & maiesty, his vnderstandinge in the lawe of God, & what he dyd, yee thinges which are not wyrtē in the boke of the kynges of Israel & Iuda. And þe people toke Jehonias the sonne of Josias, & made him kynge in þe steade of Josias his father, whan he was xxxij. yere olde. And he raigned ouer Israel thre monethes. And the kynge of Egypte put him downe, & he shulde not raigne in Ierusalem, & rayssed vp a taxinge of the people: namely, an C. talentes of syluer & one taler of golde. The kynge of Egypte also made Joachim his brother kynge of Iuda & Ierusalem. As for the of the kynges counsell & the kynge himself and Saraceles his brother, he toke the, & caried the awaye prisoners into Egypte. & yue & twentie yere olde was Joachim, whan he was made kynge in the londe of Iuda and Ierusalem, and he dyd euell before the LORDE. After this, Nabuchodonosor þe kynge of Babilō came vp, bounde him & bandes of yron, & caried him vnto Babilō. Nabuchodonosor also toke all þe vessell þe were halowed in the temple of the LORDE, & all þe Jewels, & caried the vnto Babilon, & brought the in to his owne temple at Babilon. Of his vndermes & vngodlynes, it is wyrtē in þe boke of the actes of þe kynges. And Joachim his sonne raigned in his steade: he was made kynge beinge xviij. yere olde, & raigned but thre monethes & x. dayes in Ierusalem, & dyd euell before the LORDE. So after a yere, Nabuchodonosor sent & caused him be brought vnto Babilon & þe holy vessels of þe LORDE, & made Sedechias his brother kynge of Iuda and Ierusalem, whan he was xxi. yere olde: and he raigned xi. yere.

c. 23. f. ar. 26. a

Reg. c.

And he dyd euell also in þe sight of þe LORDE, & cared not for þe wordes þe were spokun to hi by þe prophete Jeremy at þe mouth of the LORDE. And where as he had made on ooth vnto kynge Nabuchodonosor, he manswoun himself, & fell frō him hauynge a stiff neck & hert, & trasgressed all þe statutes & ordinaunces of the LORDE God of Israel. The rulers also & heades of þe people of the LORDE dyd moch euell, & became vngodly, more the the heithen, beinge defyled in all maner of abhominacions: yee & defyled þe holy temple of the LORDE at Ierusalem. And the God of their fathers sent his messaungers vnto the, to comen them backe & to call the agayne frō their synnes: for he wolde sayne haue spared the for his holy tabernacles sake. Nevertheless, they had his messaungers in derision: & loke what God spake vnto the by his prophetes, they made but a spoote of it. This diuyned longe, tyll the LORDE was wroth wth his people for their vngodlynes, & tyll he caused the kynges of þe Caldees to come vp, which slew their yonge men & the swerde, yee euen in the compasse of their holy temple, & spared nobody, nether yonge ner olde, nether mayden ner yonge man: but they were all deliuered into the power of the kynges of þe Caldees, & all the holy vessels of the LORDE and the kynges treasures toke they, & caried them vnto Babilon. As for the house of the LORDE, they brake it, & brake downe the walles of Ierusalem, set fyre vpon hir towres, destroyed all hir noble buyldinges and brought them to naught, and the people that were not slayne with the swerde, they caried vnto Babilon.

Thus became they þe prisoners & bōdē of þe kynge of Babilon, tyll they were deliuered & raygned for them selues, when the wordes of the LORDE were fulfilled, which he promysed them by the mouth of the prophete Jeremy, and tyll the londe had hir rest: namely, all the tyme þe it laye wayest, had it rest & quyetnes lxxvij. yeres.

The II. Chapter.

Now whā kynge Cyrus raigned ouer the Persians, & whā the LORDE wolde performe the worde þe he had promysed by the mouth of the prophete Jeremy, the LORDE rayssed vp the spire of Cyrus, the kynge of the Persians, so þe he caused this wyrtinge to be proclaimed thorow out his whole realme, sayenge: Thus sayeth the kynge of þe Persians: The LORDE of Israel that by the LORDE hath made me kynge of the lōde, and commaunded me to buylde him an house at Ierusalem in Jewry. If there be any now of your people, & LORDE be with him, and go vp with him to Ierusalem. And all they that dwell rounde aboute þe place, shal helpe the, whether it be with golde, with syluer, with giftes, with horses and necessary catell, and all other thinges that are brought wth a fre wyll to the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem.

B Then the pryncipall me out of the trybes and vyllages of Iuda and Ben Jamin stode vp: so dyd the prestes also & the leuites (whō the LORDE had moued) to go vp, and to buylde the house of the LORDE at Ierusalem. And they that were aboute them, helped them wth all maner of golde, and syluer, and catell also and with many liberall giftes, and this dyd many one, whose mynde was stered vther to. Kynge Cyrus also brought forth the vessels and ornaments, that were halowed vnto the LORDE (which Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon had caried awaye from Ierusalem, and consecrated them to his Idoll and ymage) and deliuered them to Mithridatus his treasurer, and by him they were deliuered to Salmanasar þe debyte in Jewry. And this was the nōbre of them: Two thousande and iij. C. syluer boules, xxx. syluer basens, xxx. basens of golde, ij. M. and iij. C. vessels of syluer, and a thousande besyde. All the vessels of golde and syluer were v. M. viij. C. and lx. These were nombred vnto Salmanasar, and them that were come agayne with him to Ierusalem out of the captiuite of Babilon. Now in the tyme of kynge Artaxerxes the kynge of Persia, thesē men: Balemus and Mithridatus, Sabellius, Rathimus, Balthemus, Semelius & scribe, and other that dwelt in Samaria & in other places vnder þe dominion therof, wrote a letter vnto kynge Artaxerxes, wherein they complayned vnto the kynge of them in Jewry and Ierusalem. The letter was made after this maner:

Syr, thy seruauntes Rathimus the story wyter, Sabellius the scribe, & other iudges of thy courte in Celosyria and Phenices. Be it knowne and manifest to þe lord the kyn that the Jewes which are come vp frō you vnto vs into the rebellious and wicked cite, begynne to buylde it agayne, and the walles aboute it, and to set vp the temple of the new. Now yf this cite and the walles therof be set vp agayne, they shal not only refuse to geue trybutes and taxinges, but also rebell vnto agaynst the kynge. And for so moch as they take this in hande now aboute the temple, we thought it reason, to thinke no scone of it, but to shewe it vnto þe lord the kynge, & to certifie him therof: to the intent yf it plea se the kynge, he maye cause it be sought in the boke of olde: and thou shalt fynde soch war nynges wyrtten, and shalt vnderstonde, that this cite hath allwaye bene rebellious and disobedient, that it hath subdued kynges and cities, and that the Jewes which dwell ther in, haue euer bene a rebellious, obstinate, vnfaythfull and fightinge people, for the which cause this cite is waysted. Wherefore now we certifie oure lord the kynge, that yf this cite be buylde and occupied agayne, & the walles therof set vp a new, thou canst haue no passage in to Celosyria and Phenices.

D Then wrote the kynge to Rathimus the story wyter, to Balthemus, to Sabellius & scribe, and to the other officers and dwellers in Syria and Phenices, after this maner: I haue red the epistle which thou sentest vnto me, and haue commaunded to make diligent search, and haue founde, that the cite hath euer resisted kynges, that the same people are disobedient, and haue caused moch warre, & that mightie kynges haue raigned in Ierusalem, which also haue rayssed vp taxinges of Syria and Phenices. Wherefore, I haue commaunded those people, that they shal not buylde the cite, that they make no more in it, and that they procede no further with the buyldinge: for so moch as it might be the cause of warre, and displeasure vnto kynges.

Now whan Rathimus and Sabellius the scribe and the rulers in the londe had red the wyrtinge of kynge Artaxerxes, they gatt them together, and came in all the haist to Ierusalem with an hoost of horsemen, and with moch people offore, and forbade them to buylde. And so they left off from buyldinge of the temple, vnto the secōde yere of kynge Darius.

The III. Chapter.

Darius made a greate feast vnto his seruauntes, vnto all his courte, & to all the officers of Media and Persia, yee and to all the debytes & rulers that were vnder him, from India vnto Ethiopia, an hundred & xxvij. countrees. So whan they had eaten, and dronken beinge satisfied, and were gone home agayne, Darius the kynge wente in to his chambre, layed him downe to slepe, and so awaked.

Then the thre yonge men, that kepte the kynges personne, and watched his body, commaunded amonge them selues, and spake one to another: Let every one of vs saye some thinge, and loke whose sentence is wyser and more excellent then the other, vnto him shal kynge Darius geue greate giftes, and clothe him with purple. He shal geue him vessels of golde to drynke in, clothes of golde and coveringes: he shall make him a costly charett z a brydle of golde, he shall geue him a bonet of whyte sylke and a chayne of golde aboute his neck: yee he shal be the seconde z principall nexte vnto kynge Darius, z that because of his wysdome, and shalbe called yf kynges kynsman.

B So every one wrote his meaninge, sealed it and layed it vnder the kynges pelowe, and sayde: whan the kynge aryseth, we will geue him oure wryttinges: and loke whose worde the kynge and his chiefe lordes iudge to be the most wysely spoken, the same shall haue the victory. One wrote: wyne is a stronge thinge. The secōde wrote: The kynge is stronger. The thirde wrote: women haue yet more strength, but aboue all thinges yf truely beareth awaye the victory. Now whan the kynge was ryssen vp, they toke their wryttinges and deliuered them vnto him, and so hered them. Then sent he forth to call all his chiefe lordes, all the debytes z rulers of the countrees of Media and Persia. And whan they were sett downe in the counsell, the wryttinges were red before them. And he commaunded to call for yf yonge mē, yf they might declare their meanynges theselues by mouth. So when they were sent for, and came in, yf kynge sayde vnto them: shew vs and make vs to vnderstōde, what the thinges are that ye haue wrytten.

C Then beganne the first (which had spokē of the strength of wyne) z sayde: O ye men, wyne is marvelous stronge, and ouercometh them yf drynke it: it disceane the mynde, z bryngeth both the poore man z yf kynge to dotage and vanite. Thus doth it also to the bondman and with the fre, with the poore z ryche: it taketh awaye their vnderstandinge, and maketh them careles and mery, so that none of them remembreth eny heuynes, dett or dewtie: It causeth a man to thinke also that yf thinge which he doth, is honest and good: and remembreth not that he is a kynge, nor yf he is in an cōtreyte, z yf he ought not to do soch thinges. Moreover, whan men are drynckinge, they forgett all frendshipe, all brotherly faithfulness z lone: but as soone as they are droncke, they drawe out the swerde z wil fight: z whā they are layed downe fro the wyne, z so ryssen vp agayne, they can not tell what they dyd. Judge ye now, Is not wyne the strongest? For who wolde els take in hande, to do soch thinges? And whan he had spoken this, he helde his tonge.

The III. Chapter.

Then the seconde (which had sayde, yf the kynge was stronger) beganne to speake, sayenge: O ye men, are not they the strongest z most excellent, yf cōquere the lōde z the see, z all yf is in yf see z in the earth? Now is the kynge lōde of all these thinges, z hath dominion of the all: z loke what he cōmaūde, it is done. Yf he sende his mē forth a warfare, they go and breake downe hilles, walles z towres. They are slayne, z slaye (other men) them selues, z ouer passe not yf kynges worde. Yf they get the victory, they brynge the kynge all the spoyle. Likewyse, the other yf medle not w warres z fightinge, but tyll the grounde: whan they reape, they brynge tribute vnto yf kynge. And yf yf kynge alone do but cōmaūde to kyll, they kyll: yf he cōmaūde to forgiue, they forgiue: yf he cōmaūde to smyte, they smyte: yf he byd dryne awaye, they dryue awaye: yf he cōmaūde to buylde, they buylde: yf he cōmaūde to breake downe, they breake downe: yf he cōmaūde to plante, they plante. The comen people z rulers are obedient vnto him. And yf kynge in the meane season sitteth hī downe, eateth and drynket, z taketh his rest: the kepe they watch rōnde aboute yf kynge, z not one of the darre gett him out of yf waye, to do his owne busynes, but must be obediēt vnto yf kynge at a worde. Judge ye now o ye men, how shulde not he go farre aboue, vnto whom men are thus obediēt? And whan he had spokē this, he helde his tonge. The thirde (whose name was Zorobabel, which had spokē of women z of yf truely) beganne to saye after this maner: O ye mē, it is not yf greate kynge, it is not the multitude of mē, nether is it wine yf excellēth: Who is it thē, yf hath yf lordshipe ouer the? haue not women borne the kynge, z all yf people yf rule these thinges? haue not women borne the, z brought the vp, yf plant the vines, wherout yf wyne cōmeth? They make garnettes for all mē, they geue hond vnto all man, z wout women can not men lyue. Yf they gather golde z syluer z all precious thinges, z se a saye z wel fauoured womā, they leane all together, and turne their eyes onaly vnto the woman, z gape vpon her, z haue more desyre vnto her, then vnto the syluer z golde, or eny maner of precious thinge. A mā leaueh his father yf brought him vp, he leaueh his owne naturall cōtreyte, and cleueth vnto the woman: yee he ioperdeth his life wiche the woman, and remembreth nether father, nether mother, nether countrey. By this then ye must knowe, yf women haue yf domynion ouer you.

Doth it greue you? A mā taketh his swerde z goeth his waye to steale, to kyll, to murder, to sayle vpon the see, z seyth a lyon, and goeth in the darcknes: and when he hath stollen, disceaned z robbed, he bringeth it vnto his lone. Agayne, a man loueth his wyfe better then father and mother: yee many one there be, that renne out of their wyttes z become bondmen for their wyues sake: many one also haue perished, z haue bene slayne, z haue synned because of women.

C And now beleue me, I knowe a kynge which is greate in his power, z all lōdes sēd in awe of him, z no man darre laye hande vpon him: yet dyd I se, yf Apame (yf daughter of the greate kynge Bartacus) the kynges cōcubine, satt besyde the kynge vpo the right hāde, and toke of his crowne from his heade, and set it vpon hir owne heade, and smote the kynge with hir left hande. Moreover, the kynge lokēd vpo her w open mouth: yf she laughed vpon him, he laughed also: but yf she toke eny displeasure with him, the kynge was fayne to flater her, z to geue her good wordes, till he had gotten hir fauoure agayne.

O ye men, are not women then stronger? Greate is the earth, and hie is the heauen that do these thinges. Then the kynge z the prynces lokēd one vpon another. So he beganne to speake of the truely: O ye men, are not women stronger? Greate is the earth, hie is the heauen, swyft is the course of the Sonne, he compaseth the heauen rōnde aboute, and fetcheth his course agayne to his owne place in one daye. Is he not excellent that doth this? yee greate is the truely, and stronger then all thinges. All the earth callet vpon the truely, the heauen prayseth it, all woikes shake and tremble at it, and with it is no vnrighteous thinge. Wine is vnrighteous, the kynge is vnrighteous, women are vnrighteous: all the children of men are vnrighteous, yee all their woikes are vnrighteous, and there is no truely in them, in their vnrighteousnes also shall they be destroyed and perish. As for yf truely, it endureth, and is allwaye stronger: it lyueth, and cōquereth for euermore wout without ende.

D The truely accepteth no personnes, it putteth no difference betwixte ryche or poore, betwixte yf mightie or symple, but doth right vnto every mā, whether they be euil or good, z all men are louyngly dealt withall in the woikes of it. In the iudgment of it there is no vnrighteous thinge, but strength, kyngdome z power and maiesty for euermore. Blesssed be the God of truely.

And with that he helde his tōge, and all yf people cried z sayde: Greate is the truely, and aboue all. Then sayde the kynge vnto him: Are what thou wilt, more then is appointed in the wrytinge, and I shal geue it the, for thou art founde wyser then thy companions: thou shalt sytt nexte me, and be my kynsman. Then sayde he vnto the kynge: Remembre thy promyse and vowe, which thou hast vowed and promysed (in the daye whan thou camest to the kyngdome) to buylde vp Jerusalem, and to sende agayne all the vessels and Jewels, that were taken awaye out of Jerusalem: which Cyrus separated, whan he offred in Babilon, and wolde sende them agayne. And thy minde was to buylde vp the temple, which the Edomites brēt, whan Jerusalem was destroyed by the Caldees. This onely (O kynge) is the thinge that I requyre, this is yf maiesty, which, I desyre z are of the: that thou performe the vowe, which thou with thine owne mouth hast made vnto the kynge of heauen.

Then Darius the kynge stode vp, and kysed him, and wrote a letter vnto all the debytes and shreues, to all yf lordes and nobles, yf they shulde conueye him forth, z all them yf wolde go vp with him. He wrote a letter also vnto all yf shreues yf were in Celosyna z Phenices, z vnto Libanus, yf they shulde harle cedre trees from Libanus vnto Jerusalem, to buylde yf cite withall. Moreover he wrote vnto all yf Jewes that were gone out of his realme in to Jewry because of the fre dome, yf no officer, no ruler ner shreue shulde cometo their dores: and that all their lōde which they had conquered, shulde be fre and not tributary: And that the Edomites shulde geue ouer the citie and vyllages of the Jewes, which they had taken in: yee z that they shulde yearly geue xx. talentes to yf buyldinge of the temple, vntill the tyme that it were fynished: and to the daylie halowinge of the brent offerings (as it is commaunded) ten talentes yearly also: And yf all they which come from Babilon to buylde the cite, shulde haue fre lybertie, they z their children, and all the prestes.

He wrote the greatnesse also, z commaunded that the holy garment shulde be geuen the, wherin they ministred: and wrote that commaundementes shulde be geuen to the Levites, vntill the daye, that the house were fynished and Jerusalem buylde vp: and cōmaūded that all they that watched the cite, shulde haue their porcions and wagies.

He gaue ouer also all the vessell & Cyrus had separated from Babilon: & all & Cyrus had geue in comaundement, & same charged he also, & it shulde be done, & sent vnto Jerusalem. Now whan this yonge mā was gone forth, he returned his face toward Jerusalem, & prayed & kinge of heauē, & sayde: Of & cometh victory, of the cometh wysdome & clearnesse, & I am thy seruauit. Blessed art thou, which hast geuen me wysdome: the wyll I prayse, O LORDE, thou God of our fathers.

And so he toke the letters, & wente vnto Babilon: And whan he came there, he tolde this vnto all his brethre & were at Babilon, & they prayed & God of their fathers, & he had geue them refreshinge & lyberte to go vp, & to buylde Jerusalem & the temple (which is there called after the name of the LORDE) and they reioysed with instrumentes & gladnesse, seven dayes longe.

The V. Chapter.

After this, were the prynciall mē of all & villagies chosen in the trybes & kinreddes, that they shulde go vp with their wines and childien, with their seruantes and maydens, with all their catell & substance. And Darius the kynge sent with them a thousande horsmen, to conueye them safely vnto Jerusalem: and their brethre were glad, playenge vpon instrumentes, and synge.

And these are the names of the mē, which wente vp out of the villagies accordinge to the trybes. Of the prestes, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Aaron: Jesus the sonne of Josedec, Joachim the sonne of Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel (of the kynred of Dauid, out of the kynred of Phares, of the trybe of Iuda) which spake wonderfull thinges vnder Darius the kynge of Persia, in y seconde yere of his raigne in the first moneth of Nisan.

These also are they of Jewry, which came vp and turned Agayne vnto Jerusalem, out of the captiuyte that Nabuchodonosor & kynge of Babilon had brought vnto Babilon. And every man sought his porcion agayne in Jewry, his cite, they that came w Zorobabel, and with Jesus, Nehemias, Saraias, Raelaias, Elimeus, Emmanius, Mar docheus, Beelserus, Mechpfa, Rochoi, Olorus, Emonias, one of their prynces.

Of them of Bastharus, an C. and xxi. Of them of Bechenobes, lv. Of the sonnes of Liptis, there were an C. and lv. Of the sonnes of Labomus, iij. C. and lviij. Of the sonnes of Sicheim, iij. C. and lxx. Of the sonnes of Suadon and Elimon, iij. C. and lxxij. Of the sonnes of Ericus, ij. M. an C. and xlv. The sonnes of Anaas, thre hundred and lxx.

The prestes: The sonnes of Jedus: The sonnes of Luther: The sonnes of El Jash, iij. C. and lxxij. The sonnes of Emerus, ij. C. and lxxij. The sonnes of Sasurins, iij. C. and lxxij. The sonnes of Carea, ij. C. and lxxij. The Leuites: The sonnes of Jesus in Cadubeland, Banus, and Serebias, and Edeas, seuentie and foure.

The whole nembre of these from rii. yeres, was iij. M. iij. C. and lxxij. Of the sonnes, daughters and wyues, the whole summe was iij. M. ij. C. and xliij. The sonnes of the prestes that prayed God in the temple: The sonnes of Asaph, of whom there were an C. and xxvij. But the doie keepers were: The children of Esmenus: The children of Aser: The children of Amon: The children of Acuba, Topa: The children of Tobit: an C. and xxxij. in all.

The prestes that serued in the temple: The sonnes of Sel, the sonnes of Gaspas, the sonnes of Tobloch, the sonnes of Caria, the sonnes of Sub, the sonnes of Zelin, the sonnes of Labana, & sonnes of Arma.

sonnes of Acub, the sonnes of Vcha, the sonnes of Cerba, the sonnes of Aggab, the sonnes of Obay, the sonnes of Anani, the sonnes of Cana, & sonnes of Geddu, & sonnes of An, & sonnes of Radin, & sonnes of De sanon, the sonnes of Tlechoba, the sonnes of Casaba, the sonnes of Goza, the sonnes of Ozul, the sonnes of Sinona, the sonnes of Aza, & sonnes of Hastem, & sonnes of Asia, & sonnes of Manei, & sonnes of Maslin, & sonnes of Accusa, & sonnes of Agista, & sonnes of Azui, & sonnes of Janon, the sonnes of Phasalon, the sonnes of Meeda, the sonnes of Susa, the sonnes of Careb, & sonnes of Barcus, the sonnes of Sarea, & sonnes of Coqi, & sonnes of Masit, & sonnes of Agista, the sonnes of Pedon: Salomon his sonnes, the sonnes of Asophot, the sonnes of Phazida, the sonnes of Celi, & sonnes of De don, the sonnes of Gaddabel, the sonnes of Zaphens, & sonnes of Aggia, the sonnes of Sacharet, & sonnes of Sabath, the sonnes of Saroneth, & sonnes of Masit, & sonnes of Amia, & sonnes of Sasus, & sonnes of Adus, & sonnes of Suba, & sonnes of Eura, & sonnes of Rahoris, the sonnes of Phasphat, & sonnes of Malmon. All these mynistered in the Sanctuary, & were seruantes of Salomonen iij. C. and lxxij.

D These folowinge are they, & wrote vp fro Chelmellat Thelarsa (whose prynces were Carmela & Careth) & might not shewe forth their cities & kynreddes, how they were of Israel: The sonnes of Dalarus, & sonnes of Tubi, & sonnes of Tlechodaicus. Of & prestes & executed & office of & presthode, & were not founde: The sonnes of Obia, & sonnes of Achifos, the sonnes of Abdin, which married one of & daughters of phargelen, & were named, after him. The writinge of & same kynred was sought in & register of their generacion, but it was not founde: & therefore were they forbydde to execute & office of & presthode. Vnto these sayde Nehemias and Astharas, & they shulde haue no porcion in & Sanctuary, yll there rose vp an hie prest, & were well instructe in the playne clearnes & truerth. Of all Israel (besyde seruantes & maydens) there were xliij. M. iij. C. & xl. Now were there off seruantes & maydens, viij. M. lxx. C. & xxxij. Of synging mē & synging women there were ij. C. & lxx. Foure hundred & xxx. Camels. Seven thousande & xxxij. hors. Two hundred thousande & xlv. Mooles. fyue thousande and xxxv. Asses.

Their heades also and the rulers in the trybes, whan they came to Jerusalem, & wol de buylde & sett vp & temple of God againe in his place, they gaue (after their abylyte) vnto the temple, to & treasure & to & seruyce of the Sanctuary, xij. M. poundes of golde, v. thousande of syluer, & an hundred prestes garments. And so dwelt the prestes & the Leuites, & the people & wente out to Jerusalem & in the countre there aboute, the syngers also & the porters, every one of Israel in his owne lande.

So whan the seuenth moneth came, and whan the childre of Israel were euery man at his busines, they came all with one cōsent in to the courte, which was before & east doore. And there stode Jesua the sonne of Josedec and his brethren & prestes, & Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and his brethren, settinge vp an altier, to offere brient sacrifices vpon it, as it is witten in & lawe of Moses.

There came people also of other countre es, and the heithen out of all londes set vp the altier in his place, and offred sacrifices & brient offeringes vnto the LORDE in the mornynge. And so they helde the feast of tabernacles, as it is commaunded in the lawe. And daylie offred they as accordinge was, and made the sacrifices appoynted, the offeringes also of the Sabbathes and of the new Moones, and all holy feastes. And all they that vowed offeringes vnto the LORDE, beganne at the new Moone of & seuenth moneth to offere vnto God, for the temple of the LORDE was not yet buylde. And they gaue vnto the Masons and Carpenters, money, meate & drynke with chearfulnesse. Vnto them of Sydon also and Tyre they gaue cartes, & they shulde cary Cedre trees from Libanus to be leastes and beames, and that they shulde make shippes in the haven of Joppe, accordinge as it was appoynted and ordeyned, by Cyrus kynge of the Persians.

And in the seconde yere they came in to the temple of God at Jerusalem. In the seconde moneth beganne Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, and Jesua the sonne of Josedec, and their brethren the prestes and Leuites, and all they that were come vnto Jerusalem out of the captiuyte of Babilon, & layed the foundation of the temple, in the new Moone of the seconde moneth in the seconde yere & they were come in to Jewry and Jerusalem. And they appoynted the Leuites (that were aboue xx. yere olde) vnto the seruyce of the LORDE: so Jesua and his sonnes and his brethren all the Leuites stode together, and perfourmed the lawe & ordinance in the house of the LORDE.

The iij. boke of Esdras.

And the prestes stode and had their garments 7 trompettes, 7 the Levites, the sonnes of Asaph had Cymbals, geuyng chan- ces, and prayes vnto the LORDE, acord- inge as Dauid the kynge of Israel had ordey- ned. And the songe that they dyd synge vn- to the LORDE, was after this maner: O syn- ge vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his goodnes vpon Israel endureth for ever. And all the people blew out with trompet- tes, and sunge with loude voyce, pray syn- ge the LORDE together in the rearinge vp of the house of the LORDE. There came al- so from amonge the prestes and Levites the rulers and elders, acordinge to the try- bes and kynreds (soch as had sene the house afore) to the buyldinge of this temple with greate crye and greate mournynge, many al- so with trompettes and greate ioye: In so- moch, that the trompettes might not wel be herde for the wepyng and mournynge. For the comon people blew goodly vpo the trom- pettes.

E Then came the enemies of the trybes of Juda and Ben Jamim, to knowe what that troppetyng and noyse of shawmes might be. And they perceaued yf it was they which were come agayne out of captiuyte, 7 wol- de buylde the temple a new vnto the LOR- DE God of Israel. So they wente to Zoroba- bel and Jesua and to the rulers of the villag- es, 7 sayde vnto them: Shal we buylde w- you also? for we like wyse haue herde youre LORDE, 7 we walke after the same maner, from the dayes of Asbazarath the kynge of Assyria, which brought vs hither. Then Zo- robabel and Jesua and the rulers of the vil- lages of Israel sayde vnto them: It is not mete, that ye shulde buylde the temple of ou- re God w- vs: we oure selues alone wil buyl- de vnto the LORDE, like as Cyrus the kyn- ge of the Persians hath commaunded vs.

But the heithen in the londe layed them selues against those that were in Jewry, hel- de vp the buyldinge from them, layed wayte vpo them pruely, stopped soch as brought any thinge to them, forbade them to buylde, 7 hyndered those that made the passage, that the buyldinge shulde not be fynished: 7 this continued so longe as kynge Cyrus lyued: 7 so they put of the buyldinge for the space of two yere, vntill yf raigne of kynge Darius.

The VI. Chapter.

the name of the God of Israel. Then Zo- robabel the sonne of Salathiel and Jesua the sonne of Josedec stode vp, and began to buylde the house of the LORDE at Jerusa- lem, when the prophetes of the LORDE had p- ped them.

At the same tyme came Syssenes the vnder shiue in Syria and Phenices, with the landlodes and his companyons, and sayde vnto them: Who hath bydden 7 commaun- ded you to buylde the house, to make ther- fe and all other thinges agayne? And who are the worke men, that buylde them? Ne- uertheles the elders of the Jewes had sech grace of the LORDE, that they wolde not be lett (though they were prouoked thereto) but buylde on still, vntill the tyme that kynge Darius were certified therof, and an answ- re receaued from him. The letter that the men sent vnto kynge Darius, was after this maner:

Syssenes the vnder shiue in Syria and Phenices, and the landlodes with their pa- niss, which are head rulers in Syria and Phenices, sende their salutacion vnto Darius the kynge. We certifie oure lord the kyn- ge, that we came in to the londe of Jewry, 7 wente to Jerusalem: where we founde them buyldinge the greate house of God and the temple, with greate costly fire stone and with goodly tymbre for the walles: yee they make greate haist with the worke, 7 helpe one an- ther, and it goeth forth prosperously in their handes, and with greate diligence 7 wor- pe is it made. Then ased we the elders, who had commaunded them to make vp the house and the buyldinge: and this we dyd, to yf- tēt that we might certifie the perfectly, and wryte vnto the, the names of those yf we yf rulers of the worke. So they gaue vs this answere: we are the seruantes of the LOR- DE, which made heauen and earth: 7 as for this house, it hath bene buylde and set vp afore tyme by the greate and mightie kynge of Israel. But whan oure fathers prouoked God vnto wraith, 7 synned agaynst the God of Israel, he ganeth ouer in to the power of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon the kynge of the Caldees, which brake downe yf house and brēt it, and caried awaye the peo- ple prisoners vnto Babilon.

Neuertheles, in the first yere that kynge Cyrus reigned at Babilon, Cyrus the kynge wrote and commaunded to buylde vp this house agayne: and all the ornaments that Nabuchodonosor caried awaye from Jeru- salem vnto Babilon, and appropriated vnto his owne temple: those brought Cyrus forth agayne, and delyned them to Zorobabel 7 to Salmanasar the vnder shiue, commaun- dyng them, yf they shulde buyng those sa- me ornaments agayne to Jerusalem in to yf temple, 7 to begynne from yf tyme forth, to buyl- de the temple agayne in his owne place. The Salmanasar layed the foundation of yf LOR- DES house at Jerusalem, and euer sence haue they buylde, 7 yet is it not ended. And ther- fore (O kynge) yf thou thynkest it good, let it be sought in the Lybraries 7 rolles of kynge Cyrus: yf it be founde thē, that it is done w- the counsell and cosent of kynge Cyrus, and yf oure lord yf kynge be so mynded, let him wryte vnto vs therof.

Then commaunded kynge Darius, to seke in the Lybraries: and so at Egbathanis in a litle cite in Media there was founde soch a wrytinge: In the first yere of the raigne of Cyrus, the same kynge Cyrus commaunded, yf the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem shul- de be buylde agayne (7 odoures to be made there contynnally vnto the LORDE) whose herth shalbe ten cubites, yf bredth lx. cubites 7 iij. square w- thre hewen stones, w- a losfe of tymbre of the same countre, yee w- a new losfe, 7 the expenses therof to be geuen of yf house of kynge Cyrus. And the ornaments of golde 7 syluer, yf Nabuchodonosor toke out of the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem, shalbe set agayne in the temple at Jerusalem, where they were afore. Syssenes also the vnder shiue in Syria and Phenices, yf pryn- ces and their companyons, and the other yf be head rulers in Syria and Phenices, shall not medle ner haue eny thinge to do with that place.

Cyrus haue commaunded also, that they shal buylde the house of the LORDE whole vp: 7 haue ordeyned them, to helpe those yf be come out of captiuyte, tyll the house of the LORDE be fynished: 7 out of the trybute and taryng that is yearly raysed vp in Sy- ria and Phenices, diligently to geue them a certayne summe, to the offerynge of the LOR- DE: and the same to be delyned vnto Zoro- babel the officer: that he therewithall maye ordeyne oren, rammes, lammes, 7 corne, salt, wyne and oyle, and that contynnally every yere: after the expences which the prestes that be at Jerusalem, shew to be made day- liethis shalbe geuen vnto them without de- laye, that they maye offer sacrifices daylie to the hyest God, for the kynge and for his seruantes, and to praye for their lyues. Let it be proclaimed also on every syde, that who

o euer breaketh or despyseth this comaunde- ment of yf kynge, shalbe hanged vpon a gal- low (made of his owne good) 7 all his goo- des shalbe seasoned vnto yf kynge. The LOR- DE therfore (whose name is there called v- pon rote out and destroye all yf kynges and people, that vnder take by violence to hynder the same, or to deale vncurteously w- the house of the LORDE at Jerusalem.) Darius the kynge haue ordeyned, that these thinges shalbe done with all diligence.

The VII. Chapter.

Then Syssenes yf vnder shiue in Ce- losyria and Phenices, and the other landlodes with their companyons, obeyed the thinges that kynge Darius had ordered, were diligent in the holy woikes, 7 were selow helpers with the olde rulers of the Jewes. And so the worke of the Sanc- tuary wente forth and prospered, whan Ag- gens and Zachary prophecied. And they per- fourmed all thinges thorow the commaun- dement of the LORDE God of Israel, and after the deuyce of Cyrus, Darius, and Ar- taxerxes kynges of Persia.

And thus was oure house fynished, vnto the xxiij. daye of the moneth Addar in yf vi. yere of kynge Darius. And the children of Israel the prestes 7 the Levites, 7 the other that were come out of captiuyte, 7 soch as were ioyned vnto them, dyd acordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moses. And in the dedicati- on of the temple they offred an hun- dret hoxen, an C. rammes, iij. C. lammes, 7 xij. goates for the synnes of all the people of Israel, after yf nombre of the trybes of Israel. The prestes also 7 the Levites stode arayed in the prestly garments, after yf trybes, ouer all yf woikes of the LORDE God of Israel, acordinge to yf boke of Moses, and the poi- ters by all the doores.

And the children of Israel (w- those yf we re come out of captiuyte) helde the Passoe- ner the xxiij. daye of the first moneth, whan the prestes and the Levites were sanctified,

They that came out of captiuyte, were not all sanctified together: but the Leuites were all sanctified together. And so all they that came out of captiuyte, kyled the easter lambe, for their brethre, for the priestes & for them selues. And the childre of Israel & came out of captiuyte, & escaped fro all & abhominacions of the heithen, sought the LORD, and kept the feast of unleued bread viij. daies longe, eatinge & drynkyng & were mery before the LORD: & the LORD had turned the deuyce of the kynge of Assiria, & comforted their handes to the workes of the LORD God of Israel.

The viii. Chapter.

After him, whan Artaxerxes the kynge of Persia raigned, there were vnto him Esdras the sonne of Sarras, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Helchia, & sonne of Sallu, the sonne of Saboc, & sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amarias, & sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Boccus, & sonne of Abisu, & sonne of phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, & sonne of Aaron & first prest. This Esdras wrote vp from Babilon (for he had good vnderstandinge in the lawe of Moses, & was genē of the LORD God of Israel, to be taught & done in dede.) And the kynge fauoured him, & dyd him greates worshippe and honoure, after all his desyes. There wente vp with him also certayne of the childre of Israel, of the priestes, of the Leuites, of the syngers, porters, and mynisters of the temple at Jerusalem.

In the viij. yeare of the raigne of kynge Artaxerxes, in the v. moneth, & is in the viij. yeare of the raigne, they wente from Babilon in the newmoone of the v. moneth, & came the hye waye to Jerusalem after his commaundement, like as the LORD had prospered their iourney. For in these Esdras gat greates instruccion, & he shulde leaue none of the thinges behynde, which were in the lawe & commaundementes of God. And he taught whole Israel all righteousnes & indgmet.

Then came the Secretaries of kynge Artaxerxes, & deliuered the writinges (which were come fro Artaxerxes the kynge) to Esdras the prest & reder of the lawe of the LORD: And this is the cōpye of the letter: Kynge Artaxerxes sendeth his gretinge vnto Esdras the prest & reder of the lawe of the LORD: Of frendshipe & good will I haue ordeyned and charged, yf there be any of the Jewes, of the priestes & Leuites in my realme, which desyret & is content to go w the vnto Jerusalem, & he maye do it. Therefore yf any be mynded to beare the cōpany, let the come together, go w the (like as I am content & mynister des my cōsellers): so se what they do at Jerusalem & in Jewry, & kepe the thinges accordinge as thou hast in the lawe of the LORD: to bringe the giftes vnto God the LORD of Israel, & I & my frendes haue promysed to Jerusalem, & all the syluer & golde is in the countre of Babilon, vnto the LORD of Jerusalem, w the thinge & is genē for the people in the LORD temple at Jerusalem: & that the same syluer & golde maye be gathered, and oxen, rammes, shepe & goates and other that beloge to these thinges: and that they maye offer sacrifices vnto the LORD, vpon the autler of their LORD, which is at Jerusalem.

And what so ever thou & thy brethre wil do w the syluer & golde, & do after mynde, after the commaundement of the LORD thy God: & like wyse w all the holy vessels, haue genē the for the seruyce of the house of the LORD thy God: & other thinges what so ever is necessary for the to the worke of the temple, & shalbe genē the of the kynge's treasure: & loke what thou with thy brethre wil do with the golde and syluer, that do after the wil of the LORD. And the kynge Artaxerxes haue commaunded the keepers of the treasures in Syria and Phenices, that what so ever Esdras the prest and reder of the lawe of the LORD doth wyte, it shalbe geuen him: yll an C. talentes of syluer, and of golde in lykemaner: Of come also an C. measure, and yll an hūdieth vessels of wyne, and other plenteous thinges without nombre. Let all thinges be done after the lawe of the hyest God, that the wrath of God arysen in the realme of the kynge and of his sonnes. I commaunde you also, that ye require no tarynge ner tribute of the priestes, Leuites, syngers, and mynisters of the temple, ner of the wyrters: and that no man haue auctorite to medle eny thinge against them. As for the (Esdras) set thou iudges and arbitrers in the whole lande of Syria and Phenices, after the wysdome of God: and lerne all such as are ignorant in the lawe of God thy LORD, and let all them that offend agaynst the lawe, be punysshed: whether it be with death, with payne, or to be banysshed.

Then sayde Esdras the wyrtre: Blessed be the LORD God of oure fathers, that hath geuen so good a mynde and wyll in to the hert of the kynge, to magnifie his house & is at Jerusalem, and hath made me to be accepted in the sight of the kynge, of his counsell, of his frendes and of his nobles. And so I was steadfast in my mynde, accordinge as the LORD my God helped me, and I chose out men of Israel, to go vp with me. And these are the heades (after their kynreds & houses of their fathers) that wente vp with me from Babilon, out of the kyngdome of Artaxerxes: Of the sonnes of phares, Gersonius. Of the sonnes of Siemarich, Amenus. Of the sonnes of David, Accus, the sonne of Cecilia. Of the sonnes of phares, Zachary: and with him there turned agayne an hūdieth and fiftie men. Of the sonnes of the captayne of Moabylon, Zarai, and with him ij. C. and l. men. Of the sonnes of Zachnes, Jechonias Zecholi, and with him ij. C. and l. men. Of the sonnes of Salamaasias, Gortholie, and lxx. with him. Of the sonnes of Zaphacia, Zarias Miheli, and with him lxxx. Of the sonnes of Job, Abdias Jeheli, and with him ij. C. and xij. men. Of the sonnes of Bania, Salimoth the sonne of Josaphia, and with him an C. and lx. men. Of the sonnes of Beer, Zachary Bebei, and with him ij. C. and viij. men. Of the sonnes of Ezead, Johannes Ezechan, and with him Cx. men. Of the sonnes of Adonica those that were the last, and these are their names: Eliphalam & sonne of Gebel and Semeias, & with him lxx. men. All these called I together by the water Thia, where we pitched oure tentes thre dayes, and there I mustered them.

As for the sonnes of the priestes and Leuites, I founde none there. Then sent I vnto Eleazar, & Eccelom, and Masman, & Malobam, and Enaathan, and Samea, and Joribimathan, Eunagan, Zachary, Mosollamū (these were the leders and men of experie) & I sent them worde, that they shulde come vnto Loddens, which was by the place of the treasury, & commaunded them that they shulde speake vnto Loddens and to his brethre & to those that were in the treasury, to sende vs soch mē, as might execute the priestes office in the house of the LORD oure God. And w the mightie hāde of oure LORD God, they brought vnto vs mē of good experie, from amonge the sonnes of Moosius, the sonne of Levi, & sonne of Israel, Sebeiam & the sonnes & his brethre Asbin & Anim, of whom there were xviij. From amonge the childre of the sonnes of Cananeus, & their sonnes were xx. men. And of them & served in the temple, whom David had ordeyned, and the pryncipall men that ministered for the worke vnto the Leuites in the temple, ij. C. and xx. men: whose names are all tokened vp in wyrtinge.

Then commaunded I a fastynge vnto the kynge men before the LORD, & I might desyre of him a prosperous iourney & a good waye for vs, yee for vs, for oure childre and for the catell, because of the layenges awayte: & I durst not require of the kynge men of hoise & of fore, to conueye vs safely agaynst oure enemies, for we had sayde vnto the kynge, that the power of the LORD oure God shulde be with them, that sette him w their whole hert. And therefore we besought God oure LORD earnestly because of these thinges, and he was mercifull vnto vs, and herde oure prayer. And I separated from amonge the rulers of the people, & from the priestes of the temple xij. men, & Sebeia & Mania, & ten men of their brethre with them. And I weied the golde & the syluer & all the prestly ornamētes of the house of God, which the kynge & his counsell, & his prynces & whole Israel had genē. And whan I had weied it, I gaue the an C. talentes in syluer, an C. talentes of syluer vessell, an C. talentes of golde, & of golde vessell seue tymes twentie, and vessels of other metall (yee of good metall) xij. glisteringe as the golde, & saide vnto the: ye also are holy vnto the LORD, & the vessels are holy, & the golde & the syluer is promised vnto the LORD the God of our fathers. Be diligent now & kepe it, vntill the tyme & ye deliuer it to the rulers of the people, to the priestes, to the Leuites & to the pryncipall mē of the cities of Israel in Jerusalem, & in the chambrie of the house of oure God.

So the priestes & the Leuites which receaued of me the golde, the syluer & the vessell, brought it to Jerusalem into the temple of the LORD. And from Thia we brake vp the xij. daye of the first moneth, yll we came to Jerusalem. And whan the thirde daye was past, the weied golde & syluer was deliuered in the house of the LORD the fourth daye, vnto Marimoth the sonne of Jor the prest, & w him was Eleazar & sonne of phineas, and with the were Josabbus & sonne of Jesnet, Medias & the sonne of Bannus, & certayne of the Leuites to the nombre & to the waighe: & the waight of them was writte vp the same tyme. As for those that were come out of captiuyte, they offered sacrifice vnto the LORD the God of Israel: enē xij. oxen for all Israel, lxxxv. rammes, lxxx. shepe, xij. goates for synne, xij. kyne for a thankofferinge, all to the sacrifice of the LORD. And the kynge's cōmission deliuered they vnto the stewar LORDE: Jesus, Benas, Sarebias, Jaddimus, Accubus, Sabbathens, Caliches, Azarias, Joiadus, Ananias, & philius the Leuites which taught the lawe of the LORDE, & red the lawe of the LORDE in the cōgregacion, & euery man sett those before & vnderstode the lawe. Then spake Azharathes vnto Esdras the hye prest & reder, & to the Leuites & taught the multitude, sayenge: This daye is holy vnto the LORDE: & all they & had herde the lawe, wepte. So Esdras sayde: Departe yo<sup>r</sup> waye then, & eate the best, & drynke the sweetest, & sende giftes vnto them & haue nothinge: for this daye is holy vnto the LORDE, and be not ye sory. Then wente they their waye euerychone, ate and dronke and were mery, & sent rewardes vnto the & had nothinge, & they also might eate with gladnesse: for they were exceedingly reioysed, thow the wordes that were red vnto them in the lawe: And so they were all gathered together at Jerusalem to holde the feast, accordinge to the couenaunt of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God of Israel.

The first Chapter.

The seconde boke of y<sup>e</sup> prophet Esdras: (y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Saraias, the sonne of Azarias, y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Zelchia, y<sup>e</sup> sonne of Sallu, the sonne of Sador, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amerias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Maraioth, the sonne of Sarabias, the sonne of Vzi, the sonne of Boccus, the sonne of Abisu, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, the sonne of Aaron, of the trybe of Leui) which was prisoner in the lande of the Medes, in the reigne of Artaxerxes kynge of Persia.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: So thy waye & shew my people their synfull dedes, & their children their wickednesses, which they haue done agaynst me, that they maye tell their children the same: for the synnes of their fathers are increased in them. And why? they haue forgotten me, & haue offred vnto straunge goddes. Am not I enen he, that brought them out of the lande of Egypte, from the house of bondage? But they haue prouoked me to wiath, & despyed my counsels, pullen out then the hayre of thy heade, and cast all euell ouer them, for they haue not bene obedient vnto my lawe.

It is a people without lernynge & nouetoure. How longe shal I forbear them, vnto whom I haue done so moch good? Many kynges haue I destroyed for their sake: Pharaos whis seruantes and all his power haue I smytten downe and slayne: All y<sup>e</sup> nations haue I destroyed and roted out before them, and in y<sup>e</sup> east haue I brought twolandes and people to naught, euen Tyre & Sidon, and haue slayne all their enemies. Speake thou therfore vnto them, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I led you thow the see, and haue geuen you sure stretes sence the begynnyng. I gaue you Moses to be your capayne, and Aaron to be the prest: I gaue you light in a piler of fyre, & greate wonders haue I done amōge you: yet haue ye forgotten me, sayeth the LORDE.

The iiii. boke of Esdras

Thus sayeth the allmightie LORDE: I gaue you quales to eate, and tentes for your recourse: Nevertheless ye murmured, and ascribed not y<sup>e</sup> victory of youre enemies vnto my name: yee this same daie do ye yet murmure. Where are the benefites, that I haue done for you? Whan ye were hongrie in the wilderness, dyd ye not crie vnto me: Why hast thou brought vs in to this wilderness, to kill vs? It had bene better for vs, to haue serued y<sup>e</sup> Egipcians, then to dye in this wilderness. The had I pitie vpon youre mourninges, and gaue you Manna to eate. Ye ate angels foode. Whā ye were thyrstie, dyd not I shew y<sup>e</sup> hardstone, & caused water ynough to flowe thereout? For the heate, I couered you with y<sup>e</sup> leaues of the trees. A good pleasure fact londe gaue I you: I cast out the Cananites, the Pheresites and philistynes before you. What shal I do more for you, saith the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: Whan ye were in the wilderness, in the water of the Amorites, beyng a thyrst & blasphemynge my name, I gaue you not fyre for youre blasphemies, but cast a tre in to y<sup>e</sup> water, and made ther yuer swete. What shal I do vnto the, O Jacob? Thou Juda woldest not obeye me. I wil turne me to another people, & vnto those will I geue my name, that they maye kepe my statutes. Seinge ye haue forsake me, I wil forsake you also. Whan ye desyre me to be gracious vnto you, I shal haue no mercy vpon you. Whan ye call vpo<sup>n</sup> me, I wil not heare you. For ye haue defyled youre hādes with bloude, and youre fete are swift to comytt manslaughter. Ye haue not forsaken me (in a maner) but youre owne selues, sayeth the LORDE.

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: haue I not prayed you, as a father his sonnes, as a mother hir daughters, and as a noisse hir yonge babes, that ye wolde be my people, and I shulde be youre God: that ye wolde be my children, and I shulde be youre owne father? I gathered you together, as an heme gathereth hir chickens vnder hir wynnes. But now what shal I do vnto you? I shal cast you out fro my face. Whan ye offere vnto me, I shal turne my face from you: for youre solempne feast dayes, youre newmoones and youre circumcisions haue I forsaken, I sent vnto you my seruantes the prophetes, whom ye haue taken and slayne, and cometh their bodie in peces, whose bloude I will requyre of youre handes, sayeth the LORDE.

The ii. Chap. Ho. ix.

Thus sayeth the Allmightie LORDE: I gaue you house must be desolate. I wil cast you out as the wynde doth y<sup>e</sup> strawe: youre children shal not be frute full, for they haue despyed my cōmaundement, and done y<sup>e</sup> thinge y<sup>e</sup> is euell before me. Your houses wil I geue vnto a people y<sup>e</sup> shal come, and they y<sup>e</sup> neuer herde me, shal beleue in me: & they vnto whō I neuer shewed token, shal do the thinge y<sup>e</sup> I cōmaunde the. They haue sene no prophetes, yet shal they call their synnes to remembrance, and knowlege the. I repute me vnto the grace, that I wil do for the people which is to come, whose children reioyse in gladnes: & though they haue not sene me with bodely eyes, yet in spiete they beleue the thinge that I saye. And now brother, beholde what greate worshippe, and se y<sup>e</sup> people that cometh from the east, vnto whom I will geue the dukedome of Abrahams, Isaac and Jacob, of Oseas, Amos, and Micheas, of Joel, Abdy, Jonas, Naum and Abacuc, of Sophony, Aggeus, Zachary and Malachy, which is called also an angel (or messenger) of the LORDE.

The II. Chapter.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: I brought this people out of bondage, I gaue the my cōmaundementes by my seruantes y<sup>e</sup> prophetes, whom they wolde not heare, but despyed my counsels. The mother that bare them, sayeth vnto them: Go youre waye ye children, for I am a wyddow & forsaken: I brought you vp with gladnesse, but with sorow and heuynes haue I lost you: for ye haue synned before the LORDE yo<sup>r</sup> God, and done y<sup>e</sup> thinge that is euell before him. But what shal I now do vnto you? I am a wyddow and forsaken: go youre waye (o my children) and are mercy of the LORDE. As for me O father, I call vpon the for a wytnesse ouer the mother of these children, which wolde not kepe my couenaunt: y<sup>e</sup> thou bringe them to cōfucion, and their mother to a spoyle, that she beare no more. Let their names be scatred abroad amonge the Zeithen, let them be put out of the earth, for they haue thought scorn of my couenaunt.

Wo be vnto the Assur, thou that hydest the vnrighteous by the. Thou wicked people, remember what I dyd vnto Sodom and Gomorre, whose land is turned to pitch and asphes. Euen so also wyl I do vnto all them, that heare me not, sayeth the Allmightie LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE vnto Esdras: Tell my people, y<sup>e</sup> I will geue them the kyngdome of Jerusalem, which I wol-

De haue geuen vnto Israel. Their glory also wyl I take vnto me, and geue them the euerlastyng tabernacles, which I had prepared for those.

The tre of life shalbe vnto them a swete smellynge oymment: they shal nether labour ne be weery. So ye youre waye, & ye shall receaue it. Praye for yo<sup>r</sup> selues a few dayes, that they maye dwell therein. Now is the Kingdome prepared for you, therfore watch. Take heauē and earth to wytnesse, for I haue broken the euell in peces, and created the good, for I lyue sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORDE. Mother embrace thy children, and brynge them vp with gladnes: make their fete as fast as a piler, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE.

C And those that be deed wyl I raise vp agayne from their places, and brynge them out of y<sup>e</sup> graues, for I haue knowne my name in Israel. Feare not thou mother of the children, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE. And for thy helpe I shal sende the my seruantes Esay and Jeremy, after whose counsell I haue sanctified & prepared for the, xij. trees with dyverse frutes, and as many welles flowinge with mylk and hony, & seven mountaynes, wher vpo there growe roses and lilies, wherin I wyl fyll my children with ioye. Execute iustice for the wydowe, be iudge for the fatherlesse: geue to y<sup>e</sup> poore: defende the co<sup>r</sup>ruptlesse: clothe the naked: heale the wounded and sick: laugh not a lame man to scorne: defende the crepell, and let the blinde come in to y<sup>e</sup> sight of my clearnes. Kepe the olde & yonge within thy walles: where so ever thou fyndest the deed, toke them, and burye them, and I shal geue the the first place in my resurreccion. Holde styll (O my people) and take y<sup>e</sup> rest, for thy quietnes is come. Geue thy children O thou good noisse, stablish their fete: As for the seruantes whom I haue geuen the, there shal not one of them perishe, for I wyl seke the from thy nombre, were not thy self.

So: whan the daye of trouble and heynenes cometh, other shal wepe and be sorowfull, but thou shalt be merry and plenteous. The heithen shalbe gelous, but they shalbe able to do nothyng agaynst the, sayeth the LORDE. My handes shal couer the, so that thy children shal not se the fyre everlastinge. Be ioyfull O thou mother with thy childre, for I wyl deliuer the, sayeth the LORDE. Remember thy deed childre, for I shal brynge them out of the earth, and shew mercy vnto them, for I am mercifull, sayeth the LORDE Allmightie.

Embrace thy childre, vntyll I come and shew mercy vnto them, for my welles runne ouer, and my grace shal not fayle. I Esdras receaue a charge of the LORDE vpon the mount Oreb, that I shulde go vnto Ierusalem. But whan I came vnto the, they set me a naught, and despyed the commaundment of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE. And therfore I saye vnto you O ye heithen, that heare and vnderstande: Loke for youre shepherde, he shal geue you everlastinge rest: for he is nye at hande, that shal come in the ende of the worlde. Denydy to the rewarde of the Kingdome, for the everlastinge light shal shyne vpon you for euermore. Glete the shadowe of this worlde, receaue the ioyfulness of youre glory. Iustifie my sauicoure openly: O receaue the gift y<sup>e</sup> is geuen you, and be glad, geuynge thanks vnto him, that hath called you to the heuēly Kingdome. Arise vp, and stonde fast: beholde the nombre of those that be sealed in the feast of the LORDE, which are departed from the shadowe of the worlde, and haue receaued glorious garmetes of the LORDE. Take thy nombre O Sion, and shutt up thy purified, which haue fulfilled the lawe of the LORDE. The nombre of thy children whom thou longedest for, is fulfilled: bestete the power of the LORDE, that thy people which haue bene called from the begynnyng, maye be halowed.

I Esdras sawe vpon the mount Sion a greate people, whom I conde not nombre, & they all prayed the LORDE with songes of thankesgeuynge. And in the myddist of the there was a yonge mā of an hye stature, more excellent then all they, and vpon every one of their heades he sett a crowne, and was euer hygher and hygher, which I marueled at greatly. So I axed y<sup>e</sup> angell, & sayde: Syr, what are these? He answered and sayde vnto me: These be they, that haue put of the mortall clothyng and put on the immortall, and haue testified & knowleged the name of God. Now are they crowned, and receaue the rewarde.

Then sayde I vnto the angell: what yonge persome is it, that crowneth them, & geueth them the palmes in their handes? So he answered and sayde vnto me: It is y<sup>e</sup> sonne of God, whom they haue knowleged in the worlde. Then beganne I greatly to commende them, that stode so stilly for the name of the LORDE. And so the angell sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and tell my people, what maner of thynges and how greate wonderes of the LORDE thy God, thou hast seen.

The III. Chapter.

In the thirtie yeare of the fall of the cite, I was at Babilon & laye troubled vpo my bed, & my thoughtes came vpo my hert: for I sawe y<sup>e</sup> desolacion of Sion, & the plenteous wealth of them y<sup>e</sup> dwelt at Babilon: & my sprete was sore moued, so that I beganne to speake fearfull wordes to the most hyest, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thou spakest at the begynnyng, whan thou plantedst y<sup>e</sup> earth (and that thy self alone) and gauest commaundement vnto y<sup>e</sup> people, and a body vnto Adam, which was a creature of thy handes, and hast brethed in him the breath of life: and so he lyued before the, and thou leddest him in to paradise, which garde of pleasure thy right hande had planted, or euer the earth was made. And vnto him thou gauest commaundement to loue y<sup>e</sup> waye, which he transgressed, & immediately thou appoyntedest death in him, and in his generacions. Of him came nations, trybes, people & kynnedes out of nombre. And every people walked after their owne wil, and dyd nyce thynges before the: and as for thy commaundementes, they despyed them.

But in proceffe of tyme thou broughtest the water floude, vpon those that dwelt in the worlde, and destroydest them. And like as the death was in Adam, so was the water floude also in these. Neuertheles one of them thou lastest: namely, Noe with his household, of whom come all righteous mē. And it happened that, whan they y<sup>e</sup> dwelt vpon the earth, beganne to multiplie, and had gotten many children, and were a greate people, they beganne to be more vngodly then the first.

Now whan they all lyued so wickedly before the, thou didest chose the a man from amonge them, whose name was Abiam. Him thou louedest, and vnto him only thou shewdest thy wyll, and maydest an everlastinge coneuant with him, promysinge him, that thou woldest neuer forsake his sede. And vnto him thou gauest Isaac, vnto Isaac also thou gauest Jacob and Esau. As for Jacob thou didest chose him, and put backe Esau. And so Jacob became a greate multitude.

And it happened that whā thou leddest his sede out of Egypte, thou broughtest the vp to the mount Sion, bowinge downe the heauens, settinge fast the earth, mouynge the grounde, makynge the depthes to shake, and troublynge the worlde: And thy glory wente thorow foure portes of fyre, and earth quakes, and wyndes and colde: that thou mightest geue the lawe vnto the sede of Jacob, and diligence vnto the generacio of Israel.

And yet tokest thou not awaye from the that wicked hert, that thy lawe might brynge forth frute in them. For the first Adam bare a wicked hert, transgressed, and was overcome, and so be all they y<sup>e</sup> are borne of him. Thus remayned weaknes with the lawe in the hert of the people, with the wickednesse of the rote: so that the good departed awaye, and the euell abode still. So the tymes passed awaye, and the yeares were brought to an ende. Then didest thou raise the vp a seruau: called David, whom thou commaundedst to buylde a cite vnto thy name, and to offere opincense and sacrifice vnto the therin. This was done now many yeares.

Then the inhabiteurs of the cite forsoke the, and in all thynges dyd euē as Adam and all his generacions had done: for they also had a wicked hert. And so thou gauest thy cite euer in to the handes of thine enemies. Are they of Babilon then better and more righteous then thy people, y<sup>e</sup> they shal therefore haue the domynion of Sion? For whan I came there, and sawe their vngodlynes, and so greate wickednesse, that it coude not be nombred: yee whan my soule sawe so many euell doers (in y<sup>e</sup> xxx. yeare) my hert sayled me, for I sawe, how thou suffrest them in soch vngodlynes, and sparest y<sup>e</sup> wicked doers: but thine owne people hast thou roted out, and preserved thine enemies, & this hast thou not shewed me.

I cannot perceaue how this happeneth. Do they of Babilon then better, then they of Sion? Or is there eny other people, y<sup>e</sup> knoweth the, sayynge the people of Israel? Or what generacion hath so belened y<sup>e</sup> couenantes, as Jacob? And yet their rewarde appeareth not, and their labo<sup>r</sup> hath no frute. For I haue gone here and there thorow the heithen, & I se, y<sup>e</sup> they be rych & wealthy, & theynke not vpon y<sup>e</sup> commaundementes. Weye thou therefore oure wickednesse now in y<sup>e</sup> balaunce, and theirs also that dwell in the worlde, and so shal thy name be nowhere founde but in Israel. Or where is there a people vpon earth, y<sup>e</sup> hath not sinned before the? Or what people hath so kepte thy commaundementes? Thou shalt fynde, that Israel by name hath kepte thy preceptes, but not the other people and heithen.

The III. Chapter.

And the angell that was sent vnto me (whose name was Uriel) gaue me answer, and sayde: Thy hert hath takē to moch vpon it in this woulde, and thou thinkest to comprehend the waye of the hysse. Then sayde I: yee my lord. And he answered me, and sayde: I am sent to shewe the thre wayes, and to sett forth thre symilitudes before the wherof yf thou canst declare me one, I wil shewe the also the waye, that thou desirest to se, and I shal shewe the from whence the wicked hert cometh. And I sayde: tell on my LORD. Then sayde he vnto me: Go thy waye, weyeme the weight of the fyre, or measure me the blast of the wynde, or call me agayne the daye that is past. Then answered I and sayde: What man borne is able to do that? Why requyrest thou soch of me? And he sayde vnto me: If I shulde are the, how depe dwellinges are in the see? Or how greate water springes are vpon y firmamēt? Or how greates water sprynges are in the begynnyng of the depe? Or which are the outgoinges of Paradise? Peradventure thou woldest saye vnto me: I neuer wentedowne yet in to y depe ner hell, nether dyd I ever clyme vp in to heauen. Neuertheles now haue I ared the but onely of fyre and wynde and of the daye, where thou now thou hast trauallyd, and from the which thou canst not be separated: and yet canst thou geue me no answer of them.

Be sayde morouer vnto me: Thine owne thinges, and soch as are growne vp with y, canst thou not knowe: how shulde thy vessel then be able to comprehend the waye of the hysse, and now outwardly in the corrupte woulde, to vnderstande the corrupcion y is euident in my sight? The sayde I vnto him: Ie were better that we were not at all, the that we shulde lyue in wickednesse, and to suffice, and not to knowe wherfore. He answered me, and sayde: I wete in a wode, and the trees take soch a deuice and sayde: Come let vs go, and fight agaynst the see, that it maye departe awaye before vs, and that we maye make vs yet more woddess.

The floudes of the see also in lyke maner take this deuice, and sayde: Come, let vs go vp, and fight agaynst the trees of the wode, that we maye make oure londe the wyder. The thought and deuice of the wode was but vayne and nothinge worth, for the fyre came, and consumed the wode: The thought of the floudes of the see came likewise to naught also, for the sonde stode vp and stoped them.

If thou were indge now betwixte the two, whom woldest thou iustifie, or whom woldest thou cōdemne? I answered and sayde: Verely it is a foolish thought that they both haue denyed. For the grounde is geuen vnto the wode, and the see also hath his place to beare his floudes. Then answered he me, and sayde: Thou hast geuen a right indgment, why indgest thou not thy self also? For like as the grounde is geuen vnto the wode, and the see to his floudes: even so they that dwell vpon earth, maye vnderstande nothinge, but that which is vpon earth: and he that dwelleth aboue the heauens, maye onely vnderstande the thinges, that are aboue the heauens. Then answered I and sayde: I beseeche the LORD let me haue vnderstandinge: for it was not my mynde to be curious of thy hye thinges, but of soch as we daylie meele with all: namely, wherfore that Israel is blasphemed of the heithen, and for what cause the people (whom thou euer hast loued) is geuen ouer, to be punished of vngodly naciōes: and why the lawe of oure fathers is brought to naught, and the wyrtten cōuenantes come to none effecte, and we passe awaye out of the woulde as the greshopers, and oure life is a very feare, and we are not worthy to praye ne mercy. What wyl he do then vnto his name, which is called vpon ouers? Of these thinges haue I ared question.

Then answered he me and sayde: The more thou searchest, the more thou shalt mande, for the woulde hasteth fast to passe awaye, and can not comprehend the thinges, that are promysed for the righteous in tyme to come, for this woulde is full of vnrighteousnes and weaknes.

But as concernynge the thinges wherof thou arest me, I wyl tell the. The euell is sowne, but the destruccion therof is not yet come. If the euell now that is sowne, be not mowed vpsyde downe, and yf the place wher y euell is sowne, passe not awaye, then can not the thinge come y is sowne with y good. For the come of euell seide hath bene sowne in the hert of man from the begynnyng, and how moch vngodlynes hath he brought vp vnto this tyme: and how moch shal he yet bringe forth, vntyll he come in to the barne?

Pondre now by thyself, whā y come of euell seide is cutt downe, how greates a barne shal it fyll? I answered and sayde: How and whā shal these thinges come to passe? Wherfore are y yeres fewe & euell? And he answered me, sayenge: Hast not thou to moch vpon the hysse, for thy haistynes to be aboue him is but in vayne, thou makest to moch a doo. Dyd not y soules also of the righteous are question of these thinges in their holynes, sayenge: How longe shal I hope of this fashion? Whan cometh the frute of my barne, and my rewarde? And vpo this Jeremiel the archangel gaue them answer, and sayde: Eue whan the nombre of the sedes is fylled in you: for he hath weyed the woulde in the balauce: in measure and nombre hath he measured the tyme, and moueth it not, vntyll the same measure be fulfilled. Then answered I and sayde: O LORD, LORD, now are we all full of synne, and for oure sake peradventure it is not, that the barne of the righteous shal not be fylled, because of the synnes of the that dwell vpon earth.

I So he answered me, & sayde: Go y waye to a woman with childe, and are her, when she hath fulfilled hir ix. monethes, yf hir child be born maye kepe y byrth eny longer with in her. The sayde I: No LORD, that can she not. And he sayde vnto me: In hell the secreete places of soules are like y preny chamber of a woman. For like as a woman that trauallyeth, maketh haist, whan the tyme & necessity of the byrth is at hande: Eue so doth she haist to deliuer it that is commytted vnto her. Loke what thou desirest to se, it shal be shewed the from the begynnyng. Then answered I and sayde: If I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, and yf it be possible, and yf I be mete therfore, shewe me then, whether there be more to come the is past, or more past then is for to come. What is past, I knowe: but what is for to come, I knowe not.

G And he saide vnto me: Stonde vp vpo y right syde, and I shal expounde the symilitude vnto the. So I stode, & beholde, an whote burnynge oue wente ouer before me: & it happened y whan the flamme was gone by, the smoke had the vpper hande. After this the wete ouer before me a watery cloude, and sent downe moch rayne to a storme: & whan the stormy rayne was past, the droppes remained still. Then sayde he vnto me: like as the rayne is more then the droppes, and as the fyre exceedeth the smoke, even so y measure of the thinges that are past, hath the vpper hande. Then wente the droppes and the smoke aboue: and I prayed and sayde: Maye I lyue (thyntest thou) vntyll that tyme? Or what shal happen in those dayes? He answered me, and sayde: As for the tokens wherof thou arest me, I maye tell the of the in a parte: but as touchinge y life, I maye not shewe the, for I am not sent therfore.

The V. Chapter.

Querthelesse, as concernynge the tokens, mark this: Beholde, the dayes shal come, that they which dwell vpon earth, shal be takē in a greates nombre, & the waye of the truneth shal be hyd, and the lōde shal be baren from faith: but iniquyte shal haue the vpper hande, like as thou hast sene now, and as thou hast herde lōge ago. And the lōde that thou seist now to haue rule, shal: thou shortly se waist. But yf God graunte the to lyue, thou shalt se after y thirde trompet, that the Sonne shal sodenly shyne agayne in the night, and the Moone thre tymes in the daye, & bloude shal droppe out of wode, and the stone shal geue his voyce, and the people shal be vnquyete: and euen he shal rule, whom they hope not that dwell vpon earth, and the soules shal flye, and the Sodomitysh see shal cast out his fish, and make a noyse in the night, which many shal not knowe, but they shal all heare the voyce therof.

There shal be a cōfucion also in many places, and the fyre shal be of sent agayne, and the wyld beasts shal go their waye, & men struous women shal beare monsters, and salt waters shal be founde in the swete: one frende shal fight agaynst another: then shal all wyrt and vnderstandinge be hyd and put asyde in to their secreete places, & shal be sought of many, and yet not be founde: then shal vnrighteousnes and voluptuousnes haue the vpper hande vpon earth. One lande also shal be another, and saye: Is righteousness gone thorow the? And it shal saye: No. At the same tyme shal men hope, but nothinge optayne: they shal laboure, but their wayes shal not prosper.

To shewe the soch tokens I haue lene, and yf thou wylt praye agayne, & wepe as now, and fast seven dayes, thou shalt heare yet greater thinges. Then I awaked, and a fearfulness wente thorow all my body, & my mynde was feble and carefull, so that I almost swowned withall. So the angell that was come to talke with me, held me, comforted me, and sett me vp vpon my fete.

And in the seconde night it happened, & Salathiel the captayne of the people came vnto me, sayenge: Where hast thou bene? and why is thy countenance so heuy? Knowest thou not, y Israel is commytted vnto the, in the lōde of their captynyte? Vp then, and eate, and forsake vs not, as the shepherds that leaneth his flock in the handes of wicked wolues. Then sayde I vnto him: So thy waye frome, and come not nyeme: & he herde it, and as I sayde, so wate he his waye frome. And so I fasted seuen dayes, mournynge and wepyng, like as Oriell the angell commaunded me. And after seuen dayes it happened, that I thoughtes of my hert were very greuous vnto me agayne, & my soule receaued I sperte of vnderstandynge, & I begane to talke w the most hiest agayne, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, of euery wode of I earth & of all the trees therof, thou hast chosen I one onely vynyarde: and of all londes of the whole worlde thou hast chosen the one pytt: and of all floures of the grounde thou hast chosen the one lyllie: and of all the depthes of the see thou hast fylled the one ryuer: and of all builded cities thou hast halowed Sion vnto thy self: and of all I foules that are created, thou hast named the one doue: and of all the catell I are made, thou hast prouyded I one sheper: & amonge all I multitudes of folkes thou hast gotten the one people, and vnto this people whom thou louedest, thou gauest a lawe, I is proued of all.

D And now O LORDE, why hast thou geue this one people ouer vnto many? & vpon the one rote thou hast prepared other, and why hast thou scatred I one onely people amonge many: which treade the downe, yee which haue euer withstonde I promyses, & neuer beleued I covenantes? And though thou werest enemye vnto I people, yet shuldest thou punysh the w thine owne handes. Now wha I had spokē these wordes, the angell I came to me I might afore, was set vnto me, & sayde vnto me: Heare me, & herkē to I thinge I I saye, & I shal tell I more. And I sayde: Speake on my LORDE. The sayde he vnto me: Thou art sore vexed & troubled for Israels sake. Louest thou I people better, then him I made them? And I sayde: No LORDE, but of very grese & cōpassion haue I spokē. For my reynes payne me euery houre, because I wolde haue experience of the waye of the most hiest, and to seke out parte of his indgmet. And he sayde vnto me: that thou mayest not. And I sayde: wherfore LORDE? Where vnto was I borne then? Or why was not my mothers childbed then my graue? So had I not sene the mysery and trouble of Jacob, and the trauayle of my people of Israel.

E And he sayde vnto me: Tōbie me I thinges, I are not yet come: gather me together I droppes, that are scatred abroad: make me I floures grene agayne. I are wythered: opē me the thinge that is closed: and brynge me forth the wyndes, that are shutt vp: Shew me the ymage of a voyce, and then shal I declare the the thinge, that thou labourest to knowe. And I sayde: O LORDE LORDE, who maye knowe these thinges, but he that hath not his dwellynge w me? As for me, I am vnwyse: how maye I the speake of these thinges, wherof thou arrest me? The sayde he vnto me: like as thou canst do none of the se thinges I I haue spoken of, Euen so canst thou not fynde out my indgmet, or in the ende the lone that I haue promysed vnto my people. And I sayde: Beholde O LORDE, yet art thou nye vnto them that haue no end: and what shal they do that haue bene before me, or we that be now, or they that shal come after vs? And he sayde vnto me: I wyllydē my indgmet vnto a ryng. Like as there is no slacknesse of the last, euen so is there no swiftnesse of the first. So I answered & sayde: Coudest thou not make those (that haue bene made, and that be now, and that are yet to come) in one, that thou mightest shewethy indgmet the sooner?

Then answered he me and sayde: The creature maye not haist about the mater, neither maye the worlde holde the at once, that shal be created.

And I sayde: How hast thou sayde then vnto thy seruauit, that thou lynyngemater hast made the creature lynyngemater at once, & the creature bare it: eue so might it now also beare them that be present, at once. And he sayde vnto me: Are the childbed of a womā, and saye vnto her: If thou bringest forth child, why doest thou it not together, but one after another? Praye her therfore, to brynge forth ten children at once. And I sayde: She can not, but must do it one after another.

Then sayde he vnto me: Euen so haue I genen a childbed vnto the earth, for those that be sowne vpon it by processe of tyme. For like as a yonge childe maye not brynge forth the thinges that belonge to the age, euen so haue I ordered the worlde which I made.

And Iared and sayde: Seynge thou hast now geue me a waye, I wyl speake before I: for oure mother of whō thou hast tolde me, is yet yonge, & now she draweth nye vnto age. He answered me & sayde: Are a woman that beareth children, & she shal tell the. Saye vnto her: wherfore are not they (whom thou hast now brought forth) like those that were before the, but lesse of stature? And she shal answer the: They I be borne in the youth offstregth, are of one fashion: and they that are borne in the tyme of age (whan the childbedd sayleth) are other wyse. Considre now thyself, how that ye are lesse of stature, then those that were before you, and so are they that come after you, lesse then ye, as the creatures which now begynne to be olde, and haue passed ouer the strength of youth. Then sayde I: LORDE I beseeke the, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, shewe thy seruauit, by whom doest thou vyset thy creature?

The VI. Chapter.

And he sayde vnto me: In the begynnyng whan the grounde was made, before the worlde stode, or euer I wyn des blew, before it thondred and lightened, or euer the foundations of Paradise were layed, before the sayre floures were sene, or euer the moueable powers were stablished, before I innumerable multitudes of angels were gathered together, or euer I highneses of I ayre were lifted vp, afore I measures of the firmament were named, or euer I chymneys in Sion were hote, and or the present years were sought out, and or euer the inuencions of them I now synne, were put asyde, before they were sealed that new gather faith for a treasure: then dyd I considre and pondre all these thinges, and they all were made thorow me, and thorow none other: by me also they be ended, and by none other.

Then answered I and sayde: which shal be the partynge asunder of the tymes? Or whan shal be the ende of the first, and the begynnyng of it that foloweth? And he sayde vnto me: From Abrahā vnto Isaac, whā Jacob & Esau were borne of him, Jacobs hande helde first the hele of Esau: for Esau is the ende of this worlde, and Jacob is the begynnyng of it that foloweth. The hande of man betwixte the hele and the hande. Other question (Esdras) are thou not.

I answered then and sayde: O LORDE, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, I beseeke the, shewe thy seruauit the ende of thy tokēs, wherof thou shewdest me parte the last night. So he answered and sayde vnto me: Stōde vp vpon thy fete, and beare the perfecte voyce and sounde. There shal come a greate mocion, but I place wher thou stōdest shal not be moued. And therfore whan thou hearest the wordes, be not affrayed: for of the ende shal the worde and foundation of I earth be vnderstonde. And why? the worde therof trembleth and quā eth, for it knoweth, that it must be chaunged at the ende. And it happened, that whā I had herde it, I stode vp vpon my fete and herkened: and beholde, there was a voyce I spake, and the sounde of it was like the sounde of many waters, and it sayde. Beholde, I dayes come, I I wyl begynne to drawe nye, and to vyset them that dwell vpon earth, and wyl begynne to make inquisicion of them, what they be I haue hurie equitye w vntighteousnes, and whan the lowe estate of Sion shal be fulfilled: and whan the worlde, that shal vanish awaye, shal be ouersealed, then wyl I do these tokēs.

The bokēs shal be opened before the firmament, and they shal se all together, & the children of a yeaere olde shal speake w their voyces: the womē with childe shal brynge forth vntymely children of thre or foure monethes olde, and they shal lyue, and be rayed vp: & sodely shal the sowne places appeare as the vnsowne, the full store houses shal sodely be founde emptye, and the trompett shal geue a sounde, which whā enery man heareth, they shal be haistely affrayed. At that tyme shal frendes fight one agaynst another like enemies, and the earth shal stonde in feare wth them.

The sprynges of the welles shal stonde styll, and in thre houres they shal not renne. Who so ener remayneth from all these thingen that I haue tolde the, shal escape, and se my saluacion, and the ende of youre worlde. And the men that are receaued, shal se it, they that haue not tasted death fro theire byrth: and the hert of the indwellers shal be chaunged, and turned into another meanyng: for euell shal be put out, and disceate shal be quenched. As for faith, it shal flourish, corrupcion shal be euercome: and the truneth, which hath bene so longe without fruce, shal be declared.

And it happened whan he talked w me, that I lokēd demurely vpon him, before whō I stode, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe I, the tyme of I night for to come.

If thou wilt praye yet more, and fast seue dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, & greater then before: for thy voyce is herde before the hiest: for why? the Nightie hath senethy righteous dealynge, he hath sene al so thy chastite, which thou hast had euer senec thy youth: and therfore hath he sent me to shewe the all these thinges, and to saye vnto the: Be of good comfote, and feare not, and haist not with I tymes that are past &

Mat. 10. 6
Mich. 7. 8

thynte vayne thinges, and make no haist of the latter tymes.

And it happened after this, & I wepte agayne, and fasted seven dayes in like maner, that I might fulfill the thre weekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my hert vored within me agayne, and I beganne to speake before the hyest: for my spiete was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distresse, and I sayde: O LORDE, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnyng (even the first daye) and saydest: Let heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the spiete, and the darcknesse were yet on euery syde, and silence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a fayre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be sene.

Gen. 1.2

Upon the seconde daye thou maydest the spiete of the sunnament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder & to make a deuysion betwixte the waters, that the one parte might remayne above, and the other beneth. Upon the thirde daye thou broughtest to passe, & the waters were gathered in the seventh parte of the earth: Sixe partes hast thou dried vp, and kepte them, to the intent y men might sowe and occupie husbandrie therein. As soone as thy worde wente forth, the worke was made. For immediatly there was greates innumerable frute, & many dyuerse pleasures & desyres of tempracion, floures of chaungeable coloure and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Deu. 4. c

Upon the fourth daye thou commaundedst that the Sonne shulde geue his shyne, and y Moone his light: the starres didest thou sett in ordie, and gauest them a charge, to do seruyce even vnto man, that was for to be made. Vpon the fith daye thou saydest vnto the seventh parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shulde bryng forth diuerse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the donne water and without soule, brought forth luyng beastes at the commaundment of God, that all people might prayse thy wonderous workes. Then didest thou preserue two foules, y one thou caldest Enoch and the other Leviathan, and didest separate the one from the other: for the seventh parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Enoch thou gauest one parte, which was dried vp the thirde daye, that he shulde dwell in the same parte, wherein are a thousande hilles. But vnto Leviathan thou gauest the seventh parte, namely the myddle, and hast kepte him to deuoure what thou wylt, and whan.

Vpon the sixte daye thou gauest commaundment vnto the earth, that before the shal de bryng forth beastes, catell and all y creature, & (besydes this) Adam also, whom thou maydest loide of all thy creatures: Of him came we all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this hast I sayde now and spoken before the, that I might shewe, how that the worde is made for oure sakes. As for the other people, which also come of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothinge, but be like a spetle, and hast likened the abundaunce of them vnto a droppe (that falleth) from the rose of the house.

And now (O LORDE) the heith which haue euer bene reputed as nothinge, haue begunne to be lordes ouer vs, and to deuoure vnto we thy people (whom thou hast called y first borne, thy only begotten, and thy feruent loue) are geuen in to their handes and power. If the worlde now be made for oure sakes, why haue we not the inheritaunce in possession with the worlde? How longe shal this endure?

The VII. Chapter.

When it happened after that I had spoken out these wordes, there was sent vnto me an angell (which had bene by me also the nightes afore) and he sayde vnto me: Vp Esdras, and heare the wordes that I am come to tell the. And I sayde: speake O LORDE my God. The sayde he vnto me: The see is sett in a wyde place, y it might be depe and greates: but the intrance is narrow and small like a ryuer. For who wolde go into the see, to loke vpon it, and to rule it? If he were not thorow the narrow, how might he come in to the brode?

Item, another. A cite is buylded and sett vpon a brode felde, and is full of all goodes: the intrance is narrow and sodane, like as yf there were a fyre at the right hande, and a deepe water at the left, and as it were onely one strate path betwixte the both, so small, that there coude but one man go there.

If this cite now were geuen to an heye, he neuer wente thorow this parlous waye, how wolde he receaue his inheritaunce? And I sayde: It is so, LORDE. Then sayde he: Euen so is Israel also a porcion. And why? For their sakes haue I made the worlde: & whan Adam trasgressed my statutes, then was y thinge iudged that was done. Then wast y intrances of the worlde made narrow, full of sorrow and tranayle: They are but few & small, full of pannels and labour. For the intrances of the fore worlde were wyde and sure, and brought immortall frute.

If they now which are entred in to this worlde, maye not comprehend these straye and vayne thinges, moche lesse maye they comprehend and vnderstande the secrete thinges: Why disquietest thou thy self then, seynge thou art but a corruptible man? And what woldest thou knowe, where as thou art but mortall? And why hast thou not receaued in to thine hert the thinge that is for to come, but that is present?

The sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, thou hast ordered in thy lawe, that the righteous shulde inheret these thinges, but that the vnfaithfull and vngodly shulde perishe. Nevertheless the righteous shall suffice straye thinges, and hope for wyde: for they that haue luyed vngodly & suffred straye thinges, shal not se the wyde.

And he sayde vnto me: There is no iudgement above God, and none that hath vnderstandinge above the hyest. For there be many y perishe, because they despise y lawe of God that is sett before them. For God hath geuen straye commaundment to soch as come, that they knowe what they do, and how they shulde lye: and yf they kepte this, they shulde not be punyshed.

Nevertheless they were not obedient vnto him, but spake agaynst him: ymaged vayne thinges, & purposed to synne, and sayde morouer, that there was no God, & that God regarded it not. His wayes haue they not knowne, his lawe haue they despysed, & denyed his promyses: in his statutes & ordinances haue they not bene faithfull & steadfast, and haue not perfourmed his workes.

And therefore Esdras, vnto the full plenty: and to the emptye, emptynesse. Beholde, the tyme shal come, y these tokens which I haue tolde the, shal come to passe, & the bryde shal appeare: & the earth y now passeth awaye, shal be shewed: & who so euer is deliuered from y foresayde euels, shal se my wordes. For my sonne Iesus shal be openly declared, wth those y be wth him: & they y remayne, shal be mery in foure hundred yeares.

After these same yeares shal my sonne Chast dye, and all men that haue lifed: and y worlde shal be turned in to the olde sylence seven dayes, like as in the fore iudgements, so that no man shal remayne. And after seven dayes, the worlde that yet awaketh not, shal be raysed vp, & shal dye corrupte. And the earth shal restore those that haue slepte in her, and so shall the dust those that dwell in silence, and the secrete places shal deliuer those that be committed vnto them. And y most hyest shal be openly declared vpon the seate of iudgment, & all misery shal vanysh awaye, and loge suffringe shal be gathered together. But the iudgment shal contynue, y truethe shal remayne, and faith shal waite ströge, the worke shal folowe, and the reward shal be shewed, the righteousnesses shal watch, and the vnrighteousneses shal beare no rule.

Then sayde I: Abraham prayed first for the Sodomites, & Moses for the fathers y synned in the wyldernes, & he y came after him for Israel, in y tyme of Achas and Samuel: and David for y destruccion, and Salomon for them that came in to the Sanctuary, & Elias for those that receaued rayne, and for the deed, that he might lye: and Ezechias for y people in the tyme of Sennacherib: & dyuerse other in like maner, which haue prayed for many.

Thus so now, seynge y corrupte is growne vp, and wickednes increased, and the righteous haue prayed for the vngodly, wherfore shal it not be so now also?

He answered me, and sayde: This present worlde is not y ende, there remayneth moche honour in it, therfore haue they prayed for the weake. But the daye of dome shal be the ende of this tyme, and y begynnyng of the immortalite for to come, wherin all corrupcion vanysheth, all voluptuousnes is lowed, all mysbelieve taken awaye, righteousness growne, and the verite spronge vp. Then shall no man be able to sane him that is destroyed, ner to oppresse him y hath gottē y victory. I answered the, & sayde: This is my first & last sayenge: y it had bene better, not to haue geuen the earth vnto Adam: or els whan it was geue him, to kepe him that he shulde not synne. For what profit is it for men now in this present tyme to lye in heynnes, & after death to loke for punyishment? O thou Adā, what hast thou done? For though it was thou y synned, thou art not falle alone, but we all y come of the. For what profit is it vnto vs, yf there be promysed vs an immortall tyme, where as we medle wth deadly workes: & that there is promysed vs an everlasting hope, where as we of selues are enell & vayne: & yf there are layed vp for vs dwellnynges of health & fredome, where as we haue luyed euell: and that the worshippe of y hyest is kepte to defende them, which have led a pacient life, where as we have walked in y most wicked wayes of all: and that there shalbe shewed a paradysse, whose frute endureth for ever, wherein is fredome and medycyne, where as we shal not go in: for we have walked in vnpleasunt places: And that the faces of them which have absteyned, shal shyne aboue the starres, where as oure faces shalbe black and darcke: For whyle we lyued and dyd vnrighteously, we considered not, that we shulde suffre therfore after death.

S The answered he me, and sayde: This is the consideracion z thought of the battayl, which man hath vpon earth: that yf he be ouercome, he shal suffre as thou hast sayde. But yf he gett the victory, he shal receaue the thinge that I saye. For this is the life, wherof Moses spake vnto the people, whyle he lyued, sayenge: Chose the life, that thou mayest lyue. Nevertheless they beleued him not, nether the prophetes after him. No ner me which haue spoken vnto them, that heuynes shulde not reach vnto them to their destruction, like as ioye is for to come ouer those, that haue suffred the selues to be ensoummed in saluacion.

I answered then z sayde: I knowe LORDE that the hyst is mercifull, in y he hath mercy vpon them, which are not yet in the worlde, and vpon those also that walke in his lawe: and that he is pacient and longe sufferinge towarde those that haue synned in their workes: and that he is liberrall to geue where as it requyeth: and that he is of greate mercy, for he multiplieth his louynge kyndnesses towarde those that are present, and that are past, and to them which are for to come. For yf he multiplie not his mercies, the worlde shal not be made luyngge, with those that dwell therein: he geueth also, for yf he gaue not of his goodnesse, that they which haue done euell, might be eased, the ten thousande parte of men shulde not be made luyngge. And yf the iudge forgauene not those y he healed with his worde, and yf he wolde destroye y multitude that stryeth, there shulde be very few left in an innumerable multitude.

The VIII. Chapter.

And he answered me, sayenge: The most hyst made this worlde for many, but the worlde to come for few. I wyl tell the a synnitude, Esdras: As whan thou apest the earth, it shal saye vnto the, that it geneth moch moulde, wherof erthen vessels are made, but litle of it y golde cometh of.

Enen so is it with the worke of this worlde. There be many created, but few shal be preserved. Then answered I z sayde: Thou shalowe vp the witt (thou soule) and deuoure the vnderstandinge, for thou art aggreued to herken and to geue eare, and wyllingest prophecie: for thou hast no longer space gyven the, but only to lyue. O LORDE, wilt thou not geue thy seruauit leue, y we maye praye before the, and that thou mayest geue sede vnto oure hert, and buylde oure vnderstandinge, that there maye come frute of it: and that enery one which is corrupte, and beareth the state and place of a man, maye lyue?

For thou art alone, and we all are one workmanshipe of thy handes, like as thou hast sayde, and like as the body is fashioned now in the childebedd, and then geueth the members, and thy creature is preserved in fyre and water: z it monethes doth thy worke suffre thy creature, which is fashioned in her: but the thinge that preserveth and it y is preserved, shal both be kepte together: whan tyme is, the childebedd deliuereth y thinge, that is kepte and growne in her.

For thou hast commaunded the bestes to geuenyld vnto the frute, that the thinge which is created and fashioned, maye be nourished for a tyme: and then thou disposist and ordiest it with thy mercy, bryngest it vp with thy righteousnes, nurturest it in thy lawe, and resourmest it with thy vnderstandinge, mortifiest it as thy creature, and makest it luyngge as thy worke. Seinge then that thou destroyest him, which is so greute labours is created and fashioned thow thy commaundement, thou coudest lyghly ordene also, that the thinge which is made, might be preserved.

And this I speake now of all men in generall, as thou knowest: but of thy people, for whose sake I am sorry: and of thy inheritance, for whose cause I mourne: and of Israel, for whom I am wofull: and for Jacob, for whose sake I am greued: therefore be gynne I to praye before the, for my self and for them, for I se the fall of vs, euens of vs, that dwell vpon earth. But I haue herde the swiftnes of the iudge, which is to come: therefore heare my voyce, and vnderstande my wordes, and I shal speake before the.

This is the begynnynge of the wordes of Esdras, before he was receaued: O LORDE, thou that dwellest in euerylastyngnesse, whose eyes are lift vp in the ayre, whose stole is exceddinge hye, whose glory and maiesty maye not be comprehended, before whom the hoostes of heauen stonde with trembling, whose keepinge is turned in winde and fyre, whose worde is true, whose talkynge is steadfast, whose commaundement is stronge, whose ordynance is fearfull, whose lordryeth vp the depthes, whose wyath maketh the mountaynes to melt awaye, z whose treuth beareth wytnes: O heare y prayer of thy seruauit, and marck with thine eares the petition of thy creature.

For whyle I lyue, I wil speake: and so lo geas I haue vnderstandinge, I will answer. O loke not vpo the synnes of thy people, which serue y in the treuth. Haue no respect vnto the wicked studies of the zeichen, but to the desyre of those that kepethy testimones with sorowes. Thinke not vpon those that haue walked faynedly before the, but vpon them, which with wyll haue knowne thy feare.

Let it not be thy wyll to destroye them, which haue had beastly maners, but to loke vpon them that haue clearly taught thy lawe. Take thou no indignacion at them, which are worse then beastes: but loue them, that allwaye put their trust in y righteousnes and glory: for we and oure fathers haue all the same sicknes and disease, but because of oure synnes thou shalt be called mercifull.

S For yf thou hast mercy vpon vs, thou shalt be called mercifull, where as we haue no workes of righteousnes: for y righteous which haue layed vp many good workes together, shall out of their dedes receaue reward. For what is man, that thou shuldest take displeasure at him? Or what is the corruptible mortall generacion, that thou shuldest be so rough towarde him?

For of a treuth there is no man amonge them that be boine, but he hath dealt wickedly: and amonge the faithfull there is none, which hath not done amysse. For in this (O LORDE) thy righteousnes z thy goodnes shalbe praysed and declared, yf thou be mercifull vnto them, which are not ryche in good workes.

Then answered he me and sayde: Some thinges hast thou spoken a right, and accordinge vnto thy wordes it shal be. For I wil not verely cōsidre the worke of them, which haue synned before death, before the iudgment, before destruction, but I wyl reioyse ouer the worke and thowght of y righteous. I wil remembre also the pilgramege, the holymatynge and the reward. Like as I hane spoken now, so shall it come to passe. For as the husband man soweth moch sede vpon the grounde, and planteth many trees, and yet allwaye the thinge that is sowne or plantet is not all kepte safe, nether doth it all take rote: Enen so is it of them that are sowne in the worlde, they shal not all be preserved.

I answered then z sayde: If I haue founde grace, then let me speake. Like as the husbande mans sede perissheth, yf it receaue not rayne in due season, or yf there come to moch rayne vpon it: Enen so perissheth man also, which is created with thy handes, and is like vnto thine owne ymage and to thy self, for whose sake thou hast made all thinges, and lickened him vnto the husbande mans sede. Be not wroth at vs (O LORDE) but spare thy people, and haue mercy vpon thine owne inheritance: O be mercifull vnto thy creature.

Then answered he me and sayde: Thinges present are for the present, and thinges to come for soch as be to come. For thou wast yet moch, seynge thou mayest loue my creature abousme: I haue oft times drawne nye vnto the, but neuer to the vnrighteous. In this also thou art marvelous before the hyst, in that thou hast humbled thy self, as it becommeth the, and hast not regarded thine owne self, y thou art had in soch honoure amonge the righteous. Therefore shal greate wretchednes and mysery come vpon them, that in the latter tyme shal dwell in y worlde, for they haue walked in greute pryde.

But vnderstande thou for thy self, and sette out glory for soch as be like the: for vnto you is paradysse opened, the tre of life is plantet, the tyme to come is prepared, plenteousnes made ready: a cite is builded for you, and a rest is prepared, yee perfecte goodnes and wyfdom. The rote of euell is marked from you, the weaknes and mothis hyd from you, z in to hell flyeth corrupcion in forgetfulnes. Sorowes are vanyshed awaye, and in the ende is shewed the treasure of immortallite. And therefore are thou no more questions, cōcernynge the multitude of them that perishe. For they haue taken libertie, despyed the hyst, thought some of his lawe, and forsaken his wayes.

Moreover, they haue troden downe his righteous, and sayde in their hert, that there is no God, yee and that wittingly, for they dye. For like as the thinge that I haue spoken of, is made ready for you: Enen so is thyself and payne prepared for them. For it was not his wil that man shulde come to naught: but they which be created, haue defyled the name of him that made them, and are vnto him, which prepared life for them. And therefore is my iudgment now at hande. These thinges haue I not shewed vnto all men, but vnto few: namely, vnto the, and to such as be like the.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde O LORD, now hast thou shewed me the multitude of the tokens, which thou wilt begynne to do at the last: but at what tyme and when, thou hast not shewed me.

The IX. Chapter.

Answered me then and saide: Meas sure thou the tyme diligently in it self, when thou seist that one parte of the tokens come to passe, which I haue tolde y before: so shalt thou vnderstande, that it is the very same tyme, wherein the 3yest will be gynn to vssit the worlde, which he made. And whā there shalbe sene earthquake and vproure of the people in the worlde, then shalt thou well vnderstande, that the most 3yest spake of those thinges, from the dayes that were before the, euen from the begynnynge.

For like as all that is made in the worlde, hath a begynnynge and ende, and the ende is manifest: Euen so the tymes also of the 3yest haue playne begynnynge in wonders and signes, and the ende in workynge and in tokens. And enery one that shall esaued, and shall be able to escape by his workes & by faith (wherin ye haue beleued) shall be preserved from the saide perils, and shall see my sauoure in my londe and within my borders, for I haue halowed me from the worlde. Then shall they be in carefulnesse, which now haue abused my waies: and they that haue cast them out despytefully, shall dwell in paynes.

B For such as in their life haue receaued benefites, and haue not knowne me, and they that haue abhorred my lawe, whyle they had yet fredome, and when they had yet open roome of amendement and conversion, & vnderstande not, but despyed it: y same must knowe it after death in payne. And therefore be thou nomore carefull, how the vngodly shalbe punyshed, & how the righteous shalbe saued, and whose the worlde is, and for whom the worlde, and when it is. Then answered I and sayde: I haue talked before & now I speake, and wyl speake also herafter, that there be many moo of them which perish, then shal be saued, like as the floude is greater then the droppes.

And he answered me, sayenge: like as the felde is, so is also the seide: as the floures be, so are the colours also: such as the woman is, such is also y worke: and as the husband man is himself, so is his husbandrye also. For it was the tyme of the worlde. And when I prepared for them that are now, or euer the worlde was made, when in they shulde dwell, then was there no man that withstode me. Now when enery one was, and the matter also in the worlde which is now prepared, and the moneth that ceaseth not, and the lawe which is vnsearcheable, their maners were corrupte. So I considered the worlde, and beholde, there was perell, because of y thoughtes that were come in to it. And I saue, and spared the greatly, and haue kepte me a wynebery of the grapes, and a plante from amonge many generacions. Let the multitude perish the, which are growne up in vayne, and let my grape & wynebery be kepte: euen my plante: for with greute labour haue I made it vp.

Nevertheless yf thou wilt take vpon the yet seven dayes mo (but thou shalt not fast in them) go thy waye then in to y felde of floures, where no house is brylde, and eate onely of the floures of the felde, taist not flesh, drinke no wine, but eate floures onely, praye vnto the 3yest continually, so will I come, and talke with the.

So I wente my waye and came in to the felde which is called Ardath (like as he commaunded me) and there I sat amonge y floures, and ate of the herbes of the felde, and y meate of the same satisfied me. After seven dayes I sat vpon the grasse, & my heart was vexed within me like as afore: and I opened my mouth, and beganne to talke before the 3yest, and saide: O LORD, thou y shewest thy self vnto vs, thou hast declared and opened thy self vnto oure fathers in the wyldernes, in a place where no man dwelleth, in a baren place, when they came out of Egypte, and thou spakest, sayenge: heare me O Israel, and make my wordes thou seide of Iacob. Beholde, I sowe my lawe in you, and I shal brynge frute in you, & ye shalbe honoured in it for euer. For oure fathers which receaued the lawe, kepte it not, and obserued not thy ordinaunces and statutes, & the frute of y lawe was not declared: for it might not, for why: it was thine. For they that receaued it, perished, because they kepte not y thinge that was sowne in them.

It is a custome when the ground receaueth seide, or the see a shipp, or a vessell meate and drynke, that, when it perisheth or is broken wherin a thinge is sowne, or wherin eny thinge is put: the thinges also perishe & are broken, which are sowne or putt therein. But vnto vs it hath not happened so: for we y haue receaued the lawe, perish in synne, and oure heart also which receaued the lawe: not withstandinge the lawe perisheth not, but remaineth in his labour.

And when I considered these thinges in my heart after this maner, I looked aboute me with myne eyes, and vpon the right syde I saue a woman, which mourned sore, made greute lamentacion, and wepte with loude voyce: hir clothes were rent in peces, & she had ashes vpon hir heade.

I The let I my thoughtes go, & I was in, & turned me vnto her, & sayde: wherfore wepest thou: why art thou so sory & discomforted? And she sayde vnto me: Syr, let me be wayle my self & take yet more sorowe: for I am sore vexed in my mynde, & brought very lowe. And I saide vnto her: what ayleth y? Or who hath done eny thinge to y: tell me. She sayde: I haue bene vnfrutefull and barren, and haue had an husband thirtie yeares. And these xxx. yeares I do nothinge els daye and night and all houres, but make my prayer to y 3yest. After thirtie yeares God herde me thy handmayden, looked vpon my misery, considred my trouble, and gaue me a sonne, and I was glad of him, so was my husband also and all my neighbours, and we gaue greute honoure vnto y Mightie. And I nourished him with greute trauayle. So when he grewe vp, & came to the tyme, that he shulde haue a wife, I made a feast.

The X. Chapter.

When it happened that when my sonne wente in to his chamber, he fell downe, and dyed: the ouerthrowe we all the lightes, and all my neighbours rose vp to comforte me. The toke I my rest vnto the secōde daye at night: & when they had all rested, & they might comforte me, I rested also, and rose vp by night, and fled, and am come hither in to this felde, as thou seist: and am purposed not to come in the cite, but to remaine here, and nether to eate ner drynke, but continually to mourne and to fast, vntill I dye.

Then let I my meditations and thoughtes fall, that I was in, and spake to her in displeasure: Thou foolish woman, seist thou not oure heuynes and mournyng, and what happeneth vnto vs: how Sion o mother is all woofull and sory, and how she is cleane brought downe and in misery: seinge we be all now in heuynes, & make oure mone (for we be all sorowfull.) As for the heuynes that thou takest, it is but for one sonne. Demaunde the earth, and she shal tell the, that it is she which ought (by reason) to mourne, for the fall of so many that growe vpon her. For from the begynnynge all men are borne of her, & other shal come: and beholde, they walke almost all into destruccion, and many of them shalbe rote out.

Who shulde then (by reason) make more mournyng, then she, that hath lost so greute a multitude: and not thou, which art sory but for one. But yf thou woldest saye vnto me: My mournyng is not like the mournyng of the earth, for I haue lost the frute of my body, which I bare with heuynes: as for the earth, a cordinge to the ordinaunce of y earth onely, so that many are gone awaye in her, as it is come to passe: Then saye I vnto the: like as thou hast borne with trauayle & sorowe, euen so the earth also from the begynnynge geneth hir frute vnto man, for him y make her. And therefore withholde thy sorowe and heuynes by thy self, and loke what happeneth vnto y, beare it strōgly. For yf thou iudgest the marck & ende of God to be righteous and good, and receauest his counsell in tyme, thou shalt be commended therein. Go thy waye then in to the cite to thy husbande.

And she sayde vnto me: that wyll I not do, I will not go in to the cite, but heare will I dye. So I commoned more with her, and sayde: Do not so, but be couceled, and folowe me: for how many falles hath Sion: Be of good comforte because of the sorowe of Jerusalem. For thou seist that oure Sanctuary is layed waist, oure altare broken, oure temple destroyed, oure playenge of instrumentes and synginge layed downe, the thankes geuyng put to sylence, & myrth is vanished awaye, the light of oure candelsstick is quenched, y Arke of the couenaunt is take from vs, all oure holy thinges are defyled, and the name that is called vpon ouer vs, is dishonoured, oure children are put to shame, oure prestes are brent, oure Levites are caried awaye in to captiuyte, oure virgins are defyled, and oure wyues rauyshed, oure righteous men spoyled, and oure Eldre destroyed, oure yongemen are brought in bōdage, and oure strōge worthies are become weak: and Sion (which seale is y greatest of all) is low sed vp from hir worshiipe: for she is deliuered into the handes of them that hate vs.

And therefore shake of y greute heuynes, & and putt awaye the multitude of sorowes: that the Nightie maye be mercifull vnto the, and that the Daye maye geue the rest from y labour and trauayle. And it happened, that whan I was talkyng with her, hir face dyd shyne & glyster, so that I was afrayed of her, and mused what it might be. And immediatly she cast out a greete voyce, very fearfull, so that y earth shoke at the noyse of the woman: and I looked, and beholde, the woman appeared vnto me nomore: but there was a cite buylded, and a place was shewed from the grounde and foundation.

Then was I afrayed, and cried with loude voyce, and sayde: where is Vriel the angel, which came to me at the first? For he hath caused me to come in many considerations and hye thoughtes, and myne ende is turned to corrupcion, and my prayer to rebuke. And as I was speakyng these wordes, he came vnto me, and looked vpon me, and I laye as one that had bene deed, and myne vnderstandinge was altered, and he toke me by the right hande, and comforted me, and set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde vnto me: what ayleth the? and why is thine vnderstandinge veyed? and the vnderstandinge of thy hert, and wherfore art thou sorry? And I sayde: Because thou hast forsaken me: and I haue done a cordinge vnto thy wordes, I wente into the selde, and there haue I sene thinges, that I am not able to expresse. He saide vnto me: Stode vp and be manly, and I shal geue the exortacion.

Then sayde I: Speake on to me my LORD, forsake me not, lest I dye in vayne: for I haue sene that I knewe not, & herde that I do not knowe. O! shall my vnderstandinge be disceaued, and my mynde? But now I beseeke the, that thou wilt shewe thy seruauent of this wonder. He answered me the and sayde: heare me, and I shall enforme the, and tell the wherfore thou art afrayed, for the Daye hath opened many secreete thynges vnto the.

He hath sene that thy waye is right, and that thou takest sorowe continually for thy people, and makest greete lamentacion for Sion: and therfore vnderstonde the vision which thou sawest a litle while agoo after this maner: Thou sawest a woman mourninge, and thou hast comforted her: Neuer theles now seist thou the licnes of the woman nomore, but thou thoughtest there was a cite buylded: and like as she tolde the of the fall of her sonne, so is this the answer:

The woman whom thou sawest, is Sion, and where as she tolde the, that she hath bene thirtie yeares vnfrutefull and barren, these are the xxx. yeares, wherin there was no offeringe made in her.

But after xxx. yeares Salomon buylded her, and offered, and then bare the barren a sonne. And where as she tolde the, that she mourned him with labour, that was the dwellinge of Jerusalem. But where as she tolde the, that she dyed in hir chamber, that is the fall of Jerusalem. And thou sawest hir licnesse, how she mourned for hir sonne: and what she happened vnto her, I haue shewed y. And now God seyth, that thou art sorry in thy mynde, and suffrest from y hert for her: and so hath he shewed the hir clearnesse, and the saymes of hir bewtye.

And therfore I had the remayne in the selde, where no house is buylded. For I knew y the Daye wolde shew this vnto the, therfore I commaunded the to go into the selde, where no foundation ner buyldinge is. For in the place wher the Daye wyll shewe his cite, there shall be no mans buyldinge. And therfore feare not, and let not thine hert be afrayed, but go thy waye in, and se the glorious and fayre buyldinge, and how greete it is, and how greete thou thinkest it after the measure of thine eyes, & then shalt thou heare as moch as thine eares maye comprehend. For thou art blessed aboue many other, and art called with the Daye, as y few. And tomorrow at night thou shalt remayne here, and so shalt y Daye shewe the visions of hye thinges, which he wyll do vnto them that dwell vpon earth in y last dayes. So I slepe the same night like as he commaunded me.

The XI. Chapter.

Then sawe I a dreame: and beholde, there came vp from y see an Aegle, which had xij. wynges and thre heades: And I sawe, and beholde, he spred his wynges ouer all the earth, and all the wyndes of the ayre blew in them, and so they were put together agayne. And I behelde, and out of his fethers there grew other litle contrary fethers: the heades rested, the head in the myddest was greater then the other, yet rested it with the residue.

Moroner I sawe, that the Aegle flew w his wynges, and raigned vpon earth, & ouer all them that dwell vpon the earth: and I sawe y all thinges vnder heauen were subiecte vnto him, and no man spake against him, no nor one creature vpon earth. I sawe also that the Aegle stode vp vpon his clawes, & gaue a sonnde w his fethers, & a voyce saye ge after this maner: watch not all together, slepe every mā in his owne place, & watch for a tyme, but let the heades be preserued at the last. Neuertheles I sawe, y the voyce wente not out of his heades, but from the myddest of his body. And I nombred his contrary fethers, & beholde, there were eight of them. And I looked, & beholde, vpon the right syde there arose one fether, & raigned ouer all the earth. And it happened, y whan it raigned, the ende of it came, & the place therof appeared nomore. So the nexte folowinge stode vp, & raigned, & had a greete tyme: & it happened, y whan it raigned, the ende of it came also like as the first, so that it appeared nomore.

Then came there a voyce vnto it, & sayde: heare thou y hast kepte in the earth so longe, this I saye vnto the, before thou begynnest to appeare nomore: There shal none after y attayne vnto thy tyme. Then arose the thirde, & raigned as the other afore, & appeared nomore also. So wote it with all the residue one after another, so y every one raigned, & the appeared nomore. The I looked, & beholde, in processe of tyme the fethers y folowed were set vp vpon the right syde, y they might rule also: and some of the ruled, but within a while they appeared nomore: for some of the were set vp, but ruled not. After this I looked, & beholde, y xij. fethers appeared nomore, and the two wynges: & there was nomore vpon the Aegles body, but two heades that rested, & sixe fethers. Then sawe I also, y the sixe fethers were parted in two, & remayned vnder the heade, y was vpon the right syde, for the foure cōtinued in their place. So I looked, and beholde, they that were vnder the wynges, thought to set vp them selues, and to haue the rule. Then was there one set vp, but shortly it appeared nomore, and the seconde were sooner awaye then the first. And I behelde, and lo, the two thought also by the selues to raigne: & whā they so thought, beholde, there waked one of the heades that were at rest, namely, it that was in the myddest, for that was the greater of the two heades. And then I sawe, that the two heades were fylled with him, and the heade was turned with them y were by him, & ate vp y two vnder wynges, y wolde haue raigned.

But this heade put y whole earth in feare, and bare rule in it, ouer all those y dwelt vpon earth with moch labour, and he had the gouernance of the worlde, ouer all the foules, that haue bene. After this I looked, and beholde, the heade that was in the myddest, suddenly appeared nomore, like as y wynges: then came the two heades, which ruled vpon earth, & ouer these that dwelt therein. And I behelde, & lo, the heade vpon the right syde, deuoured it that was vpon the left syde. And I herde a voyce, which sayde vnto me: loke before the, and conspie the thinge that thou seist. Then I sawe, and beholde, as it were a lyon that roareth, rennyng hastyly out of y wod, and he sent out a mans voyce vnto the Aegle, and sayde: heare thou, I wyll talke with the, and the Daye shal saye vnto the: Is it not thou that hast the victory of the foure beastes, whom I made to raigne vpon earth and in my worlde, and that y ende of their times might come thorow the?

And the fourth came, and overwonne all the beastes that were past, and had power ouer the worlde with greete fearfulness, and ouer the whole compasse of the earth w the most wicked labour, and so longe time dwelt he vpon the earth with disceate, & the earth hast thou iudged not with truerth. For thou hast troubled the meke, thou hast hurte the peaceable and quyet, thou hast loured lyers, and destroyed the dwellinges of them that brought forth frute, and hast cast downe the walles of such as dyd the no harme. Therfore is thy wrongeous dealinge and blasphemy come vp vnto the Daye, and thy pryde vnto the Nightie. The Daye also hath looked vpon the proude tymes, and beholde, they are ended, and their abhominacions are fulfilled. And therfore appeare nomore thou Aegle, and thy horrible wynges, and thy wicked fethers, and thy vngacions heades, and thy synfull clawes, and all thy vayne body: that the earth maye be refreshed, and come agayne to herself, whan she is deliuered from thy violence, and that she maye hope for y iudgment and mercy of him that made her.

The XII. Chapter.

And it happened whā y Aegle spake the se wordes vnto y Aegle, & y heade y afore had y vpperhade, appeared nomore: nether dyd y foure wynges appeare any more, y came to hi, & were sett vp to raigne, & their kyngdome was small & full of vproure.

And I sawe, & beholde, they appeared nomore, & y whole body of y Aegle was biēt, & the earth was in greete feare. Then waked I out of the trance of my mynde, and from greete feare, and sayde vnto my spiete: Lo, this hast thou geuen me, in y thou searchest out the wayes of the Daye: lo, yet am I weary in my mynde, and very weake in my spiete.

and litle strength is there in me, for the greete feare that I receaved this night. Therefore wil I now beseeke the hyst, & he wyl comforte me vnto the ende, & I sayde: LORDE LORDE yf I haue founde grace before thy sight, and yf I am iustified with y before many other, & yf my prayer be come vp before thy face, comforte me then, and shewe me thy seruauent the interpretation & playne differēce of this horrible sight, that thou mayest perfectly comforte my soule: for thou hast iudged me worthy, to shewe me y last of tymes.

Dan 7. And he sayde vnto me: this is the interpretation of this sight, The Aegle whom thou sawest come vp from the see, is the kyngdome which was sene in the vision of thy brother Daniel, but it was not expounded vnto him, for now I declare it vnto the.

C Beholde, the dayes come, that there shal ryse vp a kyngdome vpon earth, and it shal be feared aboue all the kyngdomes y were before it. In the same kyngdome shal xij. kynges raigne, one after another. For the secōde shal begynne to raigne, and shal haue more tyme the other, & this do y xij. wynges signifie, which thou sawest. As for the voyce that spake, and that thou sawest go out from the heades but not from y body, it betokeneth, that after the tyme of that kyngdome there shall aryse greete stryuynges, and it shal stonde in parell of fallynge: neuertheles it shal not yet fall, but shal be set in to his begynnyng. And y eight vnderwynges which thou sawest haue vnto y wynges of hi, betokene, y in hi there shal aryse eight kynges, whose tyme shal be but small, & their yeares swift, & two of them shal beare. But whan the middest tyme cometh, there shal be foure kepte in the tyme, whan his tyme begynneth to come that it maye be ended, but two shal be kepte vnto y ende.

And where as thou sawest thre heades restinge, this is the interpretation: In his last shal the hyst rayse vp thre kyngdomes, and call many agayne in to the, & they shal haue the dominion of the earth, and of those that dwell therein, with moch labo aboue all those y were before the. Therefore are they called y heades of the Aegle: for it is they y shal bringe forth his wickednes agayne, & y shal perforce me & fynish his last. And where as thou sawest, that y greete heade appeared nomore, it signifieth, that one of them shal dye vpon his bed, & yet with payne, for the two that remaine, shal be slayne with the swerde. For the swerde of the one shal deuoure the other, but at the last shal he fall thorow the swerde himself.

And where as thou sawest two vnderwynges vpon the heade that is on the right hande, it signifieth, that it is they, who the hyst hath kepte vnto their ende: this is a small kyngdome, & full of trouble. The 2. vnderwynges thou sawest rysinge vp out of the wood and roaringe, and speakinge vnto the Aegle, and rebukinge him for his vnrightheousnesse, is the wynde, which the hyst hath kepte for them and for their wickednesse vnto the ende: he shal reprove them, and rente them asunder before them. For he shal sett them in ayng before the iudgment, and shal rebuke them: for the residue of my people shal be lyuer with trouble, those y be perswaded out of myne endes: and he shal make them iust vntyll the commynge of the daye of iudgment, wherof I haue spoken vnto the from the begynnyng. This is the dreame that thou sawest, and this is the interpretation. Thou only hast bene mete to knowe the secreete of the hyst.

Therefore wyte all these thinges y thou hast sene in a boke, and hyde them, and teach the the wyse in the people, whose hertes thou knowest maye comprehend and kepe the secretes. But wayte thou here y self yet seven dayes moore, that it maye be shewed the, what so euer it pleaseth the hyst to declare vnto the, and with that he wente his waye.

And whan all the people perceived, y the seven dayes were past, & I not come agayne in to y cite, they gathered them all together from the least vnto the most, & came vnto me, and sayde: what haue we offended the? and what euell haue we done agaynst the, y thou forsakest vs, & syttest here in this place? For of all people thou only art left vs, as a grape of the vyne, and as a candell in a dark place, and as an haueu & shippe preserved from y tēpest. Haue we not els aduersite ynough, but thou must forsake vs? Were it not better for vs, that we had bene brennt with Sion? For we are no better, then they y dyed than and they wepte w loude voyce. Then answered I the & sayde: Be of good comforte O Israel, & be not heuy thou house of Jacob: for y hyst hath you in remembrance, & y mightie hath not forgotte you in tēracio. As for me, I haue not forsake you, nether am I departed from you: but am come in to this place to praye, because of y mysery of Israel, that I might see mercy for y lowe estate of y Sion. And now go y waye home euery man, and after these dayes wyl I come vnto you. So the people wete their waye in to the cit-like as I commaunded them: but I remaine still in the selde seven dayes, as y angell had me, and I ate onely of the floures of the selde, and had my meate of the herbes in those dayes.

The XIII. Chapter.

And it happened after the sene dayes, & I dreamed a dreame by night. And beholde, there arose a wynde from the see, that it moued all the floudes therof. And I loked, and beholde, the man was stronge and increased with the cloudes of heauen: and whan he turned his countenance to cōsidre, all the thinges trembled that were sene vnder him: and whan the voyce wente out of his mouth, all they brennt that herde him, like as the earth whan it feleth the fyre.

After these I sawe, & beholde, there was gathered together a multitude of men out of nombre from the foure wyndes of the heauē, to fight agaynst y man, that came out from y see. And I loked, & beholde, he graued himself a greete mountayne, and flew vp vpon it. But I wolde haue sene the border or place, wherout the hill was grauen, & I coude not.

I sawe after these, y all they which came to fight agaynst him, were sore afraied, and yet durst they fight. Neuertheles whan he sawe the fearnesse and violence of the people, he nether lift vp his hande ner helde swerde ner any weapon: but onely (as I sawe) he sent out of his mouth as it had bene a blast of fyre, and out of his lippes y wynde of the flamme: and out of his tōge he cast out spares and stoumes, and they were all myrte together: the blast of fyre, the wynde of the flamme, and y greete stoume, & fell with a rushe vpon y people, which was prepared to fight: but the vp euerychone: so that of the innumerable multitude there was nothinge sene, but onely dust & smoke. Whan I sawe this, I was afraied.

Afterwarde sawe I the same man come downe from the mountayne, and callinge vnto him another peaceable people: and there came moch people vnto him: some were glad some were sorry, some of them were bounde, so that they were caried and brought forth.

Then was I sicke thorow greete feare, and I awaked, and sayde: thou hast shewed y seruauent all y widders fro y begynnyng, & hast counted me worthy, y thou mightest receaue my prayer: shewe me now yet the interpretation of this dreame. For thus I cōsidre in my understandinge: Wo vnto them that shal be left in those dayes, & moch more wo vnto the

that are not left behynde: for they that were not left, were in heuynes.

Now vnderstonde I y thinges that are layed vp in the latter dayes, which shal happen vnto them, and to those that are not left behynde. Therefore are they come in to greete parells, and many necessities, like as these dreames declare. Yet is it easier, y he which suffreth hurte, come in these, then to passe awaye as a cloude out of the woulde, and now to se y thinges y shal happen in y last.

Then answered he me, and sayde: The interpretation of the sight shal I shewe the, and I wil open vnto the, the thinge y thou hast requyred. For thou hast spoken of them that are left behynde, and this is the interpretation. He that taketh awaye the parell in that tyme, hath kepte himself. They that be fallen in to harme, are such as haue workes & saith vnto the Most mightie. Knowe this therefore, that they which be left behynde, are more blessed, then they that be deed. This is the meanyng of the vision. Where as thou sawest a man commynge vp from the depe of the see, y same is he whom God the hyst hath kepte a greete season, which by his owne self shal deliuer his creature, & he shal ordre the that are left behynde. And where as thou sawest, y out of his mouth there came a blast of wynde, fyre & stoume, & how y he lift vp nether swerde ner weapon, but y the russhinge in of him destroyed the whole multitude, y came to fight agaynst him: it signifieth, that the dayes come, whan God wyl deliuer the y are vpon earth, & in a trauance of mynde shal he come vpon the, y dwell in the earth. And one shal undertake to fight agaynst another, one cite agaynst another, one place agaynst another, one people agaynst another, & one realme agaynst another. Whan this cometh to passe, then shal the tokens come, that I shewed the before: and the shal my sonne be declared, who thou sawest clymme vp as a mā. And whan all y people heare his voyce, euery man shal in their owne lōde leaue the battayll, y they haue one agaynst another, and an innumerable multitude shal be gathered together, as they that be willinge to come and to ouercome him by fightinge. But he shal stōde vpon the toppe of the mount Sion. Neuertheles Sion shal come, & shal be shewed, beyng prepared & buylded for all men, like as thou sawest the hill grauen forth without any handes. But my sonne shal rebuke the people y are come for their wickednes, with the tempest, and for their euell ymaginacions: and their paynes wherwith they shal be punyssh ed, are lickened vnto the flamme: and with out eny labour shal he destroye them, euen by the lawe, which is copared vnto the fyre.

E And where as thou sawest, that he gathe red another peaceable people vnto hi: those are the ten trybes, which were caried awaye presoners out of their owne londe, in the tyme of Oseas the kynge, whom Salmanasar the kynge of Assiria toke prisoner, and caried them ouer y water, and so came they in to a nother londe.

But they gaue them this counsell, y they shulde leane the multitude of the heithen, and to go forth in to a farther countre, where ne uer man ynde dwelt: that they might there keepe their statutes, which they neuer kepte in their owne lande. And so they entred in at the narrow passages of the water of Euphrat es, and God shewed tokens for the, and hel de styll the floude tyll they were passed ouer:
for thorow that countre there was a greate waye, namely of a yere and an half iourney, for the same region is called Asareth. Then dwelt they there vnto the latter tyme: and when they come forth agayne, y they shall holde styll the sprynges of the streame a gayne, that they maye go thorow, therfore sawest thou the multitude with peace. And they that be left behynde of thy people, are those that be founde within my border. Now whan he destroyeth the multitude that is gathered together, he shal defende his people that remayne, and then shal he shew them greate wonders.

S Then sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, shew me this: wherfore haue I sene the man com myng vnto the depe of the see?

And he sayde vnto me: Like as thou cast nether seke out ner knowe these thinges that are in the depe of the see, enen so maigest thou not se my sonne, or those that be with him, but in the tyme of the daye. This is the inter pretacion of the dreame which thou sawest, therfore thou onely art here lightened: for thou hast forsaken thine owne lawe, and ap plied thy diligence vnto myne, and sought it.
Thy life hast thou ordred in wysdome, and hast called vnderstandinge thy mother, and therfore haue I shewed the y treasure of the hysse. After the dayes I wil shew the mo re, and talke with the at more large, yee heuy and wonderous thinges wyl I declare vnto
the.

Then wente I forth in to y felde, genyng praysse and thankes greatly vnto God, becau se of his wonders which he dyd in tyme, and because he governeth the same, and shew is in tyme, and there I satt the dayes.

The XIII. Chapter.

S Pon the thirde daye I satt vnder a oke tre, then came there a voyce me out of the bush, z sayde: Esdras.
Esdras. And I sayde: here I am LORDE, and stode vp vpon my fete. The spake he to me: In the bush dyd I appeare vnto Mo ses, z talked w him, wha my people sene in Egipte, and I sent him, and led my people out of Egipte, z brought him vnto y mount Sion, where I helde him by me a long sa son, and tolde him my wonderous wordes, and shewed him y secretes of the tymes, the ende, and commaunded him, saye: The se wordes shalt thou declare, z not hyde the.
And now I saye vnto the, that thou laye vp in thine hert the dreames that thou hast se ne, and the interpretacons which I haue shewed the: for thou shalt be receaued of all, thou shalt be turned and remayne w my coun cell, and with such as be like the, vntill tyme be ended. For the worlde hath lost his youth, and the tymes begynne to wane o ld. For the tyme is deuoyded in to twelue partes, and ten partes of it are gone all ready, and half of the tenth parte: yet remayneth that that, which is after y half of y tenth parte.

Therfore prepare and ordre thy house, and resourme thy people: comforte soch of them as be in trouble: and tell now of the destru cion: let go from the mortall thoughtes awaye the burthens of man: put of the me te nature: laye vp in some place y thoughtes that are most heuy vnto the, and haist the fyt from these tymes: for soch euell z wick nesse as thou hast now sene happed, shal do yet moch worse. For the weate of the worlde and the tymes, the more synners wickednesse increase, in them that dwell vnto earth. For the truth is fled farre awaye, z synge is hard at hande. For now haue the visions come, that thou hast sene.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde, O LORDE, I wyl go as thou hast commaunded me, and resourme the people which are presen
t. But they y shal be borne afterwarde, wh wyl exhorte or rebuke the: Thus the worlde is set in darcknes, and they y dwell therein, without light: for thy lawe is kyndled, becau se no man knoweth the thinges that are do ne of the, or that shalbe done. If I haue de grace before the, sende the holy goost to me, and I shal wryte all that hath be ne done in the worlde sence the begynnyng which was wrytten in thy lawe, that men maye fynde the path, and that they which wyl lyue in the latter dayes, maye lyue.

And he answered me, saye: Go y waye, gather thy people together, z saye vnto the,
that they seke the not for xl. dayes, but loke thou gather the many bore trees, and take with the Sarea, Dabua, Selemia, Echanus and Asial, these fyue, which are ready to wry te swiftly, and come hither, and I shal light a candle of vnderstandinge in thine hert, which shal not be put out, tyll the thinges be per formed which thou shalt begynne to wry
te. And then shalt thou declare some thinges openly vnto the perfecte, and some thinges shalt thou shew secretly vnto y wyse. Tomo row this houre shalt thou begynne to wryte.

Then wrote I forth (as he commaunded me)
and gathered all y people together, and say de: Heare these wordes of Israel: Our fathers from the begynnyng were straunges in E gipte, from whence they were deliuered, and receaued the lawe of life, which they kepte not, which ye also haue trasgressed after the.
Then was this londe and the londe of Sion parted amoge yeu by the lot to possesse. But ye fathers and ye yb selues also haue done unrighteousnes, z haue not kepte the wayes which the hysse commaunded you. And for so moch as he is a righteous iudge, he toke from you in tyme the thinge that had geuen you.
And now are ye here and ye brethren amoge
you. Therfore yf so be that ye wil subdue yb owne vnderstandinge, and resourme youre hert, ye shal be kepte aliue, z after death shal ye opteyne mercy. For after death shal the iudgment come, whan we shal lyue agayne:
and then shal the names of the righteous be manifest, and y names of the vngodly with their workes shalbe declared. Let no man ther fore come now vnto me, ner are eny question at me these xl. dayes.

So I toke the fyue men (as he commaun ded me) and we wente in to the felde, and re mained there. The next daye a voyce called me saye: Esdras. Open thy mouth, z dryn ke that I geue the. The opened I my mouth, z beholde, he reached me a full cuppe, which was full of water, but the colde of it was li ke fyre. And I toke it and dranke. And wha
I had dronken it, my hert had vnderstandin ge, and wysdome grew in my brest: for my spirit was kepte in remembraunce, and my mouth was opened and shut nomore. The hysse gaue vnderstandinge vnto the fyue men, y they wrote y hye thinges of the night, which they vnderstode not. But in the night they are bred: as for me, I spake in the daye, and helde not my tonge by night. In xl. day es, they wrote two hundred z foure boke.

And it happened wha the xl. dayes were fulfilled, that the hysse spake sayenge: The first that thou hast wrytten, speake openly, y the worthy and unworthy maye rede it. But keepe y lxx. last, y thou mayest shew it onely to soch as be wyse amonge thy people. For in them is the spryng of vnderstandinge, the fountayne of wysdome, and the streame of knowlege. And I dyd so.

The XV. Chapter.

Beholde, speake thou in the eares of my people the wordes of prophecie, which I wyl put in y mouth, saith the LORDE: and cause them to be wrytten in a letter, for it is the truth. Feare not the ymaginacions against y, let not y vnfaichful nes of them trouble the, that speake agaynst
the. For all the vnfaichfull shal dye in their vnfaichfulnes. Beholde saith the LORDE, I wil brynge plagues vpon the worlde: y swer de, hunger, death and destruccion, for wicked nes hath the vpper hande in all y earth, and their shamefull workes are fulfilled.

Therfore saith the LORDE: I wil hol de my tonge nomore vnto their wickednesse, which they do so vngodly: nether wil I suf fre them in the thinges, that they deale with all so wickedly. Beholde, the innocent bloude of the troubled crieth vnto me, and the soules of the righteous complayne cōtynually: and therfore saith the LORDE, I wil surely aue ge, and receaue vnto me all the innocent blou de from amonge them.

Beholde, my people, is led as a flock of she pe to be slayne, I wil not suffre them now to dwel in Egipte, but wyl brynge them cūe with a mightie hande and a stretched out ar me, and smyte it with plagues as afore, and wyl destroye all the londe off it. Egipte shal mourne, and the foundations of it shalbe syncten with the plague and punysshment, y
God shal brynge vpon it.

They that tyll y grounde, shal mourne, for their sedes shal be destroyed thorow the blas tinge and hale, and an horrible starre. Wo worth y worlde and them that dwell therein, for y swerde z their destruccion draweth nyer z one people shal stode vp to fight agaynst a nother, z swerdes in their handes. For me shal be vnstedfast, and some shal do violence vnto other: they shal not regarde their kynge and prynces, the wayes of their doinges and ha belinges in their power. A man shal desyre to go in to the cite, z shal not be able. For he cause of their pryde & cities shalbe brought in feare, & houses shal shake, and men shalbe astrayed. A man shal haue no pitie vpon his neighbour, but one shal prouoke another vnto battayll, to spoyle their goodes because of the hunger of bled, and because of the greate trouble.

Behold, I gather & call together all the kynges of y<sup>e</sup> earth which are from the vpry synge, from the south, from the east and Libanus to turne vnto them, and restore the thinges that they haue geue them. Like as they do yet this daye vnto my chosen, so wil I do also, and recōpense the in their bosome. Thus sayeth y<sup>e</sup> LORDE God: My right hande shal not spare y<sup>e</sup> synners, and my swerde shal not cease ouer them, that shed the innocēt bloude vpon earth. The feare is gone out frō his wrath, and hath consumed the foundations of the earth, and the synners like the strawe that is kindled. Wo worth them that synne, and kepe not my commaundementes, saith the LORDE. I wil not spare them. So youre waye ye children from violence, defyle not my Sanctuary: for the LORDE knoweth all the that synne agaynst him, and therfore deliuereth he them vnto death and destrucciō: for now are the plagges come vpon the worlde, & ye shal remayne in the. For God shal not deliuer you, because ye haue synned agaynst him.

Behold, an horrible vision cometh frō the east, where generacions of Dragons shal come out, and the people of the Arabes with many charrettes, and the multitude of them shalbe as the wynde vpon earth, that all they which heare them ragynge in their wrath, maye feare and be afrayed: and as the wynde bores out of y<sup>e</sup> wod, so shal they go out, and with greate power shal they come, and stonde fightinge with the, and shal waiste the porcion of the londe of the Assirians.

And then shal the Dragons haue the vpper hande, not remembreinge their byrth, and shal turne aboute swearinge together in greate power, to persecute them. But these shalbe afrayed, and kepe sylene at their power, and shal fle: and one out of the londe of the Assirians shal besegethe, and consume one of the, and in their hoost shal be feare and drede, and strife amonge their kynges.

Sehold, cloudes from the east, and from the north vnto the south, and they are very horrible to loke vpon, full of wrath and storme. They shal smyte one vpon another, and they shal smyte at y<sup>e</sup> greate starre vpon earth and their starre, and the bloude shalbe from the swerde vnto the hely, and the smoke vnto y<sup>e</sup> Camels lytter: And there shal be greate fearfulness and tremblinge vpon earth, and they that se the wrath, shal be afrayed, and tremblinge shal come vpon them.

And then shal there come greate raynes from y<sup>e</sup> south and from the north, and from the west, and from the stormy wynde from the east, and shal smyte them vpon agayne, & the cloude which herayned vpon them, and the starre to cause feare toward y<sup>e</sup> east and west wynde, shalbe destroyed, & the greate cloudes shal belist vp, and y<sup>e</sup> mightie cloudes full of wrath, and the starre, that they maye make all the earth afrayed, and they dwell therein, and that they maye poure ouer all places an horrible starre, fyre and helle and flyenge swerdes, and many waters: all felde maye be full, and all ryuers, & they shal breake downe the cities & walles, mountaynes & hylles, all trees, wod, and the grasse of the medowes, and all their frute. And they shal go stedfast vnto Babilon, and make her afrayed, they shal come to her and beseghe her: the starre and all wrath shal they poure out vpon her.

Then shal the dust and smoke go vpon the heauen, and all they that be aboute, shal bewaile her: and they that remayne vnder her, shal do seruyce vnto them that haue put her in feare. And thou Asia y<sup>e</sup> consume thyself also vpon the hope of Babilon, and an a worshipec of hir personne: Wo be vnto the thou wretch, because thou hast made thyself like vnto her, & hast deceyved y<sup>e</sup> daughters in whom dome, that they might tryumphe and please thy louers, which haue allwaye desired to mytte whordome wth the: thou hast folowed the abhominable cite in all hir wordes and in venciōs.

Therfore sayeth God: I wil sende plagges vpon the, wyddowhede, pouerte, hōger, warres, and pestilence, to waiste thy houses with destrucciō and death, and the glory of thy power shal be dryed vp as a floure, whan y<sup>e</sup> heate aryseth y<sup>e</sup> is sent ouer the. Thou shalt be sicke as a poore wif that is plagued & beate of women: so y<sup>e</sup> mightie and louers shal not be able to receaue the. Wolde I so haue the saith the LORDE: If thou haddest not allwaye slayne my chosen, exaltinge the frute of thy handes, and sayde ouer their death, whan thou wast drōnkē: set forth the battayl of thy countenance.

The rewarde of thy whordome shalbe recompensed the in thy bosome, therfore shal thou receaue a rewarde.

Like as thou hast done vnto my chosen (sayeth the LORDE) even so shal God do vnto the, and shal deliuer the in to the plage. Thy childre shal dye of hōnger, & thou shalt fall thorow y<sup>e</sup> swerde. Thy cities shalbe broken downe, & all thine shal perish wth the swerde in y<sup>e</sup> felde. They y<sup>e</sup> be in y<sup>e</sup> mountaynes shal dye of hōnger, & eate their owne flesh, & drinke their owne bloude for very hōger of bled & thirst of water. Thou unhappie shalt come thorow the see, & receaue plagges agayne.

In the passage they shal cast downe the slayne cite, & shal rote out one parte of y<sup>e</sup> lond, & consume the porcion of thy glory. They shal treade the downe like stubble, & they shal be thy fyre and shal consume the: & thy cities and thy londe, thy wod & thy frutefull trees shal they burne vp with the fyre. Thy children shal they cary awaye captiue, and loke what thou hast, they shal spoyle it, and make the bewtie of thy face.

The XVI. Chapter.

Wo vnto the Babilon & Asia, wo vnto y<sup>e</sup> Egypte & Syria: gyde y<sup>e</sup> selnes wth clothes of sack & hayre, and mourne for youre childre, be sory, for y<sup>e</sup> destrucciō is at honde. A swerde is sent vpon you, & who wil turne it back: A fyre is kyndled amonge you, & who wil quench it: plagges are sent vnto you, & what is he that wil dryue them awaye: Maye eny man dryue awaye an hōgrie lyon in the wod: Or maye eny man quench the fyre in the stubble: whan it hath begonne to burne: Maye one turne agayne the arrowe, y<sup>e</sup> is shot of a stronge archer: The mightie LORDE sendeth the plagges, & what is he that wil dryue them awaye: The fyre is kyndled & gone forth in his wrath, & what is he that wil quench it: he shal cast lightenynges, & who shal not feare: he shal thunder, and who shal not be afrayed: The LORDE shal threaten, & who shal not utter lybe beaten to poulder at his presence: The earth quateth, & the foundations therof: y<sup>e</sup> see aryseth vp wth waves from the depe, and the floudes of it are vncyete, & the fishes therof also before the LORDE, & before the glory of his power. For stronge is his right hande that holdeth the bowe, his arrowes that he shuterh, are sharpe, & shal not mysse, whan they begynne to be shot in to y<sup>e</sup> endes of the worlde.

Behold, y<sup>e</sup> plagges are sent, & shal not turne agayne, tyll they come vpon earth. The fyre is kyndled, & shal not be put out, tyll it consume the foundations of the earth. Like as an arrowe which is shot of a mightie archer, retornech not backward, enen so y<sup>e</sup> plagges y<sup>e</sup> shal be sent vpon earth, shal not turne agayne. Wo is me, wo is me, who wil deliuer me in those dayes: The begynnyng of sorowes & greate mourninge: the begynnyng of derth & greate death: the begynnyng of warres, & the powers shal stonde in feare: the begynnyng of euels, & they shal tremble euery one. What shal I do in these thinges, whan the plagges come: Beholde, hōger and plage, trouble & anguyshe are sent, as scourges for amendement. But for all these thinges they shal not turne frō their wickednesses, ner be allwaye mynde full of y<sup>e</sup> scourges.

Behold, vitayles shalbe so good cheape vpon earth, & they shal thinke them selues to be in good case: and enen then shal myschese growe vpon earth, warres, derth & greate disquietnes. For many of them that dwell vpon earth shal perish of hōger, & the other that escape the hōger, shal the swerde destroye: & the deed shalbe cast out as donge, & there shalbe no man to cōforte them. For y<sup>e</sup> earth shalbe waisted, & the cities shalbe cast downe: there shalbe no man left to tyll y<sup>e</sup> earth & to sowe it. The trees shal geue frute, & who shal plucke the of & gather them: The grapes shal be ripe, & who shal treade the: For all places shalbe desolate of me, so that one man shal desyre to se another, or to heare his voyce. For of one whole cite there shalbe ten left, & twos in the felde, which shal hyde the selues in the thicke bushes, & in the clyffes of stones: like as whan there remayne thre or foure olyues vpon the olyue tre, or as whan a vynyarde is gathered, there are left some grapes, of them that diligētly soughe thorow the vynyarde.

Euen so in those dayes there shalbe thre or foure left, for the y<sup>e</sup> search their houses wth the swerde. And the earth shalbe left waiste, & the felde therof shal waxe olde: and hir wayes and all hir pathes shal growe full of thornes, because no man shal trauallye there thorow. The daughters shal mourne, hauinge no bydegromes: the women shal make lamentacion, hauinge no husbādes, their daughters shal mourne, hauinge no helpe of their bydegrome. In the warres shal they be destroyed, & their husbādes shal perish of hōnger. O ye seruantes of the LORDE, heare these thinges, & marke the. Beholde, the worde of the LORDE, & receaue it: behold, the plagges drawe nye, & are not slack in tarienge. Like as a trauallyng woman, which after y<sup>e</sup> moneth brigeeth forth a sonne, whan the houre of the byrth is come, an houre two or thre a fox that the paynes come vpo hir body. 2 whan the childe cometh to the byrth, they tary not the twyncklynge of an eye: For so shall not y plages be slack to come vpon earth, 2 the wolde shal meure ne, 2 sorowes shal come vpo it on euery syde.

E O my people, heare my woide, make you redy to the battayll: 2 in all euell be euen as pylgryms vpon earth. He y selleth, let him be as he that flyeth his waye: 2 he y byeth, as one that wil lese. Who so occupieth marchaundies, as he that wynneth not: 2 he that buyldeth, as he that shall not dwell therein: he that soweth, as one y shal not reape: he that twysteth the vynyarde, as he that shal not gather the grapes: they that mary, as they that shal get no children: 2 they y marry not, as the wyddowes: 2 therfore they y laboure, labo in vayne. For straungers shal reape their frutes, 2 spoyle their goodes, euer chroweth their houses, 2 take their childre captiue, for in captiuite 2 hunger shal they get children. And they that occupie their marchaundies w robbery, how longe dede they their cities, their houses, their possessions 2 personnes: the more wil I punyssh them for their synnes, sayeth the LORDE. Like as an where enuyeth an honest woman, so shal righteousnes hate iniquyte, whan she decteth hir self, and shal accuse her to hir face, whan he cometh that defendeth, which shal make inquisicio for all synne vpo earth. And therfore be not ye like there vnto, ner to the workes therof: for or euer it be longe, iniquite shalbe taken awaye out of the earth, and righteousnes shal raigne amonge you.

S Let not the synner saye, that he hath not synned: for coles of fyre shal burne vpon his heade, which saith before the LORDE God 2 his glory: I haue not synned. Beholde, the LORDE knoweth all y workes of men, their ymaginacions, their thoughtes 2 their herres. For he spake but the worde: let the earth be made, 2 it was made: let the heauē be made, 2 it was made. In his worde were y starres made, 2 he knoweth the nombre of them. He searcheth the grounde of the depe, 2 the treasures therof: he hath measured the see, 2 what it conteyneth. He hath shunt the see in the myddest of the waters, and w his worde hath he hanged the earth vpon the waters. He spredeth out the heauen like a vowe, vpon the waters hath he founded it. In the deserte and drye wyldernes hath he made sprynges of water, and poles vpo the toppe of the mountaynes, y the floudes might poure downe from y stony rockes to water the earth. He made man, and put his hert in the myddest of y body, and gaue him breth, life and vnderstandinge, yee and the spere of y Allmyghtie God, which made all thynges, and hath searched the groude of all the secretes of the earth.

He knoweth youre ymaginacions 2 inuencions, and what ye thynke whan ye synne, 2 wolde hyde youre synnes. Therfore hath y LORDE searched and sought out all y workes, and he shal bewraye you all. And whan y synnes are brought forth, ye shal be ashamed before men, and youre owne synnes shal be youre accusers in that daye. What wil ye do? O: how wil ye hyde youre synnes before God and his angels? Beholde, God himself is the iudge, feare him, leane of from youre synnes, and forget youre vnrightheousnes, and medle no more with them: so shal God lede you forth, and deliuer you from all trouble. For beholde, the heate of a greete multitude is kyndled ouer you, and they shal take awaye certayne of you, and fede the ydlew Idoles: and they that cosent vnto them, shal be had in derision, laughed to scorne, 2 trodden vnder fote.

For vnto the places there shalbe a place, and in the next cities a greete insurreccion vpon those that feare y LORDE. They shal be like mad men, they shal spare no man: they shal spoyle and waiste soch as feare the LORDE, their goodes shal they take from them, and shute them out of their houses. Then shal it be knowne who are my chosyn, 2 they shalbe tryed as the golde in the fyre. Heare O ye my beloued, saith the LORDE: beholde, the dayes of trouble are at hande, but I wil deliuer you from the same. Denot ye a fraied, dispayre not, for God is youre capteyne.

Who so kepeth my comandementes and preceptes (sayeth the LORDE God) let not youre synnes weye you downe, 2 let not youre vnrightheousnes be lift vp. Wo be vnto the that are subdued vnto their synnes, and tangled in their wickednes: like as a felde is hedged in with busshes, and the path therof covered with thornes, y no man maye trauallye thowrow: and so is he taken, and cast in the fyre, and brent.

The boke of Tobias.

What this boke conteyneth.

- Chap. I. Of the kyned, life and godly conuersation of Tobias.
- Chap. II. The longynge compassion that Tobias sheweth in burynge the deed, for the which cause he is hated and persecuted. God nurreth him with blyndnes. His wyfe casteth him in the deth.
- Chap. III. Tobias prayeth hertely vnto God, for the trouble and captiuite of himself and the people. Of Sara the daughter of Raguel.
- Chap. IIII. Tobias teacheth his sonne in the feare of God.
- Chap. V. The sonne obeyeth the father, and goeth by his carade. God prouydeth mercifully for him, and sendeth his angell to be his gyde.
- Chap. VI. In their iourney they take a fish, wherof the angell commaundeth him to kepe the hert, the gall and the leuer, and telleth him wherto it is good.
- Chap. VII. They come to Raguel, which receaith them, louyngly, and marieth his daughter Sara vnto Tobias.
- Chap. VIII. Tobias goinge to bed with his wyfe, ordeith him self as the angell had him, and so both he and his wyfe are preserued from euell.
- Chap. IX. Tobias sendeth the angell vnto Gabelas for the money.
- Chap. X. Tobias father and mother lōge sore for his commynge: And Raguel seyng that he can kepe him no longer, sendeth him awaie with his wife.
- Chap. XI. They retorne home, and are welcommed ioyfully. Olde Tobias hath his sight agayne. They reioyse alltogether, and genethis les vnto God.
- Chap. XII. The father and the sonne wolde saye reward the angell. Jewell haue nothinge: but sheweth them what he is.
- Chap. XIII. Tobias the elder prayseth God, & exorteth other mē to be thankfull vnto him.
- Chap. XIII. Tobias beyng now olde, prophecieth the destruccio of Ninue, and the prosperous health of Israel. The sonne forsaketh the sinfull cite, as his father had him, & goeth to his father in lawe.

The first Chapter.

Tobias was of the trybe and cite of Nephtali, which lyeth in the hye countrees of Galile aboue Naason the waye to warde the west, hauynge the cite of Sephet vpon the left syde.

Though he was taken prisoner in the dayes of Salmanasar kynge of the Assirians, neuertheles beyng in captiuite, he forsoke not y waye of trouth: In so moch that what so euer he might gett, he parted it dai liewith his fellow prisoners 2 brethien, that were of his kynred. And though he were yonger the all in the trybe of Nephtali, yet dyd not he behane himself childishly in his workes. And whan all the other wente to y golde calues, which Jeroboam the kynge of Israel had made, he himself alone fled all their companies, and gat him to Jerusalem vnto the temple of the LORDE, and there worshipped y LORDE God of Israel, saith fully offeringe all his first frutes and tithes, so that in the thirde yeare he ministred all the tithes vnto the straungers and conuerres. These and soch like thynges dyd he acorde to the lawe of God, whan he was yet but yonge.

But whan he was a man, he toke out of his owne trybe a wyfe called Anna, and of her he begat a sonne, whom he called after his owne name, and taught him from his youth vp, to feare God, and to refraine from all synne.

Now whan he with his wife, his sonne and with all his kynred was come in captiuite vnto Ninue, what tyme as they all are of the meates of the heithē, he kepte his sonle, and was neuer desyled in their meates. And for so moch as he was myndefull of the LORDE in all his hert, God gaue him fauoure in the presence of Salmanasar the kynge, which gaue him power to go where he wolde, and so had he liberte to do what him list.

So wente Tobias vnto all them that were in prison, and comforted them, and gaue them wholsome exortacions. And whan he came to Nages a cite of the Medes, hauynge tentacles of syluer (of y thynges wherewith the kynge had honoured him) and sawe amonge a greete company of people of his kynred, one Gabelas (which was of his owne trybe) beyng in necessite, he gaue him the sayde weight of syluer vnder an handwritinge.

After a longe season whan Salmanasar the kynge was deed, and Sennacherib his sonne reigned in his steade, which hated the children of Israel, Tobias wente daylie thowrow out all his kynred, and comforted them, and gaue of his goodes to euery one of the, as moch as he might: he fed the hongrie, clothed the naked, and buried the deed and slaine, and that diligently.

And whan Sennacherib the kynge came agayne and fled out of Jewry (what tyme as God punysshed him for his blasphemy) 2 in his wiath slew many of the children of Is Neuertheles Tobias with his sonne & with his wife fled his waye, and was hyd naked, for there were many that loued him. But after xlv. dayes the kynge was slayne of his owne sonnes. Then came Tobias againe to his house, and all his goodes were restored vnto him.

The II. Chapter.

After these thinges vpon a selemprne daye of the LORDE Tobias made a good feast in his house, & sayde vnto his sonne: Go y waye & brynge hither some of oure trybe, soch as feare God, that they maye make mery with vs. And whā he was gone, he came agayne, and tolde his father, that one of the children of Israel laye slayne vpon the strete. And immediatly he leape from his table, lest the feast, came fastinge to the deed coarfe, toke him & bare him preuely in to his house, & whan the Sonne was downe, he might safely burye him. And whā he had hyd the coarfe, he ate his meate with meurnyng and feare, remembryng y wor-des, that the LORDE sayeth by the prophet Amos: youre hye fiastes shalbe turned to so rowe and heuynes.

But whan y Sonne was downe, he wente his waye & buried him. Then all his negh-bours reprobued him, sayenge: It is not lēge, sens it was commaunded to slaye the becau-se of this matter, and hast scarce escaped the daunger of death, and buryest thou the deed agayne. Neuertheles Tobias fearinge God more then the kynge, toke the bodies of the slayne, hyd them in his house, & buried them at mydnight.

C It happened vpo a daye, that he had bu-ried y deed, & was weery, came home, & layed him downe by the wall & slepte. And whyle he was a slepe, there fell downe vpo his eyes warme donge out of the swalowes nest, so y he was blynde. This tentacion dyd God suffre to happen vnto him, that they which came after, might haue an example of his paciēce, like as of holy Job. For in so moch as he ever feared God from his youth vp, & kepte his commaundementes, he was not he ny against God, that the plage of blyndnes chaūsed vnto him, but remayned stedfast in the feare of God, and thanked God all the dayes of his life.

D For like as blessed Job. was had in deri-sion of kynges, even so was he laughed to scoone of his elders & kynssfolkes, which sayde vnto him: where is thy hope, for y which thou hast done allmes and buried the deed? But Tobias rebuked the, & spake: Saye not so, for we are the children of holy men, & loke for the life, which God shal gette vnto them, that neuer turne their beleue from him. An-na his wife wente daylie to the prayenge worke, & loke what lyunge she coude get of the labo of hir handes, she brought it. And it happened y she toke a kyd and brought it home.

And whan hir husband herd it crye, he sayde: loke y it be not stollen, restore it agay-ne to the owners: for it is not lawfull for vs, to eate or to touch eny thinge of thest. This was his wife angrie, and sayde: How is thy hope become vayne openly, & thy allmes be-des are manifest. With these & soch like wo-des dyd she cast him in the tette.

The III. Chapter.

Then Tobias toke it heuely, & tw res beganne to make his prayer, saye-ge: O LORDE, thou art righteous, & all thy iudgmētes are true, yee all y wayes are mercy, faithfulness & iudgmēt. And now O LORDE be mynde full of me, & take no vng-geaunce of my synnes, nether remembre my mysdedes ner y mysdedes of my elders. For we haue not bene obediēt vnto y cōmaunde-mētes, therfore are we spoyled, brought inq-captivityte, in to death, in to derision & shame vnto all nacions, amōge whō thou hast scat-tred vs. And now O LORDE, y iudgmētes are greates, for we haue not done a cōdige to y cōmaundemētes, nether haue we walked in nocēty before y. And now O LORDE, des-le with me a cōdige to thy wil, & cōmaun-de my spire to be receiued in peace, for mo-re erpediēt were it for me to dye, the to lyue.

At the sametyne it happened, that Sa-ra the daughter of Raguel at Rages a ci-te of y Medes was slaundred of one of hir fathers hantmaydes, namely, that she shul-de haue had seven husbādes, which as soo-ne as they were gone in vnto hir, were slay-ne of the deuell called Asmodeus. Therfore whan she reprobued the mayden for hir faulte, she answerde her, sayenge: God let vs ne-ner se sonne ner daughter of the more vpon earth, thou kyller of thy husbādes. Wilt thou slay me also, as thou hast slayne seuen men? At this voyce wete Sara in to an hye chamber of hir house, and thre dayes and thre nightes she nether ate ner drate, but cō-tynnued in prayer, and besought God with teares, that he wolde delyuer her from this rebuke.

C Upon the thirde daye it chaunced, that whan she had made an ende of hir prayer, she prayed the LORDE, sayenge: Blessed be thy name O God of o fathers, which whan thou art wroth, shewest mercy, and in the ty-me of trouble thou forgiuest the synnes of them, that call vpon the. Vnto the O LOR-DE turne I my face, vnto the lift I vp my-ne eyes. I beseeke y O LORDE, louse me out of the bondes of this rebuke, or els take me utterly awaye fro of y earth. Thou knowest LORDE, that I neuer had desyre vnto man, and that I haue kepte my soule cleane from all vnclenly lust. I haue not kepte company with those that passe their tyme in spoite, nether haue I made my self partaker with them that walke in lighte behauoure. Ne-uertheles an husbāde haue I consented to take, not for my pleasure, but in thy feare.

D Now peradventure either I haue bene unworthy of them, or els were they vnmete for me, for thou happily hast kepte me to ano-ther husbāde. For why: thy counsell is not in y power of man. But who so euer loueth the and serueth the a right, is sure, that yf his life be tempted and proued, it stādeth in the tryenge: and yf he endure in pacience, he shal haue a rewarde and be hylie crowned: and yf he be in trouble, that God (no doute) shal delyuer him: and yf his life be in chaste mynge, that he shal haue leue to come vnto thy mercy.

For thou hast no pleasure in oure damp-nacion: & why: after a stōme thou makest y nether saye and still: after wepinge and heuynes thou geuest greates ioye. Thy name O God of Israel, be praysed for ever. At the same tyme were both their prayers herde in the sight of the magesty of the hyest God. And Raphael the holy angel of the L O R-DE was sent to helpe the both, whose pray-as came together before God.

The III. Chapter.

So whā Tobias thought his prayer to be herde, that he might dye, he called vnto him his sonne Tobias, & sayde vnto him: My sonne, heare the wor-des of my mouth, and laye the in thine hert as a foundation. Whan God taketh awaye my soule, burie thou my body, & helde thy mo-ther in honoure all the dayes of hir life. For thou oughtest to remembre, what and how greates pails she suffred for y in hir wōbe. And whā she also hath fulfilled the tyme of hir life, bury her besyde me. Haue God in thy thought all the dayes of thy life, & bewarre, lest at eny tyme thou cōsent vnto synne, and lest thou let slippe the commaundemētes of the LORDE oure God.

Bene allmes of thy goodes, and turne ne-uer thy face from the poore: and so shal it co-me to passe, that the face of the LORDE shal not be turned awaye from the. Be mercifull after y power. Yf thou hast moch, geue plē-teously: yf thou hast litle, do thy diligence, gladly to geue of that litle. For so gatherest thou thy self a good rewarde in the daye of necessite. For allmes delyuereth y fro death, & suffreth not the soule to come in darcknes. A greates comforte is allmes before the hye God, vnto all them that do it.

My sonne, kepe the well from all who do me, and (besyde thy wife) se that no faute be knowne of the. Let neuer pryde haue rule in thy mynde ner in thy worde, for in pryde be-ganne all destruccion.

C Who so euer worketh eny thinge for the, immediatly geue him his hye, and loke that thy hyred seruaunte wagies remayne not by the ouer night. Loke that thou neuer do vn-to another man, the thinge that thou woldest not another mā shulde do vnto the. Ea-te thy bried with the hongrie and poore, and couer the naked with thy clothes. Ser thy bried and wyne vpon the buryall of the righ-teous, and do not thou eate and drynke ther-of with the synners. Are euer counsellat y wyse.

Be allwaye thank full vnto God, and be-seke him, that he will ordie thy wayes, & that what so euer thou deuylest or takest in han-de, it maye remayne in him. I certifie the al-so my sonne, that (whan thou wast yet but a baby) I delyuered ten talentes of syluer vnto Gabelus, at Rages a cite of the Medes, & his handwrytinge haue I by me. And ther-fore seke some meanes, how thou mayest co-me by him, & receaue of him y sayde weight of syluer, and geue him his handwrytinge agayne.

My sonne, be not a frayd: tructh it is, we lede here a poore life: but greates good shal we haue, yf we feare God, and departe from all synne, and do well.

The V. Chapter.

Then answered Tobias his father, & sayde: father, all that thou hast com-maunded me, wil I do, and that dili-gently. But how I shal requyre this money, I cannot tell. Nether doth he knowe me, ner I him. What token shal I geue him? And as for the waye thither, I neuer knew it. Then his father answered him, and sayde: I haue his handwritinge by me, which whan thou shewest him, immediatly he shall paye the. But go thy waye now, & get the some faithfull man to go with y for an hyre, that thou mayest receaue y money, whyle I am yet lyuyng.

B Then wente Tobias out, & vpon the strete he founde a fayre yonge man stondinge, gyrded vp, and as it were one ready to take his iourney. And he knew not that it was an angell of God, but saluted him, and sayde: From whence art thou, thou good yonge man? He answered: Of the children of Israel.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: Knowest thou the waye, that ledeth vnto the countre of y Medes? He answered: I knowe it well, and all those stretes haue I gone oft tymes, and haue lodged with oure brother Gabelus, that dwelleth in Rages a cite of y Medes, which lyeth vpon the mount Egabthania. Tobias sayde vnto him: I praye the, tary for me, tyll I haue tolde my father these thinges. Then were Tobias in, and tolde his father all. At y which his father marueled, & prayed, that he wolde come in vnto him.

C Now whan the angell came in, he saluted him, and sayde: Ioye be with the for evermore. And olde Tobias saide: what ioye can I haue, that syt here in darcknes, & se not the light of heauen? The yonge man sayde vnto him: Be of good cheare, God shal helpe the shortly. And Tobias sayde vnto him: Canst thou brynge my sonneto Gabelus, vnto the cite of Rages in Media? And whan thou comest agayne, I shal paye the thy hyre. And the angell sayde vnto him: I shal lede thy sonne, and brynge him to the agayne. Then Tobias answered him: Tell me I praye the, of what house, or of what trybe art thou?

The angell Raphael sayde vnto him: Arrest thou after the kynred of an hyrelinge, or sekest thou a gyde for thy sonne to go with him? But that I make the not carefull, I am Azarias the sonne of greate Hananias. And Tobias answered: Thou art come of a greate kynred, but I praye y, be not displeased, that I desired to knowe thy kynred. The angell sayde vnto him: Thy sonne shal I lede forth safely, and brynge him whole to the agayne.

B Then answered Tobias, and sayde: well, go on youre waie, and God be in youre iourney, and his angell beare you company. So whan they had prepared all thinges, y they wolde take with them in their iourney, Tobias had his father & his mother safe well, and they wente on their waye both together. Now whan they were gone, his mother beganne to wepe, and sayde: The staff of oure age hast thou taken awaye, and sent him from vs.

Wolde God that money had neuer bene, for the which thou hast sent him awaye. If we had bene content w o pouerte, this had bene greate riches vnto vs, that we sawe one sonne here. Then sayde Tobias vnto her: wepe not, oure sonne shall come to vs agayne safe and sounde, & thine eyes shall se him. For I trust, that y good angell of God shal beare him company, and ordre well all the thinges that he doth: so that he shal come to vs agayne with ioye. At these wordes his mother left of fro wepyng, & helde hir tounge.

The VI. Chapter.

S Tobias wente on his waye, and a dogg folowed him, and y first night they abode by the water of Tigris. Then wente he out to wash his fete, and beholde, there came forth an horrible fish to deuoure him. Of whom Tobias was afraide, and cried with a loude voyce, sayenge: LORD, he cometh vpon me. And the angell sayde vnto him: Take him by the chete blade, and drawe him to the. And he dyd so, and drew him vpo the londe, and the fish beganne to leape at his fete.

The sayde the angell vnto him: Take out the bowels of this fish, and as for the hert, the gall and the leuer, kepe them by the. For these thinges are necessary and good for me dicynne. Tobias dyd so, and rested the fish, and they toke him with them in their iourney: the residue they salted, as moch as was sufficient for them, till they came to Rages. Then Tobias axed the angell, and sayde vnto him: I praye y brother Azarias, tell me, wher to are these thinges good of the fish, that thou hast bydden me kepe?

The angell answered him and sayde: If thou layest a pece of the hert vpon the coales, the smoke therof dryueth awaye all manner of euell spretes, whether it be from man or from woman, so that from thence forth y same shal come nomore vnto them. The gall is good to anoynte or to strake y eyes with, all where as there is eny blemish in them, so shal they be whole.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: where wilt thou that we remayne? The angell answered and saide: Here is a nye kinsman of thine, one Raguel by name, which hath a daughter called Sara, & hath nether sonne ner daughter but her. All his good beloggeth vnto the, and thou must marry his daughter: and therfore desyre her at her father, and he shal geue her the to wife. Then answered Tobias & sayde: As I vnderstonde, she hath bene married vnto seven husbundes, and they all are ded: and I haue herde saye, that the deuell slew them. I am afraide therfore, lest soch thinges happen vnto me also: which yf it canneto passe (seinge I am the onely sonne of my father and my mother) I shulde brynge the in their age w sorrow to their graues.

D Then sayde y angell Raphael vnto him: Heare me, and I will tell the, what they be of whom the deuell hath power. Namely, they that receaue mariage of soch a fashi, that they shut God out from the and from their hert, and geue them selues to their owne lust, even as it were an horse and Moole, which haue no vnderstandinge: vpon sech hath y deuell power. But whan thou takest her, and art come in to the chamber, withold thy self from her thre dayes, and geue thy diligence vnto nothinge but vnto prayer with her.

And in the first night rost the leuer of the fish, and the deuell shal be dryue awaye. The secorde night shalt thou be receaued in to the company of the holy patriarkes. The thirde night shalt thou opteyne the blessinge of God, so that whole children shal be borne of you. After the thirde night take the mayden in the feare of God, and more for the desyre of children, then for eny fleshly lust: that in the seide of Abraham thou mayest optayne the blessinge in children.

The VII. Chapter.

I Then wente they in to Raguel, which receaued them ioyfully. And whan Raguel looked vpon Tobias, he sayde vnto Anna his wife: How like is this yonge man vnto my sisters sonne. And whan he had spoken this, he saide: whence be ye good brethren? They saide: Of the trybe of Ephraim, out of the captivitye of Ninine. Then sayde Raguel vnto them: knowe ye my brother Tobias? They saide: yee, we knowe him well. And whan he had spoken moch good of him, the angell sayde vnto Raguel: Tobias of whom thou axest, is this yonge mans father. Then Raguel bowed him self downe, and wepte, toke him aboute the neck and kysed him, and sayde: Gods blessinge haue thou my sonne, for thou art the sonne of a good vertuous man. And Anna his wyfe and Sara his daughter wepte also.

Now wha they had talked together, Raguel had kyll a wether, and to make a feast. And wha he prayed the to sytt downe to dyner, Tobias sayde: I wil nether eate ner drinke here this daye, excepte thou first graunte me my petition, & promyse me to geue me thy daughter Sara. Whan Raguel herde this, he was astonnyed, for he knew, what had happened vnto the other seven men, that were in vnto her: and he beganne to feare that it shulde chaunce vnto him also in like maner.

And whyle he stode so in doute, and gaue the yonge man no answer, the angell sayde vnto him: Feare not to geue him thy daughter, for vnto this man that feareth God, beloggeth thy daughter to wife, therfore might none other haue her.

The sayde Raguel: I doute not, but God hath accepted my prayers and teares in his sight: and I trust he caused you to come vnto me for the same intent, that this daughter of myne might be married in hir owne kynred: accordinge to the lawe of Moses. And now doute thou not, but I wil geue her vnto the: So he toke the righthande of his daughter, and gaue her in to the right hande of Tobias, and sayde: The God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob be with you, ioyne you together, and fulfill his blessinge in you. And they toke a letter and made a wytyng of the mariage. And then made they mery, and praysed God. And Raguel called Anna his wife vnto him, and bad her prepare another chamber, and thither he brought Sara his daughter, and she wepte. Then sayde he vnto her: Be of good cheare my daughter, the LORD of heauen geueth the ioye, for the heynesse that thou hast suffred.

The VIII. Chapter.

Now after y they had supped, they brought the yonge man in to her. The thought Tobias vpon the wordes of the angell, and toke out of his bagg a pece of the leuer of the fish, and layed it vpon the hote coales. So the angell Raphael toke holde of the deuell, and sent him awaye, and bounde him in the wyldernes of the hye Egypte. The spake Tobias vnto the virgin, and sayde: Up Sara, let vs make oure prayer vnto God to daye, tomorrow, and overmorrow: for these thre nightes wil we reconeyle oure selues with God: and whan the thirde holy night is past, we shall ioyne together in y deuetye of mariage. For we are the children of holymen, and we maye not come together as the heithen, & knowe not God.

B Then stode they vp both together, and besought God earnestly, & he wolde preserue them. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of fathers, prayse be thou of heauē & earth of the see, welles, & floudes, & of all the creatures that be therein. Thou maydest Adam of the mould of the earth, & gauest him Eua for an helper. And now LORDE thou knowest that it is not because of voluptuousnes, that I take this sister of myne to wyfe, but onely for the loue of children, in whom thy name be blessed for ever. And Sara sayde: haue mercy vpon vs (O LORDE) haue mercy vpon vs, and let vs both come whole and sounde to a good age.

C And aboute the cocke crowe, it happened, that Raguel called his seruantes, and they wete with him, to make a graue. For he sayde: it is chaunced vnto him peradventure, as it dyd vnto the other seuen men, that wente in vnto her. Now whā they had made the graue, Raguel came agayne to his wyfe, and sayde vnto her: sende one of thy maydes, to loke yf he be deed, that I maye burye him afore it be light daye.

So she sent a mayden to se, which whan she came in to the chamber, she founde them whole and sounde, slepyng together. And so she came agayne, & brought good tydings. Then Raguel and Anna his wife praysed y LORDE, and sayde: praysed be thou O LORDE God of Israel, for it is not happened vnto vs, as we thought. For thou hast dealt mercifully with vs, and put awaye from vs the enemye that persecuted vs, and hast shewed mercy vnto yonder two beloued. O LORDE, cause the to magnifie the more perfectly, and to offere the the sacrifice of thy prayse, and of their health: that all people maye knowe, & thou onely art God in all the earth.

E And immediatly Raguel commaunded his seruantes, to fyll the graue, that they had made, with earth, afore it was light: and bade his wife prepare a feast, & to make ready all thinges that were necessary for meate, to such as wente by waye. He caused two fatt kyne also and foure wethers to be slayne, & meates to be prepared for all his neighbours and frendes.

And Raguel charged Tobias, to remaine with him two weekes. As for all the good & he had, he gaue Tobias y one half of it, and made this wrytinge, that the half which remayned, shulde fall vnto Tobias after their death.

The IX. Chapter.

Then Tobias called vnto him the angell, whom he thought to haue bene a man, and sayde vnto him. Brother Azarias, I praye the herke vnto my wordes: If I shulde geue myself to be y seruant, I shal not deserue y prouydence. Neuertheles I beseeke the, that thou wylt take the beasts and the seruantes, and go vnto Gabelus in Rages the cite of the Medes, and deliuer him his handwrytinge, and receaue the money of him, and praye him to come to my marriage. For thou knowest thyself, that my father telleth y dayes: and yf I tary one daye to longe, he wyl be sory in his mynde. Now seist thou how earnestly Raguel hath requyred me, so that I can not saye him nay.

Then toke Raphael foure of Raguels seruantes, and two Camels, & wente vnto Rages the cite of the Medes: and whan he had founde Gabelus, he gaue him his handwrytinge, & receaued all y money. He tolde him also of Tobias y sonne of Toby, how all thinges had happened, & caused him to cometh him to y marriage. Now whan he came in to the house of Raguel, he founde Tobias sittinge at y table: & he leape vp, & they kysed one another, and Gabelus wepte, and praysed God, and sayde: the blessinge of the God of Israel haue thou, for thou art the sonne of a right vertuous & iust man, & of one y feareth God, & geueth greates allmes. And blessinge haue y wife, and y elders, that ye maye se y children, and youre childers childre, vnto the thirde and fourth generaciō, and that youre seede maye be blessed of y God of Israel, which reigneth woulde without ende. And whan they all had sayde Amen, they wente to the feast, but with the feare of the LORDE helde they the feast of the marriage.

The X. Chapter.

Now whyle yōge Tobias made lōge taryenge by reason of y marriage, his father was full of care and heynes, and thought: what shulde be the cause, that my sonnetarieth so longe? Or why shulde he be kepte so longe there: peradventure Gabelus is deed, and no man wyl geue him the money. Thus begane he to be very soryfull, he & Anna his wife with him, & beganne to wepe both together, because their sonne was not come agayne vnto them at the daye appointed. As for his mother, she wepte with discomfortable teares, and sayde: Wo is me, my sonne: Oh what ayled vs to sende the awaye into a straunge countre, thou light of oure eyes, thou staff of oure age, thou comforte of oure life, thou hope of oure generaciō!

Geinge all y thinges that we haue are one ly in the, we shulde not haue sent the awaye: from vs.

B Then Tobias comforted her, and sayde: holde thy conge, and be not discomfited, oure sonne is whole and sounde: the man y we sent him withall, is faithfull ynough. Neuertheles he might in no wyse be cōforted: but daylie wente out, looked aboute, and wente aboute all the stretes, wherby she thought he shulde come agayne: that (yf it were possible) he might se him comynge a farre of.

But Raguel saide vnto his sonne i lawe: Tary here, and I shall sende a messenger vnto thy father Tobias, to tell him y thou art in good health. Tobias sayde vnto him: I am sure, that my father and my mother counte euery daye, and that their hertes are sory.

C So whan Raguel prayed Tobias w many wordes, & he wolde in no wyse heare him, he deliuered Sara vnto him, & the half parte of all his good: in seruantes and handmaydes, in shepe, in camels, and in kyne and moche money, and so sent him awaye from him with peace and ioye, and sayde: The holy angell of the LORDE be with you in youre iourney, and brynge you forth safe & sounde, that ye maye fynde all thinges in good case with youre elders, and that myne eyes maye se youre children, afore I dye.

So the elders embraced their daughter, kysed her, and let her go, exortinge her to honour hir father and mother in lawe, to loue hir husbāde, to rule well hir hussholde, to kepe hir house in good ordre, and to shew hir self faultlesse.

The XI. Chapter.

Now as they were goinge homeward agayne, vpon y xi. daye they came to Charra, which lyeth in the half waye toward Elinue. And the angell sayde: Brother Tobias, thou knowest how thou hast left thy father: therefore yf it please the, we two wyl go before, and let the hussholde with thy wife and y catell come so ft & sayrly after vs. And whan Tobias was content that they shulde go before, Raphael sayde vnto him: Take of the gall of the fish with the, for it shal be necessary. So Tobias toke of the gall, and they wente their waye. But Anna the mother of Tobias sat daylie by the waye syde vpon y toppe of an hill, from whence she might se farre aboute her.

And whyle she was waytinge there for him comynge, she looked a farre of, and anon

she perceaued hir sonne comminge, and ranne and tolde hir husbāde, sayenge: beholde, thy sonne cometh. And Raphael sayde vnto Tobias: As soone as thou comest in to the house, immediatly worshipe the LORDE thy God, and geue thankes vnto him: then go to thy father, and kysse him, & strake his eyes ouer w the gall of y fish, that thou hast brought with the. For be sure, that his eyes shal straight waye be opened, and thy father shal se the light of heauen, and shal reioyse at the sight of the. Then the dogg that had bene roith them in their iourney, rāne before, and came as a messenger, and wagged with his tayle for gladnesse.

So y blynde father arose, and beganne to renne, and stembled with his fete, and gaue a seruant his hande, ranne to mete his sonne, receaued him, and kysed him, he and his wyfe, and beganne to wepe for ioye.

Now whan they had worshipped & thanked God, they satt downe. Then toke Tobias of the fishes gall, and anoynted his fathers eyes: and caried half an houre, and then beganne the blemyshe to go out of his eyes, like as it had bene the whyte skynne of an egge whiche Tobias toke and drew from his eyes, and immediatly he receaued his sight.

Then they praysed God, he and his wife, and all they that knew him. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of Israel, I geue the prayse and thankes, for thou hast chastened me, and made me whole. And lo, now do I se my sonne Tobias. After seuen dayes came Sara his sonnes wife also whole and sounde with all y housholde and catell, with camels and moche money of his wyues, and with the money that he had receaued of Gabelus: and he tolde his father and his mother all the benefites, which God had done for him, by the man that led him. Achior also and Nabath Tobias sister sonnes came and were glad, & reioysed with him, by reason of all the good that God had shewed vnto him.

And so, for y space of seuen dayes they made mery, and were right ioyfull euerychone.

The XII. Chapter.

Then Tobias called his sonne vnto him & sayde: What maye we geue this holy man, that wente with the? Tobias answered his father and sayde: Father, what rewarde shal we geue him? Or what thinge can deserue his benefites? He hath bene my gyde, and brought me safe agayne: he receaued the money from Gabelus, he caused me to get my wife, he droue the enell spere from her, he hath bene occasiō of gladnesse to his father and mother: he deliuered me, that I was not deuoured of the fish, he hath made the to se the light of heauen, yee we all haue receaued greete good of him. How shulde we worthely deserue these thinges vnto him? But I praye the my father, that thou wilt desyre him, yf happlie he wil voutsafe, to take with him the half of all that we haue brought.

B So the father and the sonne called him, to ke him asyde, and beganneto praye him, that he wolde be content to take in good worth, the half parte of all that they had brought. Then sayde he secretly vnto them: Prayse & God of heauen, and geue thankes vnto him before all men lyuynge, for he hath shewed his mercy vnto vs. It is good to hyde the Kynges secretes, but to shew and to prayse & workes of God, it is an honorable thinge. Prayer is good with fastinge, and to geue almes is better, then to hooide vntreasures of golde. For almes deliuereth from death, clenseth synne, and causeth to fynde euertlasting life. But they that do synne and vnrighteousnes, are & enemies of their owne soules.

C Wherfore I tell you the tructh, and wyll hyde nothinge from you. Whan thou praydest with teares, and burydest the deed, and lefdest thy dyner, and hyddest the deed in thy house vpon the daye tyme, that thou mightest burye them in the night, I offred thy prayer before the LORDE. And because thou wast accepte and beloued of God, it was necessary, that tentacion shulde trye the. And now hath the LORDE sent me to heale the, and to deliuer Sara & somes wife from the enell spere. For I am Raphael an angell, one of the seven that stonde before God.

D Whā they herde this, they were sore afraied, and trembled, and fell downe vpon their faces vnto the ground. Then sayde the angell: Peace be with you, feare not. Where as I haue bene wth you, it is the will of God, geue prayse and thankes vnto him.

E You thought that I dyd eate and drinke with you, but I vse meate that is invisible, and drynke that can not be sene of men.

Now therfore is & tyme that I must turne agayne, vnto him that sent me: but be ye thankfull vnto God, and tell out all his wonderous workes.

And whan he had spoken these wordes, he was taken awaye out of their sight, so & they sawe him nomore. Then fell they downe flat vpon their faces by the space of thre houres, and praysed God: and whan they rose vp, they tolde all his wonderous workes.

Then XIII. Chapter.

Then olde Tobias opened his mouth, and praysed the LORDE and sayde: Greate art thou O LORDE for euertmore, and thy Kyngdome worlde without ende for thou scourgest and healest, thou leddest to hell, and byngest out agayne, and there is none & maye escape thy hande. O geue thankes vnto & LORDE ye children, of Israel, and prayse him in the sight of the heithen. For amonge the heithen which knowe him not, hath he scattered you, to the intent that yeshu de shew forth his maruelous workes: & cause them for to knowe, that there is none other God allmightie but he. He hath chastised vs for oure mysdedes, and for his owne mercy sake shal he saue vs.

Considre then, how he hath dealt wth you, & prayse him with feare and drede, and magnifie the euertlastinge Kyng in y<sup>e</sup> workes.

I wil prayse him euen in the londe of my captiuyte, for he hath shewed his mayesty vnto a synfull people. Turne you therfore O ye synners, and do righteousnes before God, and be ye sure, that he wyl shew his mercy vpon you. As for me & my soule, we wil reioyse in God. O prayse the LORDE all ye his chosen, holde the dayes of gladnesse, and be thankfull vnto him. O Jerusalem thou cite of God, the LORDE hath punyshed the for the workes of thine owne handes. O prayse the LORDE in thy good thinges, & geue thankes to the euertlastinge God, that he maye build vp his tabernacle agayne in & that he maye call agayne vnto the, all such as be in captiuyte, and that thou mayest haue ioye for euertmore. With a sayre light shalt thou shine, & all & endes of & worlde shal honoure the. The people shal come vnto the from farre, they shal bunge giftes, and worshippe & LORDE in the, and thy londe shal they haue for a Sanctuary, for they shal call vpon the greete name in the.

Cursed shal they be that despise the, & all they that blasphemethe, shal be condempned: but blessed shal they be, & buyldethe vp. As for the, thou shalt reioyse in & childre, for they all shal be blessed, and gathered together vnto the LORDE. Blessed are they all & lowe, and be glad of thy peace. Prayse thou the LORDE O my soule, for the LORDE oure God hath deliuered his cite Jerusalem from all hir troubles. I wil counte my self happy, yf my seide remayne to se & cleames of Jerusalem.

The gates of Jerusalem shalbe buylded with Saphyre and Smaragde, and all the space of hir walles with precious stones. All hir stretes shalbe paved wth whyte Marblestone, and in all hir stretes shal Alleluya be sung. Praysed be & LORDE, which hath created her, & his Kyngdome maye be vpon her for euertmore, Amen. And so Tobias made an ende of his talkynge.

The XIII. Chapter.

After that Tobias had gotten his sight agayne, he lyued two and xl. yeres, & sawe his childers childre. Now whan he was an hundred and two yere olde, he dyed, & was buried honorably in Ninive. For whan he was sixe and fiftie yeres of age, he lost the sight of his eyes, and whā he was thre score yere olde, he gat his sight agayne. The residue of his life led he in ioye, and increased well in the feare of God, & departed in peace.

But in & houre of his death he called vnto him his sonne Tobias, & seven yonge sprygals his sonnes childre, and sayde vnto them: The destruccion of Ninive is at hande, for the worde of the LORDE can not faile, and oure biethrien that are scattered out of the londe of Israel, shal come thither agayne. And the whole londe of it that hath bene waiste, shalbe fylled: and the house of God that was brent in it, shalbe buylded agayne, & all such as feare God shal retorne thither: the heithen also shal forsake their Idols, & come to Jerusalem, and dwell there, and all the Kynges of the earth shalbe glad of her, and worshippe the LORDE God of Israel.

And therfore my childre, heare youre father: Serue the LORDE in faithfulness, seke after his will, and do the thinge that pleaseth him. Commaunde youre childre & they do right, geue almes, be myndefull of God, and euer to be thankfull vnto him in tructh and with all their power. Heare me therfore my childre, and abyde not here: but in what daye soeuer ye haue buried youre mother be syde me, gett you from hence. For I se, that the wickednes of it shal bynge it to destruccion and ende.

After & death of his mother, Tobias departed awaye from Ninive, with his wife and childre, and with his childers childre, & came agayne to his father and mother in lawe, and founde them whole and in a good age, and toke the care of the. And he closed their eyes, and was heyre vnto all Raguels goodes, and sawe the fift generation and childers childre. And whan he was xcij. yea-

re of age, he dyed in the feare of the LORDE, and his kynssolkes buried him. And all his posterite continued in a good life, and holy conuersacion: so that they were loued & accepted both of God and men, and of all the people of the londe.

The first Chapter.

A Rpharath the kynge of the Medes subdued many people vnto his dominion, & buylded a noble ströge cite, which he called Egbathanis. The walles of it made he of fre stone, foure squared, senetic cubites hye, and thirtie cubites brode. He made towres therevpon of an hundreth cubites hye. But vpon the foure corners every syde was twentie fote brode. He made the portes in the heith, like as the towres. This kynge trusted in his mightie hoost, & in his glorious charettes.

So in y twolfe yeare of his raighe it hapened, that Nabuchodonosor y kynge of the Assyrians (which raigned in the greate cite of Ninive) fought agaynst Arpharat, and ouercame hi in y greate felde called Ragau, besyde Euphrates and Tigris and Jadason in the felde of Eioth the kynge of the Elites.

B Then was the kyngdome of Nabuchodonosor exalted, and his hert was lift vp: and he sent vnto all them that dwelt in Celicia, in Damascus, in Libanus, and vnto the heithen that dwelt in Carmel and Cedar, and to soch as dwelt in Galile in the greate felde of Esdriel, to all them that were in Samaria, and beyonde the water of Jordane vnto Ierusalem and the whole londe of Jesse vnto the mountaynes of Ethiopia. Vnto all the se dyd Nabuchodonosor the kynge of y Assyrians sende messaungers. But they all w one consent wolde not agree vnto him, and sent the messaungers agayne emptie, and put the awaye without honoure. Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge toke indignaciö at all those londes, and sware by his trone & by his kyngdome, that he wolde be auenged of all these countrees.

The II. Chapter.

In the xiiij. yeare of kynge Nabuchodonosor, vpon the xiiij. daye of y first moneth, it was deuysed in the counre of Nabuchodonosor y kynge of the Assyria, that he wolde defende himself. So he called vnto him all y elders, all his captaynes and men of warre, and shewed them his secreete counsell, and tolde them, that his purpose was, to brynge the whole earth vnder his domynion. Now whan they were all concurre with this sayenge, Nabuchodonosor the kynge called Holofernes the chiefe captaigne of his warres and saide vnto him: Go thy waye forth agaynst all the kyngdomes of the west and specially agaynst those that haue despyed my commaundement. Thou shalt spare no realme, all stronge cities shalt thou brynge in subieccion vnto me.

Then Holofernes called together all the captaynes & rulers of all the power in Assyria, and mustred the souldyers vnto the hoost (like as the kynge commaunded him) namely, an hundreth and twetye thousande fightinge men vpon fote, and twolue thousande archers vpon horsebacke. All his ordinaunce sent he before with an innumerable multitude of camels, so that the hoost was well prouyded for with oren, and small catell, and y without nombre. He caused cometo be prepared out of all Syria for his hoost. Much golde and syluer also toke he out of the kynges house. So he toke his iourney, he and all his hoost, with charettes, horsmen, and archers: of whom there were so many, that they covered the grounde of the lande, like the greghoppers.

And whan he was gone past the borders of the Assyrians, he came towarde the grete mountaynes of Ange, which lye vpon the left syde of Celicia: and so he wente vp in to all their castels, and wanne every ströge holde. As for y welthy cite of Melochus, he brake it downe, & spoyled all the childre of Thas and the Ismaelites, which laye towarte the wyldernes and vpon the south syde of y londe of Chelon. He wente ouer Euphrates also, and came in to Mesopotamia, and brake downe all the hye cities that were there, from the broke of Mambretyll a man cometo the see: and he toke the borders in from Celicia vnto the coastes of Japhet towarte the south. He caried awaye all the Mediamites, and spoyled all their goodes: & who so ena withstode him, he slew them with the swerde. After this he wente downe in to the felde of Damascus in the tyme of haruest, and burnt vp all the corne and all the trees, and caused the vines to be cutt downe. And the feare of him fell vpon all them that dwelt in y earth.

The III. Chapter.

S O the kynges & prynces of all cities & londes sent their Embassitours: namely, they of Syria and Mesopotamia, Syria Sobal & Lybia & Celicia, which came to Holofernes, & sayde: Let thy wiath cease towarde vs: It is better for vs to serue the greate kynge Nabuchodonosor with ouerlynes, and to be subiecte vnto the, then that we shulde dye and be slayne, and receaue greater hurte. All oure cities and possessiöns, all mountaynes and hilles, all feldes, greate and small catell, shepe, goates, horses, and camels, all oure goodes and householdes, be in thy power, vnder thy subieccion be it altogether. We oure selues also and oure children wylbe thyne owne, come vnto vs a peceable lorde, and vse oure seruyce at thy pleasure.

B Then came Holofernes downe from the mountaynes with horsemē & greate power, and conquered all stronge fenced cities, and all that dwelt in the londe. And out of all cities he toke stronge men, & soch as were mete for y warre, to helpe him. There came soch a feare also vpon those countrees, that the indwellers of all the cities, the prynces and rulers & the people together, were forth to meet him as he came, & receaued him honorably with garlandes & torches, with daunces, tabrettes and pipes.

C Neuertheles though they dyd this, yet might they not swage his rigorous stomak: but he destroyed their cities, & hewed downe their woddes. For Nabuchodonosor the kynge had commaunded him, that he shulderete out all the goddes of the londe: to y incite that he onely might be called and taken for God, of the nations which Holofernes with his power brought vnder him. So wente he thorow Syria Sobal, and thorow all Appamia, and all Mesopotamia, came to the Idumeans in the lode of Gabaa and Seppoli, and toke their cities, and remayned there thirtie dayes, wherin he caused all the whole multitude of his hoost to be gathered together.

The IIII. Chapter.

W Han the children of Israel y dwelt in Jewry herde this, they were sore afraied of him. There came soch trembling also and feare vpon them, that they sorowed he shulde do vnto the cite of Jerusalem and the temple of the LORDE, as he had done to other cities & their temples. So they sent in to all Samaria rode a boue vnto Jericho, toke in and occupied all the toppes of the mountaynes, made fast the townes with walles, and prepared come for them agaynst the battayll.

E liachim also y prest wrote vnto all the that dwelt towarde Esdrielon (which lyeth ouer agaynst y greate felde by Dotha Im) & vnto all those by whom men might haue passage vnto them, that they shulde take in the wayes of the mountaynes, & herby they might be eny waye and passage to Jerusalem, & y they shulde holde diligent watch, where eny strate waye was betwixte y mountaynes. And the children of Israel dyd, as Eliachim the prest of the LORDE had commaunded them. And all the people, cried earnestly, and humbled their soules with fastinges and prayers, they and their wyues. The prestes put on hayrie clothes, and layed the yonge babes before the temple of the LORDE, and couered the aulter of the LORDE with an hayrie clothe. And with one acorde cried they vnto the LORDE God of Israel, that their children shulde not be geuent in to a pray, and their wyues in to a spoyle, & y their Sanctuaries shulde not be vnhalowed, and so they to be a shame and rebuke vnto the heithen.

T hen Eliachim the hye prest of the LORDE wente rounde aboute all Israel, and spake vnto them, sayenge: Be ye sure, y the LORDE wil heare youre petitions, yf ye cōtinue stedfast in fastinges and prayers in y sight of the LORDE. Remembre Moses the seruante of the LORDE, which ouerthrew y Amalechites (that trusted in their might & power, in their hoost, in their shildes, in their charettes & horsmen) not with weapens, but with holy prayers. Euen so shal all the enemies of Israel be, yf ye contynue in this worke, that ye haue begonne. So vpon this exortacion they contynued in prayer befoie the LORDE: In so moch that they which offered briem: sacrifices vnto the LORDE, offered the offringes vnto y LORDE, beyng ayayed in hayrie clothes, and had ashes vpon their heades. And they all besought God from their whole hert, y he wolde vyset his people of Israel.

The V. Chapter.

N o worde came to Holofernes the pryncce of the warres of the Assyria, y the childre of Israel prepared them selues to make resistance. & how they had stepped the wayes betwixte the mountaynes. Then was he exceedingly wroth, & called all the prynces of Moab, & the captaines of Ammon, & sayde vnto them: Tell me, what Eccli. 33.

Exo. 17.

people is this, & keepeth in the mountaynes: O: what maner of cities are they? What is their power? O: what maner of hoost haue they? Who is their capayne? And why do they despise vs (more then all those that dwell in the east) and come not forth to meete vs, & they might receaue vs with peace?

Then Achior the capayne of all the Ammonites answered, and sayde: Syr, yf it please the to heare me, I wil tell the truely before the concerninge this people that dwell in the mountaynes, and there shal no lye go out of my mouth.

This people is of the generacion of the Caldees, they dwelt first in Mesopotamia, for they wolde not folowe y goddes of their fathers that were in the londe of the Caldees, & so forsoke they the customes of their fore fathers (which had many goddes) and worshipped one God, that made heauē and earth: which also commaunded them that they shulde go from thence, and dwell at Haran. Now whan there came a deth in to y whole londe, they wente downe to Egipte, & there they dwelt foure hundred years, in y which they multiplied so greatly, that their hoost might not be nombred. And whan the kynge of Egipte oppressed them, and subdued the in buyldinge of his cities with ma kyng of claye & bricke, they cried vnto God their LORDE, which punysshed the whole londe of Egipte with dyuerse plagues.

Now whan the kynge of Egipte let the go their waye, & the plage ceased, & then followed after the, to take the, & to brynge the agayne in to his seruyce, whyle they were flyenge awaye, the God of heauē opened y see, so y the waters stode fast vpon both the sydes as a wall, & these wente thorow the botome of the see drye shod. In the which place whā an innumerable people of the Egiptians folowed vpon them, they were so euerwhelmed with the waters, that there remayned not one, to tell the that came after, how it happened.

So whan this people was passed thorow the reed see, they came in to the wilderness of the mount Synai, where neuer man might dwell afore, & where the sonne of mā had neuer rested. There were y bytter waters made sweete for the, that they might drynke, & y. years had they meate from heauē. Where so euer they wente (without bowe & arrowe, without bakler or swerde) their God fought for the, & caused the to haue the victory. Yee no man was able to hurte this people, excepte it were so, & they departed vnsaichfully from y worshippinge of the LORDE their God. But as oft as they worshipped any other besyde their God, he gaue them ouer to be spoyle, to be slayne, & to be put to confusion. Neuertheles as oft as they were for departynge from the worshippe of their God, the same God of heauen gaue them power & strenght to withstode their enemies.

Moreover they slew the kynge of the Cananites, Jebusites, Pherezites, & others, & Amontes, & all y mightie in Hesebon, & toke their lodes & cities in possession, as longe as they synned not in y sight of their God, it wete well with them, for their God hateth vnrightheousnesse. For in tymes past whan they wente out of y waye, which God had geuen them, & they shulde walke in, they were destroyed in dyuerse battayles of many nacions, & many of them were caried awaye presoners into a straunge countre. Now lately they haue turned the selues agayne vnto the LORDE their God, & are come together agayne out of the countrees where they were scatred abroad: and thus haue they coquered these mountaynes & dwell therein: & as for Jerusalem where their Sanctuary is, they haue it agayne in possession.

And therefore my lorde, make diligēce in y sicion, yf this people haue done wickednesse in the sight of their God, then let vs go vp agaynst them, for doubtles their God shal be lyuer them into thy handes, & subduethem vnto y power. But yf this people haue not displeased their God, we shal not be able to withstande them, for their God shal defende the, & so shal we be a shame to all y worlde.

Now whan Achior had spoken out these wordes, all the prynces of Holofernes were wroth, & thought to slaye him, & sayde one to another: what is he this, which darre saie, yf childre of Israel are able to withstode Nabuchodonosor the kynge & his hoost? what as they are an vnwarped people, without strenght or vnderstōdinge of y fettes of warre? That Achior therfore maye knowe, y he hath disceaued vs, we wil go vp in to y mountaynes: & whan the mightie men of the are taken, he also shal be stickte with the swerde, y all people maye knowe, that Nabuchodonosor is the God of the earth, and that there is none other without him.

The VI. Chapter.

Whan they had lest of speakinge, Holofernes toke sore indignacion, & sayde vnto Achior. For so much as thou hast prophesied vnto vs, sayenge that the people of Israel shalbe defended of their

God, I will shew the, that there is no God but Nabuchodonosor. Yee whan we slaye them all as one man, thou also shalt perish with them thorow the swerde of the Assirians, & all Israel shal be destroyed with the, & the shalt thou fele, that Nabuchodonosor is the LORDE of the whole earth. The shalt the swerde of my knyghthode go thorow y sydes, & thou shalt fall downe stickte amonge the wounded of Israel, & shalt not come to thy self agayne, but be vtterly destroyed with the. But yf thou thynkest thy prophesie true, why dost thou then chaunge thy colour? why art thou a frayd? Thynkest thou that my wordes are not able to be performed? But that thou mayest knowe, that thou shalt fele these thinges with the, beholde, from this houre forth wyll I sende the vnto yonder people, that whan the punishment of my swerde (which they haue worthely deserved) falleth vpon them, thou mayest be punysshed with them.

So Holofernes commaunded his seruantes to take Achior, & to cary him vnto Bethulia, and to deliuer him in to the handes of the childre of Israel. Then Holofernes seruantes toke him, & were thorow the playne felde. But whan they drew nye vnto the mountaynes, the slyngers casters came out agaynst them: Neuertheles they gat them awaye by the syde of the mountayne, & bounde Achior hand & fote to a tre, & so left him bounde with wythies, & turned agayne vnto their lorde.

Notwithstōdinge the childre of Israel wente downe fro Bethulia, came vnto him, lowed him, brought him to Bethulia, set him in the myddest of the people, and axed him what the matter was, that the Assirians had lest him bounde.

Osiathe sonne of Micha of the trybe of Symeon, & Charmim (which is also called Gorthoniell) were the pryncipall rulers at the sametyme. Now whan Achior stode in the myddest of the Senatours, & before the all, he tolde them, what answer he gaue Holofernes, to the thinge that he axed him, and how Holofernes people wolde haue slayne him for so sayenge, & how Holofernes himself was wroth, & commaunded him for the same cause to be deliuered vnto y Israelites: that whan he ouercame the childre of Israel he might commaunde Achior also to be put to death with dyuerse tormentes, because he sayde: the God of heauen is their defender.

And whā Achior had playnely tolde out all these thinges, all the people fell downe vpon their faces, prayyinge the LORDE, and poured out their prayers together vnto the LORDE, with a generall complaynte & wepyng, & sayde: O LORDE God of heauen & earth, beholde their pryde, & loke vpon our lowlynes, & cōsidre how it standeth with thy sayntes, & make it to be knowne, y thou forsakest not those, which holde them fast by the, & how y thou bringest the lowe, y presume of the seines, & make their boast in their owne strength. So whan the wepyng and prayer of the people (which they had made the whole daye longe) was ended, they cōforted Achior, sayenge: the God of oure fathers, whose power & strength thou hast praysed, shall so rewarde the, y thou shalt rather se their destruccion. Whan y LORDE of God then shall geue his seruantes this liberte, God be with the also amonge vs: so yf it please y, thou w thyne mayest dwell w vs.

Now whan Osiathe had ended the counsell, he toke him in to his house, and made a greate supper, called all the elders to it, & so they refreshed them selues after the fastynge. And afterwarde was all the people called together, which made their prayers all the night longe in the congregacion, and be sought the God of Israel for helpe.

The VII. Chapter.

The next daye Holofernes commaunded his hoost, to go vp agaynst Bethulia. There were an C. & xx. thousande fightinge men on fote, & two & twentie thousande horsmen, besyde the preparynge of them: y were womē, & came to them on euery syde out of the countrees & cities which he had take. All these prepared them selues vnto the battayll agaynst the Israelites, and came on by the hyll syde, vnto the topp that loketh ouer agaynst Dothaim, from the place which is called Belma, vnto Chelmon y lyeth towarde Esdrelon.

Now whan the childre of Israel sawe so greare a multitude of the Assirians, they fell downe flat vpon y ground, strowed as fishes vpon their heades, & prayed w one a corde, y the God of Israel wolde shew his mercy vpon his people. And so they toke their weapons, & sat betwixte the mountaynes in y narrow place, & kepte the waye daye & night. But whyle Holofernes was goynge aboute, he founde the water springe, which from the south syde was conueyed in to the cite by a condyte: this commaunded he to be directe another waye, & to cut their condite in sinder. There were welles also not farre from the walles, which they used secretly, more for pleasure then for necessity.

C Then wente the Ammonites & the Moabites vnto Holofernes, and sayde: The children of Israel trust nether in speare ner arrowe, but haue taken in, and kepe the mountaynes and hilles. That thou mayest overcome them therfore without y strykinge of any battayll, sett me to kepe the welles, that they drawe no water out of them: so shalt thou destroye the without swerde, or at the least they shall be so feble, that they must be fayne to geue ouer the cite, which they thinke not able to be wone, for so moch as it lieth in the mountaynes. These wordes pleased Holofernes well and all his men of warre, and he set an hundred men at every well reunde aboute.

Judith. 16. a

Exo. 17. a

D And whan this watch had endured twentye dayes, the Cisternes and all that had water, fayled them that dwelt in the cite of Bethulia, so that in y whole cite they had not drynke ynough for one daye, for the people had water geuen them daylie in a measure. Then came the men and women, yonge personnes and children all vnto Osiass, and sayde all with one voyce: God be iudge betwixte vs and the, for thou hast dealt euell with vs: thou woldest not speake peaceably with the Kyng of the Assirians, therfore hath God solde vs in their handes, and there is no man to helpe vs, where as we are brought downe before their eyes in thirst and greate destruccion. Therfore gather now together all the people that be in the cite, that we maye all yelde oure selues wyllingly vnto y people of Holofernes: for better it is y we be captyue and prayse the LORDE with our lyues, then to be slayne and perishe, and to be laughed to scoine & shamed of every man whan we se oure wyues and children dye before oure eyes. We take heauen & earth this daye to recorde, and the God of oure fathers (which punyssheth vs accordinge to the deservynge of oure synnes) and geue you warnynge, y ye geue vp the cite now in to y power of Holofernes hoost, that oure ende maye be shorte with the swerde, which els shal endure longe for wante of water and for thirst.

Gal. 10. a

E Whan they had spokē out these wordes, there was a greate wepyng and howlyng in the whole congregacion, and that of every man, and they cryed an whole houre longe vnto God with one voice, sayenge: we haue synned with oure fathers, we haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Thou y art gracious, haue mercy vpon vs, punyssh oure vnrighteousnes with thine owne scour ge, and geue not those ouer that knowe the, vnto a people which knoweth the, lest they saye amonge the heithen: what is their God?

And whan they were so weery with this crienge and wepyng, that they helde their tinges, Osiass stode vp with watrye eyes, and sayde: O take good hertes vnto you (deare biethren) and be of good cheate, and let vs wayte yet these fyue dayes for mercy of the LORDE: peradventure he shal cut awaye his indignacion, and geue glory vnto his name. But yf he helpe vs not whan these fyue dayes are past, we shall do as ye haue sayde.

The VIII. Chapter.

And it happened whan these wordes came to the eares of Judith a wyddow, which was the daughter of Merari, the sonne of Ioor, the sonne of Joseph, the sonne of Osiass, the sonne of Elai, y sonne of Jammor, the sonne of Jeecon, the sonne of Raphoim, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Melchias, the sonne of Euam, y sonne of Nathania, the sonne of Salathiel, y sonne of Symeon, the sonne of Ruben. And hir husbunde was called Manasses, which dyed in the dayes of the barlye harvest. For whyle he was byndinge y sheemes together in the felde, the heate came vpon his heade, and he dyed at Bethulia his cite, and there was he buried beside his fathers. Now was Judith his desolate wyddow thre years & fir monethes. And in the hyer partes of hir house she made herself a prieny chambrie, where she dwelt, beyng closed in with hirmaydes. She ware a smock of hayre, and fasted all the dayes of hir life, excepte the Sabbathes, and new moones & the solempne dayes that the people of Israel kepte. She was a very fayre and beutyfull personne. Hir husbunde also had left her greate riches, a plentifulous housholde, greate vnmoueable possessions and many catell. This Judith was a woman of a very good repute with every one, for she feared the LORDE greatly, and there was no body that speake an euell word of her.

Whan this Judith herde, how Osiass had promised the people, that after the fyfthe daye he wolde geue vp y cite vnto the Assirians, she sent for the elders Chabbi and Charmin: and whan they came to her, she sayde: what thinge is this, wherein Osiass hath consented, y yf God helpe not within fyue dayes, he wil geue ouer the cite to the Assirians: What are ye, that ye tempte the LORDE: This denyce optayneth no mercy of God, but prouoketh him vnto wrath and displeasure. Wyl ye set the mercy of y LORDE a tyme, & appoynte him a daye after you re wyll?

C Nevertheless for so moch as the LORDE is pacient, let vs rather amende oure selues, pouring out teares, and besekynge him of grace. For God threateneth not as a man, neither wyll he be prouoked vnto wrath as the children of men. And therfore let vs hertely fall downe before him, and serue him with a mekespierre, and with wepyng eyes saye vnto the LORDE, that he deale with vs accordinge to his owne wyll and mercy: that like as oure hert is now vexed, & brought lowe thorow the pryde of them, it maye so be comforted thorow his grace: in so moch as we so lowe not the synnes of oure fathers, which falske their God, & worshipped other goddes: for the which synne they perished with the swerde, were spoyled & brought to shame of all their enemies. As for vs, we knowe none other God but onely him, for a hose co soure let vs tary with mekenesse. He shal requyre and make inquisition for oure bloude, from the veracions of oure enemies: he shal bringe downe all the heithen, that rise vp agaynst vs, and put them to dishonoure, vnto the LORDE oure God.

D Therfore deare biethren, seinge ye are the honorable and elders in the people of God, vnto whom all y people haue respecte, and vpon whom the life of the people stondest, lift vp their hertes with youre exortacion, y they maye call to remembraunce, how oure fathers also in tymes past were tempted, y they might be proued, yf they worshipped their God a right. They ought to remembre, how oure father Abraham beinge tempted, and tryed thorow many tribulacions, was founde a louer and frende of God. So was Isaac, so was Jacob, so was Moses, and all they that pleased God, beinge tryed thorow many troubles, were so faste stedfast in faith. Agayne, they that receaved not their tentacions with the feare of God, but put the selues forth with vnpatience and murmuringe agaynst God, perished of the destroyer, and were slayne of serpentes. And therfore shalde not we undertake to be auenged, for the thinge that is done vnto vs: but to confesse, that all these punysshmentes are farre lesse then oure synnes & mysdedes: Beleynging also, that this correccion cometh vnto vs (as to the seruantes of God) for amendment, and not for oure destruccion.

E Then sayde Osiass & the elders vnto Judith: All that thou speakest, is true, and no man can reproue y wordes. Prayse thou for vs now therfore vnto God, for thou art an holy woman, and fearest God. And Judith sayde vnto them: Seynge ye knowe, that my wordes are of God, then proue my counsell and deuice, yf it be of God: and beseeke God, that he wyll bringe my counsell to a good ende.

Thus haue I denyed: Ye shal stode this night before the porte, and I wyll go forth with Abia my mayde: Prayse ye therfore vnto God, that he wyl graciously remembre his people of Israel within fyue daies, as ye haue sayde. As for the thinge that I go in hande withall, are ye no questions of it, tyll I open it vnto you myself: do ye nothinge els, but praye vnto the LORDE youre God for me. Then Osiass the prynce of the people of Juda sayde vnto her: Go thy waye in peace, the LORDE be with the, that we maye be auenged of oure enemies, And so they wente from her agayne.

The IX. Chapter.

Now whan they were gone their way, Judith wente in to hir oratory, put on an hayrie smock, strowed ashes vpon hir heade, fell downe before the LORDE, and cryed vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE God of my father Symeon, which gauest him a swerde for a defence agaynst the enemies, that vsed violence and wilfulnes, and that rauyned y vyrgin and put her to dishonesty. Thou that gauest their wines in to a praye, and their daughters in to captynyte, and all their praye for a spoyle vnto thy seruantes, which bare a zeale vnto the, helpe me wyddow, O LORDE my God, I beseeke y. For thou hast done all thinges from the begynnyng, and loke what thou hast taken in hande and deuysed, it came euer to passe. For all thy wayes are prepared, & thy iudgmentes are done in thy euerlastinge fore knowlege. O loke now vpon the armyes of the Assirians, like as it was thy pleasure somtyme to loke vpon the hoost of the Egipcians, whan they beyngeweapened, persecuted thy seruantes, & put their trust in their charettes, horsmen, and in the multitude of their men of warre. But thou lokest vpon them: and whan they came in to the depe, the waters overwhelmed them.

Euē so LORDE let it go with these, that trust in y power and multitude of their men

Plal. 45. b of warre, in their charettes, arrowes & speares, and knowen not, that thou onely art oure God, which destroyest warres from the begynnynge, and that thou art the LORDE. O lift vp thine arme now like as euer from & begynnynge, and in thy power brynge their power to naught, cause their might to fall in thy wrath. They make their boast, & they wyl vnhalowe and defyle thy Sanctuary, and to waiste the tabernacle of & name, and to cast downe the home of thine altier with their swerde. Brynge to passe (O LORDE) & the pryde of the enemye maye be cut downe with his owne swerde: that he maie be taken with the snare of his eyes in me, and & thou mayest synye him with the lippes of my loue. O geue me a stedfast mynde, that I maye despyse him and his strength, and that I maye destroye him.

C This shal brynge thy name an euerlastinge remembrance, yf the hande of a woman ouerthrowe him. For thy power (O LORDE) stondeb not in & power of men, nether hast thou eny pleasure in the strengthe of horses. There was neuer proude personne that pleased the, but in the prayer of the humble and make hath thy pleasure bene euermore.

O thou God of the heauens, thou maker of the waters, and LORDE of all creatures, heare me poore woman, callinge vpon the, and puttynge my trust in thy mercy. Remembre thy couenaunt O LORDE, and my nister wordes in my mouth, & stablysh this deuyc in my hert, that thy house maye conynue still in holynes, and that all the heithen maye knowe and vnderstode, that thou art God, and that there is none other but thou.

The X. Chapter.

A And whan she had lest of cryenge vnto the LORDE, she rose vp from the place, where she had lyen flat before the LORDE, and called hir mayde, wente downe in to hir house, layed & hayrie cloth from her, put of the garmentes of hir ryddowhode, wasshed hir body, anoynted hir self with precious thinges of swete sauoure, broyded and plated hir hayre, sett an hooe vpon hir heade, and put on soch apparell as belongeth vnto gladnesse, slippers vpon hir fete, armelettes, spanges, earynges, fynger rynges, and deckte herself with all hir best araye.

The LORDE gaue her also a speciall beneyte and faynesse: for all this deckinge of hir self was not done for eny voluptuousnesse and pleasure of the flesh, but of a right discrecion and vertue, therfore dyd the LORDE increase hir bewtye) so & she was reckoned amiable and wel sauoured in all mens eyes. She gaue hir mayde also a bottell of wyne, a pot with oyle, pottage, cakes, bread, & chese, and wente hir waye.

Now whan she came to the porte of the cite, she founde Osiat and the elders of the cite waitinge there. Which whan they sawe her, they were astonnyed, & marueled greatly at her bewty, neuertheles they asked no question at her, but let her go, sayenge: The God of cure fathers geue & his grace, and with his power persourme all the deuyc of thy hert: that Jerusalem maye reioyse ouer the, and that thy name maye be in the nombre of the holy & righteous. And all they & were there, sayde w one voyce: so be it, so be it. Judith made hir prayer vnto & LORDE, & wente out at & porte, she & hir mayde.

And as she was goinge downe the mountayne, it happened that aboute the sprynge of the daye, the spyes of & Assirians met w her, and toke her, sayenge: whence comest thou? Or whither goest thou? She answered: I am a daughter of & Hebrues, and am fled from them, for I knowe, that they shal be geue vnto you to be spoyled: because they thought scome to yelde the selues vnto you, that they might fynde mercy in your sight. Therfore haue I deuysed by my self after this maner: I wyl go before the prynce Holofernes, and tell him all their secretes, and wyl shew him, how he maye come by them, and wyne them, so that not one man of his hoost shal perish.

And whan these men had herde hir wordes, & considered hir sayre face, they were astonnyed (for they wondred at hir excellent bewtye) & sayde vnto her: Thou hast saved & life by fyndinge out this deuyc, & thou woldst come downe to & lorde: & be thou sure, that whā thou comest vnto him, he shal intreate the well, & thou shalt please him at & hert. So they brought her in to Holofernes paulyon, and tolde him of her. Now whan she came in before him, immediatly he was ouercome & taken with hir bewtye. Then salde his seruantes: who wolde despyse & people of & Jewes, & haue so sayre wome? Shalde we not by reason fight against the for the se? So whā Judith sawe Holofernes strynge in a canopye, & was wrought of purple, sylke, golde, Smaragde and precious stones, she looked fast vpo him, & fell downe vpo the earth. And Holofernes seruantes toke hir vp agayne, at their lordes commaundement.

The XI. Chapter.

A Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: Be of good chere, and feare not in thine hert, for I neuer hurte man, that wolde serue Nabuchodonosor the kynge. As for thy people, yf they had not despyed me, I shulde not haue lift vp a speare agaynst the. But tell me now, what is the cause & thou art departed from them, and wherfore art thou come vnto vs?

And Judith sayde vnto him: Syr, vnderstonde the wordes of thy handmayden: for yf thou wilt do after & wordes of thy handmayden, the LORDE shal brynge thy matter to a prosperous effecte. As truly as Nabuchodonosor a lorde of the londe lyueth, & as truly as his power lyueth, which is in the to the punishment of all men that go wronge, all men shal not onely be subdued vnto him thorow the, but all the beestes also of & felde. For all people speake of thy proude acetyre, and it hath euer bene reported, how thou onely art good and mightie in all his kyngdome, and thy discrecion is commended in all londes.

B The thinge is manifest also, that Achier spake, and it is wel knowne, what thou commaundedst to do vnto him. For this is plaine and of a suretye, that oure God is so wroth with vs (by the reason of oure synnes) that he hath shewed by his prophetes vnto the people, how that for their synnes he wyl deliuer them ouer vnto the enemye. And for so much as the children of Israel knowe that they haue so displeased their God, they are sore afayed of the. They suffre greate hunger also, & for wante of water, they are deed now in a maner. Moreover, they are appoynted to slaye all their catell, that they maye drynke the bloude of them: and are purposed to spende all the holy ornamentes of their God (which he hath forbydde the to touch) for come, wyne and oyle. Seinge now that they do these thinges, it is a playne case, & they must nedes be destroyed. Which whan thy handmayden perceaued, I fled from them, and the LORDE hath sent me vnto & to shew the these thinges. For thy handmayden worshippe God euen here now besyde the, and thy honde mayden shal go forth, and I wil make my praier vnto God, and he shal tell me, whan he wyl rewarde the their synne: then shal I come and shew the, & brynge the thorow the myddest of Jerusalem, so that thou shalt haue all & people of Israel, as the shepe without a shepherde: there shal not so much as one dogg bark agaynst the, for these thinges are shewed me by the prouidence of God: and for so much as God is displeased with them, he hath sent me to tell the the same.

D These wordes pleased Holofernes and all his seruantes, which marueled at the wysdome of her, and sayde one to another: there is not such a woman vpon earth, in bewtye and discrecion of wordes. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: God hath done well, that he hath sent the hither before thy people, that thou mayest geue them in to oure handes. And for so much as & promyse is good, yf thy God persourme it vnto me, he shal be my God also, and thou shalt be excellent and greate in the courte of Nabuchodonosor, and thy name shalbe spoken of in all the londe.

The XII. Chapter.

A Then commaunded he her to go in, & where his treasure laye, and charged that she shulde haue hyr dwellinge there, and appoynted, what shulde be geuen her fro his table. Judith answered him, and sayde: As for the meate that thou hast commaunded to geue me, I maye not eate of it as now (lest I displease my God) but wyl eate of soch as I haue brought with me. Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: Of these thinges that thou hast brought with the sayle, what shal we do vnto the? And Judith sayde: As truly as thou lyuest my lorde, thy hande mayden shal not spende all this, tyll God haue brought to passe in my hande, the thinges that I haue deuysed.

B So his seruantes brought her in to the tent, where as he had appointed. And as she was goinge in, she desired that she might haue leue to go forth by night & before daye, to hir prayer and to make intercession vnto the LORDE. Then commaunded Holofernes his chamberlaynes, that she shulde go out and in at hir pleasure, to praye vnto hir God those thre dayes.

And so in the night season she wete forth in to the valley of Bethulia, and wasshed herself in the wellwater. Then wente she vp, and besought the LORDE God of Israel that he wolde prospere hir waye, for the deliuerance of his people. And so she wente in, and remayned cleane in hir tent, till she toke hir meate in the evenynge.

C Vpon & fourth daye it happened, & Holofernes made a costly supper vnto his seruantes, and sayde vnto Dagao his chamberlay-ne: Go y waye, and counsell this Zebinesse, that she maye be wyllinge to consent to kepe company with me. For it were a shame vnto all the Assirians, that a woman shulde so laugh a man to scorne, that she were come from him vnnedled withall.

Then wente Dagao vnto Judith, and sayde: Let not the good daughter be astrayed, to come in to my lord, that she maye be honoured before him, that she maye eate and drynke wyne, and be mery with him. Vnto whom Judith answered: Who am I, that I shulde saye ny lordes naye? what so ever is good before his eyes, I shal do it: and loke what is his pleasure, that shal I thinke well done, as longe as I lyue.

So she stode vp, and deckt herself with hir apparell, and wente in, and stode before him. And Holofernes hert was whole moued, so that he bent in desyre towarde her. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: drynke now and sett downe, and be mery, for thou hast founde fauoure before me. Then sayde Judith: Syr, I wil drynke, for my mynde is meryer to daye, then euer it was in all my life. And she toke and ate and drank before him, the thinges that hir mayden had prepared for her. And Holofernes was mery w her, and drank more wyne, then euer he dyd afore in his life.

The XIII. Chapter.

Now whan it was late in the night, his seruantes made haist, every mā to his lodgings. And Dagao shutt the chamber doores, and wente his waye, for they were all ouerladen with wyne. So was Judith alone in the chamber. As for Holofernes, he laye vpon the bed all droncken, and of very dronkennes fell a slepe.

Then commaunded Judith hir mayden, to stode without before the doore, and to wayte. And Judith stode before the bed, makinge hir prayer with teares, and moued hir lippes secretly, and sayde. Strength me O LORDE God of Israel, and haue respecte vnto the workes of my handes in this houre, that thou mayest set vp thy cite of Jerusalem, like as thou hast promysed: O graunte that by the I maye perforce the thinge, which I haue denyed thorow the beleue that I haue in the.

And whan she had spoken this, she wente to the bedsteade, and lowed the swerde that hanged vpon it, and drew it out. Then toke she holde of the hairie lockes of his hea-

de, and sayde: Strength me O LORDE God in this houre, and with that, she gaue him two strokes vpon the neck, and smote off his heade. Then toke she the canapy awaye, and rolled the deed body asyde. Immediately she gat her forth, and deliuered the head of Holofernes vnto hir mayden, and bad hir put it in hir walett.

And so these two wente forth together after their custome, as though they wolde praye, and so passed by the hoost, and came thorow the valley vnto the porte of the cite. And Judith cried a farre of vnto y watchmen vpon the walles: Open the gates (sayde she) for God is with vs, which hath shewed his power in Israel. And whan they herde hir voyce, they called the elders of the cite together. And they came all to mete her, litle & grete, yonge & olde, for they thought not that she shulde haue come so soone. So they lighted candels, and gathered aboute hir euerychone: but she wente vp into an hye place, and caused silence to be proclaimed.

Whan eueryman now helde his tongue, Judith sayde: O prayse the LORDE our God, for he hath not despyed, ner forsaken them, that put their trust in him: and in me his honde mayden he hath perforce his mercy, which he promysed vnto the house of Israel: yee in my hāde this same night hath he slayne the enemy of his people.

And with that she toke forth the heade of Holofernes out of the walett, and shewed it them, sayenge: Beholde the heade of Holofernes the captayne of the Assirians, and this is the canapy, wherein he laye in his dronkennes: wherethe LORDE our God hath slayne him by the hande of a woman.

But as truly as the LORDE lyueth, his angel hath kepte me, goinge thither, remayninge there, and commynge hither agayne from thence. And the LORDE hath not suffred me his handmayden to be defyled, but without eny fylthynges of synne hath he brought me agayne vnto you: & y with grete victory, so that I am escaped, and ye deliuered. O geue thankes vnto him euerychone, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for ever.

So they praysed the LORDE alle together, and gaue thākes vnto him. And to her they sayde: The LORDE hath blessed the in his power, for thorow the he hath brought our enemies to naught.

And Ozias y cheferuler of the people of Israel, sayde vnto her: Blessed art thou of the LORDE the hye God, aboue all women vpon earth.

Blessed be the LORDE the maker of heauen and earth, which hath gyded y a right waye to wounde and to smyte of the heade of the captayne of our enemies. For this daye he hath made thy name so honorable, that thy prayse shal neuer come out of the mouth of me, which shal allwaye remembre y power of the LORDE: seinge thou hast not spared thine owne self, but put the in ieopardy, consideringe the anguyshe and trouble of thy people, and so hast helped their fall before God & LORDE. And all the people sayde: Amē, Amen.

Adior also was called, & he came. Then sayde Judith vnto him: The God of Israel vnto whō thou gauest wytnes, that he wolde be anenged of his enemies, euen he hath this night thorow my hande smytte of the heade of all the vnfaithfull. And that thou mayest see that it so is, beholde, this is y heade of Holofernes, which in his presumptuous pryde despyed the God of the people of Israel, and threatened y with destruccion, sayenge: whan the people of Israel is take, I shal cause the also to be sticke with the swerde. Whan Adior sawe Holofernes heade, he fell downe vpon his face to the grounde for very anguyshe & feare, so y he swornewed withall. But after that he was come agayne to himself, he fell downe before her & prayd her, sayenge: Blessed art thou of thy God in all the tabernacles of Jacob: for all the people that heare of thy name, shal prayse the God of Israel because of the.

The XIII. Chapter.

Judith sayde vnto all the people: Brethren heare me, styck vp this heade vpon our walles, and whan the Sonne aryseth, take eueryman his weapon, and fall out violently: not as though ye wolde go besyde them, but to renne vpon them with violence. Whan the spyas in the tētes see this, they shal of necessity be compelled to fle backward, and to rayse vp their captaynes to the battayll. So whā their captaynes come in to Holofernes panyllion, and fynde the deed body wrapped in the bloude, fearfulness shall fall vpon them: and whan ye perceauē that they fle, folowe them without all care, for God shal deliuer them vnto you to be destroyed.

Then Achior seynge the power of God which he had shewed vnto the people of Israel, fell of from his Zeithenish beleue, and put his trust in God, and let him self be circumcised: and so was he nombred amonge the people of Israel, he and all his posterite vnto this daye.

Now as soone as it was daye, they sticke vp Holofernes heade vpon the walles, and eueryman toke his weapon, and so they wente out with an horrible crye. Whan the spyas sawe that, they ranne vnto Holofernes tent. And they that were within the tent, came before his chamber, and made a greates ruffinge to wake him vp, because they thought with the noyse to haue raised him. For there durst not one of the Assirians knowe, go in, ner to open.

But whan the captaynes and prynces and all the chiefe in the kynge of the Assirians hoost came together, they saide vnto the chamberlaynes: Go youre waye in, and wake him vp, for the myse are crepte out of their holes, and darre prouoke vs vnto battayll.

Then wente Dagao in to his chamber, stode before the bed, and clapped with his handes, for he thought he had bene slepyng with Judith.

But whā he had herkened perfectly with his eares, and coude perceauē no sterynge, he wente nyer to the bed, and list it vp, and then sawe he the deed body of Holofernes lyenge there without a heade, welctred in his bloude vpon the earth. Then cried he with loude voyce, and with wepyng rent his clothes, and wente in to Judiths tent, and founde her not: And so he leapt out vnto the people, and sayde: one woman of y Jewes, hath brought all Nabuchodonosors people to shame. For lo, Holofernes lyeth vpon the grounde, and hath no heade.

Whan the chiefe of the assirians hoost herde that, they rente their clothes, and there fell an intollerable feare and tremblinge vpon them, so y they myndes were sore afrayed. And there was an excedyng greates crye in the whole hoost.

The XV. Chapter.

Now whan all the hoost herde that

Holofernes was headed, their mynde and countenance fell from them: and such a feare came upon them, that they undertooke to defende them selves by flyenge awaye: one spake not to another, but hanged downe their heades, lest all behynde them, and made haist to escape from the Hebrewes: for they herde, that they were haistinge to come after with their weapons, and so they fled by the wayes of the felde, and thorow all the fore pathes of the dales.

And whan the children of Israel sawe that they fled, they folowed upon them, and wente downe with trumpettes, blowinge and makinge a greate crye after the. As for the Assirians, they had no ordie, and kepte not the selves together, but fled their waye. Neuerthelesse the children of Israel fell upon them with one company and ordie, and discomfited as many as they might gett. And Osias sent messengers vnto all the cities and countrees of Israel.

B So all the regions and every cite sent out their best men after them in harnesse, and smote them with the swerde, tyll they came to the uttermost parte of their borders. And the other that were in Bethulia came into the tentes of the Assirians, and toke all that they which were fled, had left behynde them, and so they founde greate good. And they that came agayne to Bethulia from the battayll, toke with them such thinges as had bene theirs: there was no nobre of the catell, and of all costly Jewels, so that from the lowest vnto the hiest, they were all made riche of the spoyle of them. And Joachim the hye priest at Jerusalem, came to Bethulia with all the elders, that they might see Judith.

C Now whan she came out vnto them, they begonne all to prayse her with one voyce, sayenge: thou worshippe of the cite of Jerusalem, thou ioye of Israel, thou hono of oure people, thou hast done manly, and thy hert is comforted, because thou hast loued cleynnes and chastyte, and hast knowne no man but thine owne husbände: therefore hath the hande of the LORDE comforted the, and blessed shalt thou be for ever. And all people sayde: so be it, so be it.

In thirtie dayes coude the people of Israel scarce gather vp the spoyle of the Assirians. But all that belonged vnto Holofernes, and had bene his specially, (whether it were of golde, of syluer, precious stones, clothinge and all ornaments) they gaue it vnto Judith. And all the people reioysed, both we men, maydens, and yonge people, with pipes and harpes.

The XVI. Chapter.

Then sange Judith this songe vnto the LORDE: Begynne vnto the LORDE vpon the tabrettes, singe vnto the LORDE vpon the cymbals. O singe vnto him a new songe of thankesgeuyng, beioyfull and call vpon his name. It is the LORDE that destroyeth warres, euen the LORDE is his name. Which hath pitched his tentes in the myddest of his people, that he might deliuer vs from the hande of all oure enemies. Assur came out of the mountaynes in the multitude of his strength. His people stopped the water brokes, and their horses covered the valleys. He purposed to haue bitte vpon my londe, and to slaye my yongemen with the swerde.

He wolde haue carryed awaye my children and virgins in to captiuyte, but the almighty LORDE hurte him, and deliuered him to the handes of a woman, which brought him to confucion. For their mightie was not destroyed of the yonge men. It was not the sonnes of Titan that slew him, nether haue the greate giannes sett them selves agaynst him: but Judith the daughter of Merari. Her sayre bewtye hath discomfited him, and brought him to naught. For she layed awaie her widdowes garment, and put on the apparell of gladnesse in the reioysinge of the children of Israel. She anoynted his face, and bounde vpon his hayre in an hooe, to beguile him. His slippers rauysed his eyes, his bewtye captiuated his mynde, with the swerde smote she of his neck. The Persians were astonnyed at his stedfastnesse, and the Medes at his boldnes. Then howled the armyes of the Assirians, whan my symple appeared, drye of chylf. The sonnes of the daughters haue feared them thorow, and slayne them as fugiue childre: they perished in the battayll, for the very feare of the LORDE my God. Let vs synge a songe of thankesgeuyng vnto the LORDE, a new songe of prayse wyl we synge vnto oure God. LORDE, LORDE, thou art a greate God, mightie in power, whom no man maye overcome. All thy creatures shal deserue the, for thou spakest but the worde, and they were made: thou sentest thy spire, and they were created, and no man maye withstande thy voyce. The mountaynes shal moue from the foundations with the waters, the stony rockes shal melt before the life wate. But they that feare the, shal be greate with in all thinges. Wo vnto the people that rise vp agaynst my generacion, for the almighty LORDE wyl auenge him self of them, and in the daye of iudgment wyl he vyset them. For he shall geue fyre and wormes in to their flesh, that they maye burne and sele it for evermore.

D After this it happened, that after the victory all the people came to Jerusalem, to geue prayse and thankes vnto the LORDE. And whan they were purified, they offred all their brient sacrifices and their promysed offerynges. And Judith offred all Holofernes weapons, and all the Jewels, that the people had gathered, and the canopy that she toke from his bed, and hanged them vpon vnto the LORDE. The people was ioyfull, as the vse is: and this ioye by reason of the victory, with Judith endured thre monethes.

So after these dayes euery man wente home agayne, and Judith was in greate reputation at Bethulia, and right honorably taken in all the londe of Israel. Vnto hir vertue also was chastite ioyned, so that after hir husbonds Manasses dyed, she neuer knewe man all the dayes of hir life. Vpon the hye solempne dayes she wente out with greate worshippe. She dwelt in hir husbonds house an hundred and fyue yeare, and left hir hono: mayden fre, and dyed, and was buried before hir husbonds in Bethulia. And all the people mourned for her seuen dayes. So longe as she lyled, there was none that troubled Israel, and many yeares also after hir death.

The daye wherein this victory was gotten, was solemply holden, and rekened of the Jewes in the nombre of the holy dayes, and is yet greatly holden of the Jewes euery since vnto this daye.

The ende of the booke of Judith.

The chapters in the booke of Hester, which are not founde in the text of the Hebrew, but in the Greke and Latyn.

The XI. Chapter after the Latyn.

In this chapter is describde the dreame of Mardocheus.

Mardocheus the sonne of Jair, the sonne of Semei, of the tribe of Ben Jamin a Jew: which had his dwell lyng in Susis, a man of greate reputaciō, and excellent amonge all them that were in the kynges court. (Neuerthelesse he was one of the prisoners, whom Nabuchodonosor the kyng of Babilon had carried awaye from Jerusalem vnto Babilon with Jechonias the kyng of Juda.) In the seconde yeare of the reigne of greate Artaxerxes in the first daye of the moneth Nisan, had this Mardocheus such a dreame: he thought he herde a greate repest, horrible thunder clappes, earth quakes, and greates vnto in the londe: and he sawe two greates dragons, ready to fight one agaynst another. Their crye was greate. At the which roaringe and crye all the which were vpon, to fight agaynst the righteous people. And the same daye was full of darcknes and very vnclere, full of trouble and anguyshe, yee a greate fearfulness was there in all the londe. The righteous were amased, for they feared the plague and euell that was deuysed ouer the, and were at a poynte to them selves to dye. So they cried vnto God, and while they were cryenge, the litle well grew in to a greates ruer, and in to many waters. And with it was daye, and the sonne rose vpon agayne. And the lowly were exalted, and denoured the glorious and proude.

Now whan Mardocheus had sene this dreame, he awoke, and mused stedfastly in his hert, what God wolde do: and so he desired to knowe all the matter, and his mynde was there vpon vntill the night.

The XII. Chapter.

In this chapter is declared, how Mardocheus uttereth the treason of the two seruantes agaynst the kyng, and therefore both the kyng rewardeth him.

In the same tyme dwelt Mardocheus with Bagatha and Thares the kynges chamberlaynes and porters of the palace. But whan he herde their deuysce, and had diligently considered their ymaginacions, he perceaued that they wente aboute, to laye their cruell handes vpon the kyng Artaxerxes: and so he certified the kyng thereof. Then caused the kyng to examen the two gelded with tormentes. And whan they had graunted it, they were put to death.

This the kyng caused to be put in the Cronicles for an everlasting remembrance, and Mardocheus wrote vpon the same matter. So the kyng commaunded, that Mardocheus shulde do seruyce in the court, and for this faithfulness of his, he gaue him a reward. But Aman the sonne of Amadath the Agagite, which was holden in greates hono and reputacion in the kynges court, undertoke to hurte Mardocheus z his people, because of the two chamberlaynes that were put to death.

The XIII. Chapter.

The copie of the commaundment, which Ege Artaxerxes (by the entysinge of Ama) sent out in to all countres, for the destruction of the Jewes. The prayer of Mardocheus.

A He greates kynge Artaxerxes which raigneth from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundred and seven and twety londes, sendeth his frendly salutation vnto all the prynces and debytes of the countrees, which be subiecte vnto his dominion. Whan I was made lorde ouer many people, and had subdued the whole earth vnto my dominion, my mynde was not with crueltye and wronge to exalte myself by the reason of my power: but purposed to equyte allwaye and gentylnes, to gouernethose that be vnder my iurisdiction, and wholy to set them in a peaceable life, and therby to bringe my Kingdome vnto tranquylite, that men might safely go thorow on euery syde, and to renue peace agayne, which all men desyre. Now whan I axed my counsellors, how these thinges might be brought to a good ende, there was one by vs, excellent in wysdome, whose good wyll, truely z faithfulness hath oft bene shewed z proued (which was also y pryncipall z next vnto y Ege) Ama by name, which certified vs, how y in all lodes there was crepte in a rebellious folke, y made statutes z lawes agaynst all other people, z haue allwaye despysed the proclaimed commaundmentes of kynges: and how that for this cause it were not to be suffred, that soch rule shulde continue by you z not to be put downe. Seinge now we perceiue the same, that this people alone are contrary vnto euery man, vsynge straunge and other maner of lawes, z withstandinge oure statutes and doinges, and go aboute to stablish shrewd matters, that oure Kingdome shulde neuer come to good estate and stedfastnes: Therefore haue we commaunded, that all they that are appoynted in wytynge and shewed vnto you by Aman (which is ordered and set ouer all oure busynes, and the most pryncipall next vnto the kynge, and in maner as a father) shal with their wiues z children be destroyed and roted out with the swerde of their enemies, and aduersaries: z y there shalbe no mercy shewed, z no man spared. And this shalbe done y xiiij. daye of the moneth called Adar of this yere, that they which of olde (and now also) haue euer bene rebellious, maye in one daye with violence be thrust downe in to the hell, to the utter, that after this maner, oure empyre maye haue peace and tranquylite.

But Mardocheus thought vpon all the woorkes and noble actes of y LORDE, z made his prayer vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE, thou valeaunt and allmightie kynge (for all thinges are in thy power, and yf thou wilt helpe and delyuer Israel, there is no ma that can withstode ner lett the: for thou hast made heauen z earth, and what wonderous thinge so euer is vnder the heauen: thou art LORDE of all thinges, and there is no man, y can resist the O LORDE) Thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest LORDE, that it was neither of malice, ner presumption, ner for any desyre of glory, that I wolde not bowe downe myself ner worshipec yonder proude presumptuous Aman (for I wolde haue bene content, and y with good wyll, yf it might haue done Israel any good, to haue tyst en his footsteps) but that I dyd it, because I wolde not lett the honoure of a ma in the steade of the glorie of God, and because I wolde worshipec none but onely y my LORDE. And this haue I done in no pryde ner presumption.

And therfore O LORDE thou God and kynge, haue mercy vpon thy people for they imagine how they maye bringe vs to naught, z their mynde and desyre is to destroye and to ouerthrowe the people, that hath euer bene thine inheritaunce of olde. O despysenot thy porciō, which thou hast delyuered z brought out of Egipte for thine owne self. Heare my prayer, and be mercifull vnto y people, wher thou hast chosen for an heretage vnto thyself. Turne oure complaynte and sorow in to ioye, that we maye lyeue O LORDE, and prayse thy name. O LORDE, suffre not y mouthes of them that praise the, to be destroyed.

All y people of Israel in like maner cried as earnestly as they coude vnto the LORDE, for their death and destruccion stode before their eyes.

The XIII. Chapter.

Of the sorowe, complaynte and prayer of quene Hester.

Quene Hester also beyng in the bayl of death, resorted vnto the LORDE, layed awaye hir glorious apparell, and put on the garmetes that serued for sighinge and mournynge. In the skede of precious oymment, she scatred ashes and dregge vpon hir heade: and as for hir body, she humbled it, and brought it very lowe. All the places where she was wote to haue ioye also, those fylled she with y hayre, y she placed out herself. She prayed also vnto the LORDE God of Israel with these wordes:

O my LORDE, thou onely art oure kynge, helpe me desolate womā, which haue no helper but y, for my misery and destruccion is harde at my hande. From yowth vp I haue herde out of the kynred of my father, that thou tokest Israel from amonge all people (and so haue oure fathers of their fore elders) that they shulde be thy perpetuall inheritaunce, and loke what thou didest promise the, thou hast made it good vnto the.

Now well LORDE, we haue synned before the, therfore hast thou geuen vs in to the hādes of oure enemies, because we worshipped their goddes. LORDE thou art righteous. Nevertheless it satisfieth the not, that we are in bytter and heuy captivitye and oppressed amonge them, but thou hast layed their bondes vpon the bondes of their goddes: so that they begynne to take awaye, the thinge that thou with thy mouth hast ordeined and appoynted: to destroye thine inheritaunce, to shut and to stoppe y mouthes of them that prayse the, to quēch the glory and worshipec of thy house and thine altier, and to open the mouthes of the Zeithen, y they maye prayse the power z vertue of the goddes, and to magnifie the fleshy kynge for euer.

O LORDE, geue not thy cepter vnto the that be nothinge, lest they laugh vs to scorn in oure misery and fall: but turne their deuice vpon them selues, and punyssh him, that hath begonne the same ouer vs, and set him to an example. Think vpon vs O LORDE, and shew thy self in y tyme of oure distress and of oure trouble. Strengthen me O thou kynge of goddes, thou LORDE of all power, geue me an eloquent and pleasaunt speech in my mouth before the Lyon. Turne his hert in to y hate of oure enemye, to destroye him, and all soch as consent vnto him. But delyuer vs with thy hande, and helpe me desolate womā, which haue no defence ner helper but onely y. LORDE thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest that I loue not the glory and worshipec of the vnrighteous, and that I hate and abhorre the bed of the vncircūcyed and of all Zeithen.

Thou knowest and wotest my necessite, y I hate the token of my preemynence z worshipec, which I beare vpon my heade, what tyme as I must shew my self and be sene, z that I abhorre it as an vnclane cloth, and that I weere it not whā I am quyet and alone by my self. Thou knowest also that I thy honde mayden haue not eaten at Amas table, and that I haue had no pleasure ner delyte in the kynges feast, that I haue not dronke the drynk offeringes, and that I thy honde mayden haue had no ioye sens y daie that I was brought hither vnto this daye: but enely in the O LORDE. O thou God of Abraham, O thou mightie God aboue all, heare the voyce of them, that haue none other hope, and delyuer vs out of the hande of y wicked, z delyuer me out of my feare.

The XV. Chapter.

Quene Hester appeareth before the kynge, with an heuy hert for the trouble of hir people, and God turneth the kynges hert.

And vpon y thirde daye it happened, that Hester layed awaye y mournynge garmetes, and put on hir glouous apparell, and decked herself goodly (after that she had called vpon God, which is the beholder z Sanioure of all thinges) toke two maydes w her: vpon the one she leaned herself, as one y was tender: the other folowed her, and bare the trayne of hir vesture. The shyne of hir bewtye made hir face rose coloured. The similitude of hir face was chearfull and amiable, but hir hert was sorowfull for greates feare. She wente in thorow all the doores, and stode before the kynge. The kynge sat vpon the trone of his Kingdome, and was clothed in his goodly aray, all of golde, and sett w precious stones, and he was very terryble. He lift vp his face, that shone in the clearnes, and looked grymly vpon her. Then fell the Quene downe, was pale and faynt, leaned hir self vpon the heade of the mayde that wente with her.

Nevertheless God turned y kynges mynde, that he was gentle, that he leape out of his seate for feare, and gat her in his armes, z helde hir vntill she came to herself agayne. He gaue her lowynge wordes also, z sayde vnto her: Hester, what is the matter? I am y brother, be of good cheare, thou shalt not dye: for oure commaundement toucheth the comons, not the. Come nye. And with that he helde vp his golden wande, and layed it vpon hir neck, and embraced her frendly, and sayde: talke with me. The sayde she: I sawe the (O lorde) as an angell of God, z my hert was troubled for feare of thy maiesty and clearnesse. For excellent and wonderfull art thou (O lorde) and thy face is full of amyre. But as she was thus speakynge vnto him, she fell downe agayne for fayntnes: for the which cause the kynge was a frayed, and all his seruantes comforted her.

The XVI. Chapter.

A cople of the commaundement, which King Artaxerxes caused to be proclaimed in all the countrees of his domynion, for the wealth of the Jewes.

A The greate kynge Artaxerxes, which raigneth fro India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and xxvij. londes, sendeth vnto the prynces & rulers of the same londes, soch as loue him, his frendly salutation. There be many, that for the sondrye friendshipes and benefites which are diuersly done vnto them for their worshippe, be ever y more proude and hye mynded, and vnder take not onely to hurte oure subiectes (for plentiful benefites maye they not suffre, and be gyfte to ymagin some thynge agaynst those that do them good, and take not onely all vnto thankfulness awaye fro men) but in pryde and presumption (as they that be vnmyned full and vnto thankfull for the good dedes) they go aboute to escape the iudgment of God, yf seyth all thynges, which (iudgment hateth & punyssheth all wickednes. It happeneth oft also, yf they which be set in office by the hyer power, and vnto whom the busynes and causes of the subiectes are comytted to be handled, waxe proude, and desyle the selues with sheddynge of innocent bloude, which bryngeth them to intollerable hurte. Which also with false and disceitfull wordes and with lyengetales, disceue and betraye the innocent goodnes of prynces.

Now is it profitable and good, that we take hede, make search thereafter, and consider, not onely what hath happened vnto vs of olde, but the shamefull, vnhonest, and noy some thynges, that the debites haue now taken in hande before oure eyes: and thereby to bewarre in tyme to come, that we maye make the kynge quyet & peaceable for all men, and that we might some tyme drawe it to a chaunge: and as for yf thynge that now is present before oure eyes, to withstande it, and to put it downe, after the most frendly maner.

Hester 2. a What tyme now as Aman the sonne of Amadathu yf Macedonyn (a straunger rarely of the persians bloude, and farre from oure goodnes) was come in amonge vs as an aleaunt, and had opeyned the friendship that we beare toward all people, so that he was called oure father, and had in hye honoure of euery man, as the next and prynci-pall vnto the kynge, he conde not forbear him self from his pryde, hath vnder taken not onely to robbe vs of the kynge, but of oure life.

With many folde disceate also hath he besyred to destroye Mardocheus oure helper and preseruer, which hath done vs good in all thynges: and innocent Hester the life partaker of oure kynge, with all hir people. For his mynde was (whan he had take them out of the waye, and robbed vs of them) by this meanes to translate the kynge of the persians vnto the of Macedonia. But we fynde, that the Jewes (which were accused of yf wicked, yf they might be destroyed) are no euell doers, but vse reasonable & right lawes, and that they be the children of the most hye lyuynge God, by whom the kynge of vs and oure progenitours hath bene well ordred hither to. Wherfore, as for the letters and commaundementes, that were put forth by Aman the sonne of Amadathu, ye shal do well, yf ye holde them of none effect: for he that set them vp and inuented the, hangeth at Susis before the porte, with all his kinred, and God (which hath all thynges in his power) hath rewarded him after his deservynge.

And vpon this ye shal publish and set up the copy of this letter in all places, that the Jewes maye frely and without hinderaunce holde them selues after their owne statutes, and that they maye be helped, and that vpon yf xij. daye of yf xij. moneth Adar they maye be auenged of them, which in the tyme of their angrysh and trouble wolde haue oppressed the. For the God that governeth all thynges, hath turned to ioye, the daye whan in yf chosen people shulde haue perished.

Moreover, amonge the hye solempnedayes that ye haue, ye shal holde this daye also w all gladnesse: hat now and in tyme to come, this daye maye be a remembraunce to good, for all soch as loue the prosperite of the persians: but a remembraunce of destruction to those that be sedicious vnto vs.

All cities and lodes that do not this, shal horribly perishe and be destroyed w the sword and fyre, and shal not onely be nomore inhabited of men, but be abhoired also of yf wilde bestes & foules.

The boke of Wyssdome.

What this boke conteyneth.

- Chap. I. An exortacio for iudges and rulers to loue wyssdome. The spere of wyssdome hateth falsede, dissimulation and Apocryfie, rebuketh vnrightheousnesse and abhorreth wicked doers.
- Chap. II. The ymaginacions and thoughtes of the vngodly, how they geue the selues ouer vnto synne, and persecute all vertue and trueth.
- Chap. III. The felicity and health of godly people, though they be put here to trouble and heynesse: Agayne, what sorow shall happen to the vngodly and their children.
- Chap. IIII. To lyue chaist & godly withall, is commendable. A dispraise of the wicked. The honoure of vertuous age. The shameful death of the vngodly.
- Chap. V. How the iust men shal stode agaynst the wicked, that haue put them here to trouble & what sorowe shall come vpon the vngodly. Agayne, what ioye shal happen to the righteous, which haue God himself for their defence.
- Chap. VI. An exortacion vnto soch as be in rule and auctorite, to receaue wyssdome. A commendacion of wyssdome.
- Chap. VII. All men haue like inuention in to the worlde: yet who so calleth vpon God for wyssdome, shal haue his desyre. The profit that cometh by wyssdome passeth all other thynges.
- Chap. VIII. Wyssdome shulde be receaue in youth. Zerkat marieth himself vnto her, shall optayne loue of God and men.
- Chap. IX. A prayer vnto God for the gift of wyssdome.
- Chap. X. What profit and good came by wyssdome in the olde tyme.
- Chap. XI. How wyssdome ledeth the righteous, & how the vngodly are punyshed thorow the mightie hande of God.
- Chap. XII. God is mercifull and suffreth longe, to the intent that synners shulde amende.
- Chap. XIII. Daye are they that haue not the knowledge of the lyuynge God, but turne vnto to the creatures: vnhappie are they that honoure ymages.
- Chap. XIII. The worshippinge of ymages. The power of God. Punysshment of them that make ymages, and of soch as worshipec them. How ymages came vp first. The honouringe of ymages is the cause, begynnynge, and ende of all myschefe.
- Chap. XV. The faithfull haue respecte vnto God and not vnto ymages.
- Chap. XVI. God punisheth the wicked, but defendeth the godly, & that by grete wonders.
- Chap. XVII. Of the grete darknesse in Egipte, and blyndnesse of the vngodly.
- Chap. XVIII. How God destroyed the first borne of Egipte. Gods people eate the easter lambe ioyfully, the Egiptians mourne, God punyssheth the synners in the wilderness, Moses increaseth for the people.
- Chap. XIX. Like as the wicked are euery synner ge more and more, so doth the wrath of God neuer cease, tyll they be destroyed. Of them that were punyshed in the tyme of Loth.

The first Chapter.

Set youre affection vpon wyssdome, ye that be iudges of the earth. Haue a good opinion of the LORDE, & set him in the synglenesse of hert. For he will be soude of them that tempre him not, and appeareth vnto soch as put their trust in him. As for frowarde thoughtes, they separate from God, but vertue (yf it be allowed) resourmeth yf vnrightheous. And why? wyssdome shall not entre in to a frowarde soule, ner dwell in the body that is subdued vnto synne. For the holy goost abhorreth fawned nurture, & with draweth himself fro yf thoughtes that are without vnderstanding: & where wickednes hath the vpper hande, he flieth from thence. For the spere of wyssdome is lowynge, gentle and gracious, and wil haue no pleasure in him that speaketh euell with his lippes. For God is a witnesse of his reynes, a true searcher out of his hert, and an hearer of his tonge. For the spere of yf LORDE fylleth the rounde compasse of the worlde, and yf same that vpholde all thynges, hath knowlege also of the voyce.

Therefore he that speaketh vnrightheous thynges, can not be hydd, nether maye he escape the iudgment of reprove. And why? inquisition shal be made for the thoughtes of the vngodly, and the reporte of his wordes shal come vnto God, so that his wickednes shal be punyshed. For the eare of gelousy heareth all thynges, and the noyse of the grudginges shal not be hydd. Therefore bewarre of murmuringe, which is nothinge worth, and refrayne youre tonge from slaunder. For there is no worde so darck and secrete, that it shal go for naught: and the mouth that speaketh lyes, slayeth the soule.

O seke not youre owne death in yf errorre of youre life, destroye not youre selues thorow the workes of youre awne handes. For God hath not made death, nether hath he pleasure in the destruction of the lyuynge.

For he created all thinges, that they might haue their beyng: yee all the people of the earth hath he made that they shulde haue health, that there shulde be no destruccion in them, and that the kyngdome of hell shulde not be vpon earth (for righteousnesse is euerlasting and immortall, but vnrighteousnesse bringeth death). Neuerthelesse, the vngodly call her vnto them both wth wordes & workes, & whyle they thinke to haue a frende of her, they come to naught: for the vngodly that are confederate with her and take hir parte, are worthy of death.

The ii. Chapter.

Amonge them selues (but not right:) The tyme of oure life is but short & tedious, & when a man is once gone, he hath nomore ioye ner pleasure, nether knowe we eny man & turneth agayne from death: for we are borne of naught, & we shal be hereafter as though we had neuer bene. For oure breth is as a smoke in oure nostrils, & y<sup>e</sup> wordes as a sparck to moue oure herte. As for o<sup>r</sup> body, it shalbe very asshes & are quēched, & o<sup>r</sup> soule shal vanishe as & soft ayre. Oure life shal passe awaye as & trace of a cloude, & come to naught as & myst & is dryū awaye wth the beames of y<sup>e</sup> Sonne, & put downe wth the heate therof. Oure name also shalbe forgotten by litle & litle, & no man shal haue oure workes in remembrance.

So<sup>r</sup> tyme is a very shadow & passeth awaye, & after o<sup>r</sup> ende there is no returnyng, for it is fast sealed, so & no mā cometh agayne. Come on therfore, let vs enioye & pleasures & there are, & let vs soone vse & creature like as in youth. We wil fyll oure selues wth good wyne & oymntment, there shal no floure of the tyme go by vs. We wil crowne o<sup>r</sup> selues wth roses afore they be wythered. There shal be no fayre medowe, but o<sup>r</sup> lust shal go thorow it. Let euery one of you be partaker of oure voluptuousnes. Let vs leaue some to ken of o<sup>r</sup> pleasure in euery place, for & is oure porcion, els gett we nothinge. Let vs oppresse the poore righteous, let vs not spare the wyddowe ner olde man, let vs not regarde y<sup>e</sup> heades & are gray for age. Let & lawe of vnrighteousnesse be oure auctorite, for & thinge & is feble is nothinge worth. Therfore let vs defraude the righteous, & why: he is not for o<sup>r</sup> profit, yee he is cleane contrary to o<sup>r</sup> doinges. He cheketh vs for offendinge agaynst & lawe, & slaundereth vs as transgressours of all nurto<sup>r</sup>. He maketh his boost to haue & knowledge of God, yee he calleth him self Gods sonne. He is the bewrayer of oure thoughtes: It greneth vs also to lōte vpon him, for his lyfe is not lyke other mens, his wayes are of another fashion. He counteth vs but vayne personnes, he wth draweth him self from o<sup>r</sup> wayes as from fylthynges: he commendeth greatly & latter ende of the iust, & maketh his boast & God is his father. Let vs se then yf his wordes be true, let vs proue what shal come vpon him: so shal we knowe what ende he shal haue. For yf he be & true sonne of God, he will receaue him & deliuer him from the handes of his enemies. Let vs examen him with despitefull rebuke and exmentinge, that we maye knowe his dignite & proue his pacience. Let vs condemne him with the most shamefull death: for like as he hath spoken, so shal he be rewarded.

Soch thinges do the vngodly ymagin, & go astraye, for their owne wickednes hath bynded them. As for the misteries of God, they vnderstande them not: they nether hope for the rewarde of righteousnesse, ner regarde the worshipec that holy soules shal haue. For God created man to be vnderstroied, yee after the ymage of his awne likenesse made he him. Neuerthelesse thorow enuie of the deuill came death in to the worlde, and they that holde of his syde, do as he doth.

The iii. Chapter.

Whether the soules of y<sup>e</sup> righteous are in y<sup>e</sup> hande of God, & y<sup>e</sup> payne of death shal not touch the. In y<sup>e</sup> sight of the vniuersite they appeare to dye, & their endes take for very destruccion. The waye of the righteous is iudged to be vter destruccion, but they are in rest. And though they suffer payne before men, yet is their hope full of immortallite. They are punished but in few thinges, neuerthelesse in many thinges shal they be well rewarded. For God proueth them, & fyndeth the mete for himself: yee as the golde in the fornace doth he trye them, & receaueth them as a burnt offeringe, and when y<sup>e</sup> tyme cometh they shalbe lōted vpon.

The righteous shal shyne as the sparkes & renne thorow the rede busshes. They shal iudge the nacions, & haue dominion ouer y<sup>e</sup> people, & their LORDE shal raigne for euer. They & put their trust in him, shal vnderstande the trueth, & soch as be faithfull, wil agree vnto him in lone: for his chosen shal haue giftes & peace. But the vngodly shalbe punished acordyng to their awne ymaginacions, for they haue despysed the righteous, & forsaken the LORDE.

Who so despyseth wysdome & nurto<sup>r</sup>, he is unhappie, and as for the hope of soch, it is but vayne, their labours vnfrutesfull, and their workes vnprofitable. Their wyues are vnderstande, and their childre most vngodly. Their creature is cursed. Blessed is rather y<sup>e</sup> baren & vnde-fyled, which hath not knowne the synfull bedd: she shal haue frute in the rewarde of the holy soules. And blessed is y<sup>e</sup> geked, which wth his handes hath wrought no vnrighteousnesse, ner ymagined wicked thinges agaynst God. For vnto him shal be given y<sup>e</sup> speciall gift of faith, and the most acceptable porcion in y<sup>e</sup> temple of God. For glorious is the frute of good labour, & the rote of wysdome shal neuer fade awaye. As for y<sup>e</sup> childre of aduoutrers, they shal come to an ende & the sede of an vnrighteous bedd shal be roted out. And though they lyne lōge, yet shal they be nothinge regarded, & their last age shalbe without honoure. Yf they dye haistely, they haue no hope, nether shal they be spokento in the daye of knowlege. For horrible is the death and ende of the vnrighteous.

The iii. Chapter.

How fayre is a chaist generacion wth vertue. The memoriale therof is immortal, for it is knowne wth God and men. When it is present, mē take exāple there at: and yf it go awaye, yet they desyre it. It is allwaie crowned & holden in hono<sup>r</sup>, & wynneth y<sup>e</sup> rewarde of the vnde-fyled battayll. But the multitude of vngodly childre is vnprofitable, and the thinges & are planted wth whordome, shal take no deperote, ner laye eny fast foundation. Though they be grene in the brannches for a tyme, yet shal they be shakē wth the wynde: for they stonde not fast, & thorow the vehemence of the wynde they shalbe roted out. For the vnparfekte brannches shalbe broken, their frute shalbe vnprofitable & sower to eate, yee mete for nothinge. And why? all the children & are borne of the wicked, must beare recorde of the wickednesse agaynst their fathers & mothers, when they be axed. But though the righteous be ouertaken wth death, yet shal he be in rest.

Age is an honorable thinge: neuerthelesse it stondereth not only in the lenth of tyme, ner in the multitude of yeares: but a mans wysdome is the graye hayre, and an vnde-fyled li is the olde age. He pleased God, & was beloued of him: so that where as he lyued amonge synners, he translated him. Yee so delly was betaken awaye, to the intent y<sup>e</sup> wickednesse shulde not alter his vnderstōdinge, & y<sup>e</sup> ypocryse shulde not bequyle his soule. For y<sup>e</sup> craftie bewitchyng of lyes make good thinges darck, & vnstedfastnesse also & wickednes of voluptuous desyre, turne as yde & vnderston dinge of & symple. Though he was soone deed, yet fulfilled he moch tyme. For his soule pleased God, therfore haisted he to take him awaye frō amonge & wicked. This the people se, & vnderstōde it not: they laye not vp soch thinges in their hertes, how & & lo- uynge fauor & mercy of God is vps his saintes, & y<sup>e</sup> he hath respecte vnto his chosen.

Thus & righteous & is deed, cōdemneth the vngodly which are lyuynge: & y<sup>e</sup> youth & is soone brought to an ende, & lōge life of & vnrighteous. For they se & ende of & wyse, but they vnderstōde not what God hath deuysed for him, & wherfore & LORDE hath taken him awaye. And why? they se him & des- pise him, therfore shal God also laugh the to scorne: So & they the selues shal dye here after (but without hono<sup>r</sup>) yee in shame amonge & deed for euermore. For without eny voyce shal he burst those & be put vp, & remoue the frō & foundations, so & they shalbe laied waist vnto the hiest. They shal mourne, and their memoriale shal perishe. So they beyng- ge astrayed shal remembre their synnes, and their owne wickednesse shal bewraye the.

The V. Chapter.

Then shal y<sup>e</sup> righteous stonde in grea- te stedfastnesse agaynst soch as haue dealt extremely wth the, & takē awaye their labours. When they se it, they shalbe vexed wth horrible feare, & shal wonder at the haistynesse of & sodane health: grōnyng for very distresse of mynde, & shal saye within them selues (haunyng inwarde sorow, and mournyng for very anguysh of mynde):

These are they, whom we somtyme had in derision, & iested vps. We fooles thought their life very madnesse, & their ende to be wth out honoure. But lo, how they are counted amonge the children of God, & their porcion is amonge the sayntes. Therfore we haue erred from the waye of trueth, & light of righteousnesse hath not shyned vnto vs, and the Sōne of vnderstōdinge rose not vp vps vs. We haue weered o<sup>r</sup> selues in & waye of wickednesse & destruccion. Tedious wayes haue we gone: but as for the waye of the LORDE, we haue not knowne it.

What good hath o<sup>r</sup> pryde done vnto vs? Or, what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs? All those thinges are passed awaye like a shadowe, & as a messaunger rennyng before: as a shippe & passeth ouer the waues of the water, which whan it is gone by, the trace therof can not be founde, ne- ther & path of it in the floudes. Or as a byrde & flyeth thorow & ayre, & no man can se eny token where she is flowne, but only hearth the noyse of hir wynges, beatinge the light wynde, partinge the ayre thorow the rebuñce of hir goinge, & flyeth on shakynge hir wynges, where as afterwarde no token of hir waye can be foude. Or like as whe an arrowe is shot at a mark, it parteth the ayre, which immediatly cometh together agayne, so that a man can not knowe where it wente thorow. Euen so we in like maner as soone as we were borne, beganne immediatly to drawe to oure enderz haue shewed no token of vertue, but are consumed in oure owne wickednesse.

C Soch wordes shal they that haue synned, speake in the hell: for the hope of the vngodly is like a drye chistell floure (or dust) that is blowne awaye wth the wynde: like as thynne scomme is scatred abroad wth the storme: like as smoke which is disperfed here & there wth the wynde, & as remembraunce of a stranger is tarieth for adae, & the departeth.

But y<sup>e</sup> righteous shal lyue for enermore: their rewarde also is wth the LORDE, & their remembraunce wth the h<sup>ighest</sup>. Therfore shal they receaue a glorious kyngdome & a beutifull crowne of the LORDES hande: for wth his right hande shal he couer the, & wth his owne arme shal he defende the. His gelousy also shal take awaye the harness, & he shal waite y<sup>e</sup> creature to be auēged of y<sup>e</sup> enemies. He shal put on righteousness for a brest plate, & take sure iudgment in steade of an helmet. The inuincible shyld of equite shal he take, his cruell wrath shal he sharpe for a speare, & the whole compase of the worlde shal fight wth him agaynst the vnwyse.

D The shal the thonder boltes go out of y<sup>e</sup> lighteninges, & come out of the rayne bowe of the cloudes to the place apoynted: out of the hard stony indignacion there shal fall thick hales, & y<sup>e</sup> water of y<sup>e</sup> see shal be wroth agaynst the, & the floudes shal renne roughly together. See a mightie wynde shal stode vp agaynst them, & a storme shal scatter the abroad. Thus the vnrighteous dealinge of the shal bunge all the lode to a wyldernes, & wickednes shal ouerthrowe the dwellinges of the mightie.

The VI. Chapter.

Wysdome is better then strength, & a mā of vnderstandinge is more worth the one y<sup>e</sup> is stronge. Heare therfore (O ye kynges) & vnderstonde: O lerne ye y<sup>e</sup> be iudges of the endes of the earth. Geue are ye y<sup>e</sup> rule y<sup>e</sup> multitudes, & delite in moch people. For the power is geue you of the LORDE, & the strength from the h<sup>ighest</sup>: which shal trie y<sup>e</sup> workes and search out y<sup>e</sup> ymaginacions: How that ye beynge officers of his kyngdome me, haue not executed true iudgement, haue not kepte the lawe of righteousness, nor walked after his will. Horribly & that rightsoone shal he appeare vnto you: for an hard iudgment shal they haue y<sup>e</sup> beare rule. Mercy is graunted vnto the symple, but they that be in auctonite shal be sore punysshed. For God which is L O R D E ouer all, shal excepte no mā's personne, nether shal he stande in awe of eny mans greatnesse: for he hath made y<sup>e</sup> small and greate, & careth for all alyte. But the mightie shal haue y<sup>e</sup> soier punysshment.

Vnto you therfore (O ye kynges) do I speake, y<sup>e</sup> ye maye lerne wysdome and not go amysse: for they y<sup>e</sup> kepe righteousness shal be righteously iudged: and they y<sup>e</sup> are lerned in righteous thinges, shal finde to make answer. Wherfore set y<sup>e</sup> lust vpon my wordes, & lo ueth, so shal ye come by nurr. Wysdome is a noble thinge, & neuer saydeth awaie: yee she is easely sene of the that loue her, & fonde of soch as seke her. She preuēteth them y<sup>e</sup> desyre her, y<sup>e</sup> she maye first shewe herself vnto the. Who so awaketh vnto her by tymes, shal haue no greate trauayle, for he shal fynde her settinge ready at his doores. To thinke vpon her, is perfecte vnderstandinge: & who so watcheth for her, shal be safe, & that soone. For she goeth aboute, setyng such as are mete for her, sheweth her self cherefully vnto them in their goynges, & meteth them wth all diligēce. For y<sup>e</sup> vnfained desyre of reformation is hir begynnynge: to care for nurr is loue, and loue is the keepinge of hir lawes. Now the keepinge of y<sup>e</sup> lawes is perfeccion & an vn corrupte life, & an vn corrupte life maketh a man familer wth God. And so the desyre of wysdome ledeyth to y<sup>e</sup> kyngdome euellastynge. If y<sup>e</sup> delyte be the in royall seates & cepters (O ye kynges of the people) set your lust vpon wysdome, y<sup>e</sup> ye maye raigne for enermore. O loue the light of wysdome, all ye y<sup>e</sup> be rulers of the people. As for wysdome, what she is, and how she came vp, I will tell you, and will not hyde the misteries of God from you: but wil seke her out from y<sup>e</sup> begynnynge of the natyure, and brynge the knowledge of her in to light, and wil not kepe back the trueth. Nether will I haue to do wth cōsumynge enuye, for soch a man shal not be partaker of wysdome. But the multitude of the wyse is the welfare of the worlde, and a wyse kyng is the vpholdinge of the people. O receaue nourture then thorow my wordes, and it shal do you good.

The VII. Chap.

I myself also am a mortall man, like as all other, & am come of y<sup>e</sup> earthy generacio of him y<sup>e</sup> was first made, & in my mothers wōbe was I fashioned to be flesh: In the tyme of ten monethes was I brought together in bloude thorow the sede of man, & the comodious appetite of slepe. When I was borne, I receaued like ayre as other men, & fell vpon the earth (which is my nature) crienge & wepinge at the first, as all other do. I was wrapped in swadlinge clothes, & brought vp wth greate cares. For there is no kyng y<sup>e</sup> hath had eny other begynnynge of byrth. All men then haue one inuention vnto life, & one goinge out in like maner.

Wherfore I desyred, and vnderstandinge was geue me: I called, & the spiete of wysdome came in to me. I set more by her the by kyngdomes & royall seates, & counted riches nothynge in cōparison of her. As for precious stone I compared it not vnto her: for all golde is but grauell vnto her, & syluer shal be counted but claye before hir sight. I loued her aboue welfare & beutie, & purposed to take her for my light, for hir shyne can not be quenched. All good thinges came to me wth her, & innumerable riches thorow hir hādes. I was glad in the, all, for this wysdome wth ce before me, & I knew not y<sup>e</sup> she is the mother of all good thinges. Now as I myself lerned vnfaignedly, so do I make other men partakers of her, & hyde her riches from no man: for she is an infinite treasure vnto men, which who so vse, become partakers of the loue & frendshipe of God, and are accepted vnto him for the gistes of wysdome.

God hath graunted me to talke wysely, & conueniently to handle the thinges y<sup>e</sup> he hath graciously lent me. For it is he, y<sup>e</sup> ledeth vnto wysdome, & teacheth to vse wysdome a right. In his hāde are x<sup>ij</sup> & d<sup>o</sup> wordes: yee all d<sup>o</sup> wysdome, & vnderstandinge & knowlege of all workes. For he hath geue me y<sup>e</sup> true sciēce of these thinges: so that I knowe how y<sup>e</sup> worlde was made, & the powers of y<sup>e</sup> elementes: y<sup>e</sup> begynnynge, endinge & myddest of y<sup>e</sup> tymes: how the tymes alter, how one goeth after another, and how they are fulfilled: y<sup>e</sup> course of the yere: the ordinaunces of the starres: the natures & kindes of beastes: the furiousnesse of beastes: the power of y<sup>e</sup> wyndes: the ymaginacions of men: the deuersities of yonge plantes: the vertues of rootes, & all soch thinges as are secrete & not looked for, haue I lerned. For the workmaster of all thinges hath taught me wysdome. In hir is y<sup>e</sup> spiete of vnderstandinge, which is holy, maruillous, one onely, foryall, curteous, discrete, quyet, vndefyled, playne, swete, leuynge the thinge y<sup>e</sup> is good, sharpe, which forbyddeth not to do well, gentle, kynde, stedfast, sure, fre: barynge all vertues, circūspecte in all thinges.

ges: receauinge all spietes of vnderstandinge beiege cleane & sharpe. For wysdome is neember the all neeble thinges: she goeth thorow & attayneth to all thinges, because of hir clenness. For she is y<sup>e</sup> breth of y<sup>e</sup> power of God, & a pure cleane expresse of y<sup>e</sup> clearnes of Allmightie God. Therfore can no vndefyled thinge come in to her: for she is y<sup>e</sup> bryghtnes of y<sup>e</sup> euerlastige light, y<sup>e</sup> vndefiled myrrour of y<sup>e</sup> maiesty of God, & y<sup>e</sup> ymage of his goodnesse. And for so moch as she is one, she maie do all thinges: & beingested fast herself she renueth all, & amōge y<sup>e</sup> people cōveyeth she herself in to y<sup>e</sup> holy soules. She maketh Gods frendes & p<sup>roph</sup>hetes: for God loneth no mā, but him in whō wysdome dwelleth. For she is more beutifull then the Sonne, and geueth more light then the starres, and the daye is not to be cōpared vnto her: for vpon y<sup>e</sup> daye cometh night. But wickednesse can not ouercome wysdome, and foolishnes maye not be wth her.

The VIII. Chapter.

Wysdome reacheth fro one ende to another mightely, & lowgly doth she ordie all thinges. I haue loued her and laboured for her enē fro my youth vp: I dyd my diligēce to mary my self wth her, soch loue had I vnto hir beutie. Who so hath y<sup>e</sup> cōpany of God, cōmēdeth hir nobilyte, yee the LORDE of all thinges himself loueth her. For she is y<sup>e</sup> scolemastresse of y<sup>e</sup> nurr of God, & y<sup>e</sup> choser out of his workes. If a man wolde desyre riches in this life, what is richer then wysdome, y<sup>e</sup> worketh all thinges? (Thou wilt saye:) vnderstandinge worketh. What is it amōge all thinges, y<sup>e</sup> worketh more the wysdome? If a man loue vertue & righteousness, let him labo for wysdome, for she hath greate vertues. And why? she teacheth sobernes & prudence, righteousness & strength, which are soch thinges as mā can haue nothynge more profitable in their life. If a mā desyre moch knowlege, she cā tell y<sup>e</sup> thinges y<sup>e</sup> are past, & discerne thinges for to come: she knoweth y<sup>e</sup> sotilities of wordes, & cā expōnde darcke sentēces. She can tell of tokēs & wonderous thinges, & ener they come to passe, & the endes of all tymes & ages. So I purposed after this maner: I will take her vnto my cōpany, & cōmō lowgly wth her: no doute she shal geue me good cōcell, & speake cōfortably vnto me in my carefulnes & grese. For hir sake shal I be well and honestly taken amōge the cōmōs & lordes of y<sup>e</sup> cōncell. Though I be yonge, yet shal I haue sharpe vnderstandinge: so y<sup>e</sup> I shal be maruellous in y<sup>e</sup> sight of greate mā, & y<sup>e</sup> faces of prynces shal wonder at me. Whā I holde my tōge, they shal byde my leysure: Iob. 28. 6 whā I speake, they shal loke vpon me: & yf I talke moch, they shal laye their handes vpon their mouth. Moreover, by the meanes of her I shal prayne immortallite, and leaue behinde me an euerlasting memorie, amonge the y come after me. I shal set y people in ordie, & the nations shalbe subdued vnto me. Horrible tyrantes shal be afrayed, whan they do but heare of me: amonge the multitude I shal be counted good, & mightie in battayll. Whā I come home, I shal fynde rest w her: for hir cōpany hath no bytternes, & hir fellowship hath no rediousnesse, but myrrour & ioye.

C Now whan I considered these thinges by myself, & pondered them in my hert, how y to be ioyned vnto wysdome is immortallite, & greates pleasure to haue hir friendship: how y in the workes of hir handes are infinite riches: how that, who so kepeth company w her shalbe wise: and that he which talketh with her, shal come to honoure: I wente aboute setyng, to gett her vnto me. For I was a ladd of a ripe wytt, and had a good vnderstandinge.

But whan I grew to more vnderstandinge, I came to an vndeuyled body. Neuertheless whan I perceaued that I coude not scape myself chaist, excepte God gaue it me (z y was a poynte of wysdome also, to knowe whose gift it was) I stepte vnto the LORDE, and besought him, and with my whole hert I sayde after this maner:

The IX. Chapter.

A God of my fathers, & LORDE of mercies, (thou y hast made all thynges w y worde, & ordeyned mā thowow thy wysdome, & he shulde haue dominio ouer y creature, which thou hast made: & he shulde ordie y worlde accordinge to equite & righteousness, & execute iudgment w a true hert) geue me wysdome, which is euer aboute y seate. & put me not out fro amonge y children: for I thy seruant & sonne of y handmayden, am a feble personne, of a shorte tyme, and to yō ge to the vnderstandinge of iudgment and y lawes. And though a man be neuer so perfecte amonge the children of men, yet yf thy wysdome be not with him, he shal be nothin ge regarded. But thou hast chosen me to be a kynge vnto y people, and the iudge of thy sonnes and daughters.

B Thou hast comaunded me to buylde a temple vpon y holy mount, & an altier in the cite wherin thou dwellest: a lictnesse of thy holy tabernacle which thou hast prepared fro the begynnyng, and thy wysdome with y, which knoweth y workes: which also was w y whan thou maydest y worlde, & knew what was acceptable in thy sight, & mightie in thy commaundementes. O sende her vnto of thy holy heauens and from the throne of thy maiesty, that she maye be with me, & labour with me: that I maye knowe, what is acceptable in y sight. For she knoweth and vnderstandeth all thinges: and she shal lede me soberly in my workes, and preserve me in hir power. So shal my workes be acceptable, & then shal I gouerne thy people righteously, & be worthy to sit in my fathers seate. For what man is he, that maye knowe the counsell of God? Or, who can thinke what the will of God is? For the thoughtes of mortall men are miserable, & oure forecettes are but vncertaine. And why? a mortall and corruptible body is hevy vnto the soule, and the earthy mansion kepeth downe the vnderstandinge y museth vpon many thinges. Very hardly can we discerne the thinges that are vpon earth, and greates laboure we, or we can fynde the thinges which are before oure eyes: Who will then sette out the groude of the thinges that are done in heuē? Wh LORDE, who ca haue knowledge of y vnderstandinge and meaninge, excepte thou geue wysdome and sende thy holy goost fro above? that the wayes of them which are vpon earth maye be reformed: y men maye lerne y thinges that are pleasaunt vnto the, and be preserved thowow wysdome.

The X. Chapter.

Wysdome preserved y first mā, whō God made a father of the worlde, whā he was created alone, brought him out of his offence, toke him out of the mould of y earth, & gaue him power to rule all thinges. Whan the vnrighteous wente awaye in his wrath from this wysdome, y brotherhede perished thowow y wrath of murther. Agayne, whā y water destroyed y whole worlde, wysdome preserved the righteous thowow a poore tre, wherof she was gouerner herself. Moreover whā wickednes had gotten y vpperhande, so y the nations were puffed vp with pryde, she knewe y righteous, preserved him faultlesse vnto God, and layed vp sure mercy for his children. She preserved the righteous, whan he fled from the vngodly y perished, what tyme as y fell downe vpon y v. cities: Like as yet this daye the vnfructfull waiste and smoking lode geueth testimony of their wickednes: yee the vnripe and vntymely frutes that growe vpon the trees.

And for a toke of a remembraunce of the vnfaithfull soule, there standeth a piler of salt. For all soch as regarded not wysdome, gatt not only this hurte, that they knewe not the thinges which were good, but also left behinde them vnto me, a memorie of their foolishnes: so y in the thinges wherin they synned, they coude not be hydd. But as for soch as take hede vnto wysdome, she shal de liuer them from sorowe.

C Whan the righteous fled because of his brothers wrath, wysdome led him the right waye, shewed him y kyngdome of God, gaue him knowledge of holy thinges, made him riche in his laboures, and brought to passe the thinges that he wente aboute. In y discerfulnes of soch as defrauded him, she stode by him, & made him ryche. She saued him from the enemies, and defended him from y deceauers. She made him stronge in battayll, and gaue him the victory, y he might knowe, how that wysdome is stronger then all thinges. Whan the righteous was sold, she forsoke him not, but deliuered him fro synners. She wente downe with him in to the dongeon, and sayled him not in the bandes: yll she had brought him the cepter of y realme, and power agaynst those that oppressed him. As for them that had accused him, she declared them to be lyers, & brought him to perpetuall worshippe.

D She deliuered the righteous people and faultlesse seide, from the nations that oppressed them. She entred in to the soule of the seruant of God, and stode by him in wonders and tokens agaynst the horrible kynge. She gaue y righteous the rewarde of their labours, & led them forth a marvelous waye: on the daye tyme she was a shadowe vnto them, and a light of starres in the night season. She brought them thowow the reed see, and caried them thowow the greates water. She drowned their enemies in the see, and brought them out of the depe. So the righteous toke the spoyle of the vngodly, and praysed thy holy name (O LORDE) and magnified thy victorious had with one acorde. For wysdome openeth the mouth of y dom me, & maketh y tonges of babes to speake.

The XI. Chapter.

She ordeied their workes in the hādes of the holy prophet: so y they wente thowow y wyldernes y was not inhabited, & pitched their tētes in y waiste deserte. They stode agaynst their enemies, & were auenged of their aduersaries. Whā they were thirstie, they called vpon y, & water was geue them out of y rok, & their thirste slackened out of y harde stone. For by y thinges, where thowow their enemies were punished, were they helped in their neede. For vnto the enemies thou gauest mā bloude in steade of lynyng water. And where as they had scarcenesse in y rebute whan the children were slayne, thou gauest vnto thine awne a plenteous water vnloked for: declaringe by the thyrt y was at that tyme, how thou woldest bringe thine awne vnto hono, & slaye their aduersaries.

So whan they were tryed & nourtured w fatherly mercy, they knowledged how the vngodly were iudged, and punished thowow y wrath of God. These hast thou exorted as a father, & proued the: but vnto y ether thou hast bene a boysteous kynge, layed hard to their charge, & condēned the. Whether they were absent or present, their punishment was alyke. For their grese was dubble: namely, mournyng, and y remembraunce of thinges past. But whā they perceaued y their punishmentes dyd the good, they thought vpon the LORDE, & wondered at y ende. For at the last they helde moch of him, of whō in y outcastinge they thought scorne, as of an abiecte. Neuerthelesse y righteous dyd not so when they were thirstie: but enenlike as y thoughtes of y foolish were, so was also their wickednes. Where as certayne me now (thowow eris) dyd worshiipe domme serpentes & wayne beestes, thou sendest a multitude of domme beastes vpon them for a vengeance: y they might knowe, that loke where withall a mā synneth, by the same also shal he be punished. For vnto thy allmighty hande, that made the worlde of naught, it was not vnpossible, to sende amonge them an heape of Bees, or woodelys, or cruell beastes of a strange kynde, soch as are vnkowne, or spoute fyre, or cast out a smoking breth, or shote horrible sparkes out of their eyes: which might not only destroye them with hurtinge, but also kyl them with their horrible sight. Yee without these beestes might they haue bene slayne with one winde, beyng persecuted of their awne workes, and scatered abroad thowow the bieth of thy power.

D Neuertheles thou hast ordeied all thinges in measure, nōbie & weight. For thou hast enner had greates strenght & might, & who maye withstode y power of thine arme? And why like as y small thynge y y balaunce weyeth, so is y worlde before y: yee as a droppe of y morning dew, that falleth downe vpon the earth. Thou hast mercy vpon all, for thou hast power of all thynges: and makest the as though thou sawest not the synnes of me, because they shulde amende. For thou louest all the thinges that are, and hatest none of the whō thou hast made: nether didest thou ordeyne or make eny thinge of euell will.

How might eny thinge endure, yf it wer not y will? Or how coude eny thinge be preserved, excepte it were called of y? But thou sparest all, for all are thine, O LORDE, thou lover of soules.

The XII. Chapter.

LORDE, how gracious & swete is thy sprete in all thinges: Therfore chastenest thou thē measurably that go wroge, and warnest them, concernynge the thinges wherin they offende: thou speakest vnto them (O LORDE) and exortest thē to leaue their wickednes, and to put their trust in the. As for those olde inhabitants of thy holy londe, thou mightest not awaye with them, for they commytted abhominable workes agaynst the: as wythcraft, sorcery and Idolatry: they slew their owne children without mercy: they ate vp mens bowels, and deuoured the bloude: Yee because of soch abhominacions, mysbelenes & offeringes, thou slewest the fathers of the desolate soules by the handes of oure fathers: that y londe which thou louest aboue all other, might be a dwellinge for the childre of God.

Neuertheles thou sparedest thē also (as mē) & sendest y forerunners of thyne hoost, eue homettes to destroye thē out by lytle & lytle. Not y thou wast unable to subdue y vn godly vnto y righteous in battayll, or with cruell beestes, or w one rough worde to destroye thē together: But y mynde was to dryue thē out by lytle & lytle, geuynge thē tyme & place to amende: knowynge well, y it was an vnrighteous nacion & wicked of nature, & y their thought might neuer be altered. For it was a cursed seide from y begynnynge, & feared no mā: Yet hast thou pardoned their synnes. For who wyl saye vnto the: why hast thou done y? Or who wyl stode agaynst thy iudgmēt? Or who wil come before y face an auēger of vnrighteous mē? Or who wil blame y, yf y people perish, whō thou hast made: For there is none other God but thou, y carest for all thinges: y thou mayest declare how y y iudgmēt is not vnright. There dare nether kīge, ner tyrant in y sight requyre accōptes of them, whō thou hast destroyed.

For so moch thē as thou art righteous y self, thou ordrest all thiges righteously, & punishest eue hī y hath not deserved to be punyshed, & takest him for a straūger & an aleaunt in y lōde of y power. For y power is y begynnynge of righteousnes: and because thou art LORDE of all thinges, therfore art thou gracious vnto all. Whan men thinke y not to be of a full strength, thou declarest y power: & boldly deluyrest thou them ouer y knowe y not. But thou LORDE of power iudgest quyetly, and ordrest us with greate worshippe, for thou mayest do as thou wilt.

By soch workes now hast thou taught thy people, that a mā also shulde be iust and louynge: and hast made thy childre to be of a good hope: for euen when thou iudgest, thou geuest rowme to amende from synnes. For in so moch as thou hast punyshed, and w soch diligence deluyrest y enemies of thy seruantes, which were worthy to dye (where thou wouldest thou gauest thē tyme & place of amēdement, y they might turne frō their wickednes) w how greate diligence then punyshest thou thine awne childre, vnto whose fathers thou hast sworne & made couenaūtes of good promises: So where as thou doest but chasten vs, thou punyshest y enemies dyuerse wayes: to y intēt y whā we punysh, we shulde remēbre y goodnesse: & whan we d selues are punyshed, to put oure trust in thy mercy.

Wherfore where as men haue lyued ignorantly & vnrighteously, thou hast punyshed thē sore, eue thow w y same thinges that they worshipped. For they wente astraye very so, gein y waye of errō, & helde y beestes (which eue their enemies despyed) for goddes, lyuynge as children of no vnderstandinge. Therfore hast thou sent a scornfull punysshment amonge them, as amonge the childre of synne & raunce. As for soch as wolde not be reformed by those scornes & rebukes, they felt the worthy punysshment of God. For y thinges y they suffred, they bare thē vnpacktly, beinge not contēt in them but vnwyllynge. And whan they perysched by y same thinges that they toke for goddes, they knowledged then, that there was but one true God, whom afore they wolde not knowe: therfore came y ende of their dampnacion vpon them.

The XIII. Chapter.

Alyne are all men, which haue not y knowlege of God: as were they that out of the good thinges which are sene, knewe not him, that of himself is euellastynge. Nether toke they so moch regarde of the workes that are made, as to knowe, who was the craftesman of them: but some toke the fyre, some the wynde or ayre, some y course of y starres, some y water, some toke Sonne and Moone, or the lightes of heauen, which rule y earth, for goddes. But though they had soch pleasure in their beuty, that they thought them to haue bene goddes:

The boke of Wysdome.

yet shulde they haue knowne, how moch more sayre he is that made them. For the matter of beuty hath ordered all these thinges. Or yf they marueled at the power and workes of thē, they shulde haue perceaued thereby, y he which made these thinges, is mightier then they.

For by the greatnesse & beuty of the creature, y maker thereof maye playnely be knowne. Notwithstandynge they are the lesse to be blamed, that sought God & wolde haue founde him, and yet myssed. And why? for so moch as they wete aboute in his workes and sought after them, it is a tokē, that they regarded and helde moch of his workes y are sene: howbeit they are not wholly to be excused. For yf their vnderstandynge and knowlege was so greate, y they coude discern the worlde and y creatures, why dyd they not rather synde out y LORDE thereof?

But unhappie are they, and amenge the deed is their hope, that call thē God which are but the workes of mens handes: golde, syluer and the thinge, that is founde out by comynge, the similitude of beastes, or eny wayne stone that hath bene made by hande of olde. Or as whan a carpenter cutteth downe a tre out of the wodd, and pareth of the bark of it comyngly: and so with the one parte maketh a vessell to be used, and diggeth meate with the residue. As for the other parte that is left, which is profitable for nothynge (for it is a croked pece of wodd and full of knobbes) he carneth it diligently thow his vanite, and (acordinge to the knowlege of his comynge) he geueth it some proporcion, fashioneth it after the similitude of a man, or maketh it like some beest, straketh it ouer with reed and paynteth it, and loke what foule spot is in it, he casteth some coloure vpon it. Then maketh he a conuenient tabernacle for it, setteth it in the wall and maketh it fast with yron, prouydinge so for it, lest it happē to fall: for it is well knowne, that it can not helpe it self: And why? it is but an ymage, and must of necessity be helped.

Then goeth he and offreth of his goodes vnto it for his children and for his wife: he seeketh helpe at it, he axeth counsell at it: he is not ashamed to speake vnto it y hath no soule: for health, he maketh his petition vnto him that is sicke: for life, he prayeth vnto him that is deed: he calleth vpon him for helpe, that is not able to helpe him self: & to sende him a good iourneye, he prayeth him that maye not go. And in all the thinges y

The xiiij. Chap. Ho. xxxvi.

he taketh in hande (whether it be to optayne eny thinge or to worke) he prayeth vnto him that can do maner of good.

The XIII. Chapter.

Sayne, another mā purposinge to saye lez begynnynge to take his iourney thow y raginge see, calleth for helpe vnto a stock, y is farre weaker, thē y tre y beareth him. For as for it, coueteousnesse of moneye hath founde it out, & y craftesman made it w his comynge. But y prouydence (O farther) governeth all thinges frō y begynnynge, for thou hast made a waye in y see, & a sure path in the myddest of y waves: declaringe therby, y thou hast power to helpe in all thinges, yee though a man wente to the see without shippe. Neuerthelesse, y y workes of y wysdome shulde not be vaine, thou hast caused an arke to be made: & therfore do men commytte their lyues to a small pece of wodd passynge ouer the see in a shyppe, & are saved.

For in the olde tyme also whā the proude triauntes perished, he (in whō the hope was left to increase y worlde) wete in to the shippe, which was governed thow thy hande, & so left seide behinde him vnto y worlde. For happie is y tre wherethow righteousnes cometh: but cursed is the ymage of wodd, y is made w hādes, yee both it & he y made it: he, because he made it: & it, because it was called God, where as it is but a frayle thinge. For the vngodly & his vngodlynes are both like abhominable vnto God. Euen so y worke & he y made it also shal be punyshed together. Therfore shal there a plage come vpon the ymages of the heithen: for out of the creature of God they are become an abhominacion, a temptacion vnto the soules of men, and a snare for the fete of the vnwyse. And why? the settinge out of ymages is the begynnynge of whordome, and the bringynge vp of them is the destruccion of life. For they were not from the begynnynge, nether shal they continue for euer. The welthy ydilnes of men hath founde them out vpon earth, therfore shal they come shortly to an ende. Whē a father mourned for his sonne y was taken awaye frō him, he made him an ymage (in all y haist) of his deed sonne: & so begāne to worshiipe him as God, which was but a deed mā & ordered his seruantes to offre vnto him. Thus by processe of tyme & thoww lōge custome, this errō was kepte as a lawe, & tyrantes cōpelled mē by violence to honō ymages. As for those y were so farre of, y mē might not worshiipe them presently, their picture was brought frō farre (like the ymage of a kynge whō they woldehonoure) to the intent that with greate diligence they might worshiþe him which was farre of, as though he had bene present. Agayne, the syngular conyn be of the craftesman gaue the ignoraunt al so a greate occasiō to worshiþe ymages. For the workman wyllinge to do him a pleasure that sett him a worke, laboured with all his conynge to make the ymage of the best fashon. And so (thorow the beuty of the worke) the comon people was disceaued, in so moch that they toke him now for a God, which a litle afore was but honored as a man. And this was the erreure of mans life, whan men (ether for to serue their owne affeccion, or to do some pleasure vnto kynges) as crybed vnto stones and stockes the name of God, which ought to be geuen vnto no man.

Moreover, this was not ynough for them that they erred in the knowlege of God: but where as they lyued in the greate warres of ignoraunce, those many and greate plagges called they peace. For ether they slewe their awne children and offred them, or dyd sacrifice in the night season, or els helde vnreasonable warres: so that they kepte nether life ner mariage cleane: but ether one slewe another to death maliciously, or els greued his neghbour wth aduoutrie. And thus were all thynges myrte together: bloude, manslaughter, thefte, dissimulacion, corrupcion, vnfaithfulness, sedicion, periury, disquyetinge of good men, vnthāt fulnes, desylinge of soules, chaūginge of byrth, vnstedfastnesse of mariage, mysorde of aduoutrie and vnclennesse. And why? the honouringe of abhominable ymages, is the cause, the begynnyng and ende of alleuell. For they y<sup>e</sup> worshiþe Idols, either they are madd whā they be mery, or prophecie lyes, or lyue vngodly, or els lightly manswaie them selues. For in so moch as their trust is in y<sup>e</sup> Idols (which haue nether soule ner vnderstandinge) though they sweare falsely, yet they thinke it shal not hurt them.

Therefore commeth a greate plage vpon them, and that worthely: for they haue an euell opiniō of God, geuinge hede vnto Idols, swearinge vniustly to disceane, and dyspylyng righteousnes. For their swearinge is no vertue, but a plage of them that synne, and goeth ever with the offence of the vngodly.

The XV. Chapter.

Wether (O God) art swete, longe sufferinge and true, and in mercy ordiest thou all thynges. Though we synne, yet are we thine, for we knowe thy strength. If we synne not, then are we sure, that thou regardest vs. For to knowe the, is perfecte righteousnes: For to knowe y<sup>e</sup> righteousnes and power, is the rote of immortallite. As for the thynges that men haue founde out thorow theyr euell science, it hath no disceaued vs: as the payntinge of the picture (an vnprofitable labour) and carued ymage, with diuerse colours, whose sight enuiereth the ignoraunt: so that he honoureth and loueth the picture of a deed ymage, that hath no soule.

Nevertheless, they that loue soche euell thynges, are worthy of death: they that trust in them, they that make them, they that loue them, and they that honoure them. The potter also taketh y<sup>e</sup> tempereth soft earth, labourer it, and geueth it the fashon of a vessell, what so euer serueth for cure vse: and so of one pece of claye he maketh some cleane vessel for service, and some contrary. But where to euery vessell serueth, that knoweth y<sup>e</sup> potter himself. So with his wayne labour he maketh a god of the same claye: this doth euen he, which a litle afore was made of earth himself, and within a litle whyle after (whan he dyeth) turneth to earth agayne.

Notwithstandinge, he careth not y<sup>e</sup> more because he shal labō ner because his life is shorte: but stryuethe to excell goldsmithes, y<sup>e</sup> syluer smithes y<sup>e</sup> copper smithes, and taketh it for an honō to make wayne thynges. For his hert is ashes, his hope is but vaine earth y<sup>e</sup> his life is more vyle then claye: for so moch as he knoweth not his awne maker, that gaue him his soule to worke, and brethed in him the breth of life. They counte onre life but a pastyme, and oure conuersacion to be but a market, and that men shulde euer be gettinge, yee and that by euell meanes. Now he y<sup>e</sup> of earth maketh frayle vessell and ymages, knoweth himself to offende aboue all other.

All the enemies of thy people and y<sup>e</sup> holde them in subieccion, are vnwyse, vnclappte and excedinge proude vnto their owne soules: for they iudge all the Idols of the heathē to be goddes, which nether haue eyesight to se, ner noses to smell, ner eares to heare, ner fingers of handes for to grope: y<sup>e</sup> as for their fete, they are to slowe to go. For man made them, and he that hath but a borrowed spirete, fashioned them. But no man can make a God like vnto him: for seinge he is but mortall himself, it is but mortall that he maketh with vnrighteous handes. He himself is better then they whom he worshiþeth, for he lyued though he was mortall, but so dyd neuer they. For they worshiþe beestes also, which are most miserable: for compare thynges that can not sele vnto them, y<sup>e</sup> they are worse then those. Yet is there not one of the se beestes, that with his sight cā beholde eny good thyng, nether haue they geuen praye ner thankes vnto God.

The XVI. Chapter.

Or these and soch other thynges haue they suffred worthy punysshment, y<sup>e</sup> thorow y<sup>e</sup> multitude of beestes are they roted out. Insteade of y<sup>e</sup> which punysshmentes thou hast graciously ordied thine awne people, y<sup>e</sup> geuen them their desyre that they lōged for: a new y<sup>e</sup> straunge taist, preparinge them quales to be their meate: to the intent y<sup>e</sup> (by the thynges which were shewed and sent vnto them) they y<sup>e</sup> were so gredy of meate, might be withdrawen euen from the desyre that was necessary. But these within shorte tyme were brought vnto pouerte, and taisted a new meate. For it was requisite y<sup>e</sup> (without eny excuse) destruccion shulde come vpo those which vsed tyrāny, y<sup>e</sup> to shewe onely vnto the other, how their enemies were destroyed. For whan the cruell woodnesse of the beestes came vpon them, they perished thorow the stinges of the cruell serpentes.

Notwithstandinge y<sup>e</sup> wrath endured not perpetually, but they were put in feare for a litle season, y<sup>e</sup> they might be reformed, hauinge a token of saluacion, to remembre the comaundement of thy lawe. For he y<sup>e</sup> couered, was not healed by the thyng y<sup>e</sup> he sawe, but by THE O sauio of all. So in this thou shewdest thine enemies, y<sup>e</sup> it is thou, which delinest fro all euell. As for the whan they were bytten wth greshoppers and flies, they died, for they were worthy to perish by soch: But nether the teth of dragons ner of very mous wormes ouer came y<sup>e</sup> children, for thy mercy was euer by them y<sup>e</sup> helped the. Therefore were they punysshed to remembre thy wordes, but hastely were they healed agayne: lest they shulde fall in to so depe forgetfulness, that they might not vse thy helpe.

It was nether herbe ner plaster y<sup>e</sup> restored the to health, but thy worde (O LORDE) which healeth all thynges. It is thou (O LORDE) y<sup>e</sup> hast the power of life y<sup>e</sup> death: thou ledest vnto deatnes doie, y<sup>e</sup> bringest vp agayne. But man thorow wickednes slayeth his owne soule, y<sup>e</sup> when his spirete goeth forth, it turneth not agayne, nether maye he call agayne y<sup>e</sup> soule y<sup>e</sup> is takē awaye: It is not possible to escape y<sup>e</sup> hande. For y<sup>e</sup> vngodly y<sup>e</sup> wolde not knowe y<sup>e</sup>, were punysshed by y<sup>e</sup> strength of thine arme: wth straunge waters, hales and raynes were they persecuted, y<sup>e</sup> thorow fyre were they consumed. For it was a wonderous thyng that fyre might do more then water which quēcheth all thynges: but y<sup>e</sup> worde is y<sup>e</sup> auēger of the righteous. Some tyme was y<sup>e</sup> fyre so tame, y<sup>e</sup> the beestes which were sent to punyssh y<sup>e</sup> vngodly, brient not: y<sup>e</sup> because they shulde se y<sup>e</sup> knowe, y<sup>e</sup> they were persecuted wth the punysshment of God. And somtyme brient the fyre in the water on euery syde, y<sup>e</sup> it might destroye y<sup>e</sup> vnrighteous naciō of the earth. Agayne, thou hast fed thine awne people wth angels fode, y<sup>e</sup> sent the bried ready from heauē (without their labō) beyng very pleasant y<sup>e</sup> well gusted. And to shewe thy riches y<sup>e</sup> siuetnesse vnto thy childre, thou gauest euery one their desyre, so y<sup>e</sup> euery man might take what liked him best. But the snowe y<sup>e</sup> yse abode the violēce of the fyre, y<sup>e</sup> melted not: y<sup>e</sup> they might knowe, y<sup>e</sup> the fyre burninge in the halle y<sup>e</sup> rayne, destroyed y<sup>e</sup> frute of y<sup>e</sup> enemies: y<sup>e</sup> fyre also forgatt his strength agayne, y<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> righteous might be noursed. For y<sup>e</sup> creature y<sup>e</sup> serueth y<sup>e</sup> (which art y<sup>e</sup> maker) is farse in punysshinge y<sup>e</sup> vnrighteous, but it is easy y<sup>e</sup> getle to do good, vnto soch as put their trust in the. Therefore dyd all thynges alter at the same tyme, y<sup>e</sup> were all obediēt vnto thy grace, which is y<sup>e</sup> noise of all thynges, accordinge to y<sup>e</sup> desyre of the y<sup>e</sup> had nede therof: y<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> childre (O LORDE) whō thou lonest, might knowe, y<sup>e</sup> it is not nature y<sup>e</sup> the growinge of frutes y<sup>e</sup> fedeth mē, but y<sup>e</sup> it is y<sup>e</sup> worde, which preserueth the y<sup>e</sup> put their trust in the. For loke what might not be destroyed wth the fyre, as soone as it was warmed wth a litle Sonne beame, it melted: y<sup>e</sup> all men might knowe, y<sup>e</sup> thankes ought to be geuen vnto y<sup>e</sup> before y<sup>e</sup> Sonner yse, y<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> thou oughtest to be worshiþped before y<sup>e</sup> daye spryng. For y<sup>e</sup> hope of y<sup>e</sup> vnthantfull shal melt awaie as the wynter yse, y<sup>e</sup> perishe as water, y<sup>e</sup> is not necessary.

The XVII. Chapter.

Create are thy iudgmētes (O LORDE) y<sup>e</sup> thy counsels can not be expressed: therefore men do erre, y<sup>e</sup> wil not be reformed wth thy wysdome. For whan the vnrighteous thought to haue thy holy people in subieccion, they were bounde wth the bandes of darcknes y<sup>e</sup> longe night, shutt vnder y<sup>e</sup> rofe, thinkinge to escape y<sup>e</sup> euerylatinge wysdome. And why lo they thought to be hyd in y<sup>e</sup> darcknesse of their synnes, they were scattered abroad in y<sup>e</sup> very myddest of the darck coveringe of forgetfulness, put to horrible feare y<sup>e</sup> wonderously vered. For the corner where they were, might not kepe them from feare: because y<sup>e</sup>

sonde came downe and vexed them: yee many terribyle and straunge visions made them afayed.

B No power of the fyre might geue them light, nether might the cleare flames of the starres lighte & horrible night. For there appeared vnto the a sodane fyre, very dredeful: At y which (whan they sawe nothings) they were so afayed, that they thought & thinge which they sawe, to be the more fearfull. As for the sorcery & enchauntment & they used, it came to derisio, and the proude wysdome was brought to shame. For they & promysed to dyue awaie the fearfulness & dicde fro & weake soules, were sicke for feare the selues, and that w scone. And though none of & worders feared the, yet were they afayed at the beestes which came vpon the, & at & his syng of the serpentes: In so moch that with treblinge they swowned, & sayde they sawe not & aye, which no mā yet maye escape.

C For it is an heuy thinge, whā a mans ewe conscience beareth recorde of his wickednes & condēpneth him. And why: a vexed & wounded conscience, taketh euer cruell thinges in hāde. Fearfulness is nothinge els, but a declaringe & a mā seeketh helpe & defence, to answeere for him self. And loke how moch lesse the hope is within, the more is & vn certainty of the matter, for the which he is punished. But they & came in & mightie night, slepte & slepe & fell vpo the fro vnder & fro aboue: somtyme were they afayed thorow & feare of & wonders, & somtyme they were so weake, & they swowned withall: for an hastie & sodane fearfulness came vpon the. After warde, yf eny of the had fallē, he was kepte & shut in prison, but without chaynes. But yf eny dwelt in a vyllage, yf he had bene an hyrd or husbandman, he suffred intollerable necessite: for they were all bounde with one chayne of darcknesse.

D Whether it were a blasynge wynde, or a swete songe of & byrdes amonge the thicke braunches of the trees, or the vehemence of haistie rūnyng water, or greate noyse of & fallynge downe of stones, or the playenge & rūnyng of beastes whō they sawe not, or & mightie noyse of roaryng beestes, or & sowne de & answereth agayne in the hyc mountaynes: it made the sworne for very feare. For all the earth shyned w cleare light, & no mā was hyndered in his labo. Onely vpon the there fell a heuy night, an ymage of darcknesse that was to come vpon them. Yee they were vnto them selues the most heuy & horrible darcknesse.

The XVIII. Chapter.
U Euertheles thy sayntes had a very greate light (and the enemies herde their voyce, but they sawe not the figure of them.) And because they suffred not & same thinges, they magnified the: and they & were vexed afore (because they were not hurte now) thanked the, and besought & (o God) & there might be a difference. Therefore had they a burnynge piler of fyre to leder them in the vnknowne waye, & thou gauest them the Seme for a fire gift without eny hurte. Reason it was, that they shulde want light & to be put in the prison of darcknes, which kepte thy childre in captiuyte, by whom the vn corrupt light of the lawe of & woulde was for to be geuen. Whan they thought to slay the babes of the righteous (one beinge laid out, and yet preserued to be leder vnto the other) thou broughtest out the whole multitude of the children, and destroydest the in the mightie water. Of that night were our fathers certified afore, that they knowinge vnto what ooties they had geuen credence, might be of good cheare. Thus thy people receaued & health of the righteous, but the vngodly were destroyed. For like as thou hast hurte our enemies, so hast thou promoted vs whom thou callest afore. For the righteous children of the good men offered secretly, & ordred the lawe of righteousness vnto vnto: & the iust shulde receaue good and euell in like maner, singinge prayes vnto & father of all men. Agayne, there was herde an vnconuenient voyce of the enemies, & a piteous crie for childre that were bewayled. The master and the seruait were punished alike, the meane man and the kynge suffred in like maner. For they all together had miserable that dyed one death.

Neither were & lyunge sufficient to bury & deed, for in & twyncklinge of an eye, the noblest nacion of the was destroyed. As oft as God helped the afore, yet wolde it not make the beleue: but in & destruction of & first borne they knowledged, that it was & people of God. For whyle all thinges were still, & whā & night was in & myddest of hir course, thy Allmightie worde (o LORDE) leapt downe fro heauē out of & royall trone, as a rough mā of warre, in & myddest of & londe & was destroyed: & & sharpe swerde persequed & straitte comandment, stādinge & fyllinge all thinges w death: yee it stode vpo & earth & reached vnto the heauen. Then the sight of the euell dreames vexed them sodenly, and fearfulness came vpon them vnawares.

D Then laye there one here, another there half deed half quyk, and shewed the cause of his death. For the visions that vexed the, shewed the these thinges afore: so that they were not ignoraunt, wherfore they perished. The tentacion of death touched the righteous also, and amonge the multitude in the wyldernes there was insurreccion, but thy wrath endured not longe. For the faultlesse man wente in all the haist, and toke the batayll vpon him, brought forth the weape of his ministracion: euen prayer and & cōsolours of recōsilinge, set himself agaynst & wrath, and so brought the misery to an ende: declaringe therby, that he was thy seruaut. For he overcame not the multitude with bodely power, ner with weapes of might: but with the worde he subdued him that vexed him, puttinge the in remembraunce of the ooth & couenaunt made vnto the fathers. For whan the deed were fallen downe by heapes one vpon another, he stode in the myddest, pacified the wrath, and parted & waye vnto the lyuynge. And why in his longe garmēt was all the beuty, and in the foure rowes of the stones was the glory of the fathers graue, and thy maiesty was witten in the crowne of his heade. Vnto these the destroyer gaue place, and was afayed of them: for it was only a tentacion worthy of wrath.

The XIX. Chapter.

D S for the vngodly, the wrath came vpo them without mercy vnto the ende. For he knew before what shulde happē vnto them: how that (whan they had consented to lett them go, and had sent them out with greate diligence) they wolde repent, & folowe vpon them. For whan they were yet mournyng and makinge lamentacion by the graues of the deed, they deuysed another foolishnes: so that they persecuted them in their flighte, whom they had cast out afore w prayer. Worthy necessite also brought them vnto this ende, for they had cleane forgotten the thinges & happened vnto them afore. But the thinge that was wantynge of their punysshment, was requysite so to be fulfilled vpon them with tormentes: that thy people might haue a maruelous passage thorow, and that these might fynde a straunge death.

The was enery creature fashioned agayne of the new acordinge to the wyll of their maker, obeyenge thy commandementes, & thy children might be kepte without hurte. For the cloude overshadowed their tentes, & the drye earth appeared, where afore was water: so & in the reed see there was a waye without impediment, and the greate depe became a grene felde: where thorow all & people wente that were defended with thy hande, seinge thy wonderous & maruelous workes. For as & horses, so were they scod, & leapt like lābes, prayying the (o LORDE) which haddest deliuered them. And why: they were yet mynde full of the thinges, that happened whyle they dwelt in the londe: how the grounde brought forth flyes in steade of cattell, and how & ryuer scrawled with the multitude of frogges in steade of fysshes.

But at the last they sawe a new creacion of byrdes, what tyme as they were diseaued with lust, and desyred delicate meates. For whan they were speakinge of their appetite, the quales came vp vnto them from the see, and punysshmentes came vpon & synners, not without the tokes which came to passe afore by the vehemence of & streames: for they suffred worthely acordinge to their wickednesses, they dealt so abhominably & churlishly with straungers. Some receaued no vnknowne gestes, some brought & straungers in to bondage that dyd them good. Besyde all these thinges there were some, that not only receaued no straungers with their wylls, but persecuted those also, and dyd the moch euell, that receaued the gladly. Therefore were they punyshed with byndnesse, like as they that were couered with sodane darcknesse at the doores of the righteous: so & every one sought & inraunce of his doer.

Thus the elementes turned in to them selues, like as whan one tune is chaunged vpon an instrument of musick, and yet all the residue kepte their melody: which maye easely be perceaued, by the sight of the thinges that are come to passe. The drye lōde was turned in to a watery, & & thinge that afore swam in the water, wente now vpon the drye grounde. The fyre had power in the water (contrary to his awne vertue) and the water forgatt his awne kynde to quench. Agayne, the flammes of the noysome beastes hurte not the flesh of them that were with them, nether melted they the yse, which els melteth lightly. In all thinges hast thou promoted thy people (o LORDE) and brought them to honoure: thou hast not despyed them, but allwaye and in all places hast thou stonde by them.

The ende of the boke of wysdome.

Ecclesiasticus called Jesus Syrac

The prologe of Jesus the sonne of Syrac vnto his boke.

Many and great men haue declared wysdome vnto vs out of y<sup>e</sup> lawe, out of y<sup>e</sup> prophetes & out of other that folowed the. In the which thinges Israel ought to be commended, by the reason of doctrine and wysdome: Therfore they that haue it & reade it, shulde not onely the selues be wyse there thorow, but serue other also with teachinge and wrytinge.

After that my graund father Jesus had genen diligent labour to reade the lawe, the prophetes and other boke that were left vs of oure fathers, and had wel exercised himself therein: he purposed also to wryte some thinge of wysdome and good maners, to the intent that they which were wyllinge to lerne and to be wyse, might haue the more understandinge, and be the more apte to lede a good conuersacion.

Wherfore I exorte you to receaue it lowyngly, to reade it with diligence, and to take it in good worth: though oure wordes be not so eloquent as the famous oratours. For the thinge that is wrytten in the hebrue tonge, soundeth not so well whan it is translated in to any other speache. Not only this boke of myne, but also the lawe, the prophetes, and other boke sounde farre other wyse, then they do, whan they are spoken in their awne language.

Now in the XXXVIII. yere whan I came in to Egypte in the tyme of Ptolomey Euergetes, and continued there all my life, I gat libertie to reade and wryte many good thinges. Wherfore I thought it good and necessary, to bestowe my diligence and tranayle to interpret this boke. And consideringe that I had tyme, I laboured and dyd my best to perswade me this boke, and to bryng it vnto light: that the straungers also which are disposed to lerne, might applye them selues vnto good maners, & lyue accordinge to y<sup>e</sup> lawe of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE.

What this boke conteyneth.

The first Chapter.

Al wysdome cometh of God the LORDE, & hath bene euer to him, and is before all tyme. Who hath nombred y<sup>e</sup> sonde of the see, y<sup>e</sup> dropes of the rayne & the dayes of tyme? Who hath measured the heyth of heauē, y<sup>e</sup> bredth of the earth & the depenesse of the see? Who hath sought out the grounde of Gods wysdome, which hath bene before all thinges? Wysdome hath bene before all thinges, and the vnderstandinge of prudence from euerlastynge. (Gods woide in the heyth is the well of wysdome, and the euerlastynge commaundementes are the intrancke of her.) Vnto whom hath y<sup>e</sup> rote of wysdome bene declared? Or who hath knowne hir wyt? Vnto whom hath the doctrine of wysdome bene discovered and shewed? and who hath vnderstande the many folde entraunce of her? There is one: eue the hyyest, the maker of all thinges, y<sup>e</sup> Allmightie, y<sup>e</sup> kynge of power (of whom men ought to stonde greatly in awe) which sitteth vpon his trone, beinge a God of dominion: he hath created her thorow y<sup>e</sup> holy goost: he hath sene her, nombred her, and measured her: he hath poured her out vpon all his workes, and vpon all flesh acordinge to his gife: he geureth her richely vnto them that loue him. The feare of the LORDE is worshippe and triumphe, gladnesse & a ioyfull crowne. The feare of the LORDE maketh a mery hert, geureth gladnesse, ioye and longe life. Who so feareth the LORDE, it shal go well with him at the last, & in the daye of his death he shal be blessed.

C The loue of God is honorable wysdome: loke vnto whom it appeareth, they loue it, for they se what wondrous thinges it doth. The feare of LORDE is the begynnyng of wysdome, and was made with the faithfull in the mothers wombe: it shal go with the chosen women, and shal be knowne of y righteons and faithfull. The feare of the LORDE is y right Gods seruyce, that preseruethe and iustifieth the hert, and geureth myrth & gladnesse. Who so feareth the LORDE, shal be happie: and whan he hath nede of comforte, he shal be blessed. To feare God is the wysdome that maketh rich, and bringeth all good with her. She fylleth the whole house with hir gistes, & the garners with her treasure. The feare of the LORDE is the crowne of wysdome, and geureth plenteous peace & health. Ze hath sene her & nombred her: knowlege and vnderstandinge of wysdome hath he poured out as rayne: and them that helde her fast, hath he brought vnto hono<sup>r</sup>.

D The feare of the LORDE is the rote of wysdome, and hir braunches are longe life. (In the treasures of wysdome is vnderstandinge and deuocion of knowlege, but wysdome is abhorred of synners.) The feare of the LORDE dryueth out synne, for he that is without feare, can not be made righteous, & his wilfull boldnes is his owne destruccion. A paciēt man wyl suffre vnto the tyme, and the shal he haue y rewarde of ioye. A good vnderstandinge wil hyde his wordes for a tyme, and many mes lippes shal speake of his wysdome. In the treasures of wysdome is the declaracion of doctrine, but the synner abhorreth the worshippe of God. My sonne, yf thou desyre wysdome, kepe the commandement, and God shal geue her vnto the: for the feare of the LORDE is wysdome & nurture, he hath pleasure in faith and louynge mekenesse, and he shal fylle the treasures ther of. Be not obstinate and vnfaithfull to the feare of the LORDE, and come not vnto him with a dubble hert. Be not an ypocrite in the sight of men, and take good hede what thou speakest. Marck well these thinges, lest thou happen to fall and brynge thy soule to dishonoure, and so God discouer thy secretes, and cast the downe in the myddest of the congregation: because thou woldest not receaue the feare of God, and because thy hert is full of faynednes and disceate.

The II. Chapter.

My sonne, yf thou wilt come in to y seruyce of God, stonde fast in righteousnes and feare, & arme thy soule to tentacion: saddle thine hert, and be paciēt bowe downe thine eare, receaue the wordes of vnderstandinge, and shienke not awaye, whan thou art entyled. Holde the fast vpon God, ioyne thy self vnto him & suffre, that thy life maye encrease at the last. What so ever happeneth vnto the, receaue it: suffre in heynesse, and be paciēt in thy trouble. For like as golde and syluer are tryed in the fyre, even so are acceptable men in the fornace of aduersite. Beleue in God, and he shal helpe the: ordre thy waie a right, and put thy trust in him. Holde fast his feare, and groweth in. O ye y feare the LORDE, take sure holde of his mercy: shienke not awaye fro him, that ye fall not. O ye that feare y LORDE, beleue him, and youre rewarde shal not be emptye. O ye that feare y LORDE, put your trust in him, & mercy shal come vnto you for pleasure. O ye y feare y LORDE, set y loue vpo him, & y hertes shal be lightened.

Considre the olde generacions of men (O ye children) and marck them well: was there euer eny one confounded, that put his trust in the LORDE? Who euer continued in his feare, and was forsaken? Or whom dyd he euer despise, that called faithfully vpo him? For God is gracious and mercifull, he forgeureth synnes in y tyme of trouble, and is a defender for all them y seke him in y truth. Wo be vnto him that hath a dubble hert, wicked lippes and euell occupied handes, & to the synner y goeth two maner of waies. Wo be vnto them that are lowse of hert, which put not their trust in God, and therfore shal they not be defended of him. Wo be vnto them that haue lost paciēce, forsaken the right wayes, and are turned back in to frowarde wayes. What wyl they do, whan the LORDE shal begynne to wyset the?

They that feare y LORDE, wil not mys-trust his worde: and they that loue him, wyl kepe his commandement. They that feare the LORDE, wyl seke out y thinges that are pleasaunt vnto him: and they that loue him, shal fulfill his lawe. They that feare y LORDE wil prepare their hertes, and hable their soules in his sight. (They that feare the LORDE, kepe his commandementes, and wil be paciēt, tyll they se himself) sayenge: better it is for vs to fall in to the handes of y LORDE, then in to the hādes of men: for his mercy is as greete as him self.

The III. Chapter.

The children of wysdome are a cōgregation of the righteous, and their exercise is obedience and loue. Heare me youre father (O my deare children) and do there after, that ye maie be safe. For the LORDE wil haue the father honoured of the children, and loke what a mother commaūdeth hir children to do, he wil haue it kepte. Who so honoureth his father, his synnes shal be forgiven him: and he that honoureth his mother, is like one that gathereth treasure together. Who so honoureth his father, shal haue ioye of his owne children: & whan he maketh his prayer, he shal be herde. Ze that honoureth his father, shal haue a longe life: & he that is obedient for y LORDES sake, his mother shal haue ioye of him.

Ze that feareth the LORDE, honoureth his father and mother, and doth them seruyce, as it were vnto the LORDE himself. Honour thy father in dede, in worde and in all paciēce, that thou mayest haue his blessing: for the blessing of y father buyldeth vpon the houses of the children, but the mothers curse roteth out the foundations. Reioyse not whan thy father is reprobeth, for it is no honoure vnto the, but a shame. For the worshippe of a mans father is his awne worshippe, and where the father is without honoure, it is the dishonesty of the sonne. My sonne, make moch of thy father in his age, and greue him not as longe as he lyueth. And yf his vnderstandinge fayle, haue paciēce w him, & despise him not in thy strength. For the good dede that thou shewest vnto thy father, shal not be forgotten: and whan thou thy self wantest, it shal be rewarded the (and for thy mothers offence thou shalt be recompensed with good, yee it shal be founded for the in righteousness) and in the daye of trouble thou shalt be remembered: thy synnes also shal mele awaye, like as the yse in y saye warme wether.

C Ze y forsaketh his father, shal come to shame: & he that desyeth his mother, is cursed of God. My sonne, performe y workes w louynge mekenesse, so shalt thou be loued aboue other men. The greater thou art, the more humble thy self (in all thinges) and thou shalt synde sauō in the sight of God. For greate power belongeth onely vnto God, & he is honoured of the lowly.

Seke not out the thinges that are aboue thy capacite, and searce not the groundes of soch thinges as are to mightie for the: but loke what God hath commaunded the, thinke vpo that allwaye, and be not curious in many of his workes. For it is not nedefull for the, to se thine eyes, y thinges y are secrete. Make not thou to moch searce in superfluous thinges, and be not curious in many of his workes: for many thinges are shewed vnto the already, which be aboue y capacite of men. The medlinge with soch hath begyled many a man, and tangled their wytes in vanite. Know he that loueth parell, shal per. sh therein.

An harde herte shal saye euell at y last (an hert that goeth two wayes, shal not prosper: & he that is frowarde of hert, wyl euer be the worse and worse) A wicked hert shal be laden w sorowes, and y vngodly synner wyl heape one synne vpon another. The counsell of the proude hath no health, for y plante of synne shal be roted out in the. The hert of h m y hath vnderstandinge, shal perceaue hye thinges, and a good eare wil gladly herken vnto wysdome. An hert that is wise & hath vnderstandinge, wyl abstayne from synnes, and increase in the workes of righteousness. Water quenchereth burnynge fyre, & mercy reconcyeth synnes. God hath respecte<sup>r</sup> to him y is thankfull: he thinketh vpon him agaynst the tyme to come: so that whan he falleth, he shal fynde a stronge holde.

The III. Chapter.

My sonne, defraude not the poore of his almes, and turne not awaye thine eyes from him that hath nede. Despise not an hongrie soule, and desye not the poore in his necessite: greue not the hert of him that is helpelesse, and withdraue not the gift from y nedefull. Refuse not the prayer of one that is in trouble, and turne not awaye thy face from the nedy. Cast not thine eyes asyde fro y poore, y thou geue him not occasion to speake euell of the. For yf he complayne of y in the bytternes of his soule, his prayer shal be herde: enē he y made him, shal heare him. Be curteous vnto y company of the poore, humble thy soule vnto the elder, & bowe downe y heade to a man of worshippe. Let it not greue the to bowe downe thine eare vnto the poore, but paye thy dett, and geue him a frendly answer, and y w mekenesse.

Deluyre him y suffreth wōge fro y hāde of y oppressō, & be not saint harted whā thou sickest in iudgmet. Be merciful vnto y fatherles as a father, & be in steade of an husbāde unto their mother: so shalt thou be as an obedient sonne of thy yest, and he shal loue the more the mother doth. Wisdometh bretherly life in to his children, receaueth the yest her, and will go before the in waye of righteousness. He yest loueth her, loueth life: they yest seke her diligently, shal haue greete ioye. They yest kepe her, shal haue the heretage of life: for where she entrencheth in, there is the blessing of God. They that honoure her, shal be yest seruantes of the holy one: and they that loue her, are beloued of God. Who so geueth eare vnto her, shal iudge the heiche: and he that hath respecte vnto her, shal dwell safely.

C He that beleueth her, shal haue her in possession, and his generacion shal endure: for whan he falleth, she shal go with him before all. Feare, drede and tentacion shal she bringe vpon him, and trye him in his doctrine: tyll she haue so proued him in his thoughtes, that he committe his soule vnto her. The shal she stablisch him, bringe the right waye vnto him, make hi a glad man, shewe him his secretes, and heape vpon him the treasures of knowlege, vnderstandinge and righteousness. But yf he go wronge, she shall forsake him, and geue him ouer in to the handes of his enemye.

D My sonne, make moch of the tyme, eschue the thinge yest euell, and for yest life shame not to saye yest trueth. For there is a shame yest bringeth synne, and there is a shame that bringeth worlshipe and fauld. Accepte no person after thine owne will, that thou be not confounded to thine owne decaye. Be not ashamed of yest neyghbo in his aduersite, and kepe not back yest counsell whan it maye do good, nether hyde yest wysdome in his beuty. For in the tyme is wysdome knowne, so is vnderstandinge, knowlege and lernynge in the talkinge of the wyse, yest fastynesse in yest rootes of righteousness. In no wise speake agaynst the worde of treuth, but be ashamed of the lyes of thine owne ignorance. Shame not to confesse thine erreure, and submitte not thyself vnto euery man because of synne. Withstande not yest face of the mightie, and stryue not agaynst the streame. But for the trueth stryue thou vnto death, and God shal fight for the agaynst thine enemies. Be not haystie in thy tonge, nether slacke and negligent in thy wordes. Be not as a lyon in thine owne house, destroyinge thy housholde folkes, and oppressinge them yest vnder the. Let not thine hande be stretched out to receaue, and shutt whan thou shuldest geue.

The V. Chapter.

Trust not vnto thy riches, and saye yest not: tush, I haue ynough for my life. (For it shall not helpe in the tyme of vengeance and temptacion) Solowe not the lust of thine owne hert in thy strength, and saye not: tush, how shalbe I: for who wil cast me downe because of my wordes: for doutles God shal auenge it. And saye not: I haue committed mo synnes, but what euell hath happened me: For the Almightye is a pacient rewarder. Because yest synne is for geue yest, be not therfore without feare, nether heape one synne vpon another. And saye not: tush, the mercy of the LORDE is greete, he shal forgue my synnes, be they neuer so many. For like as he is mercifull, so goeth wrath from him also, and his indignacion cometh downe vpon synners.

Make no tarienge to turne vnto yest LORDE, and put not of fro daye to daye: for sodenly shal his wrath come, and in the tyme of vengeance he shal destroye yest. Trust not in wicked riches for they shal not helpe in the daye of punishment and wrath. Be not caried aboute to euery wynde, and go not in to euery waye: for so doth the synner that hath a dubble tonge (Stonde fast in yest waye of yest LORDE) be steadfast in thy vnderstandinge, abyde by yest worde, and solowe the worde of peace and righteousness. Be gentle to heare yest worde of God, that thou mayest vnderstande it, and make a true answer to wysdome. Be swift to heare, but slowe and pacient in geuynge answer. Yf thou hast vnderstandinge, shappe thy neyghbo an answer: yf no, laye thine hande vpon yest mouth: lest thou be trapped in an vncreate worde, and so confounded. Honoure yest worshippe is in a mans wyse talkinge, but yest tonge of yest vnderstandinge is his awone distruccon. Be not a pryuy accuser as longe as thou lyuest, and do no slaunders to thy tonge. For shame and sorrow goeth ouer the thefe, and an euell name ouer him that is dubble tonged: but he that is a pryuy accuser of other men, shal be hated, envied and confounded. Se that thou sufficeth the small and greate alyte.

The VI. Chapter.

Des sake: for who so is euell shal be yest heyre of rebuke and dishonour, and who so neuer beareth enuye and a dubble tonge, offendeth. Be not proude in the denye of thine owne vnderstandinge, lest yest leaues wyther, and yest frute be destroyed, and so thou be left as a dryetre. For a wicked soule destroyeth him that hath it, maketh him to be laughed to scoone of his enemies, and bringeth him to the porcion of the vngodly. A swete worde multiplieth frendes, and pacieth the yest be at variunce, and a thankfull tonge will be plenteous in a good man. Holde frendshipe to many, neuertheles haue but one counseller of a thousande.

If thou gettest a frende, proue him first, and be not haistie to geue him credence. For some man is a frende but for a tyme, and wil not abyde in the daye of trouble. And there is some frende that turneth to enemye, and taketh parte agaynst the: and yf he knowe any hurte by the, he telleth it out. Agayne, some frende is but a companyon at the table, and in the daye of nede he contynueh not. But a sure frende wil be vnto yest euery as thine owne self, and deale faithfully with thy housholde folke. Yf thou suffre trouble and aduersite, he is with the, and hydeth not himself from the. Depart fro thine enemies, yest and beware of thy frendes.

A faithful frende is a stronge defence: who so findeth soch one, findeth a noble treasure. A faithful frende hath no peare, the weight of golde and syluer is not to be compared to the goodnesse of his faith. A faithful frende is a medecyne of life, and they yest feare the LORDE, shal fynde him. Who so feareth the LORDE, shal prospere with frendes: and as he is himself, so shal his frende be also. My sonne, receaue doctryne fro thy youth vp, so shalt thou fynde wysdome tyll thou be olde. Go to her as one that ploweth, and soweth, and wayte pacietyly for hir good frutes. For thou shalt haue but litle labour in hir worke, but thou shalt eate of hir frutes right soone. O how excedinge sharpe is wysdome to vnlearned men: an vnstedfast body wil not remayne in her. Vnto soch she is as it were a twichstone, and he casteth her from him in all the haist: for wysdome is to him but in name, there be but few yest haue knowlege of her. (But with them that knowe her, she abydeh eny vnto yest appearinge of God.)

Gee eare (my sonne) receaue my doctryne, and refuse not my counsell. Put thy fote in to hir lynckes, and take hir yock vpon thy neck: bowe downe thy shulder vnder her, beare hir pacietyly, and be not weery of hir bandes. Come vnto her with yest whole hert, and kepe hir waves with all thy power. Seke after her, and she shalbe shewed the: and whan thou hast her, forsake her not. For at the last thou shalt fynde rest in her, and that shal be turned to thy greete ioye. Then shal hir fetters be a stronge defence for the, and hir yock a glorious rayment. For the bewtye of life is in her, and hir bandes are the complinge together of saluacion. Yest a glorious rayment is it, thou shalt put it on, and the same crowne of ioye shalt thou weere.

My sonne, yf thou wilt take hede, thou shalt haue vnderstandinge: and yf thou wilt applye yest mynde, thou shalt be wyse. Yf thou wilt bowe downe thine eare, thou shalt receaue doctryne: and yf thou delyte in hearinge, thou shalt be wyse. Stande with yest multitude of soch elders as haue vnderstandinge, and consente vnto their wysdome with thine hert: that thou mayest heare all godly sermons, and that the worthy sentences escape the not. And yf thou seist a man of discrete vnderstandinge, gett the soone vnto him, and let thy fote treade vpon the steppes of his doores. Let thy mynde be vpon the commaundementes of God, and be earnestly occupied in his lawes: so shal he stablisch yest hert, and geue yest wysdome at thine owne desyre.

The VII. Chapter.

No euell, so shall there no harme happen vnto the. Depart awaye from the thinge that is wicked, and no myfortune shal medle with the. My sonne, some no euell thinges in the sorowes of vnrighteousnes, so shalt thou not reape the sevenfolde. Laboure not vnto man for eny lordshipe, nether vnto the kynge for the seate of honoure. Justifie not thy self before God (for he knoweth the hert) and desyre not to be reputed wyse in the presence of the kynge. Make no labour to be made a iudge, excepte it so were, yest thou couldest mightely put downe wickednes: for yf thou shuldest stode in awe of yest presence of the mightie, thou shuldest fayle in geuynge sentence. Offende not in yest multitude of the cite, and put not thyself amonge the people. Bynde not two synnes together, for in one synne shalt thou not be unpunished. Saye not: tush, God wil loke vpon the multitude of my oblations, and whan I offere to the hyest God, he wil accepte it.

Be not saynt harted whan thou makest yest prayer, nether slacke in geuynge of almesse. Laugh no man to scoone in the heynesse of his soule, for God (which seyth all thinges) is he that can bunge downe, and set vp agayne. Accepte no lesynge agaynst thy brother, nether do the same agaynst thy frende. Use not to make eny maner of lye, for the custome therof is not good. Make not many wordes, whan thou art amonge the elders: and whan thou prayest, make not moch bablinge. Let no laborious worke be tedious vnto the, nether the husbandrie which the Allmightie hath created. Make not thy boast in the multitude of thy wickednes, but humble thy selfeuen from thine hert: and remember that the wrath shall not be longe in tattering, and that the vengeance of the flesh of yngodly is a very fyre and worme. Be not ouer thy frende for any good, ner thy faithfull brother for the best golde.

C Departe not from a discrete and good woman, that is fallen vnto the for thy porcion in the feare of the LORDE, for y gift of hir honesty is aboue golde. Where as thy seruauunt worketh truly, intreate him not euell, ner the hyeling that is faithfull vnto the. Loue a discrete seruauunt as thine owne soule, defraude him not of his libertie, nether leaue him a poore man. If thou haue catell, loke well to them: and yf they be for thy profit, kepe them. If thou haue sonnes, brynge them vp in murtre and lernynge, and holdethem in awe from their youth vp. If thou haue daughters, kepe their body, and shew not thy face cherefull towarde the. Marye y daughter, and so shalt thou perseuer a weightie matter: but geue her to a man of vnderstandinge. If thou haue a wife after thine owne mynde, forsake her not: (but comitte not thy self to the hatefull.)

Honoure thy father from thy whole herte, and forgett not the sorowfull trauaile that thy mother had w the: remember that thou wast borne thorow them, and how cast thou recompense them the thinges that they haue done for the. Feare the LORDE with all y soule, and honoure his ministers. Loue thy mother with all thy strength, and forsake not his seruantes. Feare the LORDE with all thy soule, and honoure his prestes. Geue them their porcion of the first frutes and increase of y earth, like as it is commaunded the: geue them y shoulders, and their appoynted offeringes, and firstlinges, Reach thine hande vnto the poore, that God maye blesse the with plenteousnes. Be liberall vnto all men lyuynge, yet let not but do good euen to them that are deed.

Done for the. Feare the LORDE with all y soule, and honoure his ministers. Loue thy mother with all thy strength, and forsake not his seruantes. Feare the LORDE with all thy soule, and honoure his prestes. Geue them their porcion of the first frutes and increase of y earth, like as it is commaunded the: geue them y shoulders, and their appoynted offeringes, and firstlinges, Reach thine hande vnto the poore, that God maye blesse the with plenteousnes. Be liberall vnto all men lyuynge, yet let not but do good euen to them that are deed.

Let not them that wepe be without comforte, but mourne with such as mourne. Let it not greue the to vyset the sick, for that shall make the to be loued. What so ever thou takest in hande, remember the ende, and thou shalt neuer do amysse.

The VIII. Chapter.

Stryue not with a mightie man, lest thou chaunse to fall in to his handes. Make no variatice w a riche mā, lest he happen to bringe vp an harde quarell a-gaynst y. For golde and siluer hath vndone many a man, yee eue y heretes of kynges hath made to fall. Stryue not w a mā that is full of wordes, and laye no stickes vpon his fyre. Bepe no company with the vnlearned, lest he geue thy kynred an euell reporte. Despyse not a man that turneth himself awaye from synne, and cast him not in the teth withall: but remember y we are frayle euerychone. Thynges scoone of no mā in his olde age, for we were olde also. Be not glad of the death of thine enemye, but remember that we must dye all the sorte of vs (and sayne wolde we come in to ioye.) Despyse not the sermons of such elders as haue vnderstandinge, but acquaintance thy self w the wyse sentences of them: for of them thou shalt lerne wysdome and the doctrine of vnderstandinge, and how to serue greate men without complaynte.

Go not from y doctrine of the elders, for they haue lerned it of their fathers. For of them thou shalt lerne vnderstandinge, so y thou mayest make answer in y tyme of neede. Kyndle not y coales of synners, lest thou be bient in the fyre flammes of their synnes. Resist not the face of the blasphemour, that he laye not wayte for thy mouth. Lende not vnto him that is mightier then thyself: yf thou lendest him, counte it but lost. Be not suertie aboue y power: yf thou be, then thynke surely to paye it. Go not to lawe w the indige, for he wyl indige a cordinge to his owne honoure. Trauaile not by the waye w him y is branelesse, lest he do the euell: for he so loweth his awne wilfulnes, and so shall thou perish thorow his foly.

Strive not with him that is angrie and cruell, and go not with him in to y wylderne: for bloude is nothinge in his sight, and where there is no helpe, he shall murder y. Take no counsell at foolles, for they loue nothinge but the thinges that please themselves. Make no counsell before a straunger, for thou canst not tell what wyll come of it. Ope not thine hert vnto euery man, lest he be vnthriftfull to the, and put the to reprove.

The IX. Chapter.

Be not gelous ouer y wyse of thy brother, y she shew not some shrewed poynte of wicked doctrine vnto the. Gene not the power of thy lyfe vnto a woman, lest she come in y strength, and so thou be confounded. Loke not vpon a woman that is desyrous of many men, lest thou fall in to hir snares. Use not the company of a woman that is a player and dauser, and heare hir not, lest thou perish thorow hir entysinge. Behol de not a mayde, that thou be not hurt in hir bewtye. Cast not thy mynde vpon harlottes in any maner of thinge, lest then destroye both thy self and thine heretage. Go not aboute gasinge in euery layne of the cite, ne ther wddie thou abroad in the stretes therof. Turne awaye thy face from a beutyfull woman, and loke not vpon the saynesse of o ther.

Many a man hath perished thorow the bewtye of women, for thorow it the desyre is kyndled as it were a fyre. (An aduciterous woman shall be trodden vnder softe as myre, of euery one that goeth by the waye. Many a man wonderinge the bewtye of a straunge woman, haue bene cast out, for hir wordes kyndle as a fyre.) Sytt not w another mans wyse by any meanes, lye not with her vpon the bedd, make no wordes with her at y wyne: lest thine hert consent vnto her, and so thou with thy blonde fall in to destruccion. Forsa ke not an olde frende, for the new shall not be like him.

A new frende is new wine: let him be olde, and thou shalt drynke him with pleasure. Desyre not y honoure and riches of a synner, for thou knowest not what destruccion is for to come vpon him. Delyte not thou in the thinge that the yngodly haue pleasure in: beinge sure, that the yngodly shall not be accepted vntill their graue.

Repe the from the man that hath power to slaye, so nedest thou not to be afrayed of death. And yf thou comest vnto him, make no sawre, lest he happen to take awaye thy life. Remember that thou goest in the myddest of snares, and vpon the bulworkes of y cite. Bewarre of thy neighbour as nye as thou canst, and medle with such as be wyse and haue vnderstandinge. Let iust men be thy gyses, let thy myrth be in the feare of God, let the remembraunce of God be in thy mynde, and let all thy talkynge be in the commaundementes of the hyest. In the handes of craftesmen shall the workes be commended, so shall the prynces of the people in the wysdome of their talkynge. A man full of wordes is perious in his cite: and he that is temerarious and past shame in his talkynge, is to be abhoyed.

The X. Chapter.

Wyse indige wil orde his people with discrecion, and where a man of vnderstandinge beareth rule, there goeth it well. As the indige of the people is himself, eue so are his officers: and loke what maner of man the ruler of the cite is, soch are they that dwell therein also. An vnwise kinge destroyeth his people, but where they that be in auctorite are men of vnderstandinge, there the cite prospereth.

The power of the earth is in the hande of God, and whan his tyme is, he shall set a profitable ruler vpon it. In the hande of God is the power of man, and vnto the scribes shall he laye his honoure. Remember no wronge of thy neighbour, and medle thou w no vnrighteous workes. Pryde is hateful before God and men, and all wickednes of the hee then is to be abhoyed. Because of vnrighteous dealinge, wronge, blasphemies and diuerse disceate, a realme shall be traslated fro one people to another.

There is nothinge worse then a curvetous man. What prydest thou the, o thou earth and asphes: There is not a more wicked thinge, then to loue moneye. And why? soch one hath his soule to sell: yet is he but fylthie dogge rebyle he lyueth.

And though the phisician shewe his helpe neuer so longe, yet in concludon it goeth after this maner: to daye a kyng, tomorrow deed. For whan a man dyeth, he is the heyre of serpentes, beastes and womes. The begynnynge of mans pryde, is to fall awaye from God: and why? his hert is gone from his maker, for pryde is the ougenall of all synne. Who so taketh holde therof, shall be fylled with cursinges, and at y last it shall ouerthrowe him. Therefore hath the LORDE brought the cōgregacions of the wicked to dishonour, and destroyed them vnto the ende.

God hath destroyed the seates of prynces, and sett vp the meke in their steade. God hath wythered the rotes of the proude heithen, and planted the lowly amonge them. God hath ouerthrowne the lordes of the heithen, and destroyed them out of the grounde. He hath caused them to wyther awaye, he hath brought them to naught, and made the memoriall of them to cease from out of the earth. (God hath destroyed the name of the proude, and left the name of y humble of mynde.) Pryde was not made for man, nether wrothfulnes for mens children. The sede of men that feareth God, shall be brought to honoure: but y sede which transgresseth the commaundementes of y LORDE shall be shamed. He y is the ruler amonge brethren, is holde in honoure amonge them, and he regardeth such as feare the LORDE.

The glory of the riche, of the honorable and of the poore is the feare of God.

Despyse not thou the iust poore man, and magnifie not 3 rich vngodly. Greate is the iudge and mightie in hono, yet is there none greater, then he 3 feareth God. Vnto 3 seruant that is discrete, shal the fre do seruyce. 3e that is wyse and well nurtured, wyll not grudge whan he is resourmed, 2 an igno rant body shal not come to honoure. Be not proude to do thy worke, and dispare not in the tyme of aduersite. Better is he 3 labour eth, and hath plenteousnes of all thinges, then he 3 is gorgeous, and wanteth bred.

My sonne, kepe thy soule in mekenes, and geue her hir due honoure. Who shal iustifie him, that synneth agaynst himself? Who wil honoure him, that dishonoureth his owne life? The poore is honoured for his faith fulnes and truerth, but 3 rich is had in reputa cion because of his goodes. 3e that ordreth himself honestly in pouerte, how moch more shal he behaue himself honestly in riches? And who so ordreth himself vn honestly in riches, how moch more shal he behaue himself vn honestly in pouerte?

The XI. Chapter.

The wysdome of him 3 is brought lowe, shal lift vp his heade, and shal make him to sytt amonge greate me. Commende not a man in his berwyte, nether despyse a man in his vtter appareance. The Bey is but a small beast amonge the foules, yet is hir frute excedyng swete. Be not proude of thy rayment, and exalte not thyself in the daye of thy honoure: for 3 workes of the 3yest onely are wonderfull: yee glorious, se crete and vnkowne are his workes. Many tyrauntes haue bene fayne to syt downe vpo the earth, 2 3 vnlicly hath worne 3 crowne. Many mightie me haue bene brought lowe, and the honorable haue bene deliuered in to other mens handes. Condemne no man, befo re thou haue tryed out the matter: and whan thou hast made enquisicion, then resourme righteously. Geue no sentece before thou hast herde the cause, but first let men tell out their tayles.

Stryue not for a matter that toucheth not thyself, and stonde not in the indgment of synners. My sonne, medle not with many matters: 2 yf thou wylt be riche, thou shalt not gett it: and though thou rennest 3 waye asore, yet shalt thou not escape. There is some ma that labour eth, and the more he wee rieth himself, the lesse he hath. Agayne, some man is slouthfull, hath nede of helpe, wateth strength, and hath greate pouerte, and Gods eye loketh vpon him to good, setteth him vp from his lowe estate, and lifteth vp his heade: so that many men maruell at him, and geue honoure vnto God.

Prosperite and aduersite, life and death, pouerte and riches come all of the LORDE. (Wysdome, nurture and knowledge of 3e are with God: loue and 3 wayes of good are with him. Erreure and dardnes are made for synners: and they that exalte them selues in euell, ware olde in euell.) The gift of God remayneth for the righteous, and his good wyl shal gene prosperite for euer. Some man is rich by luyngge nygardyly, and 3 is the porcion of his rewarde, in that he say eth: now haue I gotten rest, and now wyl I eate and drynke of my goodes myself alone. And yet he considereth not, that the tyme draweth nye, 3 he must leane all these thinges vnto other men, and dye himself. Stonde thou fast in thy couenaut, and exercise thy self therin, and remayne in the worke vnto 3 age. Contynue not in the workes of synners, but put thy trust in God, and byde in thine estate: for it is but an easy thig in 3 sight of God, to make a poore man riche, and that so denly. The blessing of God haisteth to 3 rewarde of the righteous, and maketh his frutes soone to flourish and prospere. Saye not: what helpeth it me? and what shal I haue 3 whyte? Agayne, saye not: I haue ynough, how can I wante? Whan thou art in wel fare, forget not aduersite: and whan it cometh not well with the, haue a good hope, that it shal be better. For it is but a small thinge to God, in the daye of death to rewarde euery ma a cordinge to his wayes. The aduersite of an houre maketh one to forgett all pleasure, and whan a man dyeth, his workes are discovered. Praise no body before his death, for a man shal be knowne in his children.

Bringe not euery man in to thine house, for the disceatfull layeth wayte dyuersly. Like as a partrich in a maude, so is the herte of the proude: and like as a spyte, that loketh vpon the fall of his neghb. For he turneth good vnto euell, and slaudereth the chof. Of one sparck is made a greate fyre, 2 an vngodly ma layeth wayte for blonde. Beware of the disceatfull, for he ymagineth wiche thinges, to bringe 3 in to a perpetuall shame. Yf thou takest an aleaunt vnto 3, he shal destroye the in vnquietnes, and dryue the from thine owne wayes.

The XII. Chapter.

Whan thou wylt do good, knowe to whom thou doest it, 2 so shalt thou be greatly thanked for thy benef

tes. Do good vnto the righteous, and thou shalt fynde greate rewarde: though not of him, yet (no doute) the LORDE him self shal rewarde the. 3e stobeth not in a good case, that is allwaye occupied in euell, 2 geueth no allmes: for the 3yest hateth the synners, and hath mercy vpon them that shew the workes of repentaunce. Geue thou vnto such as feare God, and receaue not a synner: As for the vngodly and synners, he shal recompense vengeance vnto them, and kepe them to the daye of wrath. Geue thou vnto the good, and receaue not the synner: do well vnto him that is lowly, but geue not to the vngodly. Let not the bred be geuen him, that he be not mightier then thy self therin. For so shalt thou receaue twyse as moch euell, in all the good that thou doest vnto him: And why? the 3yest hateth synners, and shal rewarde vengeance to the vngodly.

In prosperite a frende shal not be knowne, 2 in aduersite an enemye shal not be hyd. For whan a ma is in wealth, it greueth his enemies: but in heuynes and trouble a man shal knowe his frende. Trust neuer thine enemy, for like as an yron rusteth, so doth his wickednes. And though he make moch crout chinge and knelinge, yet kepe well thy mynde, and beware of him. Sett him not by 3, nether let him sytt at thy right hade: lest he turne him, gett in to thy place, take thy rowme and seke thy seate, and so thou at the last remembre my wordes, and be pucked at my sayenges.

Bynde not two synnes together, for the re shal not one be unpunished. Who wil haue pite of the charmer, that is stynged of 3 serper, or of all such as come nye 3 beastes? Ene so is it w him 3 kepeth copany with a wicked ma, 2 lappeth him self in his synnes. For a season wil he hyde w the, but yf thou stamble, he tarieth not. An enemy is swete in his lippes, he can make many wordes 2 speake many good thinges: Yee he can wepe w his eies, but in his herte he ymagineth, how to throue the in to the pytte: 2 yf he maye fynde oportynite, he wil not be satisfied w blonde. Yf aduersite come vpon the, thou shalt fynde him there first: 2 though he pre tede to do 3 helpe, yet shal he vndermyne 3. He shal shake his heade, 2 clape his handes ouer 3 for very giadnes, 2 whyle he maketh many wordes, he shal dysguise his countenance.

The XIII. Chapter.

Who so toucheth pitch, shal be fylled withall: and he that is famylar w 3 proude, shal clothe himself with pyrde. 3e taketh a burthen vpon him, that accompanieth a more honorable man then him self. Therfore kepe no familiarite with one that is richer then thy self. How agree the ketell 2 the pott together? for yf 3 one be synnten agaynst the other, it shal be broke. The rich dealeth vnrighteously, 2 threateneth withall: but 3 poore beinge oppres sed and widgeously dealt withall, suffreth scarcenesse, 2 geueth fayre wordes. Yf thou be for his profit, he vseth the: but yf thou haue nothinge, he shal forsake the. As longe as thou hast eny thinge of thine owne, he shal be a good selowe with the: Yee he shal make the a bare man, and not be sory for the. Yf he haue nede of the, he shal defraude the: 2 (with a preuy mock) shal he put the in an hope, and gene the all good wordes, and saye: what wantest thou? Thus shal he shame 3 in his meate, vntill he haue supre the cleane vp twyse or thryse, and at the last shal he laugh the to scorne. Afterwarde, whan he seyth that thou hast nothinge, he shal forsake the, and shake his heade at the.

Beware, that thou be not disceaned and brought downe in thy symplenesse. (Be not to humble in thy wysdome, lest whan thou art brought lowe, thou be disceaned thorow foolishnes.) Yf thou be called of a mightie man, absent thy self, so shal he call the to him the more oft. Preasse not thou vnto him, that thou be not short out: but go not thou farre of, lest he forgett the. Withdrawe not 3 self fro his speach, but beleue not his many wordes. For w moch comunicacion shal he rempre the, and (w a preuy mock) shal he question 3 of thy secretes. The vnnmercifull mynde of his shal marck 3 wordes, he shal not spare to do 3 hurte 2 to put 3 in prison. Bewarre, 2 take good hede to 3 self, for thou walkest in parell of 3 ouerthrowinge.

Now wha thou hearest his wordes, make the as though thou werest in a dreame, 2 wake vp. Loue God all thy life longe, 2 call vpon him in thy nede. Every beast loueth his like, enen so let euery man loue his negh bour. All flesh wil resorte to their like, and euery man will kepe company with such as he is himself. But as 3 wolfe agreeth with the lambe, so doth the vngodly with 3 righteous. What felishippe shulde an holy man haue with a dogg? How can the ryche and the poore agree together? The wilde asse is the Lyons pray in the wildernes. enen so are poore men the meate of the ryche. Like as the proude maye not awaye with lowlynes, enen so doth the riche abhorre the poore. Yf

a rich man fall, his frendes sett him vp agayne: but whan the poore falleth, his frendes forsake him. If a rich mā fall in to an erreure, he hath many helpers: he speaketh proude wordes, and yet men iustifie him.

D But yf a poore man go wronge, he is punysshed: yee though he speake wisely, yet can it haue no place. Whan the riche man speaketh, enery body holdeth his tōge: and loke what he sayeth, they praysse it vnto the clowdes. But yf the poore man speake, they saye: What felowe is this? and yf he do amysse, they shal destroye him. Riches are good vnto him that hath no synne in his conscience, and pouerte is a wicked thinge in the mouth of the vngodly. The hert of man chaungeth his countenance, whether it be in good or euell. A chearfull countenance is a tokē of a good hert, for els is it an harde thinge to knowe the thought.

The XIII. Chapter.

B Lissed is the man, that hath not fallen with synne, and is not pricked with the conscience of synne. Happie is he that hath had no heuynes in his mynde, and is not fallen from his hope. It becommeth not a covetous man and a nygarde, to be ryche: and what shulde a nygarde do with golde? He that with all his carefulnes heapeth together vnrighteously, gathereth for other folkes, and another mā shal make good chere with his goodes. He is wicked vnto him self, how shal he be good vnto other mē? How can soch one haue any pleasure of his goodes? There is no thinge worse, then whan one dissauoureth himself, and this is a rewarde of his wickednes. If he do any good, he doeth it not knowinge therof, and agaynst his will, and at the last he declareth his vngraciounes. A nygarde hath a wicked eye, he turneth away his face, and despyseth his owne soule. A covetous mans eye hath neuer ynough in the porcion of wickednes, vntyll the tyme that he wither awaye, and haue lost his owne soule.

B A wicked eye spareth bled, and there is scarcenesse vpon his table. My sonne, do good to thy self of thyne hand, and geue to the LORD his due offeringes. Remembre thy death tarieth not, and how thyne hand of the graue is shewed vnto thee: (for the couenaunt of this worlde shal dye the death.) Do good vnto thy frende before thou dye, and accordinge to thy abylite reach out thine hande, and geue vnto thy poore. Be not dispoyned of thy good daye, and let not thy porcion of thy good daie ouerpasse.

the. Shalt thou not leaue thy trauayles and labours vnto other men? In the dewyng of the heretage geue and take, and sanctifie thy soule. Worke thou righteously before thy death, for in thy hell there is no meate to fynde. All flesh shal fade awaye like grass, and like a flourishinge leafe in a grene tre. Some growe, some are cast downe: even so is thy generation of flesh and bloude: one cometh to an ende, another is borne.

All transitory thinges shal sayle at the last, and the worker therof shal go withall. Euery chosen worke shal be iustified, and he that medleth withall, shal haue honoure therein. Blessed is the man that keepeth him in wysdome, and exercyseth himself in vnderstandinge, and with discrecion shal he thinke vpon the foreknowledge of God. Which considereth thy wayes of wysdome in his hert, hath vnderstandinge in his secretes, goeth after her (as one that seeketh hir out) and continueth in his wayes. He loketh in at his windowes, and herkeneth at his doores: he taketh his rest besyde his house, and festeneth his state in his walles: he shal pitch his tent nye vnto his hande, and in his tent shal good thinges rest for euermore: he shal sett his children vnder his coueringe, and shal dwell vnder his braunches. Vnder his coueringe shal he be defended from the heate, and in his glory shal he rest.

The XV. Chapter.

Who so feareth God, wil do good: and who so keepeth the lawe, shal optayne wysdome. As an honorable mother shal she mete him, and as a vyrgin shal she receaue him. With thy bled of life and vnderstandinge shal she fede him, and geue him the water of wholsome wysdome to drynte. If he be constant in her, he shal not be moued: and yf he holde him fast by her, he shal not come to confucion. She shal bringe him to honoure amonge his neighbours, and in the myddest of the congregacion shal she open his mouth. With the spere of wysdome and vnderstandinge shal she fyll him, and clothe him with the garment of glory. She shal heape the treasure of myrrour and ioye vpon him, and geue him an euerlastinge name to heretage. Foolish men wyll not take holde vpon her, but soch as haue vnderstandinge, wil mete her, for she is farre from pryde and disceate. Men that go aboute with lyes, wil not remembre her: (but men of trouth shal be founde in her, even vnto the beholdinge of God.) Praise is not semely in the mouth of thy vngodly, for he is not sent of thy LORD.

for of God cometh wysdome, and the prayse shal stonde by the wysdome of God, and shal be plenteous in a faithfull mouth, and the LORD shal geue her vnto him.

Saye not thou: It is the LORDES faute that I am gone by, for thou shalt not do thy thinge that God hateth. Saye not thou: he hath caused me to go wronge, for he hath no mede of the vngodly. God hateth all abhominacion of erreure, and they that feare God wyll loue no such. God made man from the begynnyng, and left him in the hande of his counsell. He gaue him his commaundementes and preceptes: yf thou wilt obserue the commaundementes, and kepe acceptable faithfulness for euere, they shal preserue thee. He hath set water and fyre before thee, reach out thine hande vnto which thou wilt. Before man is life and death, good and euell: loke what him listeth, shal be geuen him. For the wysdome of God is greate and mightie in power, and beholdeth all men continually. The eyes of the LORD are vpon them that feare him, and he knoweth all the workes of man. He hath commaunded no man to do vngodly, neither hath he geuen eny man leue to synne.

The XVI. Chapter.

Slyte not thou in the multitude of vngodly children, and haue no pleasure in them, yf they feare not God. Trust not thou to their life, and regarde not their labours: for one sonne that feareth God is better, then a thousande vngodly. And better it is for a man to dye without children, then to leaue behynde him soch children as are vngodly. For by one that hath vnderstandinge, maye a whole cite be vpholden, but though the vngodly be many, yet shal it be waysted thorow them. Many soch thinges hath myne eye sene, and greater thinges then these haue I herde with myne eares. In the congregacion of the vngodly shal a fyre burne, and amonge vnfaithfull people shal the wrath be kyndled.

The olde giants optayned no grace for their synnes, which were destroyed, trustinge to their owne strenght. Neither spared he them, amonge whom Loth was a straunger: but smote them and abhorred them because of the pryde of their wordes. He had no pitie vpon them, but destroyed all the people, that were so stouthe in synne. And for so moch as he ouersawe not the fyre hundreth thousande, that gathered them selues together in thy hardnesse of their hert: it were marnell yf one beyng hardnecked, shulde be fre. For mercy and wrath is with him: he is both myghty tie to forgeue, and to poure out displeasure. Like as his mercy is greate, euē so is his punishment also, he indgeth a man accordinge to his workes. The vngodly shal not escape in his spoyle, and the longe pacience of him that sheweth mercy, shal not byde behynde. All mercy shal make place vnto euery man accordinge to the deservynge of his workes, (and after the vnderstandinge of his pilgrynage.)

Saye not thou: I wyll hyde my self from God, for who wyll thinke vpon me from aboue? I shal not be knowne in so greate a heape of people, for what is my soule amonge so many creatures? Beholde, the heauen, yee the heauen of heauens, the depe, the earth and all that therein is, shal be moued at his presence: the mountaynes, the hilles and the foundations of the earth shal shake for feare, whan God vysiteth them. These thinges doth he vnderstande, but he vnderstandeth euery hert, and who vnderstandeth his wayes? No man seyth his stoume, and the most parte of his workes are secrete. Who wil declare the workes of his righteousnes? Who shal be able to abyde them? for the couenaunt is farre from some, and the tryenge out of men is in the fulfyllinge. He that is humble of hert, thinketh vpon soch thinges: but an vnwyse and erroneous man casteth his mynde vnto foolish thinges.

My sonne, herken thou vnto me, and lerne vnderstandinge, and marke my wordes with thine hert: I wyll geue thee a sure doctrine, and plainly shal I instructe thee. God hath sett his workes in good ordre from the begynnyng, and parte of them hath he sundered from the other. He hath garnyshe his workes from euerlastinge, and their begynnynge accordinge to their generacions. None of the hyndered another, neither was eny of them disobedient vnto his worde. After this, God loketh vpon the earth, and fylled it with his goodes. With all maner of lyuinge bestes hath he couered the grounde, and they all shal be turned vnto earth agayne.

The XVII. Chapter.

When shope man of the earth, and turned him vnto earth agayne. He gaue him the nombre of dayes and certayne tyme, yee and gaue him power of the thinges that are vpon earth. He clothed him with strenght, and made him after his owne liknes. He made all flesh to stonde in awe of him, so that he had the dominion of all bestes and foules. He made out of him an helper like vnto him self, and gaue him discrecion and tonge, eyes and eares, and a hert to vnderstande, and fylled them with instruction & vnderstandinge. He created for them also the knowlege of the spire, fylled their hert with vnderstandinge, and shewed them good and euell. He sett his eye vpon their herces, declaringe vnto them his greates and noble workes: (that they shulde prayse his holy name together, reioyse of his wonders, & be tellinge of his noble actes. Besydes this, he gaue them instruccion, and the lawe of li fe for an heretage. He made an euerlastinge couenaunt with them, and shewed them his righteousnes & iudgmentes. They sawe his glory with their eyes, and their eares herde the maiesty of his voyce. And he saide vnto them: beware of all vnrighteous thinges. He gaue euery man also a commaundement concernynge his neighbour.

Their waies are euere before him, and are not hyd from his eyes. He hath sett a ruler vpon euery people, but Israelis of LORDES porcion. All their workes are as the Sonne in sight of God, & his eyes are allwaye lo kyng vpon their wayes. All their vnrighteousnesses are manifest vnto him, & all their wickednesses are open in his sight. The mercy of a man sheweth is as it were a purse w him, and a mans good dede preseruet him as the apple of an eye. At the last shall he awake, & rewarde euery man vpon his bea de as he hath deserued, and shal turne them together into the nethermost partes of the earth. But vnto them that wyl repent, he hath geue the waye of righteousness. As for soch as be weake, he comforteth the, suffreth them, and sendeth them the porcion of y ve rite. O turne then vnto the LORD, forsake thy synnes, make thy prayer before the LORD, do the lesse offence, turne agayne vnto the LORD, forsake thine vnrighteousnes, be an vter enemy to abhominacion (lerne to knowe the righteousness and iudgmentes of God, stonde in the porcion that is sett forth for the & in the prayer of the most hye God. Go in to the porcion of the holy worlde, with soch as be lyuinge and geue thankes vnto God.)

Who wil prayse the LORD in the hell: Abyde not thou in the erreure of the yngod ly, but geue him thakes before death. As for y deed, thankfulness perissheth from him as nothinge. Geue thou thankes in thy life, yee whyle thou art lynynge & whole shalt thou geue thankes, and prayse God and reioyse in his mercy. O how greates is the lowynge kyndnesse of the LORD, and his mercifull goodnes vnto soch as turne vnto him: For all thinges maye not be in man: & why: the sonne of man is not immortall, and he hath pleasure in the vanyte of wickednes. What is more cleare the the Sonne: yet shal it say le. O: what is more wicked, then the thinge that flesh and bloude hath ymagined: and that same shall be reprovied. The LORD seyeth the power of the hye heauen, and all are but earth and asshes.

The XVIII. Chapter.

That lyueth for euermore, made all thinges together. God onely is righteous, & remayneth a victorious kynge for euere. Who shalbe able to expresse the workes of him: Who hath sought out the grounde of his noble actes: Who shal declare the power of his greatnesse: O: who shal take vpon him to tell out his mercy: As for the wonderous workes of y LORD, there maye nothinge be taken from them, nothinge maye be put vnto them, nether maye the grounde of them be founde out. But whan a man hath done his best, he must begynne agayne: and whan he thinketh to be come to an ende, he must go agayne to his labour. What is man: Wherto is he worth: What good or euell can he do: If the nombre of a mans dayes be almost an hundred year, it is moche.

Like as the droppes of rayne are vnto y see, and as a grauell stone is in comparison of the sonde: so are these few yeares to the dayes euerlastinge. Therefore is y LORD pacient with them, and poureth out his mercy vpon them. He saue and perceaued the thoughtes and ymaginacions of their herte, that they were euell: therfore heaped he vp his mercifull goodnes vpon them, and shewed them the waie of righteousness. The mercy that a mā hath, reacheth to his neighbour: but y mercy of God is vpon all flesh. He chasteneth, he teacheth and nourturith yee even as a shepherde turneth agayne his flock, so doth he all them that receaue chastenynge, nourtoure and doctryne. Mercifull is he vnto them, that stonde in awe of his iudgmentes.

My sonne, whan thou doest good, make no grudgynge at it: and what so euer thou geuest, speake no discomfortable wordes. Shal not the dew coole the heate: (Euen so is a worde better then a gift. Is not a frendly worde a good honest gift: but a gracious man geueth them both. A foole shal cast a man in the tette, and that roughly, & a gift of the nygarde putteth out y eyes. Get the righteousnes before thou come to iudgment: Lerne before thou speake, and go to physick or euer thou be sick: examen and iudge thy self, before the iudgment come, and so shalt thou fynde grace in the sight of God. Humble thy self afore thou be sick, and in tyme of thy disease shewe thy conuersacion. Let not to praye allwaye, and stonde not in feare to be reformed vnto death, for the rewarde of God endureth for euere. Before thou prayest, prepare thy soule, and be not as one y tempteth God. Thynke vpon the wrathfull indignacion that shalbe at the ende, and the houre of vengeaunce, whā y shal turne a waie his face. Whan thou hast ynough, remember the tyme of hunger: and whan thou art ryche, thynke vpon the tyme of pouerte and scarcenesse.

From the mornynge vntyll the euenynge the tyme is chaunged, and all soch thynges are soone done in y sight of God. A wyse man feareth God in all thinges, and in the dayes of transgression he kepeth him self from synne. A discrete man hath pleasure in wysdome, and he that fyndeth her, maketh moche of her. They that haue had vnderstandinge, haue dealt wysely in wordes, haue vnderstonde the truthe and righteousness, and haue sought out wyse sentēces and iudgmentes. Solowe not thy lustes, but turne y from thine owne will. For yf thou geuest thy soule hir desyres, it shal make thine enemies to laugh the to scorne. Take not thy pleasure in greates voluptuousnes, & medle not to moche withall. Make not to greates cheare of the thinge that thou hast wonne by auantage: lest thou fall in to pouerte, and haue nothinge in thy purse.

The XIX. Chapter.

Labourynge man that is genen vnto dronkennes, shal not be riche: and he that maketh not moche of small thynges, shal fall by litle and litle. Wyne and women make wyse men renagates, and put men of vnderstandinge to reprove: and he that accompanieth aduouterers shal become a wicked man. Mothes and womes shal hane him to heretage, yee he shal be sett vp to a greater example, and his soule shalbe roted out of the nombre. He that is haustie to geue credence, is light mynded, and doth agaynst himself. Who so reioyseth in wickednes, shal be punished: he that hateth to be reformed, his life shalbe shortened: and he that abhorreth bablinge of wordes, quencheth wickednes. He that offendeth agaynst his owne soule, shal repent it: and he that reioyseth in wickednes, shalbe punished.)

Rehearse not a wicked and churlish word, & thou shalt not be hyndered. Shew thy secretes nether to frende ner foe, & yf thou hast offended, tell it not out. For he shal herten vnto the and marck the: and whan he fyndeth oportunitie, he shal hate the. If thou hast herde a worde agaynst y neighbour, lett it be deed within the: and be sure, thou shalt haue no harme therby. A foole trauaileth with a worde, like as a woman that is payned with bearinge of childe. Like as an arrowe shott in a dogges thye, so is a worde in a foolles hert. Tell thy frende his faute, lest he be ignoraunt, and saye: I haue not done it, or yf he haue done it, that he do it nomore. Reproue thy neighbour, that he kepe his tonge: and yf he haue spokē, that he saye it nomore.

Tell thy neighbour his faute, for oft tymes an offence is made, and geue not credence to euery worde. A man falleth somtyme with his tonge, but not with his will. For what is he, yf he hath not offended in his tonge: Geue thy neighbour warnynge, before thou threaten him, and geue place vnto the lawe of the LORD. The feare of God is all wysdome, & he that is a right wyse man kepeth the lawe. As for the doctrine of wickednes, it is no wysdome, and the prudence of synners is no good vnderstandinge: it is but wickednesse and abhominacion & a blasphemynge of wysdome. A symple man of small vnderstandinge that feareth God, is better then one that hath moche wysdome, and transgresseth the lawe of the yest.

A craftye sotell man can be wyse, but he is vnrighteous, and with giftes he waysteth the open and manifest lawe. A wicked man can behaue himself humbly, and can doute with his heade, and yet is he but a disceauerer within. He hydeth his face, and disguiseth it: & because he shulde not be knowne, he preuenteth the.

And though he be so weake that he can do the no harme, yet whan he maye fynde oportunitie, he shal do some euell. A man maye be knowne by his face, and one that hath vnderstandinge, maye be perceaued by the loke of his countenance. A mans garment, laughter & goynge, declare what he is.

The XX. Chapter.

Some man reproveth his neyghb of o f tymes, but not in due season: Agayne, some man holdeth his tonge, and he is wyse and discrete. It is moche better to gene warnynge and to reproue, then to beare euell will: for he that knowlegeth him self openly, shalbe preserved from hurt and destruction. Like as whan a chamberlayne thow row desyre and lust desyleth a mayden, euen so is it with him that vseth violence and vnrighteousnes in y<sup>e</sup> lawe: (O how good a thinge is it, a man y<sup>e</sup> is reprovied, to shewe openly his repentance: for so shalt thou escape wylfull synne.)

Some man kepeth sylence, and is fownde wyse: but he that is not ashamed what he sayeth, is hatefull. Some man holdeth his tongue, because he hath not the vnderstandinge of the language: and some man kepeth sylence, waytinge a conuenient tyme. A wyse man wyll holde his tongue tyll he se oportunitie, but a wanton and an vndiscrete body shal regarde no tyme. He that vseth many wordes, shal hurte his owne soule: and he that taketh auctorite vpon him vnrighteously, shalbe hated.

Some man hath oft tymes prosperite in wicked thinges: Agayne, some man getteth moch, and hath harme and losse. There is some gift that is nothinge worth: Agayne, there is some gift, whose rewarde is dubble. Some man getteth a fall for beyng to proude, and some cometh to worshipec from lowe estate. Some man bieth moch for a litle pryce, and must paye for it sevenfolde.

A wyse man with his wordes maketh him self to be loued, but the fauours of fooles shalbe poured out. The gift of the vnwyse shal do the no good, for his eyes are seven folde. He shal geue litle, & saye he gaue moch: he openeth his mouth and crieth out, as it were one that crieth out wyne. To daye he lendeth, to morow he ageth it agayne, and soch a man is to be hated. The foole sayeth: I haue no frende, I haue no thanke for all my good dedes: yee euen they that eate my bred, speake no good of me. O how oft, and of how many shal he be laughed to scorn: He taketh a more perillous fall by soch wordes, then yf he fell vpon the grounde: euen so shal the falles of wicked men come haistely. In the mouth of him that is vntaught, are many vconuenient and vmete wordes. A wyse sentence shal not be allowed at the mouth of the foole, for he speaketh it not in due season.

Some man synneth not, because he hath not wherewithall, and in his rest he shal be stynged. Some man there is that destroyeth his owne soule with shame, and for an vnwyse bodyes sake destroyeth he it, (and with acceptinge of personnes shal he vndo himself.) Some man promisseth his frende a gift for very shame, and getteth an enemye of him for naught. A lye is a wicked shame in a man, yet shal it be euer in the mouth of the vnwyse. A thefe is better, then a man that is accustomed to synne, but they both shal haue destruction to heretage. The conditions of lyers are vn honest, and their shame is euer with them.

A wyse man shal brynge himself to honour with his wordes, and he that hath vnderstandinge shal be sett by amonge great men. He that tylleth his londe, shal increase his heape of corne: he that worketh righteousness, shal be exalted, & he that pleaseth greute men, shal escape moch euell. Rewar des and giftes blynde the eyes of the wyse, and make him domme, that he can not tell me their fautes. Wyssdome that is hyd, and treasure that is hooded vp, what profit is in them both: Better is he that kepeth his ignoraunce secrete, then a man that hydeh his wyssdome.

The XXI. Chapter.

W<sup>h</sup>osome, yf thou hast synned, do it nomore: but praye for thy forsynnes, that they maye be forgiven the. Fle from synne, euen as from a serpent: for yf thou comest to nye her, she wyll bite the. The teth therof are as the teth of a lyon, to slaye the soules of men. The wickednes of man is as a sharpe two edged swerde, which maketh soch woundes that they can not be healed.

Stryfe and wrongeons dealinge shall waiste awaye a mans goodes, & thow pryde a rich house shalbe brought to naught: so the riches of the proude shalbe rote out. The prayer of the poore goeth out of the mouth, and cometh vnto the eares, and his vengeance (or defence) shal come, and y<sup>e</sup> haistely. Who so hateth to be resourmed, it is a token of an vngodly personne: but he that feareth God, wyl remembre himself. A mightie man is knowne a farre of by his tongue, but he that hath vnderstandinge, perceaueth that he shal haue a fall.

Who so buyldeth his house with other mens cost, is like one that gathereth stones in wynter. The congregacion of the vngodly is like stubble gathered together, their ende is a flamme of fyre. The waye of the vngodly is sett with stones, but in their ende is hell, darcknes, and paynes. He that kepeth the lawe, wyll holde fast the vnderstand dinge therof, and the ende of the feare of God is wyssdome. He that is not wyse, wyll not be taught in good: but the vnwyse man aboundeth in wickednes: and where bytternes is, there is no vnderstandinge. The knowlege of the wyse shal flowe like water that remethouer, and his counsell is like a fountayne of life.

The hert of a foole is like a broke vessel, he can kepe no wyssdome. Whan a man of vnderstandinge heareth a wyse worde, he shal commende it, and make moch of it. But yf a voluptuous man heare it, he shal haue no pleasure therin, but cast it behynde his back. The talkynge of a foole is like an heuy burthen by the waye: but to heare a wyse man speake, it is a pleasure. Where a doute is in the congregacion, it is axed at the mouth of the wyse, and they shal pondre his wordes in their hertes. Like as a house that is destroyed, euen so is wyssdome vnto a foole: As for the knowlege of the vnwyse, it is but darck wordes. Doctryne is vnto him y<sup>e</sup> hath no vnderstandinge, euen as fetters aboute his fete, and like manicles vpon his right hande. A foole listeth vp his voyce & laughter, but a wyse man shal scarce laugh secretly.

Lernynge is vnto a wyse man a Jewell of golde, and like an armlett vpon his right arme. A foolish mans foote is soone in his neighbours house, but one that hath experience, shal be ashamed at the personne of the mightie. A foole wyll pepe in at y<sup>e</sup> window in to the house, but he that is well nourtured, wyll stonde without. A foolish man stondeth herkenynge at the doore, but he that is wyse, wyll be ashamed.

The lippes of the vnwyse wyll be tellynge foolish thinges, but y<sup>e</sup> wordes of soch as haue vnderstandinge, shalbe weyed in the balance. The hert of fooles is in their mouth, but the mouth of the wyse is in their hert. Whan the vngodly curseth the blasphemers, he curseth his owne soule. A priuy accuser of other men shal desyle his owne soule, and be hated of everyman: (but he that kepeth his tongue and is discrete, shal come to honoure.)

The XXII. Chapter.

A slouthfull body is moulded of a stone of clai: he that toucheth him, must wash his handes agayne. A mysnurtured sonne is the dishonoure of the father. A foolish daughter shalbe litle regarded. A wyse daughter is an heretage vnto hir husbande: but she that cometh to dishonesty, bringeth hir father in heuynes. A daughter that is past shame, dishonoureth both hir father & hir husbande: the vngodly shal regarde her, but they both shal despise her. the playenge of Musick is not mete where heuynes is, euen so is the correccio<sup>n</sup> & doctryne of wyssdome euer vnpleasunt vnto fooles.

Who so teacheth a foole, is euen as one that gleweth a potsherde together: as one that telleth a tale to him that heareth him not, and as one that rayseth a man out of an heuy slepe. Who so telleth a foole of wyssdome, is euen as a man, which speaketh to one y<sup>e</sup> is a slepe. Whā he hath tolde his tale, he sayeth: what is the matter? Whā one dyeth, lamentacion is made for him, because the light sayleth him: eue so let me mourne ouer a foole, for he wanteth vnderstandinge. Make but litle wepinge because of the deed, for he is come to rest: but the life of the foole is worse then the death. Seven dayes do men mourne for him that is deed, but the lamentacion ouer the vnwyse and vngodly shulde endure all the dayes of their life.

Talke not moch with a foole, and go not with him that hath no vnderstandinge. Bewarre of him, lest it turne the to trauaile, & thou shalt not be desyled with his synne. De parte from him, and thou shalt synde rest, & shalt not be diawē back in to his foolishnes. What is heuyer then leade? And what shulde a foole be called els, but leade? Sothe, salt & a lōpe of yron is easier to beare, then an vnwyse, foolish, and vngodly man. Like as the band of wodd bounde together: in the foundation of the house can not be lowed, eue so is it with y<sup>e</sup> hert y<sup>e</sup> is stablised in y<sup>e</sup> thought of counsell. The thought of the wyse, shal ne ther feare ner be offended at eny tyme.

Like as a fayre playstred wall in a winter house, & an hye buyldinge, maye not abyde y<sup>e</sup> wīde & stōme: eue so is a foolles hert afrayed in his ymaginacion: he feareth at every thinge, and can not endure. He that nypeth a mans eye, bryngeth forth teares: and he that pricketh the hert, bringeth forth y<sup>e</sup> meanyng & thought. Who so casteth a stone at the byrdes, frayeth them awaye: & he y<sup>e</sup> blasphemeth his frēde, breaketh y<sup>e</sup> frēdshipe, though thou drawest a swerde at thy frende, yet displaye not, for thou mayest come agayne to y<sup>e</sup> frende. If he speake sowerly, feare not, for ye maye be agreed together agayne: excepte it be so that thou blasphemest him, byssdayne him, open his secretes and wounde him traitorously: for all soch thinges shal dryne awaye a frende.

te, that thou mayest reioyse with him also in his prosperite. Abide stedfast vnto him in y<sup>e</sup> tyme of his trouble, that thou maiest be hey re wth him in his heretage. Like as the vapor and smoke goeth out at the ouen before y<sup>e</sup> fy re, euen so euell wordes, rebukes and threate nynges go before bloudsheddinge. Be not a shamed to defende y<sup>e</sup> frende: as for me, I wyl not hyde my face from him, though he shul de do me harme. Who so euer heareth it, shal beware of him. Who shal set a watch before my mouth, & a sure seale vpon my lippes, y<sup>e</sup> I fall not wth the, & y<sup>e</sup> my tonge destroye me not?

The XXIII. Chapter.

A LORDE, father and gouernoure of my life, leaue me not in their ymagi nacio & counsell. Oh let me not fall in soch reprofe. Who wyl kepe my thought with y<sup>e</sup> scourge, and the doctryne of wysdome in myne herte: that he spare not myne ig norance, that I fall not with them, lest my ne ignorances increase, that myne offences be not many in nombre, and that my synnes exceede not: lest I fall before myne enemyes, and so my aduersary reioyse. O LORDE, thou father & God of my life, leaue me not in their ymaginacion. O let me not haue a proude loke, but turne awaye all voluptuousnes from me. Take fro me the lustes of the body, let not the desyres of vncleannes take holde vpon me, and geue me not ouer in to an vnshame fast and obstinate mynde.

B Heaure me (o ye children) I will geue you a doctryne, how ye shal ordie y<sup>e</sup> mouth: who so kepeth it, shal not perishe thorow his lip pes, ner be hurt thorow wicked wordes (As for the synner, he shalbe taken in his owne vanite: he that is proude and cursed, shal fall therin.) Let not thy mouth be accustomed with swearing, for in it there are many fal
les. Let not the namynge of God be continu ally in y<sup>e</sup> mouth: for like as a seruaunt which is oft punyshed can not be without some so re, euen so what so euer he be y<sup>e</sup> sweareth and nameth God, shal not be cleane purged fro synne. A man that vseth moch swearing, shalbe fylled with wickednes, and the plage shal neuer go from his house. If he begyle his brother, his faute shalbe vpon him: yf he knowlege not his synne, he maketh a double offence: and yf he sweare in vayne, he shal not be founde righteous, for his house shal be full of plagis.

C The wordes of y<sup>e</sup> swearer bringeth death (God graunte y<sup>e</sup> it be not founde in the house of Jacob.) But they y<sup>e</sup> feare God, eschue all soch and lye not weltringe in synne. Of no y<sup>e</sup> mouth to vn honest and fylchye talkynge, for in it is the worde of synne. Remember y<sup>e</sup> father and thy mother, whā thou art set a monge greate men: lest God forget y<sup>e</sup> in their sight, and lest thou dotinge in thy custome, suffre rebuke, and wyshe not to haue bene bo ne, and so curse the daye of thy nativite. The man that is accustomed with the wordes of blasphemy, wyl neuer be resourmed all y<sup>e</sup> day es of his life. To synne twyse is to moch, but the thirde bringeth wiath and destruccion.

An whote stomack cannot be quenched (eue like a burnynge fyre) tyll it haue swallowed vp somethinge: eue so an vchaste mā hath no rest in his flesh, tyll he haue kyndled a fyre.

All bried is swete to an whoremonger, he wyl not leane of, tyll he haue his purpose. A man that breaketh wedlock, & regardeth not his soule, but sayeth: Tush, who seyth me: I am compassed aboute with darknes, the walles couer me, no body seyth me: whom nede I to feare? The hyest wyl not reman bre my synnes. (He vnderstandeth not that his eyes se all thinges, for all soch feare of me dryueth awaye the feare of God from him:
for he feareth onely the eyes of men, and con sidereth not that the eyes of the LORDE are clearer then the Sonne, beholdinge all y<sup>e</sup> wayes of men and the grounde of the depe, and lokynge euen to mens hertes in secret places. The LORDE God knewe all thinges or euer they were made, and after they be brought to passe also he loketh vpon them all. The same mā shalbe opely punyshed in y<sup>e</sup> stretes of y<sup>e</sup> cite, and shalbe chased abroad like a yonge hoise foale: and whan he thin keth lest vpon it, he shal be takē. Thus shal he be put to shame of euery man, because he wolde not vnderstande the feare of the LOR DE. And thus shal it go also wth euery wyf y<sup>e</sup> leaueth hir husbāde, & getteth enheritaunce by a straunge mariage. First, she hath bene vnfaithfull vnto the lawe of y<sup>e</sup> hyest: Sec
dly, she hath forsaken hir owne husbāde: Thirde, she hath played y<sup>e</sup> whorem in adu try, & gottē hir childre by another man. She shalbe brought out of y<sup>e</sup> cōgregacio, and hir childre shalbe lokēd vpo. Hir childre shal not take rote: & as for frute, hir braunches shal ge forth none. A shamefull reporte shal she leauē behynde her, & hir dishon<sup>r</sup> shal not be put out. And they y<sup>e</sup> remayne, shal knowe, y<sup>e</sup> there is nothinge better, the y<sup>e</sup> feare of God: &
y<sup>e</sup> there is nothinge sweter, then to take hede vnto the commaundementes of the LORDE.
A greate worshipec is it to folowe y<sup>e</sup> LORDE,

for longe life shalbe receaved of him.

The XXIII. Chapter.

Wysdome shal prayse hirself, & be ho noured in God, & reioyse in y<sup>e</sup> myd dest of his people: In the cōgrega cions of the hyest shal she open hir mouth, & tryumphe in y<sup>e</sup> beholdinge of his power:
In y<sup>e</sup> myddest of hir people shal she be exal ted, & wondred at in the holy fulnesse: In the multitude of the chosen she shalbe commen ded, & amonge soch as be blessed she shalbe prayed, & shal saye: I am come out of the mouth of y<sup>e</sup> hyest, first borne before all crea tures. I caused y<sup>e</sup> light & sayleth not, to ary se in the heauen, & couered all the earth as a cloude. My dwellinge is aboue in y<sup>e</sup> heyth, & my seate is in the piler of the cloude. I my self alone haue gone rounde aboute the com passe of heauen, & pearced the grounde of y<sup>e</sup> depe: I haue walked in the floudes of y<sup>e</sup> see, & haue stonde in all landes: my domynion is in euery people and in euery nacion, & with my power haue I troden downe the hertes of all, both hye and lowe.

B In all these thinges also I sought rest, & a dwellinge in some enheritaunce. So y<sup>e</sup> crea tor of all thinges gaue me a commaunde ment: & he charmed me, appoynted me a ta bernacle, and saide vnto me: Let thy dwellin ge be in Jacob, and thy inheritaunce in Is rael, & rote thyself amonge my chosen. I was created from the begynninge and before the woulde, & shal not leaue of vnto the woulde to come. In the holy habitacion haue I ser ued before him, and so was I stablished in Sion. In y<sup>e</sup> holy cite rested I in like maner, & in Jerusalem was my power. I toke rote in an honourable people, euen in the porcion of y<sup>e</sup> LORDE in his heretage, & kepeme in y<sup>e</sup> falmes of the sayntes. I am sett vp an hye like a Cedar vpo Libanus, & as a Cypress tre vpon the mount Hermon: I am exalted like a palme tre in Cadis, & as a rose plate in Je rich: As a sayre olyue tre in the felde, & au exalted like as a plantayne tre by the water syde. I haue geuen a smell in the stretes, as y<sup>e</sup> Cynamom and Balme, that hath so good a sauoure: yee a swete odoure haue I geuen, as it were Myre of the best.

I haue made my dwellinges to smell as it were of rosyn, Galbanum, of Clowes and Incense, & as Libanus whan it is not hewe downe, & mine odoure is as the pure Balme.
As the Terebinte haue I stretched out my braunches, and my braunches are the braun ches of honoure and lonyng sauoure. As y<sup>e</sup> wyne haue I brought forth frute of a swete

saouure, and my floures are y<sup>e</sup> frute of hono ur and riches. I am the mother of bewtye, of lo ue, of feare, of knowlege & of holy hope. In me is all grace of life and truerth: In me is all hope of life and vertue. O come vnto me, all ye that be desyrous of me, and fyll youre selues with my frutes: for my spierte is sweter then hony, & so is my inheritaunce more then the hony combe: the remembraunce of me en dureth for evermore. They that eate me, shal haue the more honger: and they that dryn ke me, shal thyrste the more. Who so herke neth vnto me, shal not come to confucion:
and they that worke in me, shal not offende.
They that make me to be knowne, shal haue euerlastinge life.

All these thinges are the boke of life, the couenante of the hyest, and the knowlege of the truerth. Moses commaunded the lawe in the preceptes of righteousnes for an hereta ge vnto the house of Jacob, and cōmitted y<sup>e</sup> promyses vnto Israel. Out of Dauid his ser uaunt God ordered to raise vp a most migh tie kinge, syttinge in the seate of honoure for euermore. This fylleth with wysdome like as the floude of phison, & as y<sup>e</sup> floude of Ti gris, whan the new frutes are a growinge.

This bringeth a plenteous vnderstandin ge, like Euphrates: & fylleth it vp, as Jordane in the tyme of harvest. This maketh nure to breate forth as the light, & as the water Gi hon in y<sup>e</sup> harvest. The first hath not knowne her perfectly, nomore shal the last seke out y<sup>e</sup> grounde of her. For hir thought is fuller the the see, and hir counsell is profounder then the greates depe.

I wysdome haue cast out floudes. I am as a greates waterbroke out of y<sup>e</sup> riuer. I am as the ryuer Doux, and as a water condyte am I come out of the garden of pleasure. I sayde: I wyl water the garden of my yonge plantis, and fyll the frute of my byrth. So my waterbroke became excedinge greates, and my ryuer appoched vnto the see. For I make doctryne to be vnto all mē as light as the sayre moynge, and I shall make it to be euer the clearer. (I will pearse thorow all the lower partes of the earth, I wyl loke v pon all soch as be a slepe, and lighten all the that put their trust in the LORDE.) I shal yet poure out doctryne, like as prophesy, and leauē it vnto soch as seke after wysdome, and their generacions shal I neuer sayle, vnto
the holy euerlastinge woulde. Beholde, horo that I haue not laboured for my self o nely, but for all them y<sup>e</sup> seke after y<sup>e</sup> truerth.

The XXV. Chapter.

A These things there are, & my spere fanoureth, which be also a lowed before God and men: The vytyes of bre-thien, the loue of neighbours, and man & wyfe that agree well together.

These things there be which my soule ha-teth, and I utterly abhorre the life of them:
A poore man that is proude. A rich mā that is a lyar, and an olde body that doteth and is vncaste.

If thou hast gathered nothinge in thy youth, what wilt thou fynde thē in thine ager? How pleasaunt a thinge is it, whā gray headed men are discrete, & whan the elders can geue good counsell: How coly a thin-ge is wysdome vnto aged men: yee vnderstandinge and counsell is a glorious thinge.
The crowne of olde men is to haue moch experience, & & feare of God is their worshippe.

B There be ix. thinges, which I haue iudged in my hert to be happie, and the tenth wil I tell forth vnto men with my tonge. A man y whyle he lyueth, hath ioye of his children, and seith & fall of his enemies: Well is him,
that dwelleth with an houswife of vnderstō-dinge, and that hath not fallen with his tonge, and & hath not bene faine to serue soch as are vnnete for him. Wel is him, & syndeth a faithfull frende: & wel is him, which talketh of wysdome to an eare & heareth him. How greate is he, & syndeth wysdome & knowlege: Yet is he not aboue him, that feareth the LORDE. The feare of God hath sett itself aboue all thinges. Blessed is & man, vnto whō it is graunted to haue the feare of God. On to whō shal he be lickened, & keperth it fast:
The feare of God is the begynnynge of his loue, and the begynnynge of faith is to cleue fast vnto it. The heynynes of the hert is all the punysshment, and the wickednes of a woman goeth aboue all. All punysshment & pla-ge is nothinge in comparison of the plage of the hert, eue so all wickednes is nothinge to the wickednes of a woman.

C What so ener happeneth vnto a man, is nothinge in comparison of it, & his euell wil-lers do vnto him: and all vengeance is no-thinge to the vengeance of the enemye. There is not a more wicked heade then the heade of the serper, and there is no wrath aboue & wrath of a woman. I wyl rather dwell with a lyon and dragon, then to kepe house with a wicked wyfe. The wickednesse of a woman chaungeth hir face, she shal mossell hir cou-tenaunce as it were a Beer, & as a sack shal she shewe it amonge the neighbours. Hir husbande is brought to shame amonge his neghbours, & whā he heareth it, it maketh him to sighe. All wickednes is but litle to the wickednes of a woman, & porcion of the vngod-ly shal fall vpon her.

Like as to clymme vp a sondy waye is to y fete of the aged, eue so is a wife full of wor-des to a still quyet man. Loke not to narrowly vpon the bewtye of a woman, lest thou be prouoked in desyre toward her. The wrath of a woman is dishonoure and greate confusio. If a woman gett the mastre, then is she contrary to hir husbāde. A wicked wife maketh a sovy hert, an heuy countenāce and a deed wounde. Of the woman came y begynnynge of synne, and thorow her we all are deed. Geue thy water no passage, no not a litle, nether geue a wicked woman hir will. If she walke not after thy hande, she shal confounde the in the sight of thy enemies. Cut her of then from thy flesh, that she do not allwaye abuse the.

The XXVI. Chapter.

G Appie is the man that hath a vertuous wyfe, for the nobre of his yeares shalbe double. An honest woman ma-keth hir husbāde a ioyfull man, & she shal fyll & yeares of his life in peace. A vertuous woman is a noble gift, which shalbe geuen for a good porcion vnto soch as feare God.
Whether a man be rich or poore, he maye haue ener a mery hert, & a chearful countenā-
ce. There be thre thinges & my hert feareth, and my face is afrayed of the fourth. Treason in a cite, a sedicious people, and noysome tonges, all these are heuyer then the death.
But whan one is gelous ouer his wife, it bryngeth payne and sorowe vnto the hert:
and a woman that telleth out all thinges, is a scourge of the tonge. Whan one hath an euell wife, it is euen as whan an vnlike part of oxen must drawe together: he that getteth her, getteth a scorpion. A drunken woman is a greate plage, for she cannot couer hir owne shame.

The whordome of a woman maye be knowne in the pryde of hir eyes and eyel-lyddes. If thy daughter be not shamefast, holde her straitly, lest she abuse herself the-row ouermoch liberte. Bewarre of all the dishonesty of hir eyes, and marnell not if she do agaynst the. Lik as one that goeth by the waye and is thyrstie, so shal she open hir mouth, and drynke of euery nexte water that she maye gett.

By every hedge shal she syt her downe, & ope hir quyer agaynst euery arrowe. A lovyge wyfe reioyseth hir husbāde, and feareth his bones with hir wysdome. A woman of few wordes is a gift of God, and to a well nurtured mynde maye nothinge be compared.

An honest and manerly woman is a gyft aboue other gistes, and there is no waight to be compared, vnto a mynde that can rule itself. Like as the Sonne whan it aryseth, is an ornament in the hye heauen of & LOR-DE, so is a vertuous wife & bewtye of all hir house. Like as the cleare light is vpon & holy candelstick, so is the bewtye of the face vpon an honest body. Like as the golde pilers are vpon the sockettes of syluer, so are the sayre legges vpon a woman that hath a constant mynde. (Perpetuall are the foundacions that be laied vpon a whole stonye rocke, so are & commandementes of God vpon an holy woman.)

D There be two thinges & greue my hert, and in the thirde is a displeasure come vpon me. Whan an experte man of warre suffreth scarsenes and pouerte, Whan men of vnderstandinge and wysdome are not set by: And whan one departeth from righteousnes vnto synne. Who so doth soch, the LORDE hath prepared him vnto the swerde. There be two maner of thinges, which me thyncke to be herde and perylous. A marchaunt can not lightly kepe him from wronge, nether a tanner himself from synne.

The XXVII. Chapter.

Because of pouerte haue many one of fended: and he that seeketh to be riche, turneth his eyes asyde. Like as a nale in the wall sticketh fast betwixte two sto-mes, enen so doth synne sticketh betwixte y byer and the seller. If he holde him not diligently in & feare of the LORDE, his house shal sone be ouerthrowne. Like as whan one sitteth, the fylthynges remayneth in the syue:
So, remayneth there some vncleane thinge in the thought of man. The ouen proueth the potters vessell, so doth tentacion of troubletrye righteous men. The tre of the felde is knowne by his frute, so is the thought of mā hert knowne by his wordes. Praise no mā excepte thou haue harde him, for a man is knowne by his wordes. If thou folowest righteousnes, thou shalt get her, and put her vpon y as a sayre garment. (And thou shalt dwell with her, and she shal defende the foreuer, and in & daye of knowlege thou shalt fynde steadfastnesse.) The byrdes resorte vnto their like, so doth the trueth turne vnto them that be occupied withall. The lyon wayteth for y praye: so do the synnes lurke vpon the woikes of wickednes. The talkinge of him that feareth God, is nothinge but wysdome: as for a foole, he chaungeth as & Moo-

ne. If thou be amonge the vndiscrete, kepe thy word to a convenient tyme, but amonge ge soch as be wysse, speake on hardely. The talkinge of fooles is abhominacio, and their spoite is voluptuousnesse and mysnurtoure.
Moch swearynge maketh the hayre to ston-de vp, and to stryue with soch, stoppeth the eares.

The stryfe of the proude is bloudsheddyng, & their blasphemynge is heuy to hea-
re. Who so discovereth secretes, leseth his cre-denche, and syndeth no frende after his will.
Love thy frende, and bynde thyself in faithfulnes with him: but yf thou bewrayest his secretes, thou shalt not get him agayne: For like as the mā is that destroyeth his enemye so is he also that dealeth falsly in the frendshipe of his neighbour.

Like as one that letteth a byrde go out of his honde, can not take her agayne: Euen so thou, yf thou geue ouer thy frende, thou canst not get him agayne: Yet thou cast not come by him, for he is to farre of. He is vnto the as a Roo escaped out of the snare, for his soule is wounded. As for woundes, they maye be bounde vp agayne, and an euell worde maye be reconcyled: but who so bewrayeth the secretes of a frende, there is no more hope to be had vnto him.

He that wynceth with the eyes, ymagineth some euell, and no man shal take him from it. Whan thou art present, he shal hylie commend and prayse thy wordes: but at the last he shal turne his taylor, and slauber thy sayenge. Many thinges haue I hated, but nothinge so euell, for the LORDE himself also abhorreth soch one.

Who so casteth a stone an hye, it shal fall vpon his owne heade: and he that synneth with gyle, woundeth himself. Who so diggeth a pytt, shal fall therein: and he that lay-eth a snare, shal be taken in it himself. Who so getteth a wicked noysome counsell, it shal come vpon himself, and he shal not knowe from whence. The proude blasphemie and are-scornefull, but vengeance lurketh for them as a lyon. They that reioyse at the fall of & righteous, shal be taken in y snare, angrysh of hert shal consume them before they dye.
Anger and rigorousnes are two abhominable thinges, and & vngodly hath them both vpon him.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

Deut. 32. c
Rom. 12. c
Mat. 5. b
5. b. 18. b

H that seeketh vengeance, shall fynde vengeance of the LORDE, which shall surely kepe him his synnes. For geue thy neighbour the hurte that he hath done the, and so shall thy synnes be forgiven the also, whan thou prayest. A man that beareth hatred agaynst another, how darre he desyre forgiveness of God? He that sheweth no mercy to a man which is like himself, how darre he aske forgiveness of his synnes? If he that is but flesh, beareth hatred and kepeth it, who wyl intreate for his synnes? Remember the ende, and let enemye passe, which seeketh death and destruction, and abyde thou in thy commandementes. Remember thy commandement, so shalt thou not be rigorous over thy neighbour. Thynte vpon the couenaunt of thy yest, and forgive thy neighbours ignorance. Bewarre of strife, and thou shalt make thy synnes fewer. For an angrie man kindleth variaunce, and the vngodly disquieteth frendes, and putteth discorde amonge them that be at peace. The more wodd there is, the more vehement is the fyre: and the mightier the men be, the greater is the wrath: and the longer the strife endureth, the more it burneth.

C An haistie brawlinge kindleth a fyre, and an haistie strife shedderh bloude. If thou blowe the sparke, it shall burne: If thou spytt vpon it, it shall go forth, and both these go out of thy mouth. The slauderer and dubble tongued is cursed, for many one that be frendes setteth he at variaunce. The thirde tonge hath disquieted many one, and dryuen them from one londe to another. Stronge cities hath it broken downe, and ouerthrowne the houses of greate men. The thirde tonge hath cast out many an honest woman, and robbed them of their labours. Who so, harkeneth vnto such, shall neuer fynder rest, and neuer dwell safely. The stroke of a rod maketh yedders, but the stroke of the tonge smyteth the bones in sunder. There be many that haue perished with the swerde, but many more thow the tonge.

D Wel is him that is kepte fro an euell tonge, and commeth not in anger therof: which draweth not the yock of such, and is not bounde in the bondes of it. For the yock therof is of yron, and a bonde of it of stele. The death therof is a very euell death: hell were better for one, then such a tonge. But the fyre of it maye not oppresse them that feare God, and y flamme therof maye not burne the. Soch as forsake the LORDE, shall fall therein: and it shall burne them, and no man shall be able to quench it. It shall fall vpon the as a laye, and deuoure them as a leparde. Thou bestest goodes to thornes: why dost thou not rather make doies and barres for thy mouth? Thou weiest thy golde and syluer: why dost thou not weye thy wordes also vpon the balancer? Bewarre, that thou slyde not in thy tonge, and so fall before thine enemies, that laye wayte for the.

The XXIX. Chapter.

Who so wil shewe mercy, let him lende vnto his neighbour: and he that is able, let him kepe the commandement. Lende vnto thy neighbour in tyme of his nede, and paye thou thy neighbour agayne in due season. Kepe thy word, and deale faithfully with him, and thou shalt allway fynde the thinge that is necessary for the. There haue bene many, that whan a thinge was lent them, rekened it to be founde: and made them trauaile and labour, that had helped them. Why let they receaue any thinge, they kysse the handes of such as geue them, and for their neighbours good they haile their voyce. But whan they shulde paye agayne they kepe it back, and geue euell wordes, and make many excuses by reason of the tyme: though he be able, yet geueth he scarce the half agayne, and rekeneth the other to be founde. And yf he witholde not his moneye, yet hath he an enemye of him, and that vnserued.

He payeth him with cursinge and rebuking, and geueth him euell wordes for his good dede. There be many one which are not glad for to lende, not because of euell, but they feare to lese the thinge that they lende. Yet haue thou pacience with the simple, and holde not mercy from him. Helpe the poore for the commandementes sake, and let him not go emptye from the because of his neede. Lese thy money for thy brother and neighbours sake, and burye it not vnder a stone, wher it rusteth and corruppeth. Gather thy treasure after the commandement of God: and so shalt it bunge the more golde. Laye vpon the almes in the hand of the poore, and it shall kepe the from all euill. (A mans almes is as a purse with him: he shall kepe a mans fauoure as the apple of an eye: and afterwarde shall it crye, and paye every man his rewarde vpon his heade. It shall fight for the agaynst thine enemies, better then the shyld of a giaunte, or speare of the mightie.)

A good honest man is suertye for his neighbour, but a wicked personne letteth him come to shame. Forget not the friendship of thy suertye, for he hath geue his soule for y. The vngodly despyseth y good dede of his suertye, and the vntankfull and ignorant leaueh his suertie in daunger. (Some man promyseth for his neighbour: and whan he hath lost his honesty, he shall forsake him.) Suertishipe hath destroyed many a ryche man, and remoued them as the warres in y see. Mightie people hath it dryuen awaye, and caused the to wandre in straunge countrees. An vngodly man transgressynge the commandement of the LORDE, shall fall in to an euell suertishipe: and though he force himself to get out, yet shall he fall in to iudgment. Helpe thy neighbour out after thy power, and bewarre, that thou thy self fall not in such dett. The chiefe thinge that kepeth in the life, is water and bried, clothinge and lodginge, to couer the shame.

Better is it to haue a poore lyuynge in a mans owne house, then delicate fayre amonge the straunge. Be it litle or moch y thou hast, holde the contē withall (and thou shalt not be blamed as a vagabounde) for a miserable life is it, to go from house to house: and where a man is frende, he darre not open his mouth. Though one be lodged, and haue meate and drynke, yet shall he be taken as vnworthy, and heare many bytter rough wordes, namely thus: Go thy waye thou straunger, and prepare a table (for thy self) and fede me also of that thou hast. Alwaye thou straunger (so, that he regardeth his honoure nomore) my brother commeth in to my house, and so he telleth him the necessite of his house. These thinges are heuy to a man that hath vnderstandinge: namely, the forbyddinge of y house, and that the leder casteth him in the teth.

The XXX. Chapter.

Who so loueth his childe, holdeth him still vnder correccion, that he maye haue ioye of him afterwarde (and that he grope not after his neighbours doies.) He y teacheth his sonne, shall haue ioye in him, and nede not be ashamed of him amonge his aquantaunce. Who so enfourmed y teacheth his sonne, greueth y enemye, and before his frendes he maye haue ioye of him. Though the father dye, yet is he as though he were not deed: for he hath left one behynde him that is like him. In his life he saue him, and had ioye in him, and was not sorry in his death, (nether was he ashamed before y enemies.) For he left behynde him an angier agaynst his enemies, and a good doer vnto the frendes. For the life of childe he shall binde the woundes together, and his hert is greued at every crye. An vntamed horse wylbe harde, and a wanton childe wyl be wylfull. If thou brynge vpon thy sonne delicately, he shall make y afraied: and yf thou playe with him, he shall brynge the to heuynes. Laugh not with him, lest thou wepe with him also, and lest thy teth be sett on edge at the last.

Geue him not liberte in his youth, and ercuse not his foly. Bowe downe his necke whyle he is yonge, hytt him vpon the sydes whyle he is yet but a childe, lest he waxe stubburne, and geue no more force of y (and so shalt thou haue heuynes of soule.) Teach thy childe, and be diligēt therin, lest it be to thy shame. Better is the poore beyng whole and stronge, then a man to be riche, and not to haue his health. Health and welfare is aboue all golde, and an whole body aboue all treasure. There is no riches aboue a sounde body, and no ioye aboue the ioye of the hert. Death is better then a wretched life, or continuall sicknes. The good thinges y are put in a close mouth, are like as whan meate is layed vpon y graue.

What good doth the offeringe vnto an Idoll? For he can nether cate, taist, ner smell. Ene so is it also with the riche, whom God maketh seke: he seith it with his eyes, and groweth therafter, and is euen as a gelded man, that lyeth with a vyrgin and sygheth. Geue not ouer thy mynde in to heuynes, and vexe not thy self in thine owne counsell. The ioye and chearfulness of the hert is the life of man, and a mans gladnes is the prolonginge of his dayes. Loue thine owne soule, and comforte thine hert: as for sorow and heuynes, dryue it farre from y, for heuynes hath slayne many a man, and bryngeth no profit. Zele and anger shorten the dayes of the life: carefulness and sorow brynge age before the tyme. Vnto a mery hert every thinge hath a good taist, that he eateth.

The XXXI. Chapter.

Rauaile and carefulness for riches taketh awaye the slepe, and maketh the flesh to consume. Whan one lyeth and taketh care, he waketh euer vpon, like as greates sicknes breaketh the slepe. The rich hath greates laboure in gatheringe his riches together, and then with the pleasure of his riches he taketh his rest, and is refreshed. But who so labourerth and prospererth not, he is poore: and though he leaue of, yet is he a begger. He that loueth riches, shall not be iustified: and who so foloweth corrupciō, shall haue ynough therof. Many one are come in greates myffortune by the reason of golde, and hane founde their destruccion before them. It is a tre of fallynge vnto them that offre it vp, and all soch as be foolish fall therein. Blessed is the rich, which is founde without blemyshe, and hath not gone after golde, ner hoped in money and treasures. Where is the re soch one? and we shal commende him, and call him blessed, for greate thinges doth he amonge his people. Who so is tryed, & founde perfecte in soch thinges, shalbe commended and praised. Who might offende, & hath not offended? Who coude do euell, and hath not done it? Therefore shal his good be stablished, and the whole congregacion shal declare his almesnes. If thou sytt at a greate mans table, open not thy mouth wyde vpon it, and make not many wordes. Remembre, that an euell eye is a shiew.

B What thinge created is worse then a wicked eye? therfore wepeth it before euery mans face. Laye not thine hand vpon euery thinge that thine eye seyth, and stryue not with him in the dyshe. Ponder by thy self what thy neighbour wolde fayne haue, & be discrete in euery poynte. Eate the thinge that is set before the, manerly, as it becommeth a man: and eate not to moch, lest thou be abhorred. Leane thou of first of all because of nouroure, lest thou be he whom no man maye satisfie, which maye turne to thy decaye. Whā thou syttest amonge many men, reach not thine hande out first of all. O how well cometh is a wyse man to a litle wyne: so y in slepe thou shalt not be seke therof, ner fele eny payne. A swete wholsome slepe shal soch one haue, and fele no inuarde grese. He ryseth vp by tymes in y mornynge, and is well at ease in him self. But an vnfaciable eater slepeth vnquyetly, and hath ache and payne of the body. If thou felest that thou hast eaten to moch, aryse, go thy waye, cast it of thy stomack, and take thy rest.

C My sonne, heare me, and despyse me not: and at the last thou shalt fynde as I haue tolde the. In all thy workes be diligent and quicke, so shal there no sicknes happen vnto the. Who so is liberall in dealynge out his meate, many men shall blesse him and prayse him with their lippes: and the same is a sure token of his loue and faithfulness. But he y is vnfaithfull in meate, the whole cite shall complayne of him: and that is a sure experience of his infidelite and wickednes. Be not thou a wine bebbler, for wyne hath destroyed many a man. The fyre proueth y hard yron, enen so doth wyne proue the hertes of the proude, whan they be droncken.

Wyne sorbely droncken, quycheneth the life of mā. If thou drynkest it measurably, thou shalt be temperate. What life is it, y maye contynue without wyne? Wyne was made from the begynnynge to make men glad (and not for dronkenes). Wyne measurably dronke is a reioysinge of the soule and body. But yf it be dronken with excess, it maketh bytternes and sorowe vnto the mynde. Drunkenes fylleth the mynde of the foolish with shame and ruine, mynsheth the strength, and maketh woundes. Rebutte not thy neighbour at y wyne, and despyse him not in his myrth. Geue him no despytefull wordes, and preasse not vpon him with contrary sayenges.

The XXXII. Chapter.

If thou be made a ruler, proude not thy self therin, but be thou as one of the people. Take diligent care for them, and loke well therto: and whan thou hast done all thy dewtye, syt the downe, that thou mayest be mery with them, and receaue a crowne of honoure. Talke wysely & honestly, for wysdome becommeth the right well. Synder not musyck. Speake not, where there is no audience: and poure not forth wysdome out of tyme, at an importunyte. Like as the Carbuncle stone shyneth, that is set in golde, so doth a songe garnyshe the wyne feast: and as y Smaragde that is set in golde, so is the swetnes of Musyck by y myrth of wyne.

Thou yongemā, speake that becommeth the, & that is profitable, and yet scarce whan thou art twyce axed. Comprehende moch with few wordes. In many thinges be as one that is ignorant, geue care, and holde thy tongue withall. If thou be amonge men of hyer anctouite, desyre not to compare thy self vnto them: and whā an elder speaketh, make not thou many wordes therin. Before the thonder goeth lightenyng, and before nurture and shamefastnesse goeth loue and fauoure. Stode vp by tymes, and be not the last: but get the home soone, & there take thy pastyme, & do what thou wilt: so y thou do no euell, and desyre no mā. But for all thinges geue thankes, vnto him that hath made the, and replenished the with his goodes.

Who so feareth the LORDE, wyl receaue his doctryne: and they that get them to him by tymes, shall fynde grace. He that seeth the lawe, shall be fylled withall. As for him y is but fayned, he wyl be offended therat. They that feare the LORDE, shal fynde the indgment, & their righteousnes shal be kynd led as a light. An vngodly man will not be reformed, but can helpe him self with the example of other in his purpose. A man of vnderstandinge despyseth no good counsell: but a wyld and proude body hath no feare. My sonne, do nothinge without aduysment, so shal it not repēt the after y dede. Go not in the waye where thou mayest fall, ner where thou mayest stamble against the stone. Geue not y self in to a laborious slyperry waye, and bewarre of thine owne children. In all thy workes put thy trust in God from thy whole hert, for that is the keepinge of the commaundementes. Who so beleueth Gods worde, taketh hede to the commaundementes: & he that putteth his trust in y LORDE, shal want nothinge.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

Here shall no euell happen vnto him that feareth God: but whan he is in tentacion, the LORDE shall deliuer him. A wyse man hateth not y lawe, but an hypocrite is as a shyp in a raginge water. A man of vnderstandinge geueth credence vnto the lawe of God, and y lawe is faithfull vnto him. Be sure of the matter, then talke therof. Be first wel instructe, the maiest thou geue answer. The hert of y foolish is like a cartwhele, and his thoughtes renne aboute like the axell tre. Like as a wyld horse that neyeth vnder euery one y syttert vpon him, so is it with a scornefull frende. Why doth one daie excell another, seyng all the dayes of the yere come of the Sonne? The wysdome of the LORDE hath so parted them asunder, and so hath he ordered the tymes and solempne feastes. Some of them hath he chosen and halowed before other dayes. And all men are made of the grounde, & out of the earth of Adam.

In the multitude of science hath y LORDE sundred them, and made their wayes of vyuerse fashions. Some of them hath he blessed, made moch of them, halowed them, & claymed them to himself. But some of the hath he cursed, brought the lowe, & put the out of their estate. Like as y claye is in the potters hande, & all the ordrynge therof at his pleasure: so are men also in the hande of him y made the, so that he maye geue them as it liketh him best. Agaynst euell is good, and agaynst death is life: so is the vngodly agaynst soch as feare God. Beholde thus all the workes of the LORDE, & there are euer two agaynst two, and one set agaynst another. I am awaked vp last of all, as one that gathereth after in haruest. In the giftes of God and in his blessinge I am increased, & hane fylled my wyne presse, like a grape gatherer. Beholde, how I haue not laboured enely for my self, but for all soch as loue nurture and wysdome.

Hear me O ye greates men of the people, & harken to y eares ye rulers of y congregacion. Geue not y sonne & wyse, y brother & frende power ouer the, whyle thou lyest: & geue not awaye thy substaunce and good to another, lest it repent the, & thou be fayne to begg therfore thy self. As longe as thou lyest & hast bieth, let no man chaunge the: for better it is thy children to praye the, then y thou shuldest be fayne to loke in their handes. In all thy workes be excellent, that thy honoure be neuer stained. At the tyme whan thou shalt ende thy dayes, and fynish thy life, distribute thine inheritaunce. The fodder, the whyppe, and the burden belongeth vnto the LORDE: Meate, correccion, and worke vnto the seruaunt.

If thou set thy seruaunt to laboure, thou shalt fynde rest. But yf thou let him go yde, he shal seke libertye. The yock & y whyppe: bowe downe the neck, but tame thou thy euell seruaunt with bodes & correccion. Send him to laboure, that he go not yde: for Idylnesse byngeth moch euell. Sett him to worke, for that belongeth vnto him and becommeth him well. If he be not obedient, bynde his fete: but do not to moch vnto him in anye wyse, & without discrecion do nothinge. If thou haue a (faithfull) seruaunt, let him be vnto the as thine owne soule, for in bloude hast thou gotten him. If thou haue a seruaunt, holde him as thy self, for thou hast neede of him as of thy self. If thou intreatest him euell, and kepest him harde, and makest him to be proude, and to renne awaye from y, thou canst not tell, what waye thou shalt seke him.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

A wyse people begyle them selues to wayne and disceatfull hope, and foolles trust in dreames. Who so regardeth dreames, is like him that wiltake holde of a shadowe, and solowe after the wynde: Euen so is it with the appearinges of dreames. Before the face is the likenes of a face. Who can be clensed of y vncleane? Or what treuth can be spoken of a lyar? Soyth sayenge, witchcraft, sorcery and dreaminge is but vanyte: like as whan a womā traunyleth wchylde, and hath many fantasies in hir herte. Where as soch visions come not of God, set not thine herte vpon them: for dreames hane disceaued many a mā, and they sayled, that put their truste therein.

B The lawe shalbe fulfilled without lyes, & wysdome is sufficient to a faithfull mouth. A wise man & is well instructe, vnderston-dondeth much: & he & hath good experie-ce, knoweth litle: & he & erreth, causeth much wickednes. Whan I was yet in erreure, I lerned much also: yee I was so lerned, that I coude not expresse it all, and came oft in pa-rell of death therouer, tyll I was delynered from it. Now I se, that they which feare God, haue the right spire: for their hope stodeth in him, that can helpe the. Who so feareth the LORDE, stōdeth in awe of no man, and is not a frayd, for the LORDE is his hope and comforte.

C Blessed is the soule of him & feareth the LORDE: In whō putteth he his trust: who is his strength? For the eyes of the LORDE haue respecte vnto them, that loue him. He is their mightie proteccion, & stronge grounde: A defence for the heate, a refuge for the hote noone daye, a succore for stomblyng, & an helpe for fallynge. He setteth vp the soule, and lighteneth & eyes: He geueth health life, and blessinge. He that geueth an offerin-ge of vnrightheous good, his offerynge is refused: and the scornfull dealinges of the vn-rightheous please not God. God hath no de-lyte in the offerynge of & vngodly, nether maye synne be reconcyled in the multitude of oblations. Who so bryngeth an offeryn-ge out of & goodes of & poore, doth enē as one & kylleth & sonne before & fathers eyes.

D The bled of the nedefull is the life of the poore: he & defraudeth him therof, is a man, of bloude. Who so robbeth his neghbō of his lyuinge, doth as greate synne as though he slew him to death. He that defraudeth & laborer of his hyre, is a bloude shedder. Whā one buyldeth, and another breaketh downe, what profit haue they then but labour? Whan one prayeth, & another curseth, whose voyce wyl the LORDE heare? He that wasshet himself because of a deed body, & then toucheth the deed agayne, what doth his wasshing? So is it with a man that fasteth for his synnes, and doth them agayne: who wil heare his prayer? Or what doth his fastynge helpe him?

The XXXV. Chapter.

A So so kepeth the lawe, bryngeth of ferynges ynough. He that holdeth fast the commaundement, offereth the right health offrynge. He & is thankfull & recompenseth, offereth syne flour. Who so is mercifull & geueth allmes, & is the right thank offrynge. God hath pleasure, whā one departeth fro synne: & so forsake vnrightounes recōcileth vs w him. Thou shalt not appeare emptye before & LORDE, for all soch is done because of & cōmaundement. The of-ferynge of & rightheous maketh & altere farr, & a swete smell is it before & & yest. The of-ferynge of the rightheous is acceptable vnto God, & shal neuer be forgottē. Geue God his honō with a chearfull eye, & kepe not backe the firstlinges of & handes. In all thy giftes shew a mery countenance, & halowe thy thes vnto God w gladnes. Geue vnto God, acordynge as he hath enriched & prospered the: & loke what thine hande is able, & geue w a chearfull eye: for the LORDE recompen-seth, & geueth & seuē tymes as much agayne.

Geue no vnrightheous giftes, for soch wil not be receaue. Bewarre of wrongeous of-ferynges, for & LORDE is a rightheous iudge, & regardeth no mans personne: He accepteth not the personne of the poore, but he heareth & prayer of & oppressed. He despyseth not & desyre of & fatherles, ner & wyddow, whan she poureth out hir prayer before him. Doth not God se & teares, & renne downe & & ekes of the wyddow? Or heareth he not the com-playnte, ouer soch as make her to wepe? Who so serueth God after his pleasure, shalbe accepted, & his prayer reacheth vnto the clou-
des. The prayer of him & humblyeth himself, goeth thorow & cloudes, tyll she come nye.
She wyl not be comforted, ner go hir waye, tyll & & yest God haue respecte vnto her, ge-ue true sentēce, & persourme & indgme. And & LORDE wil not be slack in cōmyng, nether ry longe: tyll he haue smytte in sonder & backes of & vnrightheous, & auenged himself of & & heit: tyll he haue takē awaye & multitude of & cruell, & broke the cepter of the vn-rightheous: tyll he geue every man after his workes, & rewarde them as they haue deser-ued: tyll he hane delynered his people, mayn-tened their cause, & reioysed them in his mercy. O how sayre a thinge is mercy, in the reme of anguyshe & trouble? It is like a cloude of rayne, & cōmeth in & tyme of a drouth.

The XXXVI. Chapter.

G Aue mercy vpon vs O LORDE, thou God of all thinges. Haue respecte vnto vs (shew vs the light of thy mercies, & sende & feare amōge & & heit & strai-gers, which seke not after the: & they maye knowe, how & there is no God but thou, and & they maye shew thy wonderous workes.)

Lift vp thine hande ouer the outlādish heithen, & they maye lerne to knowe thy might & power. Like as thou art halowed in vs before them, so brynge to passe, & thou mayest be magnified also in them before vs: & they maye knowe the, like as we knowe the. For there is none other God, but onely thou O LORDE. Renue the tokens, & chaunge the wonderous workes. Shewe thine hāde and thy right arme gloriously. Rayse thy indig-nacion, & poure out thy wrath. Take awaye the aduersary, & smyte the enemye. Make & tyme shorte, remembre thy couenaunt, that & wonderous workes maye be praysed. Let the wrath of the fyre consume them, that ly-ue so careles: and let them perishe, that do & people hurte. Smyte in sonder the heade of the prynces, that be oure enemies, and saye:
there is none other but we.

B Gather all & trybes of Jacob together a-gayne, & they maie knowe, how & there is none other God but onely thou, & they maie shew thy wonderous workes, and be thy people & heretage, like as from the begynninge.
O LORDE haue mercy vpon the people & hath & name, & vpo Israel, whom thou hast lickened to a first borne sonne. O be merciful vnto Ierusalem the cite of thy Sanctuary, & cite of thy rest. Syll Sion with thy vnspēakeable vertues, & & people w thy glory. Ge-ue wytnes vnto & creature, whom thou may dest from the begynninge, and rayse vp the prophecies & haue bene shewed in thy name.
Rewarde them & wayte for the, & thy prophetes maye be founde faithfull. O LORDE heare the prayer of thy seruantes, acordinge to & blessinge of Aaron ouer thy people:
that all they which dwell vpon earth, maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE the eter-nall God, which is from euerlastynge.

C The bely deuoureth all meates, yet is one meate better then another. Like as the tonge tasteth venyson, so doth an hert of vnderstandynge marck false wordes. A frowarde hert geueth heuynes, but a man of experience lifseth him vp agayne. The woman receaueth every man, yet is one daughter better then another. A sayre wife reioyseth hir husbande, and a man loueth nothinge better. If she be louynge & vertuous withall, then is not hir husbande like other men. He that hath gotten a vertuous woman, hath a goodly possession: she is vnto him an helpe and piler wher vpon he resteth. Where no hedge is, there the goodes are spoyled: and where no housewife is, there & frēdles mourneth. Like as there is no credence geuen to a robber, & goeth from one cite to another:

So is not & man beleued, that hath noneff, and must turne in, where he maye abyde in the night.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

Very frende sayeth: I wil be frendly vnto him also. But there is some fren-de, which is onely a frende in name.
Remayneth there not heuynes vnto death, whan a companion and frende is turned to an enemye? O most wicked presumption: fro whence art thou spronge vp, to couer the earth with falsede & disceate? There is some companion, which in prosperite reioyseth with his frēde: but in the tyme of trouble, he taketh parte agaynst him. There is some cōpanyon, that mourneth with his frende for the bely sake: but whan trouble commeth, he taketh holde of the shyld. Forget not thy frende in thy mynde, & thynke vpon him in riches. Every counseller bryngeth forth his councell: & neuertheles there is some, & coun-celleth but for his owne profit. Bewarre of & counseller, & be aduysed afore wherto thou wilt vse him, for he wil geue cōcell for himself. Lest he cast the lott vpon the, & saye vnto the: Thy waye and purpose is good, and afterwarde he stande agaynst the, and loke what shal become of the.

Are no cōcell at him, & suspecteth & for an enemye, & hyde & counsell from soch as hate &. Are no counsell at a woman, cōcernynge & thinges & she logeth for: ner at a fearful & fayntharted body, in matters of warre:
or at a marchaunt, how deare he wil cheape thy wares towarde his: or at a byer, of sel-lynge: Or at an enuyous man, of thankesgeuyng: Or at the vnrightheous, of louynge kindnes: Or at & slouthfull, of workinge: Or at an hyrelynge which hath no house, of profit or wealth. (An ydle body wolde not gladly heare speake of much labō.) Take no soch folkes to cōcell, but be diligēt to seke cōcell at a vertuous man, & feareth God, soch one as thou knowest to be a keeper of & cōmaundemētes, which hath a minde after thine owne minde, & is sory for & whā thou stōblest.

And holde thy counsell fast in thine hert:
for there is no man more faithfull to kepe it, then thou thy self. For a mā's mynde is som-tyme more disposed to tell out, then seven watchmen that sytt aboue in an hye place louynge aboute them. And aboue all this praye the & yest, that he wil lede thy waye in faithfulness & truethe. Before all thy workes are counsell first: and or euer thou doest eny thinge, be well aduysed. There be foure thing

ges that declare a chaunged hert, wherout there springeth enell & good, death & life, & a masterfull tonge that babbleth much. Some man is apte and well instructe in many thinges, and yet very vnprofitable vnto himself. Some man theretis, that can geue wyse and prudent counsell, and yet is he hated, & continueth a begger: for that grace is not geue him of God, to be accepted. Another is robbed of all wisdom, yet is he wise vnto himself, and the frute of vnderstandinge is faithfull in his mouth.

D A wyse man maketh his people wyse, & y frutes of his wisdom fayle not. A wyse mā shal be piteously blessed of God: & all they that se him, shal speake good of him. The life of man stonderth in y nobre of the dayes, but the dayes of Israel are innumerable. A wyse man shal opeyne faithfulness & credence amonge his people, & his name shal be perpetuall. My sonne, proue thy soule in thy life: & yf thou se any euell thinge, geue it not vnto her. For all thinges are not profitable for all men, nether hath every soule pleasure in euery thinge. Be not greedy in euery eatinge, and be not to haistye vpo all meates. For excesse of meates bryngeth siknes, and glory commeth at the last to an vmeasurable heate. Thorow glory haue many one perished: but he that dyeteth him self temperatly, prolongeth his life.

The XXXVIII. Chapter.

A Honour the phisician: honoure him because of necessity. God hath created him: for of the hyst commeth me decaye, and he shal receaue giftes of the kynge. The wisdom of the phisician bryngeth him to greate worship, & in the sight of the greate men of this worlde, he shal be honourably taken. The LORDE hath created me decaye of the earth, and he that is wyse, wyl not abhorre it. Was not y bytter water made swete with a tre: that men might lerne to knowe the vertue therof. The LORDE hath geuen men wisdom & vnderstandinge, y he might be honoured in his woderous workes. With soch doth he heale men, & taketh awaye their paynes: Of soch doth the Apotecary make a confection, yet can no man perfourme all his workes. For of y LORDE commeth prosperous wealth ouer all y earth.

B My sonne, despyse not this in thy sickness: but praye vnto the LORDE, & he shal make the whole. Leane of from synne, & ordre thy handes a right: close thine hert from all wickednes. Geue a swete sauoured offrynge, & y fyne floure for a token of remembrance: make the offrynge fatt, as one that geueth the first frutes, & geue rowme to the phisician. For y LORDE hath created him: let him not go from the, for thou hast nede of him. The houre maye come, y the seke maye be helped thorow them, whan they praye vnto y LORDE, y he maie recouer, & get healeth to lye longer. He that synneth before his maker, shal fall in to the handes of the phisician.

My sonne, brynge forth thy teares ouer the deed: and begynne to mourne, as yf thou haddest suffred greate harme thy self: & the couer his body after a convenient maner, & despyse not his buryall. Enforce thy self to wepe, & prouoke thy self to mourne, & make lamentacion expediently, and y a daye or two, lest thou be euell spoken of: & then comforte thy self because of the heuynes. For of heuynes cometh death, the heuynes of y hert breaketh strength. Heuynes and pouerte greuethe the hert in tentacion & offence. Take no heuynes to hert, dryue it awaye, and remember the last thinges. Forget it not, for there is no turnynge agayne. Thou shalt do him no good, but hurte thy self. Remember his iudgment, thine also shal be like wyse: vnto me yesterdaye, vnto the to daye. Let the remembrance of the deed ceasse in his rest, and comforte thy self agayne ouer him, seynge his spirete is departed from him.

The wisdom of the scribe is at conuenient tyme of rest: & he y ceaseth from exercise & labo, shal be wyse. He that holdeth y plough, & hath pleasure in proddynge & dryuynge y oxen, & goeth aboute w soch workes, he can speake of oxen. He setteth his hart to make forwes, & is diligent to geue y tyne fodder. So is euery carpenter also & workmaster, that laboureth still night & daye: he carueth, graueth & cutteth out, & his desyre is in sondrye conynge thinges, and his hert ymagineth, how he maye conynge cast an ymage, his diligence also & watchynge perfourmeth the worke. The yronsmith in like maner bydeth by his stychie, & doth his diligence to labour the yron. The vapoure of the fyre brenneth his flesh, and he must fight with the heate of the fowme. The noyse of the hammer soundeth ever in his eares, and his eyes loke still vpon the thinge y he maketh. He hath set his minde there vpon, that he wyl make out his worke, and therefore he watcheth, how he maie set it out, and brynge it to an ende.

So doth the potter set by his worke, he turneth y whele aboute with his feet: he is diligent & carefull in all his doynge, & his labour and worke is without nombre. He fashioneth the claye with his arme, and w his feet he tempereth it. His hert ymagineth how he maye make it pleasaunt, & his diligence is to clense the ouen. All these hope in their handes, & euery one thinketh to be conynge in his worke. Without these maye not the cities be manteyned, inhabited ner occupied: yet come they not hie in the congregation: they vnderstande not the couenaunt of y lawe: they can not declare equitye & iudgment: they can not fynde out the darck sentēces: but thorow them shal the creature of y worlde be manteyned: their prayer concerneth onely the worke & labo of conynge.

The XXXIX. Chapter.

When y applyeth his mynde to vnderstande the lawe of God, doth diligently seke out y wisdom of them of the olde tyme, & exercyseth him self in the prophetes. He keepeth y sayenges of famous men, and preasseth to the vnderstandinge of darck sentēces of wisdom. He sekerth out y mysterye of secrete sayenges, and exercyseth him self therein cōtynually. He doth seruyce amonge greate men, & appeareth before the prynce. He goeth in to a straunge countre, & trauaileth thorow it: loke what good or euell is amonge men, he proueth it & sekerth it out. He purporeth in his hert, to resorte early vnto the LORDE y made him, & to praye before the hyst God. He openeth his mouth in prayer, & prayeth for his synnes.

B When the greate LORDE wil, he shal be filled w the spirete of vnderstandinge, y he maie then poure out wyse sentēces, & geue thankes vnto the LORDE in his prayer. He shal ovdre his denyce, and lede his knowlege a right, & geue him vnderstandinge of secrete thinges. He shal shew forth the sciēce of his lernynge, & reioyce in the couenaunt of the lawe of the LORDE. The whole congregation shal comende his wisdom, & it shal neuer be put out. The remembrance of him shal neuer be forgotten, & his name shal conynge from one generacion to another. His wisdom shal be spoken of, & the whole congregation shal openly declare his prayse. Why he liueth, he hath a greater name than a thousande besyde: & after his death, the same name remaineth vnto him. Yet wyl I speake of mo men of vnderstandinge, for I am full as the Moone.

C Herke vnto me (ye holy vertuous childre) brynge forth frute, as the rose that is planted by the brokes of the felde, and geue ye a swete smell as Libanus. Glorify as the rose garden, synge a songe of prayse. O geue thankes vnto God ouer all his workes. Geue glory and honoure vnto the LORDE, shew his prayse with youre lippes. See even with the lēnge of youre lippes, with harpes & playenge, and in geuynge thankes vnto him, saye after this maner: All y workes of the LORDE are exceedinge good, and all his commandementes are mete and convenient in due season.

A mā nede not to saie: what is y: what is that: for at tyme convenient they shal all be sought. At his cōmaundement y water was as a wall, & at the worde of his mouth y waters stode still. In his commandement is euery thinge acceptable and reconcyled, and his healeth can not be minished. The workes of all flesh are before him, & there is nothinge hydd from his eyes. He seith from euerlastinge to euerlastinge, and there is nothinge to wonderfull or hie vnto him. A man nede not to saie then, what is this, or that: For he hath made all thinges to do good vnto man. His blessinge shal renne ouer as the streame, and moysture the earth like a floude of water. Like as he maketh the water for diourth, so shal his wrath fall vpon the heithen.

His wayes are playne and right vnto y iust, but the vngodly stamble at them. For the good are good thinges created from the begynnynge, and euell thinges for the vngodly. All thinges necessary for the life of man are created from the begynnynge: water, fyre, yron and salt, meel, wheate and hony mylke and wyne, oyle and clothynge. All these thinges are created for the best to the faithfull: But to the vngodly shal all these thinges be turned to hurte and harme. There be spiretes that are created for vengeance, and in their rigorousnes haue they fastened their toimentes. In the tyme of the ende they shal poure out their strength, and pacifie y wrath of him that made them. Fyre, hayle, hunger and death: all these thinges are created for vengeance.

The teth of wylde noysome beestes, the scorpions, serpentes, and the swerde are created also for vengeance, to the destruction of the vngodly. They shal be glad to do his commandementes: and whan nede is, they shal be ready vpon earth: and whan their houre is come, they shal not ouerpasse the commandement of the LORDE.

Therefore haue I taken a good courage vnto me from the begynnynge, and thought to put these thinges in wytyng, and to lea-ne the behynde me. All þe workes of the LOR-DE are good, and he geueth euery one in due season, and whan nede is, So that a man ne de not to saye: this is worse then that. For in due season they are all pleasaunt and good:

And therfore prayse the LORDE with whole hert and mouth, ⁊ geue thankes vnto his name.

The XL. Chapter.

A Greate trouaile is created for all mē, and an heuy yock vpon all mens children, from the daye that they go out of their mothers wombe, tyll they be buried in (the earth) the mother of all thinges: namely, their thoughtes and ymaginacions, feare of the hert, counsell, meditations, longinge and desyre, the daye of death: from the hyest that syteth vpon the glorious sea-te, vnto the lowest and most symple vpon the earth: from him that is gorgeously ara-yed, and weareth a crowne, vntyll him that is but homely and symple clothed. There is nothinge but wryth, zeale, fearfulness, vnquietnes, and feare of death, rigorous anger and stryfe. And in the night whan one shulde rest and slepe vpon his bedde, the slepe chaun-geth his vnderstandinge and knowlege. A litle as nothinge is his rest, in þe slepe as well as in the daye of labour.

He feareth and is dysquyted in the vision of his hert, as one that renneth out of a bat-
tall: and in the tyme of healeth he awaketh, and marueleth that the feare was nothinge.
Such thinges happen vnto all flesh, both man and best: but sevenfold to the vngod-ly. Morouer death, bloudsheddinge, strife ⁊ swerde, oppression, hunger, destruccion and punysment: these thinges are all created a-gaynst the vngodly, and for their sakes came the floude also. All that is of the earth, shal turne to earth agayne: and all waters ebb a-gayne in to the see. All brybes and vnrighteousnes shalbe put awaye, but faithfulness and truethe shal endure for ever. The substāunce and goodes of þe vngodly shalbe dried vp and syncke awaye as a water floude, and they shal make a sounde like a greate thonder in the rayne.

Like as the righteous reioysseth whan he openeth his hande, so shal the trasgressours be saynte, whan their goodes vanysh and consume awaye. The children of the vngod-ly shal not opayne many brannches: and þe uncleane robes vpo the hye rockes shalbe roted out before the gras by the water syde ⁊ vpon the ryner bankes.

Strenghynes and liberalite in the increas-and blessinge of God, is like a paradise garden of pleasure: soch mercy also ⁊ kindness endureth for ever. To labo ⁊ to be content with that a man hath, is a swete pleasaunt life:
that is to synde a treasure aboue all treasures. To beget children and to repayre the cite, maketh a perpetuall name: but an honest woman is more worth the they both. Myne and mynstrall ye reioyse the hert, but the loue of wysdome is aboue them both.

Pypinge and harpyng make a swete noy-se, but a frendly tonge goeth beyonde them both. Thine eye desyret fauoure and beuie but a grene sede tyme rather the they both.
A frende and companyon come together at oportunitie, but aboue them both is a wise that agreeth with hir husbāde. One brother helpeth another in the tyme of trouble, but allmes shal deliuer more then they both.
Golde and syluer fasten the fete, but a good counsell is more pleasaunt then they both.
Temporall substaunce and strength lift vp the mynde: but the feare of the LORDE more then they both. The feare of the LORDE wanteth nothinge, and nedeth no helpe. The feare of þe LORDE is as a pleasaunt garde of blessyng, and nothinge so bewtyfull as it is.
My sonne, lede not a beggers life, for better it were to dye the to begg. Who so lotheth to another mans table, taketh no thought for his owne luyng how to vpholde his life, for he fedeth himself with other mens mea-
te. But a wyse and well nurtoured man wyll beware therof. Beggyng is swete in the mouth of the vnshamefast, but in his bely there burneth a fyre.

The XLI. Chapter.

Death, how bytter is the remembraunce of the, to a man that seeth rest and comfote in his substaunce and riches, vnto the man that hath nothinge to vexe him, and that hath prosperite in all thinges, yee vnto him that yet is able to receaue meate. O death, how acceptable and good is thy iudgment vnto the nede-full, and vnto him whose strength fayleth, ⁊ that is now in his last age, and that in all thinges is full of care and fearfulness: vnto him also that is in dyspayre, and hath no hope ner pacience. Be not thou a frayd of death: remembre them þe haue bene before the: and þe come after þe: this is the iudgment of þe LORDE ouer all flesh. And why woldest thou be agaynst this pleasure of þe hert? Whether it be ten, an hundred, or a thousand yeares: death aareth not how longe one haue lyued.

The children of the vngodly are abhominable children, and so are they that kepe company with the vngodly. The inheritaunce of vngodly children shal come to naught, and their posterite shal haue perpetuall shame and confucion. The children complayne of an vngodly father: and why? for his sake they are rebuked and despyed. Wo be vnto you (O ye vngodly) which haue forsake the lawe of þe hyest God: If ye be borne, ye shal be borne to cursyng: yf ye dye, þe curse shal be youre porcion.

All that is of þe earth, shal turne to earth agayne: so go the vngodly also out of þe curse in to destruccion. The sorow of men is in their body: but þe name of the vngodly shal be put out, for it is nothinge worth. Labore to get the a good name, for that shal continue surer by the, then a thousande greate treasures of golde. A good life hath a nobre of dayes, but a good name endureth ever.

My children, kepe wysdome in peace: for wysdome that is hyd and a treasure that is not sene, what profit is in the both? A man that hydeth his foolishnes, is better then a man that hydeth his wysdome. Therfore be ye turned at my wordes: for it is not good, in all thinges and allwaie to be ashamed. True faith must proue and measure it.

Be ashamed of whordome before father and mother: Be ashamed of lesyng before the prynce and men of auctorite: Of synne, before the iudge and ruler: Of offence, before the congregacion and people: Of vnrighteousnes, before a companyon and frende: Of theft, before þe neighbours. As for the truethe of God and his couenaunt, be not ashamed therof.

Be ashamed to lye with thyne elbowes vpon the bried: Be ashamed to lye vpo har-lots: Be ashamed to turne awaye thy face from thy frende: Be ashamed to take ⁊ not to geue: Be ashamed also to lye vpon anothers mans wyse, and to make many tryflinge wordes with hir mayden, or to stonde by hir bedsyde. Be ashamed to vprade thy fre-de: and whan thou geuest eny thinge, cast him not in the teth withall.

The XLII. Chapter.

Hearse not a thinge twyse, and disclose not the wordes, that thou hast herde in secrete. Be shamefast ⁊ well manered in dede, so shal euery man fauoure
the. Of these thinges be not thou ashamed, and accepte no personne to offende. Namely, of these thinges be not ashamed: Of the lawe of God, of the couenaunt, of iudgment:

to bryng the vngodly from his vngodlines vnto righteousnes, and to make him a good man: to deale faithfully w neighbor ⁊ companyon: to distribute the heretage vnto þe fren-des: to be diligent to kepe true measure and weight: to be content, whether thou gettest much or litle: to deale truly ⁊ temporall goo-des in byenge and sellyng: to bryng vp children with diligence: to correcte an euell ser-uaunt: to kepe that thine is fis an euell wife:
to set a lock where many handes are: what thou delyuere and geuest out to be kepte, to tell it, and to weye it: to wyte vp all the ent-geuyng and receayng: to enfourme þe vn-lerned and vnwyse: Of the aged, that are iudged of the yonge. If thou be diligent in these thinges, truly thou shalt be lerned and wyse and accepted of all men.

The daughter maketh þe father to watch secretly: and the carefulness that he hath for her, taketh awaye his slepe: yee in the youth, lest she shulde ouergrowe him: And whan she hath an husbāde, lest she shulde be hated: lest she shulde be desyled or ranyshed in hir virgynite, or gotten with childe in hir fathers house: Or (whan she cometh to the man) lest she behaue herself not right, or contynue vnfruitfull. If thy daughter be wanton, kepe her straitly, lest she cause thine enemies laugh the to scorne, ⁊ the whole cite to geue þe an euell reporte, and so thou be fay-ne to heare thy shame of euery man, and be confounded before all þe people. Beholde not euery bodys bewtye, ⁊ haue not moch dwel-lyng amonge women. For like as the womme and moth cometh out of clothinge, so doth wickednes come of women.

It is better to be with an euell man, then to a frendly wife þe putteth one to shame and rebuke. I wyl remembre the workes of the LORDE, and declare the thinge þe haue se-ne. In þe wordes of þe LORDE are his workes.
The Sonne ouerlooketh all thiges w his shine,
⁊ all his workes are full of þe cleannes therof.
Hath not the LORDE brought to passe, that his sayntes shulde tell out all his wonderous workes, which the allmightie LORDE hath stablyshed? All thinges endure in his glory.
He sekerth out the grounde of the depe and the hert, and he knoweth all their ymagina-cion ⁊ wysdome. For þe LORDE knoweth all seyence, and he lotheth in to þe token of the time. He declareth the thinges þe are past and for to come, ⁊ discloseth thinges that are secrete. No thought maye escape him, nether maye any worde be hyd from him. He hath garnyshe the hye excellent workes of his wysdome, and he is frō everlastinge to everlastinge. Unto him maye nothinge be added nether can he be mynished, he hath no nede also of any counsell. O how amiable are all his workes, & as a sparke to loke vpon: They lyne all, and endure for ever: and whan so ever nede is, they are all obedient unto him. They are all dubble, one agaynst another: he hath made nothinge that hath faute or blemyshe. He hath stablyshed the goodes of everychone: and who maye be satisfied with his glory, whan he seith it?

The XLIII. Chapter.

The glory of the heyth, is the fayre and cleare firmament, the bewtye of the heaven in his glorious clearnes. The sonne whan it appeareth, declareth the daye in & goinge out of it, a marvelous worke of the 3yest. At noone it burneth & earth, and who maye abyde for the heate therof? Who so kepeth an oven whan it is hote, thre tymes more doth the Sonne burne vpon & mountaynes, whan it bretheth out the fyrie beames and shyneth with the brightnes of it, it blyndeth the eyes. Greate is the LORDE that made it, and in his commaundement he causeth it to renne hastily.

The Moone also is in all, and at convenient season it sheweth the tymes, and is a token of the tyme. The token of the solempne feast is taken of the Moone, a light that mynished and increaseth againe. The Moone is called after the Moone, it groweth wonderously in his chaunginge.

The armye of heauen also is in the heith, in the firmament of heauen it geneth a cleare and glorious shyne. This is the clearnes of the starres, the bewtifull apparell of heauen, the apparell that the LORDE lighteneth in the heyth. In his holy worke they continue in their ordie, and not one of them fayleth in his watch. Loke vpon & rayne bowe, and prayse him that made it: very bewtifull is it in his shyne. He compaseth the heauen aboute with his clearnes & glory, the handes of the 3yest haue beded it. Thorow his commaundement he maketh the snowe to fall, & the thonder of his indgment to smyte hastily. Thorow his commaundement the treasures are opened, and the cloudes fle as the foules. In his power hath he strengthened the cloudes, and broke the hayle stones.

The mountaynes melt at & sight of him, the wynde bloweth accordinge to his wyll.

The sounde of his thonder beareth & earth, and so doth the stonne of the north wynde. The le wynde also lighteth downe as a fethered foule, casteth out and spredeth the snowe: and as the greshoppers that destroye all, so falleth it downe. The eie marvelleth at & bewtye of the whytenesse therof, and the hert is astraied at the raine of it. He poureth out the frost vpon earth, like salt, and whan it is frozen, it is as sharpe as the prycke of a thistle.

Whan the colde northwynde bloweth, harde Christall commeth of the water. He lighteth downe vpon all the gatheringes together of water, and putteth on & waters as a brest plate. He deuoureth the mountaynes, and burneth the wyldernes: and loke what is grene, he putteth it outlike fyre. The medycine of all these is, whan a cloude commeth hastily: and whan a dew cometh vpon the heate, it shalbe refreshed & gayne.

(In his worde he styllith the wynde, In his counsell he setteth the depe, and the LORDE) Jesus planted it. They that sayle ouer the see, tell of his pearlys and harmes: and whan we heare it with oure eares, we marvelle therat. For there be straunge wonderous workes, dyuerse maner of nyce bestes and whall fishes. Thorow him are all thinges set in good ordie and perfourmed, & in his worde all thinges endure.

I speake moch, but I can not sufficiently attayne vnto it, for he himselfe onely is the perfeccion of all wordes. We shulde prayse the LORDE after all & power, for he is greate in all his workes. The LORDE is to be feared yet very greate is he, and marvelous is his power. Prayse the LORDE, and magnifie him as moch as ye maye, yet both he farre excede all prayse. O magnifie him in all youre power, and laboure earnestly, yet are ye in no wyse able sufficiently to prayse him. Who hath sene him, that he might tell vs? Who can magnifie him so greatly as he is? For there are hyd yet greater thinges than these be: as for vs, we haue sene but few of his workes. For the LORDE hath made all thinges, and given wysdome to soch as feare God.

The XLIII. Chapter.

A commendacion of the olde vertuous fathers.

Let vs commend the noble famous men, and the generacion of our forefathers. Many were glorious actes hath the LORDE done, and shewed his greate power euer sens & begynnyng. The noble famous men raigned in their kyngdomes, and bare excellent rule. In their wysdome and vnderstandinge, they followed the counsell shewed in the prophecies. They led the folke thorow the counsell and wysdome of the scribes of the people. Wyse sentences are founde in their instruction. They sought the sweetenes and melody of Musick, and brought forth the pleasaunt songes in scripture. They were riche also, & hadde comforte and pacifie those that dwelt with them. All these were very noble and honorable men in their generacions, and were well reported of in their tymes. These haue left a name behynde them, so that their prayse shal allwaye be spokē of. Afterwarde there were some, whose remembraunce is gone. They came to naught and perished, as though they had neuer bene: and became as though they had neuer bene borne, yee & their children also with them.

Nevertheless these are louynge men, whose righteousnes shal neuer be forgotten, but continue by their posterite. Their children are an holy good heretage: Their sede endure fast in & coneuant. For their sakes shal their childre & sede continue for euer, & their prayse shal neuer be put downe. Their bodies are buried in peace, but their name lyueth for euermore. The people can speake of their wysdome, & the congregacion can talke of their prayse. Enoch walked right & acceptably before the LORDE: eitherfore was he translated for an example of amendement to & generacions. Noe was a stedfast & righteous man: & in the tyme of wiath he became a rescuinge. Therfore was he left a remnant vnto the earth, whan the floude came. An everlastinge coneuant was made w him, that all flesh shulde perse nomore with & water.

Abraham was a greate father of many people, in glory was there none like vnto him. He kepte the lawe of the 3yest, & came into a coneuant with him. He sette the coneuant in his flesh, and whan he was tempted, he was founde faithfull. Therfore swore God vnto him with an oath, that he wolde blesse all people in his sede, that he wolde multiplie and increase him as the dust of the earth, and to exalte his sede as the starres: yee and that his sede shulde haue & possession and inheritaunce of the londe from see to see, and from the ryuer vnto & borders of the londe.

With Isaac dyd he stablysh & same coneuant, for Abraham his fathers sake. Yee & gracious blessinge and health of all men, and coneuant dyd he stablysh with Isaac, and made it to rest vpon the heade of Jacob. He knew him, in that he prospered him so well and richely, and gaue him an heretage, and sundered his porcion by it self, and parted it amonge the twolue trybes. Mercifull men brought he out of him, which founde fauor before all flesh.

The XLV. Chapter.

Whes beloued of God and me, who se remembraunce is in hye prayse: him hath the LORDE made like in the glory of the sayntes, and magnified him so that the enemies stode in awe of him, thorow his wordes he dyd greate wonders. He made him greate in the sight of kynges, gaue him commaundement before his people, and shewed him his glorious power. He stablyshed him with faithfulness and mekenes, and chose him out of all men. For he herde his voyce, and led him in the darcke cloude, and there he gaue him the commaundementes, yee the lawe of life and wysdome, that he might teach Jacob the coneuant, and Israel his lawes.

He chose Aaron his brother also out of & trybe of Levi, exalted him, & made him soch like. An everlastinge coneuant made he w him, and gaue him the presthode in the people. He made him glorious in bewtifull arraye, and clothed him with the garment of honoure. He put perfecte ioye vpo him, and gyrded him with strength. He deckt him with syde clothes and a tynycle, with an ouerbody cote also and gyrdle. Rounde aboute made he him belles of golde, and that many: that whan he wente in, the sounde might be herde, that they might make a noyse in the Sanctuary, and geue the people warninge. The holy garment was wrought & broderd with golde, yalow sylke and purple. And in the brestlappe there was a goodly worke, wherin was fastened light and perfectnesse.

Vpon & same also there was a worke fastened and set with costly precious stones, all bounde with golde: and this he brought in his mynistracion. The stones also were fastened for a remembraunce, after the twolue trybes of Israel. Vpon his mytre there was a plate of pure golde, a grauen ymage of holynes, a famous and noble worke, garnished, and pleasaunt to loke vpon. Before him were there sene no soch fayre ornaments,

This was now confirmed him with an everlasting couenaunt, and to his sede, as 3 dayes of heauē: namely, that his childre shulde allwaye mynistre before him, and performe the office of the presthode, and wysly the people good in his name. Before all men lyunge chose he him, that he shulde offre before the LORDE, and make odours for a sweete sauoure and remembraunce, that he shulde reconcyle the people of the LORDE with him agayne. He gaue him auctorite also in his commaundementes and in 3 couenaunt, that he shulde teach Jacob the statutes and testimonies, and to enfourme Israel in his lawe.

Therefore there stode vp certayne agaynst him, and had enuye at him in the wilderness: namely, they that were of Dathan & Abirams syde, and the furious congregaciō of Chore. This the LORDE sawe, and it displeased him, and in his wrothfull indignacion were they consumed. A greate wonder did he vpon them, and consumed them with the fyre. Besydes this, he made Aaron yet more honorable and glorious. He gaue him an heretage, and parted the first frutes vnto him. Vnto him specially he appoynted the bled for sustenance (for the prestes ate of 3 offerynges of the LORDE) this gaue he vnto him & his sede. The thirde noble and excellent mā is phineas the sonne of Eleazer, which pleased the God of Israel, because he had 3 zeale & feare of the LORDE. For whan the people were turned back, he put himself forth right soone, & that with a good wyll, to pacifie the wrath of the LORDE towards Israel. Therefore was there a couenaunt of peace made with him, & he shulde be the principall amonge the righteous and the people, that he and his posterite shulde haue the office of the presthode for ever (like as there was made a couenaunt with Dauid of the trybe of Juda, that frō amonge his sonnes onely there shulde be a kynge: And that Aaron also & his sede shulde be the heretage, to geue vs wysdome in 3 hert, to iudge his people in righteousness: that his goodes shulde not come in to forgetfulness, and that their honoure might endure for ever.

The XLVI. Chapter.

N Only 2 stronge in battail was Jesus & sonne of Naue, which in scripture of Moses & prophet was geuen to be captayne of the people (which accordinge vnto his name was a greate sauoure vnto the electe of God) to punish the enemies, that rose vp agaynst Israel, & Israel might optayne their inheritaunce. O how grete, noble and excellent was he, whan he list vpon his hande, and drew out his swerde agaynst the cities: Who stode so manly before him. For the LORDE himself brought in the enemies. Stode not the Sonne styll at his commaundement, and one daye was as longe as two: he called vpon the hyest & most mighty, whā 3 enemies preassed vpon him on every syde: and the LORDE herde him with the hayle stones. They smote 3 heithenish people mightely, & in fallinge downe they slew all 3 aduersaries, so that the heithen knewe his hoost, and all his defence, that the LORDE himself fought agaynst them, for he solomed vpon the mightie men of them.

In the tyme of Moses also he and Caleb the sonne of Jephune, dyd a good worke, which stode agaynst the enemies, which he the people from synne, and styllled 3 wilde murmuringe. And offire hundredth thousand people of fore, they two were preserved, whan they were brought in to the heretage, namely, a londe that floweth with mylke & hony. The LORDE gaue strength also vnto Caleb, which remayned with him vnto his age: so that he wente vp in to the hye place of the londe, and his sede conquered the same for an heretage: that all the childre of Israel might se, how good a thinge it is, to be obedient vnto the LORDE. And the indges & rulers (euery one after his name) whose hert wente not a whoringe, ner departed from 3 LORDE, and that forsake not the LORDE faithfully, whose remembraunce hath a good reporte: See their bones flourish out of their place, and their name shal neuer be chastyged.

Samuel the prophet beloned of the LORDE, ordeyned a kynge, and anoynted the princes ouer the people. In the lawe of the LORDE ruled he, and indged the congregaciō. The LORDE had respecte vnto Jacob. The prophet was founde diligent in his faithfulness: yee in his faithfulness was the faithfulness of the vision knowne. He called vpon 3 LORDE the mightie, whā the enemies preassed vpon him on every syde, what tyme ad-offred the suckyng lambs. And the LORDE thondred from heauen, and mayde his voyce to be herde wth a greate noyse. He discomfited the princes of Tyre, & all the rulers of the philistynes. Before his last ende he made protestacion in the sight of the LORDE & his anoynted, that he toke nether substaunce ner good of eny man, no not so moch as a shewe: & no man might accuse him. After this he tolde, that his ende was at honde, and shewed the kynge also his ende and death: & from 3 earth list he vp his voyce in the prophacie, & the vngodly people shulde perishe.

The XLVII. Chapter.

Afterwarde in the tyme of kynge Dauid, there rose vp a prophet called Nathan: For like as the fat is taken awaye from the offryng, so was Dauid chosen out of the childre of Israel. He toke his pastyme wth the lyons as wth kyddes, and with beares like as with lambes. Slew he not a giante whan he was yet but yonge, & toke awaye the rebuke from his people: what tyme as he toke the stone in his hande, & smote downe proude Goliath wth the slynger. For he called vpon the hyest LORDE, which gaue him strength in his right hande, so that he overthrew the mightie giante in the battayll, that he might set vp the home of his people agayne.

Thus brought he him to worshipec aboue all princes, and made him to haue a good reporte in the prayse of the LORDE, & he shulde weare a crowne of glory. For he destroyed the enemies on every syde, rote out the philistynes his aduersaries, & brake their home in sunder, like as it is broke yet this daye. In all his workes he praysed 3 hyest & holiest, & ascribed the honoure vnto him. With his whole hert dyd he prayse and loue him that made him. He set syngers also before the altar, and in their tune he made swete songes. He ordeyned to kepe the holy daies worshipfully, and that the solempne feastes thorow the whole yere shulde be honorably holde, with prayyinge the name of the LORDE, & with synginge by tymes in the mourninge in the Sanctuary.

The LORDE toke awaye his synnes, and exalted his home for ever. He gaue him 3 couenaunt of the kynge, and the trone of worshipec in Israel. After him there rose vp the wise sonne called Salomon, and for his sake he drewe 3 enemies awaie farre of. This Salomon reigned with peace in his tyme (for God gaue him rest from his enemies on every syde, that he might buylde him an hon-

se in his name, & prepare the Sanctuary for euerylike as he was well instructed in his youth & fylled with wysdome and vnderstondinge, as it were with a water floude. He covered and fylled the whole londe with similitudes and wise prudent sentences.

His name wente abroad in the Iles, because of his peace he was beloued. All londes marueled at his songes, proverbes, similitudes, and at his peace, and at the name of 3 LORDE God, which is called the God of Israel. He gathered golde as tynne, & he had as moch syluer as leade. He was moued in vngodly loue towards women, and was overcome in affeccion. He stayned his honde and worshipec, yee his posterite defyled he also, in bringinge the wrath of the LORDE vpon his childre, and sorowe after his ioye: so 3 his kynge dome was deuyded, & Ephraim became an vnfaithfull & an vnconstant kingdome. Neuertheles God forsoke not his mercy, nether was he utterly destroyed because of his workes, & he shulde leaue him no posterite.

As for 3 sede & came vpon him (which he loued) he brought it not utterly to naught, but gaue yet a remmaunt vnto Jacob, and a reue vnto Dauid out of him. Thus rested Salomon with his fathers, and out of his sede he left behynde him a very foolishnes of the people, and soch one as had no vnderstondinge: namely, Roboā which turned awaye the people thorow his counsell, and Jeroboam & sonne of Nabat, which caused Israel to synne, and shewed Ephraim the waye of vngodlynes: In so moch that their synnes & mysdedes had the vpper hande so sore, that at the last they were dryuen out of the londe for the same: See he sought out & brought vp all wickednes, tyll the vengeance came vpon them.

The XLVIII. Chapter.

Ethen stode vp Elias the prophet as a fyre, and his worde be like a cresset. He brought an hōger vpon the land in his zeale he made them few in nombre. (For they might not awaye wth the commaundementes of the LORDE.) Thorow the worde of the LORDE he shut the heauen, and thre tymes brought he the fyre downe. Thus became Elias honorable in his wonderous dedes. Who maye make his boost to be like him? One that was deed raysed he vp from death, & in the worde of 3 hyest he brought him out of the graue agayne. He cast downe kynge and destroyed them, and the honorable from their seate. he herde the punysshment, & vpon Zorob the iudgmet of the vengeance. He prophesied recompensynge vnto kynges, and ordeyned prophetes after him. He was taken vp in the stoume of fyre, in a charett of hoises of the LORDE. He was ordeyned in the reprouynge in tyme, to pacifie the wrath, to turne f hertes of the fathers vnto the children, & to set vp the trybes of Jacob agayne. Elias was couered in the stoume, but Heliseus was fylled with his mouth. Whyle he lyned he was afrayed of no prynce, and no man might ouercome him. There conde no worde disceane him, & after his death his body prophesied. He dyd wonders in his life, & in death were his workes maruelous. For all this, the people amended not, nether departed they from their synnes: tyll they were caried awaye prisioners out of the londe, and were scattede abroad in all countrees, so that of them there remayned but a very litle people, and a prynce vnto y house of David. Howbe it some of them dyd right, & some heaped vp vngodlynes.

Ezechias made his cite stronge, conveyed water in to it, dygged thorow the stony rock with yron, & made vp a well by the water syde. In his tyme came Sennacherib vp, and sent Rabsches, lye vp his hande agaynst Sion, & defyed them with greate pryde. The trymbled their hertes and handes, so y they sorowed like a woman trauaylinge with childe. So they called vpo the LORDE, which is mercysfull, & lye vp their hādes before him. Immediatly the LORDE herde the out of heauen, and deliuered them by the hande of Esay. He smote the hoost of the Assirians, & his angell destroyed the. For Ezechias had done the thinge that pleased the LORDE, & remayned stedfastly in the waye of David his father. Which Esay was greate & faithfull in his visions. In his tyme y Sonne wēte backwarde, & he lengthened the kynges li fe. With a right spire prophesied he, what shulde come to passe at the last: & to soch as were sorrowfull in Sion he gaue consolacion, wherewith they might cōforte them selues for euermore. He shewed thinges y were for to come & secrete, or ever they came to passe.

The XLIX. Chapter.

Re. 22. a nd 23.
Pa. 34. a
The remembraunce of Josias is like as whan the Apotecary maketh many precious sūete smellynge thinges to gether. His remembraunce shal be sūete as hony in all mouthes, and as the playenge of Musick by the wyne. He was appoynted to turne the people agayne, & to take awaye all abheminacions of y vngodly. He drewe his hert vnto the LORDE, & in the tyme of the vngodly he set vp the worshippe of God agayne. All kynges (excepte Dauid, Ezechias & Josias) committed wickednes: for euen y kynges of Iuda also forsoke y lawe of God. For they gaue their hoine vnto othe, their hono & worshippe also to a straunge people.

Therfore was the electe cite of the Sanctuary brent with fyre, and the strettes thereof laye desolate & waiste: for they intreated Jeremy euell, which neuertheles was a prophete ordeyned from his mothers wombe, that he might rote out, breake of, & destroye: & that he might buylde vp, & plante agayne. Ezechiel sawe the glory of the LORDE in a vision, which was shewed him vpon the charet of the Cherubins. For he thought vpon the enemies in y rayne, to do good vnto soch as had ordied their wayes a right. And the bones of the twolue prophetes flouish from out of their place: for they gaue comfort & consolacion vnto Jacob, and deliuered the faithfully. How shall we prayse Zorobabel, which was as a ringe in the right hande.

So was Jesus also the sonne of Joseph: these men in their tymes buylde the house, & set vp the Sanctuary of y LORDE agayne, which was prepared for an everlasting worshippe. And Nehemias is allwaye to be cōmended, which set vp for vs the walles y were broken downe, made the portes & barres agayne, and buylde oure houses of the new. But vpon earth is there no man created like Enoch, for he was taken vp from y earth. And Joseph, which was lorde of his brethren, & the vpholder of his people: his bones were couered & kepte. Seth & Sem were in greate honoure amonge y people: and so was Adam aboue all the beastes, whā he was created.

The L. Chapter.

Symon the sonne of Onias the hye prest, which in his life set vp the house agayne, & in his dayes made fast the temple. The heyth of y temple also was founded of him, the dubble buyldinge, & the hye walles of the temple. In his dayes the welles of water flowed out, and were excedinge full as the see. He toke care for his people, & deliuered them from destruccion. He kepte his cite & made it stronge, that it shulde not be beseged. He dwelt in honoure and worshippe amonge his people, and enlarged the inuauce of the house and the court.

He getteth light as the mornynge starre in the myddest of the cloudes, and as y Moone whan it is full. He shyneth as the Sonne in the temple of God. He is as bryght as y rayne bowe in y sayre cloudes, & flourisheth as the floures and roses in the sprynge of y yeare, & as the lilies by the ryuers of water: like as the braunches vpon the mount Libanus in tyme of Sommer: as a fyre & incense that is kyndled: like as an whole ornament of pure golde, set with all maner of precious stones: and as an olyue tre that is fratefull: & as a Cypres tre which groweth vpon a hye.

Whan he put on the garment of honoure, & was clothed with all bewtye: whan he wente to the holy altare, to garnyshe the conuerynge of the Sanctuary: whan he toke y porcions out of the prestes hande, he himself stode by the herth of the altare, and his brethren rounde aboute in ordie. As the braunches of Cedre tre vpon the mount Libanus, so stode they rounde aboute him. And as the braunches of the olyue tre, so stode all y sonnes of Aaron in their glory. And y he might sufficiently perfourme his seruyce vpon the altare, & garnyshe the offrynge of the hyest God, he stretched out his hande and toke of the drynkofferynge, & poured in of the wyne: so he poured vpon the botome of the altare a good smell vnto the hyest prynce.

Then beganne y sonnes of Aaron to synge, and to blowe with trompettes, & to make a greate noyse, for a remembraunce & prayse vnto the LORDE. Then were the people afrayed, & fell downe to the earth vpo their faces, to worshippe the LORDE their God, & to geue thankes to Allmightie God. They synge goodly also with their voyces, so that there was a pleasaunt noyse in y greate house of the LORDE. And the people in their prayer besought the LORDE the hyest, that he wolde be mercysfull, tyll the honoure of y LORDE were perfourmed. Thus ended they their mynistracion and seruyce.

Then wente he downe, and stretched out his handes ouer the whole multitude of the people of Israel, that they shulde geue prayse & thankes out of their lippes vnto y LORDE, and to reioyse in his name. He beganne yet once also to praye, that he might openly shew the thankesgeuynge before the hyest, namely thus: O geue prayse & thankes (ye all) vnto the LORDE oure God, which hath entred done noble and greate thinges: which hath increased oure dayes from y mothers wombe, and dealt with vs a cōdyinge to his mercy: that he wyl geue vs the ioyfulness of hert, & peace for oure tymes in Israel. Which faithfully kepeth his mercy for vs euermore, & allwaye deliuereth vs in due season.

There be two maner of people, that I abhorre fro my hert: as for the thirde, whom I hate, it is no people: They that syt vpon the mountayne of Samaria, the philistynes, & the foolish people that dwell in Sichimis.

Jesus the sonne of Sirac Eleazars of Jerusalem, haue tokened vp these informacions and documētes of wysdome and vnderstādinge in this boke, and poured out the wysdome out of my hert. Blessed is he that exerciseth him self therin: and who so taketh soch to hert, shal be wysse. If he do the se thinges, he shal be stronge in all. For the light of the LORDE ledeth him.

The LI. Chapter.

A prayer of Jesus the sonne of Sirac.

Thante the LORDE and kyng, and praise the O God my Sauoure. I wil yelde prayse vnto y name: for thou art my defender and helper, & hast preserved my body from destruccion, from y snare of traytorious tōges, and from the lippes that are occupied with leyes. Thou hast bene my helper, from soch as stode vp agaynst me, and hast deliuered me after the multitude of thy mercy, and for thy holy names sake. Thou hast deliuered me from the roaringe of them, that prepared them selues to deuoure me, out of y handes of soch as sought after my life: from the multitude of them y troubled me, & wente aboute to set fyre vpon me: on enery syde, so y I am not brent in the myddest of the fyre: from the depe of hell, from an vncleane tōge, from lyenge wordes, from the wicked kyng, and from an vnrighteous tonge. My soule shal prayse y LORDE vnto death, for my life drew nye vnto hell.

They cōpased me rounde aboute on enery syde, & there was no mā to helpe me. I looked aboute me, yf there were eny man that wolde socoure me: but there was none. Then thought I vpon thy mercy O LORDE, and vpon thy actes that thou hast done euer of olde: namely, y thou deliuerest soch as putte their trust in the, and rydest them out of y handes of the heithen. Thus list I vp my prayer from the earth, and prayed for deliuerance from death. I called vpon the LORDE my father, that he wolde not leaue me without helpe, in the daye of my trouble & in the tyme of the proude. I prayse thy name continually, yeldinge honoure and thankes vnto it: and so my prayer was herde. Thou sauest me from destruction, and delyveredest me fro y vnrighteous tyme. Therfore wil I acknowledge and praise the, and magnifie y name of the LORDE.

C What I was yet but yonge, or euer I wete astraye, I desired wysdome openly in my prayer. I came therfore before the temple, z sought her vnto the last. Then flourished she vnto me, as a grape that is soone ripe. My hert reioysed in her, then wente my fote the right waye, yee from youth vp sought I after her: I bowed downe myne eare and receaued her. I founde me moch wysdome, and prospered greatly in her. Therfore wyll I ascribe the glory vnto him, that geueth me wysdome: for I am aduryed to do therafter. I will be gelous to cleue vnto the thinge y is good, so shal I not be confounded. My soule hath wrestled with her, and I haue bene diligent to be occupied in her. I lift vp myne handes an hye, then was my soule lightened thorow wysdome, that I knowleged my foolishnes. I ordred my soule after her, she z I were one hert from the begynninge, and I founde her in clemesse. And therfore shal I not be forsaken.

D My hert longed after her, and I gat a good treasure. Thorow her y LORDE hath geuen me a new tonge, wherwith I wil praise him. O come vnto me ye vnlearned, z dwell in y house of wysdome: withdraue not youre selues from her, but talke z comon of these thinges, for youre soules are very thirstie. I opened my mouth, and spake: O come z bye wysdome without money, bowe downe youre neck vnder hir yock, and youre soule shal receaue wysdome. She is harde at hande, z is content to be founde. Beholde with youre eyes, how that I haue had but litle labour, and yet haue founde moch rest. O receaue wysdome, and ye shall haue plenteousnes of syluer and golde in possession. Let youre mynde reioyse in his mercy, z be not ashamed of his prayse. Wyte his worke by tymes, z he shal geue you youre rewarde in due tyme.

The prayer of Azarias and the songe

of y thre children after Theodosios translacon: which wordes are wyten in y thirde chapter of Daniel after the olde text in Latyn.

Ald they walked in the myddest of the flamme, prayyng God and magnifieng y LORDE. Azarias stode vp, and prayde on this maner, Euen in the myddest of the fyre opened he his mouth, z saide: Blessed be thou O LORDE God of o fathers) right worthy to be praysed and honoured is y name of thou for euermore: for thou art righteous in all y thinges y thou hast done to vs: yee sayth full are all y workes, y wayes are right, z y iudgmetes true. In all y thinges y thou hast brought vpon vs, z vpon the holy cite of o fathers (euen Jerusalem) thou hast executed true iudgment: yee acordinge to right and equitye hast thou brought these thinges vpon vs, because of oure synnes.

For why: we haue offended, z done wickedly, departyng from the: In all thinges haue we trespassed, z not obeyed thy commandementes, ner kepte the, nether done as thou hast bydden vs, y we might prosper. Wherefore, all y thou hast brought vpon vs, z carry thinge y thou hast done to vs, thou hast done them in true iudgment: As in deluyring vs in to the hondes of oure enemies, amonge vngodly z wicked abheminacion, to an vnrighteous kinge, yee y most from vnde vpo earth. And now we maye not open our mouthes, we are become a shame z reproche vnto y seruantes, z to the y worshippe the.

Yet for thy names sake (we beseeke the) geue vs not vp for euer, breake not thy covenant, z take not awaye thy mercy from vs for thy beloved Abrahams sake, for thy seruante Isaacs sake, z for thy holy Israels sake: to whom thou hast spoken z promysed, thou woldest multiply their seide as y flamme of heauen, z as the londe y lieth vpon y shore. For we (O LORDE) are become lesse than any people, z be kepte vnder this daye in all the worlde, because of oure synnes: So that now we haue nether pryncce, duke, pryncce, burnt offerynge, sacrifice, oblacio, incense, sanctuary before the.

The songe

Nevertheless, in a contrite herte and an humble spere let vs be receaued, y we maie opteyne thy mercy. Like as in the burnt offerynge of rammes z bullockes, and like as in thousandes of fat lambes: so let o offryng be in thy sight this daye, y it maye please y, for there is no confucion vnto them, y put the trust in the. And now we folowe the with all o herte, we feare the, z seke thy face. Put vs not to shame, but deale w vs after thy lonyng kyndnesse, z acordinge to the multitude of thy mercies. Delyuer vs by thy miracle (O LORDE) z get thy name an honour: that all they which do thy seruantes enell, maye be confounded. Let them be ashamed thorow thy Almightie power, and let their strength be broken: that they maye knowe, how that thou only art the LORDE God, z honest worthy thorow out all the worlde.

And the kynges seruantes y put them in, ceased not to make the ouen hote with wylde fyre, drye strawe, pitch z sagottes: so that the flamme wente out of the ouen vpon a plir, cubites: yee it toke awaye, z bent vpon the se Caldees, y it gat holde vpon besyde the ouen. But the angel of the LORDE came downe in to the ouen to Azarias and his felowes, z smote y flamme of the fyre out of the ouen, z made the myddest of the ouen, as it had bene a coole wynde blowinge: so that the fyre nether touched them, greued them, ner dyd them hurte. Then these thre (as out of one mouth) praysed, ho: oured, and blessed God in the fornace, sayenge:

Blessed be thou, O LORDE God of oure fathers: for thou art prayse z honoure worthy, yee z to be magnified for euermore. Blessed be y holy name of thy glory, for it is worthy to be praysed, and magnified in all worldes. Blessed be thou in the holy temple of y glory, for above all thinges thou art to be praysed, yee z more then worthy to be magnified for euer. Blessed be thou in the trone of y kyngdome, for above all thou art worthy to be wel spoken of, z to be more then magnified for euer. Blessed be thou, that lokest thorow the depe, z syttest vpon the Cherubyns: for thou art worthy to be praysed, z above all to be magnified for euer. Blessed be thou in y firmament of heauen, for thou art prayse and honoure worthy for euer.

The story of Susanna which is

the XIII. chapter of Daniel after the Laryn.

Here dwelt a man in Babilō, called Joachim: y<sup>e</sup> toke a wife, whose name was Susanna, (y<sup>e</sup> dough-ter of Helchias) a very fayre woman, & soch one as feared God. Hir father & hir mother also were godly people, & taught their daughter according to y<sup>e</sup> lawe of Moses. Now Joachim (hir husbōnde) was a greate rich man, & had a fayre orcharde ioy-ninge vnto his house. And to him resorted the Jewes comenly, because he was a man of reputacion amonge them. The same yea-re were there made two iudges, soch as the LORDE speaketh of: All the wickednesse of Babilon, cometh from y<sup>e</sup> elders (y<sup>e</sup> is) from y<sup>e</sup> iudges, which seme to rule the people. These came off to Joachims house, & all soch as had eny thinge to do in the lawe, came thither vnto them.

Now when the people came agayne after noone, Susanna wente into hir husbō-des orcharde, to walke. The elders seynge this, that she went in daylie & walked: they burned for lust to her, yee they were allmost out of their wittes, & cast downe their eyes, that they shulde not se heauē, ner remembre y<sup>e</sup> God is a righteous iudge. For they were both wounded wth the loue of her, necher durst one shewe another his greife. And for shame, they durst not tell her their inordynate lust, y<sup>e</sup> they wolde sayne haue had to do wth her.
Yet they layed wayte for her earnestly from daye to daye, that they might (at the leest) haue a sight of her. And the one sayde to y<sup>e</sup> other: Vp, let vs go home, for it is dynereme. So they wente their waye from her.

When they returned agayne, they came together, enqueringe out y<sup>e</sup> matter betwixt them selues: yee the one tolde y<sup>e</sup> other of his wicked lust. The apoynted they a tyme, whē they might take Susanna alone.

It happened also y<sup>e</sup> they spyed out a con-ueniēt tyme, when she wente south to walke (as hir maner was) & no body with her, but two maydens, & thought to wash her self in the garden, for it was an hote season: And there was not one person there, excepte the two elders, y<sup>e</sup> had hyd them selues, to beholde her. So she sayde to hir maydens: go for me oyle & sōpe, & shut the orcharde doore, y<sup>e</sup> I maye wash me. And they dyd as she bad them, & shut the orcharde doore, & wente out them selues at a backe doore, to see the thinge y<sup>e</sup> she had commaunded: but Susanna knewe not, y<sup>e</sup> y<sup>e</sup> elders laie there hyd within. Now when the maydens were gone forth, y<sup>e</sup> two elders gat them vp, & ranne vpon her, sayenge now, the orcharde doores are shut, that no man can se vs: we haue a lust vnto the, therfore consent vnto vs, and lye with vs.

If thou wilt not, we shall bringe a testimoniall agaynst the: that there was a yong-ge felowe with the, and that thou hast sent awaye thy maydens from the for the same cause. Susanna sighed, and sayde: Alas, I am in trouble on enery syde. Though I lowe youre mynde, it wyll be my death: and yf I consent not vnto you, I cannot escape your honde. Wel, it is better forme, to fall in to youre honde without the dede beinge, then to synne in the sight of the LORDE: and with that, she cried out with a loude voyce the elders also cried out agaynst her.

Then ranne there one to the orcharde dore, & smote it open. Now when the seruantes of the house herde y<sup>e</sup> crie in y<sup>e</sup> orcharde, they rushed in at the backe doore, to se what the matter was. So when the elders tolde them, the seruantes were greatly ashamed, for why, there was neuer soch a reporte made of Susanna. On the morow after came the people to Joachim hir housbōnde, and y<sup>e</sup> two elders came also, full of myscheuous imaginacions agaynst Susanna, to bringe her vnto death, & spake thus before the people: Sende for Susanna y<sup>e</sup> daughter of Helchias, Joachims wife. And immediatly they sent for her. So she came wth her father & mother, hir children & all her kynrede. Now Susanna was a tender person, & maruelous fayre of face. Therfore the wicked men commaunded to take of the clothes from her face (for she was couered) y<sup>e</sup> at the leest, they might so be satisfied in hir beutie. Then hir frēdes, yee all they y<sup>e</sup> knewe her, began to wepe.

These two elders stode vp in the myddest of the people, & layed their hondes vpon y<sup>e</sup> heade of Susanna: which wepte, and looked vp towarde heauen, for hir herte had a sure trust in the LORDE. And the elders sayde:
As we were walkinge in the orcharde alene, this woman came in wth hir two maydens:
whom sh<sup>e</sup> sent awaye from her, & sparded y<sup>e</sup> orcharde doores. With that, a yonge felowe (which there was hyd) came vnto her, & laye wth her. As for vs, we stode in a corner of the orcharde. And whē we sawe this wickednes, we rāne to her: & perceaued, y<sup>e</sup> they had medled together. But we coude not holde him, for he was stronger then we: thus he opened y<sup>e</sup> doore, & gat him awaye. Now whē we had take this womā, we axed her, what yōge felow this was: but she wolde not tell vs. This is y<sup>e</sup> matter, & we be witnesses of y<sup>e</sup> same.

The comon sorte beleued them, as those y<sup>e</sup> were the elders & iudges of the people, & so they condemned her to death. Susanna cried out wth a loude voyce, & sayde: O euēlastinge God, thou sercher of secretes, thou y<sup>e</sup> knowest all thinges afore they come to passe: thou wotest, y<sup>e</sup> they haue borne false wyt-nes agaynst me: & beholde, I must dye, whereas I neuer dyd eny soch thinges, as these men haue maliciously inuēted agaynst me.
And y<sup>e</sup> LORDE herde hir voyce. For whē she was led forth to death, y<sup>e</sup> LORDE raised vp y<sup>e</sup> spiete of a yōge childe, whose name was Daniel, which cried wth a loude voyce: I am clene fro this bloude. Thē all y<sup>e</sup> people turned thē toward him, & saide: What meane these wor-des, y<sup>e</sup> thou hast spokē? Daniel stode in y<sup>e</sup> myd-dest of thē, & sayde: Are ye soch fooles (O ye childe of Israel) y<sup>e</sup> ye cā not discerne? Ye haue here condēned a daughter of Israel vnto death, and knowe not the trueth wherfore: O syt on iudgment agayne, for they haue spoken false witness agaynst her.

Wherfore the people turned agayne in all the haist. And the elders (that is, the principall heades) sayde vnto him: come sit dow-ne here amonge vs, and shewe vs this matter, seynge God hath geuen the as greate honoure, as an elder. And Daniel sayde vnto them: Put these two asyde one from another and then shal I heare them. When they were put a sūnder one from another, he called one of them, and sayd vnto him: O thou olde cankerde carle, that hast vsed thy wickednesse so longe: thine vngacious de-des which thou hast done afore, are now come to light. For thou hast geuen false iudgmentes, thou hast oppressed the innocent, and letten the gilty go fre, where as yet the LORDE saith: The innocent and righteous se thou slaye not. Wel than, yf thou hast sene her, tel me, vnder what tre sawest thou them talkynge together? He answered: Vnder a Nollbery tre. And Daniel sayde: very wel, Now thou leyst euen vpon thine heade. Lo the messainger of the LORDE hath receaved the sentence of him, to cut y<sup>e</sup> in two.

Then put he him asyde, and called for the other, and sayde vnto him: O thou sedeof Canaan, but not of Juda: saynesse hath disceaued the, and lust hath subuerted thine herte. Thus dealte ye afore with the daughters of Israel, and they (for feare) consented vnto you: but the daughter of Juda wolde not abyde youre wickednesse. Now tell me than, vnder what tre didest thou take them speakinge together? He answered: vnder a pomgranate tre. Then sayde Daniel vnto him: very wel, now thou leyst also euen vpon thine heade. The messainger of the LORDE stondeth waytinge with the swerde, to cut the in two, and to slaye you both.

With that, all the whole multitude ga-ue a greate shoute, and praysed God, which allwaye deliuereth them y<sup>e</sup> put their trust in him. And they came vpon the two elders, (whom Daniel had conuicte with their owne mouth: that they had geuen false wit-nesse) and dealte with them, euen likewyse as they wolde haue done with their neighboursse: Yee they dyd accordinge to the la-we of Moses, and put them to death. Thus the innocent bloude was saued the same daye.

The story of Bel, which is the xiiiij. Chapter of Da niel after the Latin.

There was at Babilon an ymage, called Bel: and there were spent vpon him euery daye, xij. cakes,
xl. shepe, and sixe greate pottes of wine. Him dyd the kynge worshipe himself, and wente daylie to honour him: but Daniel worshi-ped his owne God. And the kynge sayde vnto him: Why dost not thou worshipe Bel? he answered and sayde: Because I maye not worshi-
pe thinges, that be made wth hondes, but the lyuynge God, which made heauen and earth, and hath power vpon all flesh. The kynge sayde vnto him: thinkest thou not, y<sup>e</sup> Bel is a lyuynge God? O seist thou not, how moch he eateth and dryn-keth euery daye? Daniel smyled, and sayde: O kynge, disceane not thyselfe: This is but made of claye within, and of metall without, nether eateth he euery thinge.

Then the kynge was wroth, and called for his prestes, and sayde vnto them: If ye tell me not who this is, that eateth vp these expenses, ye shal dye: But yf ye can certifie me, that Bel eateth them, then Daniel shall dye, for he hath spoken blasphemy agaynst Bel. And Daniel sayde vnto the kynge: let it so be, acordinge as thou hast sayde. The pres-tes of Bel were lxx. besyde their wyues and children. And the kynge wente with Daniel into the temple of Bel. So Bels prestes sayde: Lo, we wil go out, and set thou y<sup>e</sup> meate there (O kynge) and poure in the wyne: then shutt the doore fast, and seale it with thine owne signet: and tomorrow when thou comest in, yf thou fyndest not, that Bel hath eaten vp all, we wil suffre death: or els Daniel, that hath lyed vpon vs. The prestes thought them selnes sure ynough, for vnder y<sup>e</sup> altare they made a priuy inraunce, and there wente they in euery daye, and ate vp what there was.

So when they were gone forth, the kynge set meates before Bel. Now Daniel had comanded his seruantes to bunge afflower and these he sifted thorow out all the temple, that the kynge might se. Then wente they out, and sparre the doore, sealinge it with y<sup>e</sup> kynges signet, and so departed. In y<sup>e</sup> night came the prestes with their wyues and children (as they were wonte to do) and ate and dronke vp all. In the morninge be cymes at the breake of the daye, the kynge arose, and Daniel with him. And the kynge sayde: Daniel, are the seales whole yet? he answered: Yea, O kynge, they be whole. Now as soone as he had opened the doore, the kynge loked vnto y<sup>e</sup> altare, and cried with a loude voyce: Greete art thou o Bel, and with the is no disceane.
Then laughed Daniel, and helde the kynge, that he shulde not go in, and sayde: Besyde
the pavement, marcke well, whose footsteppes are these? The kynge sayde: I se the foot-steppes of men, women and children.

Therfore the kynge was angrie, and toke the prestes, with their wyues and children, and they shewed him y<sup>e</sup> priuy doores, where they came in, and ate vp soch thinges as were vpon y<sup>e</sup> altare. For the which cause y<sup>e</sup> kynge slawe them, and deliuered Bel in to Daniels power, which destroyed him and his temple.

And in that same place there was a greate dragon, which they of Babilon worshi-ped. And y<sup>e</sup> kynge sayde vnto Daniel: sayst thou, y<sup>e</sup> this is but a god of metall also? he liueth, he eateth and drinketh: so y<sup>e</sup> thou canst saye, that he is no lyuynge God, therfore wor-shi-pe him. Daniel sayde vnto y<sup>e</sup> kynge: I wil worshi-
pe the LORDE my God, he is y<sup>e</sup> true lyuynge God: as for this, he is not the God of life. But geue me leane (O kynge) and I shal de-stroye this dragon without swerde or staffe.
The kynge sayde: I geue y<sup>e</sup> leane. Then Daniel toke pitch, fatte and hairie woll, and did seyth them together, and made lompes ther of: this he put in y<sup>e</sup> Dragons mouth, and so y<sup>e</sup> dragon barst in sonder: and Daniel sayde, there is he whom ye worshipped.

When they of Babilon herde that, they toke greate indignacion, and gathered them together agaynst the kynge, sayenge: The kynge is become a Jewe also, he hath despoyed Bel, he hath slayne y<sup>e</sup> Dragon, and put the prestes to death. So they came to y<sup>e</sup> kynge, and sayde: let us haue Daniel, or els we wil destroye the and thine house.

Now when y<sup>e</sup> kynge sawe, that they rus-shed in so sore vpon him, and that necessite constrained him, he deliuered Daniel vnto them:
which cast him in to the Lyons denne, where he was sixe dayes. In the denne there were seuen Lyons, and they had geuen them euery daye two bodies and two shepe: which then were not geue them, that they might deuoure Daniel.

There was in Jewry a prophet called Abacuc, which had made potage, and bro-ked bled in a depe platter, and was goinge into the selde, for to brynge it to y<sup>e</sup> mowers.
But the angell of the LORDE sayde vnto Abacuc: go cary the meate that thou hast in to Babilon, vnto Daniel, which is in y<sup>e</sup> lyons denne. And Abacuc sayde: LORDE, I neuer sawe Babilon: and as for the denne, I knowe it not. Then the angel of the LORDE toke him by the toppe, and bare him by the haire of the heade, and (choirow a mightie wynde) set him in Babilon vpon the denne.
And Abacuc cried, sayenge: O Daniel thou seruant of God, haue take the breakfast, y<sup>e</sup> God hath sent y<sup>e</sup>. And Daniel saide: O God, hast thou thought vpon me? wel, thou neuer faylest them that loue the. So Daniel arose, and ate: and the angel of the LORDE set Aba-cuc in his owne place agayne immediatly.

Vpon the seventh daye, the kynge wente to bewepe Daniel: and when he came to the denne, he loked in: and beholde, Daniel sat in the myddest of the Lyons. Then cried y<sup>e</sup> kynge with a loude voyce, sayenge: Greate art thou, o LORDE God of Daniel: and he drew him out of the denne. As for those that were y<sup>e</sup> cause of his destrucciō, he dyd cast the into the denne, and they were deuoured in a moment before his face.

After this, wrote the kynge vnto all people, kynnedes and tungen, that dwelt in all countrees, sayenge: peace be multiplied with
you. My commaundement is, in all the dominyon of my realme: that men feare and stonge in awe of Daniels God, for he is the lyuynge God, which endureth euery: his kyn-

g-dome abydeth vncorrupte, and his power is euerylastinge. It is he that can deliuer and saue: he doth wonders and maruelous woikes in heauen and in earth, for he hath saued
Daniel
from the power of the Lyons.
